"For example, suppose the lens is of 3½ in. focus. Multiply 3½ by 50 and the result is 175 ft., the correct hyperfocal distance at f/3.5. If we focus on 175 ft. with the stop named, all will be sharp from half that distance to infinity. Suppose, however, we wish to use f/7, instead of f/3.5, we simply divide 175 by 2, because f/7 is half the diameter of f/3.5, obtaining 87½ ft., the correct hyperfocal distance.

"To give another example, what is the hyperfocal distance with a 2-in. focus lens at f/8?

"Here we multiply 2 by 50, the result being 100 ft., which is the proper distance to focus on with f/2. Now, f/8 is only one-quarter the diameter of f/2, so we divide 100 by 4, obtaining 25 ft., the correct hyperfocal distance with f/8. Or, if f/16 is preferred, which is one-eighth the diameter of f/2, we divide 100 by 8, getting 12½ ft.

"In conclusion, it will doubtless interest the ordinary studio or landscape photographer, content with a circle of least confusion of 1/100 in. in negatives for contact printing, to know that he may instantly ascertain the proper hyperfocal distance for his purpose on multiplying the focal length by 8.3. For example, with an 8-in. focus lens, 8 multiplied by 8.3 gives 66.4 ft. as the hyperfocal distance at f/8. For f/16, we halve this, getting 33 ft.; for f/32 we divide by 4, obtaining 16 ft. and so on, ignoring needless fractional parts. For a stop having an f/ number less than the focal length, it is, of course, necessary to multiply instead of dividing. Thus, with f/4, which is twice the diameter of f/8, 66.4 is multiplied by 2, yielding 132 ft. as the result."

A Valuable Accessory for Cameramen

EVERY year Editor Pell Mitchell, of the Gaumont-Mutual Weekly, sends the members of his staff a remembrance. This year he has had prepared a camera accessory, which, while not of great intrinsic worth, is still so necessary for cameramen that a sufficient number has been manufactured to supply every photographer of news events in the United States with one. So, boys, drop a card to Pell Mitchell, care Gaumont Company. Flushing, N. Y., and a pleasant surprise will reach you by mail.

MUSIC AND THE PICTURE

Musical Review of Latest Compositions

1—"Longing for My Dixie Home," by Shannon. A 4/4 Andante Moderato Movement—very melodious and very effective. (Published by the Vandersloot Music Co.).

2—"Stolen Sweets," a beautiful and melodious Waltz Movement, by Harry von Tilzer. (Published by Harry von Tilzer.)

3—"In a Garden of Shadows and Tears," by A. Manlowe. A very attractive melody of pathetic character. (Vanderlost Pub. Co., Williamsport, Pa.)

4—"Hail, Hail, the Gang's Here," by Theodore Morse. Every musician knows the famous old song hit, "We Won't Come Home Till Morning." "Hail, Hail" is better. (Leo Feist Edition.)

5—"We're After You," by Lloyd. One of those typical up-to-date march songs, most appropriate for cartoons of political character. (Jeff Branen, Ed., 145 W. 45th St., New York City.)

6—"Buy a Liberty Bond for the Baby," Harry von Tilzer's latest hit. As popular as the "Liberty Bonds."

8—"Chasing the Chickens," a great Jazz number. (Published by Forster Music Co., Chicago, Ill.).

9—"A Russian Pansy," by Otto Langey. An attractive and new Intermezzo, melodious and most appropriate for love scenes. (G. Schirmer Edition.)

10—"Ching, Chong," a great "Jazz" One-Step and popular favorite. (Richmond Music Co., 147 W. 45th St., New York City.)

11—"Way Down in Macon, Georgia," by Paul Biese. A composition of exceptional standard quality in 2/4 time. (Published by the Frank K. Root Music Co.)

14—"That Cabaret in Honolulu Town," by Jack Frost. This composition is an all around favorite and a popular composition of exceptional merit. (Published by Frank K. Root Music Co.)

15—"Valley Rose Ballad," by Evans Lloyd. A beautiful Andante con espressivo movement, considered to be the greatest Ballad ever written by an American writer. It is a composition of artistic value from a musical standpoint and still so wonderfully constructed that the listener or player after hearing it once is bound to remember it forever. For pathetic scenes and the like this composition is unreplaceable. (Published by Jeff Branen, 145 W. 45th St., New York City.)

16—"Missouri Waltz," by John Valentine Eppel. About this Waltz we have nothing to say. Get it for your picture work; it will speak for itself. (Published by J. A. Forster, Chicago, Ill.)

17—"Your Voice Came Back to Me," by Clinton Keithley. A charming slow movement with a most delightful melody, growing constantly in popular favor. It is an "Andante Espressivo" of exceptional beauty; a really exquisite composition which every music lover will appreciate. (Published by the Frank K. Root Music Co.)

18—"I Don't Know Where I'm Going, But I'm on My Way." An inspiring and catchy melody, by Geo. Fairman. (Published by Harry von Tilzer.)

19—"Homeward Bound," by Geo. Meyer. A typical composition of popular appeal, introducing a new surprise in every bar. A fine, snappy number, with unusual attractive chorus and arrangement which leaves absolutely nothing to be desired. (Published by Leo Feist, Feist Bldg., New York City.)

20—"Just As Your Mother Was," A beautiful and melodious Waltz movement. (Published by Harry von Tilzer.)

23—"Slippery Yank," by Losey. A characteristic One-Step of exceptional merit which should be in every musician's library. (Vandersloot Edition.)

24—"Love's Melody" (Reverie), by Shannon. A charming slow movement with a most delightful melody; most appropriate for love scenes. (Vandersloot Edition.)

25—"Astralita Serenade," by Mabel A. Whaley. A number which deserves to be owned by any orchestra leader or piano player. (Published by the "Red Star Music Co.", Red Star, Ark.

26—"All That I Want Is in Ireland," by Lloyd. An exceptional fine "Andante con espressivo movement," typical but original in every bar. It is a composition of standard quality. (Published by Jeff Branen, 145 W. 45th St., New York City.)

27—"The Vampire" (a dramatic theme), by Sol. P. Levy. An original composition most appropriate for the purpose as described in the title. (Published by the Cinema Music Company, Columbia Theatre Bldg., 47th St. and 7th Ave., New York City.)

28—"Elks' March." A brand new novelty March, by M. L. Lake. (Carl Fischer Edition.)

29—"Berceuse," by Huerter. Another wonderful composition by this gifted writer. "Berceuse," by Huerter, is a delightful and charming melody, very effectively arranged and obtainable for any combination of instruments. (Published by The Boston Music Co.)

30—"A Russian Pansy," by Otto Langey. An attractive new Intermezzo from the pen of Otto Langey. It has much of the appeal of the familiar "Flower Song," by Gustav Lange, together with the freshness and the interest attached to a new composition. (Published by G. Schirmer, New York City.)

Martial Music

A VAUDEVILLE comedian who had been pestered nearly to death by song writers and pluggers was unbrotherly enough recently to say that if General Sherman had taken into consideration some of the war songs that are foisted on the public, he surely would have applied a stronger word to convey his conception of war.

Undeniably, some song writers do perpetrate rhymed and unrhymed atrocities on the charitable public, but then, some one has to build the war songs, for built they are, piece by piece, occasionally requiring as many as ten able-bodied men to put one together.

All agree that we must have war and slogan songs to cheer the boys on their way to the front, to lighten their cares while there, and to comfort those who are left behind—the soldiers of the soil, soup and soapsuds.

Lively tunes, created, borrowed or transplanted, have a wonderful way of helping one to forget impending dangers, of making the timid brave, and the brave, braver. It must be a deep streak of yellow that won't turn red from the fire and dash of a good march melody, hence the reason for the existence of song writers, good, bad and terrible. Sometimes the terrible turn out the good songs and the good turn out the terrible stuff. And snappy music, unlike Green River and other brands favored by many, puts a razor edge on a man's courage without dulling his senses.

In former years, before song writers demanded and received large royalties, songs were inspired and bubbled from the hearts of true poets, who scorned limousines and were satisfied to die in garrets for art's sake. Today, however, songs are put together like a submarine with the "punch" line in the chorus as a torpedo aimed to blow up human emotions.

Records tell us that our ancestors composed some fine songs —"Yankee Doodle" for the Revolution, "On the Rio Grande" for the Mexican scrap, "The Battle Hymn of the Republic," "Dixie" and "Marching Through Georgia," for the argument of 1861, and "A Hot Time in the Old Town" and "Strike up the Band" for the fight that followed the blowing up of the Maine.

A peculiar feature about the war songs of the Spanish-American War was that they were never intended for war purposes. Those who know the history of them say that "A Hot Time" was the gang song in the White Light district in St. Louis long before the war broke out.

"Strike up the Band" is a product of the old Bowery, the former stamping ground of sailors out for a good time. Years ago most of the Bowery concert halls made a special play for the sailors' patronage, and kept barkers on the outside to chant about the wonderful show that could be seen inside gratis. When a barker spotted a sailor he would stick his head into the concert hall and shout: "Strike up the band, here comes a sailor," and the noise would begin immediately. A painted slip of a girl would leap to the piano and begin to sing the latest popular ditty. To the boss a sailor was an unknown quantity. He might be carrying a year's wages and a long thirst, or a thin dime and a hard luck story, but he must be accorded a welcome. Hearing a barker deliver his stock phrase one night gave Andrew B. Sterling and the late Chas. B. Ward, the original Bowery Boy, the idea for the song.

Since this country has entered the present war thousands of war songs have been ground out, and if the Germans had to listen to all of them they would not feel much like fighting. Of the many that have been published those that are winning popularity now are: "Over There," "The Mason-Dixon Line," "Set Aside Your Tears," "It's a Long Way to Berlin," "I Wonder How the Old Folks Are Tonight," "The Girl with the Cross Upon Her Sleeve," "I Don't Want to Get Well," "When the Yanks Come Marching Home," "Hail! Hail! the Gang's All Here," "Long Boy," "A-m-e-r-i-c-a," "We're After You," "Homeward Bound," and "It's a Long Way to the U. S. A." New numbers that look like hits are: "I Wish You All the Luck in the World," "We'll Knock the Heligo Out of Heligo Into Heligoland," and a couple of others. Now is the time to use these numbers, when your audience will enjoy and appreciate them, and not after the war is over.

Poli Opens Handsome 3500 Seat Theatre in New Haven

NEW HAVEN became the home of one of the finest motion picture houses in the Country on November 19, with the opening of S. Z. Poli's Palace theatre. The evening was a notable one as every one of the 3,500 seats was filled and the streets in front of the house completely blocked by crowds that could not gain admission.

In this large audience were a great number of people prominent in amusement circles, who had come from New York, Boston, and Philadelphia in order to help Mr. Poli make a night of it.

Among this number were Norma Talmadge and her sister, Constance Talmadge, both of whom are stars of Select Pictures, and Lewis J. Selznick, president of the Select Pictures Corporation. The opening bill at the Palace presents "The Secret of the Storm Country," Norma Talmadge's latest Select picture, and Miss Talmadge made the trip to New Haven in order to be present.

Immediately after the opening number, which consisted of songs by a chorus of New Haven girls, Miss Norma Talmadge was introduced to the audience by Mr. Pat Casey, general representative of the Vaudeville Managers' Protective Association; following Mr. Casey's tribute to the genius of Mr. Poli in erecting as handsome a theatre as the Palace Miss Talmadge, who had journeyed to New Haven to be present at the opening of the theatre, but who had not expected to go upon the stage, was taken by surprise, but nevertheless consented "to oblige," and, making a hasty tour of the auditorium, stepped before the footlights and extended her thanks to the enthusiastic audience for their kindly greeting, and to Mr. Poli for choosing her picture for his opening performance.

Poli's Palace is indeed a beautiful house. It is a masterpiece of one of the master craftsmen of playhouse design, Thomas W. Lamb, of New York. Architect Lamb is the designer of such theatres as the Strand and Rialto in New York City, and the New Orpheum in Boston.

"The Secret of the Storm Country," Norma Talmadge's latest picture, was the first screen offering at the Palace.

Owing to a three-cornered dispute between the mayor of New Haven, the town aldermen, and Mr. Poli's representatives, the Palace was temporarily closed the day after its opening until an alteration could be made in the twenty-one foot entrance to the theatre. This, however, will in no way affect the brilliance of Mr. Poli's achievement, nor detract from the success of its initial evening.

Loew's Montreal Theatre Opens

OPENING of Loew's theatre in Montreal was a very great success, the house being packed. The moving picture part of the program was given premier position, and undoubtedly it did the most to create that great enthusiasm which marked the whole performance. In addition to Norma Talmadge in "The Secret of the Storm Country," and a good contribution from Fatty Arbuckle, two well known stars appeared in person, Miss Mollie King and Rita Jolivet. Miss King paid a graceful tribute to Mr. Loew and contributed a most attractive series of song impersonations. Her radiant youth and her breezy little personality won the audience completely.

Miss Rita Jolivet, contributed in a different metier. She had come at the invitation of Sir Thomas White and the local Victory Loan Committee to make an appeal to the audience in that cause, and she performed her task with grace, with fervor, and with undeniable success.

New Theatre, Corning, Scores Success

E. B. HENDRICK, owner and manager of the New Plaza theatre, Corning, New York, is demonstrating that a new and modern house in the smaller cities pays. This house was opened on July 31 and has scored a success.

The building occupies a plot, 32 by 81 feet, and seats 400. The chairs were made by the American Seating Company. The building is constructed of brick and tile. The interior is decorated in old rose, ivory and gold. Palms are used in the decorative effect. The floor is carpeted with rubber strips down the aisle, making the theatre noiseless.

Interior View New Plaza Theatre, Corning, N. Y.

The building is heated with steam and has an indirect lighting system. Motiographs are used for the projection, with a throw of 76 feet. Dimmers and enclosed rewinds are also used in the operating room.

The New Plaza changes its bill daily. The admission price in the afternoon is 9 and 13 cents and 10 and 15 cents in the evening.

California Issues Handsome Opening Booklet

CALIFORNIA theatre, San Francisco, celebrated its opening November 1, as already told in the MOTION PICTURE NEWS. Eugene H. Roth, managing director of the theatre, issued one of the handsomest souvenir programs for that date that any motion picture house in the country has ever gotten out. It was printed on heavy plate paper, 12 by 14 inches and was filled with advertising of all of those who had anything to do with the construction of the house.

A full description of the theatre, which is one of the finest on the Pacific Coast, was given. Work was started on the building in October, 1916, and the house completed just eleven months later. It is of concrete and steel construction and fireproof. The architecture was inspired by the Collegiate Gothic. The house occupies a plot 100 by 170 feet and seats 2,780. It represents an investment of over $1,750,000.

Terre Haute to Have Splendid Theatre

BEARING the name of the city in which it is located, the new Terre Haute theatre promises to live up to all the best civic traditions. Work on the building is under way, and it is planned that the house will be opened on May 1 of next year. The building is being erected by the Terre Haute Theatres Company, at the corner of Wabash avenue and Eighth street, in the very heart of the business district. The house will be under the management of A. F. Brietlinger.

J. E. Pridmore, of Chicago, is the architect ,and the plans that he has prepared make it an assured fact that the house will lack nothing in all the elements that go to make up the most modern motion picture institution. The house will be built of concrete, steel, stone and brick and will be entirely fireproof. It occupies a plot 75 by 100 feet and will seat 1,280.

Except for contracts with the Typhoon Fan Company and for the heating and indirect lighting system, none of the equipment has been definitely determined upon. Suggestions on equipment and service should be sent to Mr. Brietlinger, at 1724 Lytton Building, Chicago.

Large Typhoon Fan Installation at Dayton

THE big new Dayton theatre at Dayton, Ohio, now in course of construction, is another to use the Typhoon System of cooling and ventilating in connection with its heating system. Schenck & Williams are the architects.

A whole carload of Typhoon equipment is leaving the works this week for Dayton. Included are nine mammoth Typhoon fans—10 feet, 8 feet and 6 feet in diameter. Two 8-foot and two 10-foot Typhoons on the roof will keep the Dayton cool on the hottest days of summer, assisted by two 6-foot fans.

For the winter, two 8-foot fans will draw fresh air through heat coils and blow it into the theatre. A 10-foot Typhoon fan in the basement will serve to draw the heated air down and so complete a perfect heating and ventilating equipment.

That the Dayton Theatre will at all seasons of the year be the most comfortable in town goes without saying.

Automatic Aids with Tax Report Form

AUTOMATIC Ticket Selling Company is calling attention to the self-proving weekly and monthly report that it is issuing to its customers and with the necessity for their use in connection with the war tax.

This blank, which is protected by registration at Washington, enables any exhibitor to keep a perfect record of the amount of money taken in for admissions and amount of taxes due under each admission price. It would be a very simple matter for a Government inspector to see at a glance that the exhibitor keeps the proper record on this blank.

These figures are instantly available, not only for every day, but also for every week, every month, and they are so arranged that if any error is made in this calculation it shows up on each sheet.

DIRECTORY OF NEW THEATRES

ARKANSAS

The contract for the erection of a $15,000 motion picture theatre on Belmont property, Little Rock, has been let to Kaucher and Hodges of Memphis, Tenn., and the structure which is to seat 1,500 people is expected to be ready for occupancy early in December. The site selected is in close proximity to Camp Pike.

CALIFORNIA

The Red Bluff Opera House was opened a week or so ago to capacity business. Manager Deeds selected for the opening night "Rebecca of Sunnybrook Farm" and Fatty Arbuckle in a two-reel comedy, which fairly brought down the house.

Martinez' new picture theatre opened on the evening of Saturday, November 17, in the Curry theatre, under the management of H. E. Case. Case closed the deal on Tuesday for the lease of the Curry theatre and immediately ordered two modern movie machines which he will install in the operating room.

Pasadena is to have another high grade motion picture theatre. It will be located on the south side of East Colorado street, between El Molino and Hudson avenues, and will call for an investment aggregating approximately $75,000.

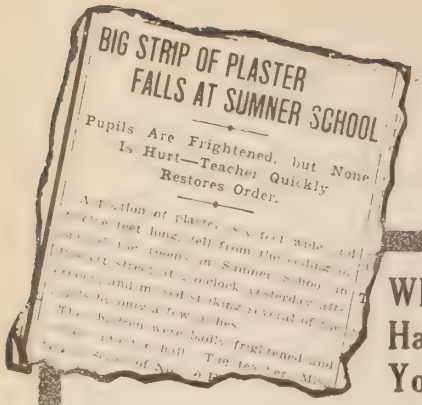
Dave H. Schumann, a theatrical man of long experience, will be the lessee and manager, while the building will be erected by George W. Stimson. Mr. Schumann and his financial associates have taken a long term lease on the theatre and two stores in the same structure.

It will be known as the Florence theatre, and will comfortably seat 900 persons on one floor. It will be attractive in architectural design and substantial in construction, with all the very latest things in the way of picture theatre equipment. Plans for the building have been drawn by O. P. Dennis, who planned Quinn's Rialto theatre in Los Angeles, said to be the most successful of the more recently-built large theatres in that city. Mr. Schumann has long been a resident of the Crown City, but up to the present time always has been identified with Los Angeles enterprises.

That the erection of a new theatre building on Center street, Taft, by the T. & D. theatrical company, that has places of amusement in many cities of the state is a certainty is instanced by the arrival in Taft of two of the principals in the enterprise. They are C. S. McCullough of Berkeley, who is general superintendent of the building operations for the company, and Claude Langley, who will be the manager of the Taft playhouse.

GEORGIA

Application has been filed in the Superior Court for a charter for the Wentworth Stores, Incorporated, with a capital stock of $50,000. It is stated that the concern will sell at wholesale and retail all kinds of merchandise and also proposes to own and operate motion picture shows, restaurants, pool and billiard parlors, to deal in stocks and bonds and to do a general brokerage business.



The incorporators are G. L. Kayton, D. J. Rosenheim and J. G. Smith. The name of the company indicates that it intends to engage in business at Port Wentworth and it is understood that its plans call for the establishment of a number of enterprises at that point.

IDAHO

Work on an up-to-date amusement hall to be erected on two lots on the north side of Washington avenue between the Idaho Hardware store and the Aberdeen Hotel, Aberdeen, has been commenced by R. A. Duncan and J. P. Duncan. The structure will be constructed of hollow tile with a brick front facing south. It will be 33 by 96 feet in size and two stories high, will be connected with the city water system, electrically equipped and internally be arranged in the manner of modern amusement halls. The building will cost about $8,500.

The ground floor will be devoted to a regular motion picture show. To one side of the entrance space will be allowed for a 12 by 16 foot room for office purposes. This room will contain a 12 foot glass front and will be provided for renting purposes. A large and up-to-date stage will be erected at the rear part of the floor and will be equipped with a modern curtain and decorated with artistic stage scenery.

The upper floor will consist of four furnished rooms for renting purposes, leaving a space 66 by 31 feet to be layed with a good dance floor. Cloak rooms, toilets and every other modern convenience will be given the public.

"NEWMAN" BRASS FRAMES AND RAILS

A FEW REASONS

why "NEWMAN" METAL FRAMES have been chosen by all the big circuits and best class of theatres.

1—Because the constant exposure to all sorts of weather conditions cannot affect "NEWMAN" NON-CORROSIVE METAL FRAMES.

2—Because of their richness in beauty and design, they liven the entrance and render the lobby more inviting than any other kind of frames.

3—Because they will outlast a dozen wood frames. They are practically un-wear-out-able.

ILLINOIS

Peoria's theater going public and business interests in general are much interested in the answer to the question as to whether the recent purchase of the Jacobson property at Main street and Madison avenue is to be occupied by a metropolitan opera house, or is it to be devoted to motion pictures. As a result rumors are flying in many courses. This property, recently purchased by John W. McDowell, as agent, at a cost of $150,000, is now said to be owned by W. E. Hull, Arthur Lehmann, Robert Clarke and others and to be intended as the site for an opera house to cost in the vicinity of $150,000 and to be erected the coming spring if war conditions do not interfere. At the time of the purchase Mr. McDowell said he was informed a large and magnificent motion picture house was to be erected there, but by whom he did not know. Since then, it is said, the plan has been amended to include the opera house feature.

R. E. Atkins has opened his new theatre at Elkville, and is enjoying remarkably good patronage.

A notable addition to the north side business buildings is that of the new Adelphi theatre building at Clark street and Estes avenue, Chicago. In addition to the theater, which was opened recently, and which will form another addition to the string of theatres operated by Ascher Bros., the building will contain four stores on the ground floor and a large bowling alley on the second floor, which has been leased for ten years to M. E. Faetz, president of the Bowling Alley association. The building, which covers a frontage of 100 feet on Clark street and occupies the block on Estes avenue from Clark street to Ravenswood avenue, will have an exterior finish of faced brick and terra cotta, and together with the land will, it is said, represent an investment of about $250,000. The theater, which is elaborately decorated, has a seating capacity of 1,400. E. B. Wolf & Co. will have charge of the property.

The new Colonial theatre at Colfax was opened recently to capacity business, under the management of H. A. Arnold.

INDIANA

The new theatre at Terre Haute is well under way. A force of wreckers under the direction of C. M. Davidson of Indianapolis are busily clearing up the site of the old Varieties at Eighth street and Wabash avenue, whereon will be erected the new playhouse. The new company is financed by John McFall, owner of the ground, according to insiders. O. A. Peterson will assist C. M. Davidson in directing the erection of the building. The new theatre will cost between $70.000 and $75,000, will have a seating capacity of over 1,200. It will be a two-story building with four office rooms, a smoker, ladies' waiting room, etc. A new typhoon fan, similar to the one used in many of the modern theatres in Chicago, will be installed on the roof. This will cost over $1,000. The building will be fireproof. J. E. O. Pridmore, the Chicago architect, drew the new plans which were recently accepted as being more up-to-date than the old ones which called for a larger expenditure for building material it was learned when contractors began figuring than the promoters expected to spend on the building.

The plans and specifications for the new theatre are in the hands of City Building Inspector C. E. Scott, and after a preliminary examination Mr. Scott said they appeared to comply with the building laws of the city.

The Showers Bros. Co. is converting the auditorium of their new building at Bloomington into a theatre for the portrayal of the silent drama.

Manager Harry Whistler of the new Tokyo theatre, Veedersburg, opened a few days ago to capacity business.

IOWA

The new motion picture theatre at Chariton was opened a week ago under the management of D. Earl Combs, under the unique name of "The Iris Theatre." This name was suggested by Mrs. Frank Shaffer and Mrs. Mae Gasser, each of whom was presented with a $5 gold piecé and a year's pass.

KANSAS

Work will begin on "The Wichita," Wichita's new picture theatre, about the first of March. Carl Boller of Kansas City will be the architect. The steel has been ordered and paid for, and every preliminary arrangement made to start work as soon as The Leader and the United Sample Shoe Companies vacate the buildings. "The Wichita" will be the last word in architectural art and beauty.

KENTUCKY

After several months rest the Palace theatre, Tompkinsville, opened again to the public with a long list of thrilling scenes. The management is in the hands of Mr. Kenneth Maynard, who will be remembered as the trick rider in the Fair here in September. It is the purpose of the managers to improve the shows in every particular and to give two or three shows a week.

MARYLAND

Work on the Homewood theatre, Baltimore, to occupy the site of the Casino, on North avenue, near Charles street, will begin shortly. It will be erected by the Homewood Amusement Company at a cost of nearly $500.000. The theater will seat about 2,500 and will be handsomely finished. It will be modeled after the Rialto theatre in New York and will open about March 1, 1918.

MASSACHUSETTS

Manager Louis M. Boas of the Bijou at Fall River, Marcus Loew's representative in this city, has acquired the lease of the Savoy theatre from William Durfee, the present owner. Backed by assets amounting to $50,000,000 the Loew people will erect the most costly and beautiful theatre that has been constructed in this country for many years, utilizing every inch of the wide area of land given it under the long term lease.

NEW MEXICO

Codyville is shortly to have a modern motion picture theatre, a company having been formed and capitalized for $10.000. The board of directors of this new company consists of L. G. [illegible], O. P. Henderson, W. H. Smith and T. F. Hartnett.

The building for the new motion picture show at Hurley is rapidly nearing completion and under the new management of James Shipley promises to be quite an addition to the town.

James Carragien of Chicago, president of the Cody Amusement Co., which is erecting a large theatre at the corner of Gold avenue and Pine street

Deming, has purchased the leases on the Crystal and Princess theatres from the Hull Amusement Co. for $15,000 and will conduct them in future. T. Seth Hull, who has been the manager of both these popular playhouses, will retire from the theatrical and moving picture business in this city. Mr. Hull says that he will remain in this city for a month or more before moving to Miami, Ariz., where he will open a theatre. The Crystal theatre is owned by Mrs. A. J. Clark and the Princess by Frank Nordhaus.

NEW JERSEY

Construction of the new Keith theatre in Jersey City may soon be started, the City Commission having finally passed the new amendments to the building ordinance which will permit the construction of the handsome new building according to the satisfactory plans adopted by the theatre people.

The Odeon theatre of Newark reopened recently with feature photoplays after being dark for more than a year. It will hereafter be known as the Hill theatre and operated by the Hill Theatre Co., Inc. Jackie Clark, professional bicycle rider and local hotel proprietor, is the new manager. The company is composed entirely of local residents. It is the policy of the manager to change his program three times weekly. Admission prices have been fixed at 10 and 15 cents. On the opening night the public were the guests of the management. The playhouse has been thoroughly renovated and improved. It has a seating capacity of approximately 1,000.

NEW YORK

Work is progressing rapidly on the new Liberty theatre, Beach street, Stapleton, Staten Island, and it is expected it will be ready early in December.

If plans under way materialize, either a large theatre or a warehouse will be erected at the northeast corner of Fulton street and Rockwell place, Brooklyn, adjoining the Majestic theatre. The playhouse project, according to rumors, seems to be the more likely.

This became known recently in the Real Estate Exchange following the sale at public auction of the property for the Public Service Commission, which acquired it some time ago for subway purposes.

The property was purchased by Mrs. Philomena Curren of 333 Clinton avenue, for $45,000, the upset price placed by the city on the property.

The work on the new Hippodrome theatre in Central avenue, Dunkirk, next to the Masonic temple will be begun in the spring. It will be one of the finest theatres of its kind in Western New York.

The property known as the Beck block on Main street, Roonville, has recently been sold and the lower rooms are being remodeled for a motion picture theatre. It has been rented to C. E. Taylor, who was previously manager of the Gem theatre in Copenhagen. Mr. Taylor will in the near future open a new and up-to-date theatre, The Strand.

S. S. Calafatti, of New Rochelle, has plans in progress for the proposed theatre on Huguenot street, at corner of Division street that city. It will be named "The Strand" and it is expected will be ready by next fall.

Joseph Bondy, owner of the Regent theatre at No. 818 East Genesee street, Syracuse, has leased the property for a number of years to Morris & Mitchel Fitzer, proprietors of the Happy Hour theatre. It will be opened in ten days as a high class moving picture house. The Regent, which was built several years ago at a cost of more than $50,000, is one of the most expeusive buildings available for theatrical purposes outside the downtown section. The new lessees will make several improvements.

The new theatre erected on Washington avenue, Endicott, is completed and Benjamin Dettrich is well pleased with its appearance. On the opening night a week ago he invited all the village officials and their friends to witness the initial performance. The seating capacity is more than 1,000.

PENNSYLVANIA

The theatrical firm of Wilmer & Vincent have in view the establishment of a motion picture theatre on North Third street, Easton.

The Baily Fire Co. and the Bally Band of Kutztown have decided to build a spacious one-story hall for meeting purposes. Work will be started on it shortly. The hall is also to be used for large gatherings and moving pictures.

The new Colonial theatre located on Seventh avenue, Beaver Falls, was formally opened a few days ago under most auspicious circumstances. Samuel Goodman is the manager.

Remodeling of the rear of the Nemo theatre, Main street, Johnstown, has started under the direction of W. J. Rose & Sons preliminary to the substitution of vaudeville for motion pictures. Geo. Panagotacos is the proprietor.

WASHINGTON

The opening of the new City theatre, in the Fraternity building, Mansfield, took place recently. A feature was the the introduction to the public of the juvenile band, comprised of boys and girls ranging in age from 8 to 15 years. Those children have been under the instruction of Professor Beeber.

"From Apathy to Enthusiasm"

(In Three Positions)

Position No. 1 (Undesirable)

Dealers didn't care to push the Simplex. Those who were candid expressed themselves something like one man we have in mind.

Said he:

"When I sell another make of Projector I make a nice profit in the first place, and can count on a future income from repairs and spare parts. But my profit on the Simplex is smaller to begin with, and hardly any repairs are needed. Your Machine is too good, that's all."

Position No. 2 (A Fortunate Calamity)

When last spring we refused to join in a Combine, we lost almost our entire sales organization, including the above-mentioned apathetic Dealers. Luckily, no Combine can prevent the Exhibitor from buying what he knows is best. So our sales kept on increasing until they were almost double.

Position No. 3 (The Best Ever)

Now we have the great pleasure of introducing to you, on opposite page, the Distributors who handle the Simplex Projector, and the Simplex only.

—Men who give their undivided attention and enthusiasm to this one Machine, and who therefore can give you top-notch service—which they couldn't do if their efforts were scattered.

—Men of such sterling character that they think more of the Exhibitor's good-will than of his orders for repairs.

—Men with whom it will pay you to deal, not only when you want the Simplex, but whenever you want anything of any kind for your Theater. They will give you a square deal and will thereby deserve your continued patronage.

"PAY ME"

Produced by Joseph De Grasse

PUNCH, power and pressure at their highest peak. A 20,000-volt drama of human passions in the great gambling hall of a lawless Western camp, where a wronged husband and father exacts fearful retribution. Seldom has swifter action been seen on any screen. Never has there been a deadlier battle. What scores of others have done with this mighty production, you can do and will do. Break your business records with "Pay Me."

"Come Through"

Herbert Rawlinson in George Bronson Howard's mightiest melodrama. The Critics said: "The best suspense drama New York has had for years."

"Sirens of the Sea"

Louise Lovely, Carmel Myers and countless Venus-formed maidens in the Beauty Picture of the Age. A ravishing dream of female loveliness. Directed by Allen Holubar. 6 Reels.

"The Co-Respondent"

Elaine Hammerstein and Wilfred Lucas in a $50,000 publicity-driven drama of supreme intensity made by Ralph Ince from the stage play by Alice Leal Pollock and Rita Weiman.

"The Price of a Good Time"

Mildred Harris and Kenneth Harlan in the tremendously affecting story of a girl's greatest temptation. From "The Whim" by Marion Orth. Produced with lavish sympathy by Lois Weber—the Belasco of the Screen.

"The Man Without A Country"

An up-to-the-minute picture of a wealthy young American of today struggling in a misguided effort to put weak-kneed Pacifism above Love of Country. The one absolutely certain, bet-your-bottom-dollar-on-it, money-maker of the hour. Produced by Thanhouser.

Passing the 6000 Mark

OCTOBER 28TH, 1916, we advertised that there were 5,000 exhibitors in America showing Paramount Pictures, and that seemed remarkable.

It was remarkable.

——but today there are well over 6,000 theatres showing the pictures under the Selective Star Series Plan.

In the city of Minneapolis, with a population of 343,466, we have 20 theatres showing Star Series, solid bookings, every star.

Again, opening the Sales Department record at random, we find in the city of Detroit, with a population of 900,000, 43 theatres showing solid bookings on every star under the Star Series plan.

There are more theatres in the above mentioned cities showing Paramount Pictures released prior to August 5th—Paramount Mack Sennett Comedies, Paramount Arbuckle Comedies, and other short subjects—that have not as yet arrived at the Star Series point. But, the figures given above are Selective Star Series, only.

6,000 Theatres Showing Paramount and Artcraft Pictures

——there must be a reason——

——there is a reason—several in fact, and they are very simple.

Paramount and Artcraft Pictures feature the best "drawing stars" of the screen.

Paramount and Artcraft Pictures are constructed on the best stories literature and the drama, ancient and modern, affords.

Paramount and Artcraft Pictures are produced by an organization made up of the best brains and the best facilities that unlimited resources can provide and human ingenuity can devise.

Paramount and Artcraft Pictures are distributed on a plan fundamentally sound and equitable in every detail.

These are the reasons for an increase of 1,000 accounts in one year, and when Paramount or Artcraft Pictures go into a house, they generally stay—— ——and many a house has stayed on that account, but that is something else——

——the point is—are you succeeding too?

J. Warren Kerrigan in

Screen Version by THOMAS G. GERAGHTY

"A Man's Man"

Written by PETER B. KYNE

DIRECTED BY OSCAR APFEL

Excerpts from Real Reviews by Regular Big-Time Newspaper Critics

Great audiences yesterday welcomed J. Warren Kerrigan back to the screen. Crowds filled Clune's Auditorium all afternoon and evening to felicitate W. H. Clune upon his masterly coup in securing the first run of "A Man's Man," and last night became a veritable "Kerrigan night."

.....Kerrigan in creating this play advances the cinematic art..... Tremendous applause marked nearly every foot of the final reel and certified without doubt the big success of the first Kerrigan-Paralta release.—Los Angeles Evening World.

"A Man's Man" cost a large sum. It has magnificent sets that were apparently built with no regard for expense..... "A Man's Man" looks like a sure-fire hit.....the play is an important contribution to the art of the cinema.—Los Angeles Express.

"A Man's Man," which is the first Paralta production to be shown, and which stars the popular film favorite, J. Warren Kerrigan, showed last night at Clune's Auditorium before a crowd which packed the house from garret to cellar.....

Mr. Kerrigan knows how to fight in more picturesque ways than even Douglas Fairbanks.....

We shall look forward to great things from Mr. Kerrigan.....

The story is full of strong situations, smashing climaxes, real originality of plot. In fact, no fan can afford to miss it. It is told with wonderful clearness, and the photography demands a paragraph all to itself.—Los Angeles Times,

It would seem impossible that Clune's big Auditorium, with its immense seating capacity, should be "turning them away," but that is exactly what happened at every presentation yesterday of Peter B. Kyne's vigorous story of love and South American intrigue.....

As a lover, as a fighter, as a man, Kerrigan's acting leaves nothing to be desired. He is simply himself..... the kind of a hero you and I would like to be..... There is not a foot of film wasted.....

"A Man's Man" may well pack the big Auditorium for the rest of its engagement here.....—Los Angeles Evening Herald.

It is one of the fastest moving pictures of recent times; it gathers suspense with every reel, and it displays liberality of treatment and its rich settings, interior and exterior.....

.....incidents of the story are vividly and sometimes tremendously staged. The picture is a triumph....

Altogether the premier of "A Man's Man" was auspicious for the Paralta Company and an augury of some fine pictures from that studio in the future. —Los Angeles Morning Tribune.

TRIANGLE

Where Triangle Stands

Right out in the open with nothing to conceal, working in every possible way to improve the industry—

Making every effort to produce better pictures, spending money for better stories—

Adopting clean cut and up-to-date business methods, establishing equitable prices and close co-operative service for exhibitors—these are some of the things for which Triangle stands.

We may make mistakes—we would not be human if we did not, but we will always acknowledge our errors and correct them wherever possible.

These are not empty words. This is the absolute, unalterable policy of Triangle.

Here are two recent instances of our effort to serve exhibitors.

We announced that Triangle would not transfer to exhibitors the war tax levied upon film manufacturers. We do not believe it is fair and equitable for exhibitors to be compelled to pay this tax, and therefore we will not charge it to them.

Again—we have just announced that we will release one seven-reel super-production each month to Triangle exhibitors on our regular program at no extra cost. This is another evidence of our sincere desire to serve exhibitors to the best of our ability. The first seven-reel super-feature is "Because of a Woman," to be released December 16th.

In the Hart and Fairbanks re-issues, which we are now offering to exhibitors, we give them an opportunity to make money. Every exhibitor in the country knows the value of these pictures—knows that they are box office attractions. We are furnishing new prints with new paper and accessories and at prices that guarantee a profit to exhibitors.

We are in the picture business to make money. We are not trying to hide that fact. However, we are not endeavoring to make all our profit in one day or one year. We expect to be in business for some time to come. We appreciate, and appreciate fully, that we will make money in exact proportion as the exhibitors that we serve are successful.

We are for fair and square dealing in every particular. Our cards are all on the table. Watch Triangle grow!

AN OPEN LETTER TO MR. STANLEY V. MASTBAUM AND THE EXHIBITORS OF THE UNITED STATES

Gentlemen:—

In Mr. Mastbaum's telegram to the trade press and others under date of November 26, 1917, he cites three very obvious facts:

1st. Great overproduction with consequent waste.
2nd. Producers' inability to organize to cure their own difficulties, much less those of the exhibitors.
3rd. The suggestion of reduced output and concentrated distribution.

Mr. Mastbaum asks: "What is to be done?" and suggests amalgamation.

Just what elements, Mr. Mastbaum, in your opinion, should amalgamate? Those of Production, and Distribution controlled by Production? Or those of Exhibition? Or do you mean a joint amalgamation of Production, Distribution and Exhibition?

Before replying very pertinently to the vital matters touched on above, I want to emphasize to exhibitors the fact that I am to-day, by choice, unattached and alone, free both in viewpoint and from business interests that could possibly shade my opinions. Furthermore my views are the result of ten years of close contact with this business and intimate association with exhibitors individually and in groups; likewise producers.

During these ten years I have worn no one's collar and wear none to-day. I am a free agent. I have accurately forecast developments for years ahead and have always worked with definite plans. I believe in the law of cause and effect in the motion picture business. I do not believe that success or failure is due to chance. If my views expressed herein meet with opposition, stop to think whether the opponent is as free to express an unbiased opinion as I am—and whether or not as much time has been devoted by him to constructive work.

Do you, Mr. Mastbaum, mean by "amalgamation" a combination of producers after stating that they have made no effort to help themselves?

But suppose they did combine. What then about the exhibitors? Does anyone imagine that this prospect would be pleasing to the owners of houses representing millions of dollars of real value? This aggregate exhibitor investment is the only considerable value there is in the business, the value upon which producing and distributing organizations have been built. I, as an exhibitor, with a memory of past producer co-operation up to this time would not welcome it.

Perhaps you mean a combination of exhibitors? Difficult! But for the sake of argument granted. Would the producers under this combination fare any better if dominated by the exhibitors considering their own interests?

Perhaps you mean a combination of all interests? How can all the present elements—those who are fighting, those who are winning and those who are losing—become reconciled? A combination of all elements existing to-day, stable and otherwise, would be a mighty unhealthy amalgam.

Such an amalgamation could not be controlled and could be easily defeated because of the lack of an essential element which the business has thus far neglected. That element is principle.

Principle has always been missing in this business, and where individual elements are not built on principle there does not exist the capacity to adopt principle to the more complicated structure an amalgamation would create. An industry without principle is like a large building of concrete without reinforcements. You can build it, but it caves in easily. The iron rods of principle, without which nothing really great and permanent can be built, are lacking from our structure. To expect that a magic remedy for a lack of principle in the past can be found in amalgamation is wrong.

Dismissing amalgamation there are two other very important questions brought out in Mr. Mastbaum's telegram:

1st. How long can the industry stand the present abuses before a crash must come?
2nd. What is to be done to prevent this crash?

I am going to endeavor to answer these two questions, not haltingly nor hesitatingly, but right from the shoulder. Furthermore I am going to work out the answer to Number 2 in co-operation with those elements which are qualified to aid in the solution.

In answer to No. 1, "How long before the crash will come?" The crisis is already here. The telegram from Mr. Mastbaum, the organizing of numerous exhibitors' distributing corporations throughout the country, the deadlock of the producers and exhibitors over the reel tax, are all rumblings of an impending crash. Any expediency which staves it off only increases its scope when it comes. By expediencies I mean such policies resorted to by producers as selling their best negatives with the result that rival exchanges are encouraged to spring up like weeds to choke their own growth.

To-day the producers surely realize this. I realized the danger of this policy when it was first tried years ago, but because it took years to run its course, no one else feared the disease. All factors in the industry have resorted to such expediencies to the extent that these expediencies are to-day choking all future progress.

I claim that I have a clearer perspective. Why? Because I have paid for it. For ten years I have looked ahead and never compromised with the present for the sake of expediency. Therefore I have never destroyed my perspective or mortgaged my future.

I went out of the business last Spring with the feeling that I could not safely invest money in any branch of it under existing circumstances. For months I waited to be sure my perspective was right, and meanwhile I formulated the plans which I now give you in answer to question Number 2—"What is to be done?"

My answer is that we must have a new type of organization, one which does not now exist, a type founded on a definite plan and developed according to principle. Such was the principle of the organization I created in 1914 when it was controlled by distributors instead of by producers, when it was free to do justice between exhibitors and producers alike and not forced to accept the producers' viewpoint as to what was justice.

The new type of organization must combine, in some manner, the functions of production, distribution and exhibition. I could describe it and its workings in a finished state in detail, but much preliminary work the nature of which I shall now go into will be necessary before this new type of organization will be arrived at. I shall only say that it will not be a heterogeneous collection of elements that might be handy and rushed together for expediency to stave off disaster, but rather it will be the result of well planned co-operative efforts on the part of the best elements in the business. Only elements that should be a part of such an organization will be able to recognize the road when it is pointed out. Such an organization would have so many advantages that other surviving elements would have to follow its lead.

I am now taking advantage of the present conditions to build such an organization. This organization will be a perfectly logical development of my work in this industry from the very beginning to the present time. My plans are comprehensive and complete. They follow:

The W. W. Hodkinson Corporation and the subsidiaries it controls will devote themselves to the distribution of high grade motion pictures on an equitable basis to the manufacturer. We are not and will not be controlled by exhibitors, and a producer can therefore be assured that his product will not be furnished to exhibitors on a basis unfair to the manufacturer.

However, three fourths of the profits of distribution will be turned back to the exhibitors who deal with us—provided these exhibitors care to avail themselves of this opportunity and assume part of the functions of distribution.

The thinking exhibitor everywhere will deal with me today, because I am going to build a permanent organization of which he will be a part. The fact that I will not ask him to assume risks nor to pay more than any product supplied him is worth, will insure his continuance in the business. On the other hand, the producer can safely market his product through my organization, because my offer to the exhibitor of a fair price and three quarters of the distributing profits will create a group of exhibitors of sufficient size and standing to assure quality producers a stable and ample market, a group furthermore that will continue to support that producer as long as his product warrants such support.

In other words, my organization assures exact balance between producer and exhibitor. My willingness to turn over three quarters of the distributing profits to the exhibitor who wishes to perform some of the functions of distribution, recognizes the exhibitor for what he is, namely, the all important, indispensable element in the business, where the larger profits should center.

But my plans do not contemplate taking anything away from the producer, except distribution profits which so many now have. Furthermore my plans contemplate a reduction in the expense of distribution for the producer through greater efficiency secured in tying in the exhibitors.

My plans do not contemplate an assured market to a producer of inferior pictures nor the continuance of highly profitable service to a theatre that expects to pay less than the producer is legitimately entitled to. Only from such a comprehensive, co-operative scheme in a truly broad sense can the elements of this business work together to further unify and finally combine their efforts in one organization for the purpose of taking even further steps forward in this great industry.

Consciously or unconsciously, the whole industry is working toward the same goal. The big producing interests are facing a condition where the ownership of theatres is necessary for their continuance, as an assurance of a market for their goods. The big theatres and even the smaller ones, feeling their strength and the need of freedom from producer domination, are drifting consciously or unconsciously into competition with the producers for material and believe that with the assured market they can offer, they can dominate production.

Nearer and nearer we are working toward civil war in the industry, for each side overestimates its own strength—each lacks the perspective to see the other's rights and power. So we have producers on one side, exhibitors on the other. I cannot see how further progress is possible except through the working of some competent force independent of both groups, helping them to meet their joint problems from an unbiased viewpoint, a viewpoint that must be based on long years of experience gained in studying and working on this problem.

To-day, I as an exhibitor could not start a theatre with any assurance of a continual product on which I could depend and build successfully year in and year out.

I, as a distributor could not encourage a producer to invest money in motion pictures to be rented in competition with all the other films going out and all of the exchanges which handle them.

I, as a producer would not spend money on product to meet present conditions.

To exhibitors I can say that I will get under the burden of working out what I would want in their places if I owned their theatres.

To producers I say that my appeal is being responded to by hundreds of exhibitors to whom my plans have not as yet been expressed, but who recognize in my return to the industry, from past experience with my work, that I come back not as a transient but only to take an advanced step.

To both exhibitors and producers I will say that commendable as my objects are in themselves and deserving of support, I expect to use a leverage to help me bring about a mutually satisfactory condition by offering the industry a new process which I control, under which the first picture is now being made and which will insure each exhibitor who contracts for it a better class of motion pictures than he could otherwise get. This added force will further insure me the support of the best theatres throughout the country.

As the trade knows, I am already doing business. I have product for sale, a product of peculiarly high quality.

This consists of twenty-four Paralta Plays a year, and to this supply will be added, when present negotiations are completed, a product of at least equal quantity and quality.

But beyond this present product, for which contracts are now being made, I have in my new process of picture making a lever which will further increase the support of every solid influence in the industry. With this process, which offers many opportunities and advantages to the producer as well as an assured market in the house using its product, I shall be enabled to secure the best productions.

This process I shall speak of more fully and definitely in succeeding advertisements.

To sum up, this has been a business that has transgressed all business laws. I shall work with those laws instead of against them. I expect opposition. I have always had it. All progress is opposed by those whom it disturbs. You may think it takes courage to start a new movement. Not at all. I have a background of previous experiences with the same principles and the same business laws. I would not have the courage to do otherwise than I am doing, because I would not dare to work against these laws as I believe the whole industry is doing to-day.

Dear Mr. Zukor,

We consider you one of the best judges of star value in motion pictures. Your judgment on Mary Pickford and Douglas Fairbanks are two striking examples of this. For this reason, Mr. Zukor, we invite you to the New York opening of "BLUE JEANS" in which VIOLA DANA is the star. We believe you will agree with us that in Miss Dana we have one of the biggest star attractions and that in this great production she reaches the pinnacle of motion picture success. We will appreciate your frank opinion as an expert and as a judge of great stars and pictures. Will you favor us Mr. Zukor? Thank you.

A word or two about HAROLD LOCKWOOD

His Past - Harold Lockwood after selecting an ideal set of parents was born in Newark, N.J. not such a long while ago. He endured the hardships of high school and college without a whimper, but he loved horses better than he loved books. As a lad he was on speaking terms with baseball, football, golf, tennis and boxing, and then after a short dash into business he had a whack at the stage. Then came motion pictures, the first high spots of his career being as leading man for Mary Pickford in "Tess of the Storm Country" and with Marguerite Clark in "Wild Flower."

His Present - Harold Lockwood rose to the top in "The River of Romance," "The Masked Rider," "The Come Back," "Mister 44" "Big Tremaine," "Pidgin Island," "The Haunted Pajamas," "The Hidden Spring," "Paradise Garden," and now in "The Square Deceiver," of which more is said on the opposite page.

His Future - Harold Lockwood's future is in still greater pictures now being prepared for him by METRO. They are productions that give full play for the vigor, the enthusiasm, the grace of manner and the dramatic powers of this splendid star.

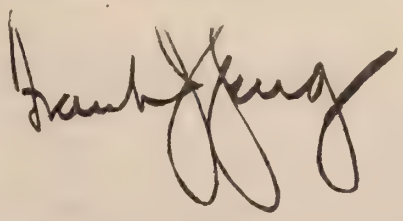
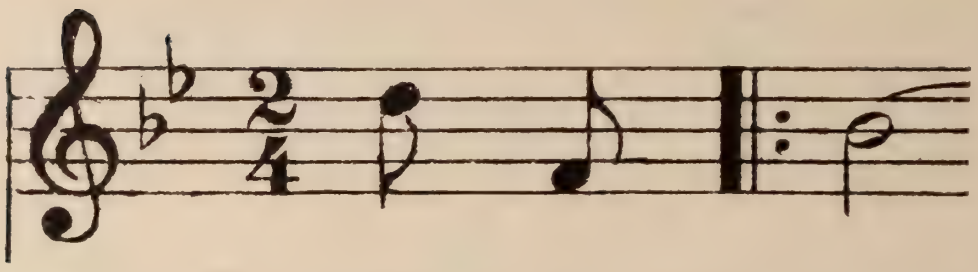
A MESSAGE

After carefully investigating conditions, I decided to place this exceptional production with Mr. Murphy when I received his personal assurance that he would devote his entire time to this one big film.

Most of you know Sam Moscow who manages Mr. Murphy's Boston office, and William F. O'Brien who will be in charge at Springfield, Mass.



These men are going to devote their time to seeing that you get the proper co-operation when you play the greatest "home circle" production ever put on the screen.



Since "PARENTAGE" is so essentially a production which will delight the communities made up of homes, I have been considering very carefully my selection of distributors in a "home" community to have complete, efficient, personal co-operation.

My announcement last week of the allotment of Washington, Oregon, Idaho and Montana to L. J. Schlaifer Attractions, 233-234 Central Building, Seattle, Washington, was in accordance with my desire to select exchanges capable of genuine service co-operation in community home centers.

I feel sure that you will all be delighted to know that in the New England States "PARENTAGE" will be handled by THE LIBERTY FILM COMPANY, FRED B. MURPHY, 209 Pleasant St., Boston, and 167 Dwight St., Springfield, Mass.

And—Mr. Exhibitor—if you are not receiving "THE PARENTAGE MESSENGER" send your address to me at 610 Times Bldg., New York.

The following telegram has been sent to Stanley Mastbaum, Philadelphia, in reply to his telegram sent you on November 26th:

We have your telegram pointing out an overproduction and overdistribution waste in the film industry of a half million dollars a week. You speak also of an advertising waste but give no figures. May we supply these figures. May we also indicate that this waste while much smaller has the same uneconomic basis as overproduction and overdistribution. And more importantly still may we suggest that while, as you yourself well know, the solution of the bigger problem is difficult and not immediately possible that on the other hand every manufacturer and every distributor has it altogether within his own power and at this very moment may stop his advertising waste if he so wills. Just as there is a market right now for only nine features a week so and just as surely there is need of only two trade papers. One is enough to reach properly and completely the purchasing power of the field but two are necessary to preserve a desirable balance of competition. Yet in the face of this self-evident tact we have ten papers receiving trade advertising and two more are contemplated. The proportion is two to twelve instead of nine to twenty-one. All advertising expenditure outside of two papers is waste pure and senseless. The waste amounts to between a half and three quarters of a million a year. This amount like any other waste is paid for somewhere along the line. The exhibitor has a right to insist that it isn't tacked on to his service. Again we state that here is one big waste and the only big waste that can be immediately stopped. The industry is facing its greatest commercial crisis. If waste is unchecked it will gallop away with the business. Advertising waste is easily and instantly removable. There is absolutely no excuse for the good natured and unbusinesslike maintenance of a dozen papers where only one can be read, and the proposition stands right up to the manufacturer and distributor for instant action.

WM. A. JOHNSTON

The above saving—of wasted, useless advertising—would pay about one-fifth of the film war tax. It would save many a small house from closing its doors. Isn't it time for you to stop and think—and stop?

"FROZEN WARNING"

(SIX PARTS)

WORLD'S GREATEST WOMAN SKATER

Morning Telegraph says:

Charlotte on the screen is an engaging and self-possessed personality, one whom film fans will catalogue in the list of captivating ingenues. Her initial screen work in the first Commonwealth, Pictures Corporation release is a revelation, quite as clever as that of many very experienced stars. She photographs unusually well and appears quite oblivious to the proximity of the camera, except in her exhibition skating. She has a good chance to display the skill on the ice which has made her famous.

The feature is characterized by splendid photography and light effects. The fade-outs are excellent. In fact, the pictorial appeal of the film is unusual and few new companies reveal such promising results technically. The ice-skating scenes, including Charlotte's clever stunts, film effectively.

Moving Picture World says:

One of the surprises in store for the screen public is the splendid manner in which the famous skater Charlotte has succeeded in her first attempt in the moving picture drama. The photography of the picture is clear and the locations and settings are unusually artistic and pleasing. But, after all is said and done, the drawing card of the production is contained in the scenes in the new Chicago arena where Charlotte, untouched by camera-shyness, performs the wonderful skating feats for which she is famed over two continents. To those who have or have not witnessed the skating of Charlotte these scenes alone are worth the price of admission.

It is only fair to say that there are numerous dramatic stars who have not made good on the screen as pleasingly as the little skater Charlotte.

The picture is clean and wholesome in quality, spectacular and otherwise interesting, and should be one of the best box-office attractions on the market.

The Mastbaum Bomb

The Flare of Its Explosion Discloses Three Men in a Boat—Sinking Slowly

SOMETHING of a bomb was thrown into the midst of the film industry last week!

It came in the form of an eight hundred-word telegram from Stanley Mastbaum, of Philadelphia, to the heads of fifteen film companies and to the trade press.

Mr. Mastbaum calls attention to a stupendous waste now being borne by the industry—of a half-million dollars a week—this waste being the result of overproduction plus unnecessary distribution costs.

"The exhibitor," says Mr. Mastbaum, "must pay. How long can he continue to pay?"

"The manufacturer can not help the exhibitor because the manufacturers have made no effort to help themselves."

The conditions Mr. Mastbaum cites have been more or less well known to a number of people in the business for some time.

No one, however, has thus far put them in concrete figures—such as the waste of eleven features a week, and the fact that one exchange will do the work of twelve.

Waste at the Bottom of Dissension and Unrest

THE figures are startling. They give us a pretty clear idea of what the industry has been undergoing. Twenty-six million dollars a year pure waste! For a long time the industry has been writhing under this tremendous load. The bitter enmities and suspicions that have arisen, the charges back and forth of bad practices, the open warfare now developed between the two big branches of the industry, are the result very largely of the fact that the industry has had to struggle along to make a profit against almost overwhelming odds.

We have pointed out the situation previously. We used the simile of a house, the occupants of which were constantly at war with each other, simply because the house had an insecure foundation and was constantly rocking with the slightest wind.

The film tax and the sharp clash it has caused between exhibitors and producers has evidently brought matters to a crisis.

Let Us Glance at Both Sides

THE exhibitors are in a bad way. We have pointed out the fact that the small house can scarcely afford to pay this added tax however slight it is. It is the straw that is breaking the camel's back.

We wish to go on record here, however, in an emphatic manner and state that neither can the manufacturere pay this tax. No manufacturer has thus far seen fit to publish the unpleasant truth about himself, but the fact stands out that generally speaking he is making no money at all, or else losing money to an alarming degree. Manufacturers have within the past few days evidently decided to open wide their blinds. Within the past few days plain and astounding facts have been told the writer in confidence; in one instance a prominent firm disclosed some pages from the report of their certified accountants. The latter figures were alarming. They indicate a large loss for the past eighteen months.

Here and there manufacturers are adopting expedients which they know to be bad business, but which they regard to be necessary to keep the ship afloat.

The whole film business is affected by this film tax.

It comes along and finds the entire industry in a boat so filled with leakage water that it is just fairly and safely afloat. The tax, while big enough, is not nearly so heavy as the leakage water; but it is enough to threaten seriously the boat's ability to float.

We Find All in the Same Boat—and It's Leaking

THE point of the matter is that the whole industry is in the boat. It is difficult to say which branch of the industry, exhibitor or manufacturer, is the worse off. We make emphatic here the statement of the manufacturer's condition for two reasons. First, in the belief that it will help clear the air in the present tax controversy, and secondly, to call to the exhibitors' attention the obvious fact that a crippled manufacturer means a crippled picture market and therefore a crippled exhibitor business.

Present conditions are bad—very bad.

And they are unbusinesslike. There is no business unity in the industry. The truth baldly put is about this: The big branches of the industry are today in open warfare upon one another. Where the distributor is in control, he gets the price he asks. The theatre takes it—or leaves it for the other theatre. The rental price secured is often ruinously high, away above the theatre's earning power. On the other hand, where the exhibitor has local control, the distributor gets what the exhibitor chooses to pay him. This price on the other hand is often ruinously low—too low to make profitable the production of pictures.

The situation is equally bad for all concerned.

On the one hand the producer faces a market uncertain at its best. He does not know in advance, he can not know, that his product will be absorbed and return him a profit. His market has no stability.

The outlook for the theatre today is just as uncertain. The man who has made a big investment is wondering gravely about the future. Will he be able to secure a steady supply of quality pictures? Will he be able to get them at the price which will yield him a profit?

How Then Shall We Patch the Leak?

MR. MASTBAUM says, "Amalgamate!"

The reply to Mr. Mastbaum is another question—a series of questions. They are not alone ours—they are being asked today by the men who received Mr. Mastbaum's telegram, with the tacit admission in each instance that his statement of conditions is correct.

They, in turn, ask Mr. Mastbaum, "Amalgamate what?"

Amalgamate the exhibitors?

Amalgamate the distributors?

Amalgamate the manufacturers?

Amalgamate what?

Exhibitors are already amalgamated. Other national circuits are following the First National Exhibitors' Circuit with its imposing array of the country's leading theatres and its preparations already under way to secure and distribute its own pictures.

Shall It Be Exhibitor Amalgamation?

IN addition to the large number of already established local circuits of theatres, we have many more new ones springing into being almost every week. The circuiting of theatres, in fact, is one of the big outstanding features of the industry this fall. A special report sent to MOTION PICTURE NEWS from the West discloses new circuits and the enlargement of those previously existing, closing with the deduction that the circuiting of theatres in the Western territory is one of the big underlying currents of the business there.

Here is a force to reckoned with.

The step is in a way a natural one. It is an effort to better exhibitor conditions—to arrange for an adequate supply of pictures on a "live and let live" basis, to secure uniform and better advertising, reduce express charges, and in other ways to lower cost of maintenance, and increase and stabilize box-office receipts.

There is a danger to the whole industry in exhibitor amalgamation, however. If the theatres are run by broad-minded men, men who realize that the producer must live as well as the exhibitor, that stars' salaries, for instance, and other abuses, are quite as much as the exhibitor's making as well as the manufacturer's, that the manufacturer must always be encouraged to make better pictures—all very well. If any radical rule is attempted, however, all very wrong.

Will Distributor Amalgamation Do the Trick?

AMALGAMATE the distributors?

There is talk right now in New York of a distributors' pool, embracing a number of prominent brands of pictures, and designed among other things to reduce the huge distribution waste now estimated at upwards of ten million dollars a year.

There are some experienced leaders who believe this is the only practical and immediate cure for the present crisis; who believe that a big booking association is inevitable in the business, and that it will eventually wield the complete control held over the vaudeville field by a few big booking associations.

Here again, however, the same danger looms up. Will such a power in distribution be wisely wielded, and in the best interests of the individual theatre and of the whole good of the industry? Will rental prices be reduced? Will the stars' salaries be regulated? Will theatres be restricted?

In Neither Do We Find a Cure—So Then——

OUR answer to Mr. Mastbaum—is also amalgamation, but industrial amalgamation. Not exhibitor amalgamation nor distributor amalgamation, nor producer amalgamation, but an amalgamation of all these branches of the industry.

This idea is neither utopian nor theoretical. It is just plain business sense and business history. It calls simply for the same amalgamation that prevails successfully in other and older industries.

The keynote of this industrial amalgamation will be a business policy—a policy which fundamentally recognizes the necessary prosperity of each correlative branch of the industry and which guarantees to each a legitimate profit.

That is just what this industry lacks most today in a broad sense—a business policy.

By business policy, we mean a policy not built upon today, but tomorrow. A policy which turns its eyes from quick profits, which deliberately discards the easiest way and selects the straight, difficult path, which has a goal at the end of the road, however much patience and capital are required to reach it.

We reiterate—the whole industry is today in the same business boat. No one is better off than his neighbor. A crisis threatens all.

The producer today with an investment of a million dollars is just like the theatre with an investment of one hundred thousand, and the latter in turn is in principle situated just as the small house with an investment of ten thousand dollars tied up.

Each thoughtful concern, whether present conditions may be good or bad, is asking primarily this all-important question: "What of the future? What stability is there? How permanent and how good is my investment?" The answer to Mr. Mastbaum's question must be one which will satisfy each and all elements of this industry. Therefore, it will have to be in the form of an industrial amalgamation, built securely from the ground up and so ordered and systematized that all sections of the building are equally and permanently safe.

Can Business Men Get Together Like Business Men?

LET us grant for the second that this answer does sound utopian. Let us make a suggestion that isn't either sound or fact—that is concrete and

The Reader Has His Say

Why Not a Percentage Tax?" Asks Florida Exhibitor

Editor, MOTION PICTURE NEWS.

DEAR SIR: In all the discussions that have appeared in the trade papers, and I read four of them, I have failed to see the 15 cent tax treated as it should be from the small town exhibitor angle. I book for three small towns and the average price of the regular program features runs about $7.50 a day. The 15 cent tax is equivalent to a 10 per cent. increase in film rental. The exchanges are now flooding us with "The Truth about the reel tax" wherein is set forth the sad fact that it amounts to thousands of dollars a week and they will go broke if they don't collect it from the exhibitor, who will go broke if he doesn't collect it from the public, etc., etc. It has not been long since I read a commentary on the poor salesmanship of the exhibitor in general, giving that as the main reason why he is not overburdened with the stuff that talks. I rise to ask: Why doesn't the exchange produce some of that wonderful salesmanship so he can take care of his taxes? "The Truth About the Reel Tax" fails to tell how the exhibitor is to collect it from the public and just how much should be added to each admission to cover this 15 cents a reel, because the exhibitor should not profit at the expense of the public. Now, if it is necessary for the exchanges to charge this to the exhibitor, the truth of which statement I do not admit, the system instituted is wrong, inasmuch as it places the heaviest burden on us little fellows. Suppose the amount of the tax is 1 per cent. of the amount received from rentals, which I believe is a very liberal estimate, why did they not put it up to the exhibitors to pay 1 per cent. more rental? That would have been the fair way for all concerned, but in doing that they would have had to increase the big man's rental from $1.00 to $2.00 a day and they might have lost some of the big accounts. It did not make much difference whether or not they lost some of the little accounts, and they have lost some and are going to lose more because 75 cents a day will wipe out the profits in many little houses for every day in the week except Saturday.

"The Truth About the Reel Tax" is just about the juciest piece of boiled down bunk I have read in a long time. It reads just like some rapid fire press agent's writings.

Very truly yours,
F. A. SUTTON.

Only House in Town—Yet War Tax Might Close Him Up

Editor, MOTION PICTURE NEWS.

DEAR SIR: As various exhibitors have voiced their sentiments through the columns of your valuable MOTION PICTURE NEWS, I thought that probably you would not object to hearing from this section of the U. S. A.

Situated as we are in the mountains and not participating in any boom, due to the present war the patron tax hits us hard. With Y. M. C. A., Red Cross, Liberty Loan and high prices of the necessities of life, people in this vicinity have very little left for amusement. It is all right to say "Pass the buck" to the patron. We pay—not the patron. Amusement, to any person, is a matter of luxury to be indulged in as frequently as their pocketbook and desire will let them.

The most nonsensical contention yet presented is that the public will pay the tax, because they have done so on groceries and also railroad fares. You have got to eat and when you travel it is because you have to. People do not have to go to picture shows every night and what is conclusive argument—they don't. Our receipts are less than half, (except on Saturdays which have decreased about one-quarter) what they were before the patron tax.

We just added the tax and there has been a deficit instead of a profit since we did so. We expect to reduce our nights for presenting pictures to three or four a week and, mind you, we are the only theatre in town.

We show a feature program, using Artcraft-Paramount, Kleine and Mutual. We also use Triangle and Vitagraph, charge 5 and 10 cents except on Artcraft, when price is 10 and 15 cents. We have the only theatre in town and yet the war tax has his us so hard that we presume it is only a matter of time when we have to abandon our business.

It is all very well to say, "Be patriotic!" "Appeal to your patrons," etc. The fact is the majority of our patrons are in a quandary as to how they are going to exist.

The majority of the husky youths of this vicinity are either in camp or in France. The girls have no escorts to take them around and they have not the cash to spend for amusements themselves.

The whole trouble is, that the fifth greatest industry in this country is in a more chaotic condition than the "Little corner grocery store." There never would have been such a heavy tax imposed on the picture business if same had been properly organized. The various film concerns, with brains and capital, have not used either. The screen artists have been paid fabulous salaries whilst the producer and exhibitor usually just exist. If the producers would get together, there is no reason why conditions could not be remedied.

With their co-operation the exhibitor could get a square deal and taxes could be adjusted so that the exhibitor and the producer would be better protected. Tax the enormous salaries paid the "stars" and tax the profits of producer and exhibitor, not the receipts. As a matter of fact the Government gets more than we do and, I believe, more than 90 per cent. of the small town exhibitors get.

Now I do not wish to give the impression that I begrudge paying the war tax. What I sincerely believe is, that if taxes were adjusted so as to give the small town exhibitor a chance, the Government would eventually realize more than under present conditions.

The average exhibitor's loyalty has never been questioned.

We have given our lobby, screen and time to the Government free and have given a Red Cross benefit, etc.

However, we do think the lack of a concerted effort on the part of the picture industry has caused the present critical state of affairs.

Yours very truly,
H. E. CANE, Manager.

"Small Towns Should Not Pay Reel Tax"

Editor, MOTION PICTURE NEWS.

DEAR SIR: As to the fifteen cents a reel tax which the film companies are trying to collect from the exhibitors please be advised that we are canceling our contracts and filling in with concerns that are paying their own taxes.

The small towns should never have to pay a cent of this tax. The tax should be paid on the film within thirty days, and we never get a film that is less than ninety days old and sometimes six to eight months. Some of them are asking us to pay this tax on films over twelve months old. Thus, instead of a liability this tax will prove a source of income to most of the film companies.

Yours truly,
HENDLEY BROTHERS.

"How Is the Small Fellow Going to Last?"

Editor, MOTION PICTURE NEWS.

DEAR SIR: I enclose $1.25 collected for the cigarette fund at my theatre. Things are slow in this respect as the people are burdened with taxes. Business is fair but I fail to see how small town exhibitors can stay in the business. I consider this fifteen cents per reel tax the most unfair thing ever done by the manufacturers and it is helping very fast to put the small fellow out of business. If all small town exhibitors felt the way I do they would say, "Let her bust!" I can make more money at my trade with less work and nothing to worry about.

Yours,

Forrest theatre, Treverton, Pa.

P.S.—Must give great credit to the NEWS, as it is my big treat of the week.

Interesting Things You May be Missing

UNLESS you turn over the pages of this magazine very carefully you may be surprised to know the number of interesting and valuable features you are missing. In the back of the book:

The Projection Department, conducted by an expert, always contains timely, sound advice to alert operators.

The Camera Department gives accurate details on every new development in the cinema optical field.

The Music Department will save your orchestra leader time and money; and it will give your patrons the best and newest music.

Theatres Worth While is prime full of suggestions, if you will only grasp them, telling of advanced designs in new theatres.

Amalgamation Would Throttle Exhibitors, says Berst

A combination of producers and distributors would strangle the exhibitors of the country instead of aiding them, according to J. A. Berst, vice-president and general manager of Pathe Exchange, Inc., in reply to Stanley V. Mastbaum's telegram. Mr. Berst pointed out that the very competition of which Mr. Mastbaum complains is the salvation of the exhibitor. Any combination, according to Mr. Berst, would automatically increase prices and the burden of competition would be shifted from the shoulders of the distributors to those of the exhibitors. Mr. Berst admits that already the exhibitors have all the burdens they can shoulder.

Mr. Berst's letter to Mr. Mastbaum follows:

"The so-called waste and overproduction about which you complain in your eight hundred and thirty-three-word telegram of November 26, mean the salvation of the exhibitors of the United States and not their destruction, as you seem to believe.

"It is true that the competition today is so keen that a great many of the producing companies that are not making good pictures are losing money. The distributing companies that have no good pictures to sell are also losing money, by reason of the same competition, but Pathe and a few of the other good companies that are selling pictures at prices that assure a profit to exhibitors are prospering, and will continue to prosper.

"This very competition is the exhibitors' strongest protection. It means to you better pictures at lower prices. It is my opinion, based on twenty-three years' experience in the motion picture industry, that any combination of the producing and distributing units would strangle the exhibitors of this country. The combination you seem to have in mind would mean fewer pictures which would shift the burdens of competition from the shoulders of the producers and distributors to those of the exhibitors. Any decrease in competition would mean an automatic increase in prices, and I am frank to admit that at the present time, the exhibitors generally, are not able to carry any more burdens than they are now struggling under.

"I am answering your telegram by mail, because I think that waste of all kind should be eliminated when the Government is striving so hard for economy. Eliminate waste is the national slogan, and should apply to this industry.

Hodkinson Promises New Type of Film Organization

W. W. Hodkinson issued an open letter in reply to the Mastbaum telegram. His answer to Mr. Mastbaum's demand for "amalgamation" is set forth in these terms:

"Would you, Mr. Mastbaum, amalgamate producers after stating that they have made no effort to help themselves? But suppose they did amalgamate, what then about the exhibitors? Does anyone imagine that this prospect would be pleasing to the owners of houses representing millions of dollars of real value? This aggregate exhibitor investment is the only considerable value there is in the business, the value upon which producing and distributing companies have been built. I, as an exhibitor, with a memory of past producer co-operation, would not welcome it."

In the course of a letter, which is printed in full in the advertising pages of this issue, Mr. Hodkinson goes still farther, and states that it is the plan of the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation to "turn back three-quarters of the profits of the company to the exhibitors who join in its plans," on the recognition, stated later, "of the exhibitor for what he is, namely, the all-important indispensable element in the business, where the larger profits should center."

Mr. Hodkinson looks for the solution of the present chaos in the creation of a new type of organization, as he puts it, "a type which does not exist, a type founded upon a definite plan and developed according to principle."

Mr. Hodkinson sums up conditions in the industry as follows:

"Nearer and nearer we are working toward civil war in the industry, for each side overestimates its own strength; each lacks the perspective to see the other's rights and power. So we have producers on one side, exhibitors on the other. I cannot see how further progress is possible except through the working of some competent force independent of both groups, helping them to meet their joint problems from an unbiased viewpoint, a viewpoint based on long years of experience gained in studying and working on this particular problem.

"Today I, as an exhibitor, could not start a theatre with any assurance of a continuous product on which I could depend and build with real success year after year.

"I, as a distributor, could not encourage a producer to invest money in motion pictures to be rented on competition to all the other films going out and all of the exchanges which handle them.

"I, as a producer, would not spend money on product to meet present conditions."

Goldwyn Finds Mastbaum Prompting in Interview

When Samuel Goldfish pointed out in a detailed interview in the Sunday New York Times, declared Goldwyn's statement, that producers of motion pictures could save $10,000,000 annually by the reduction in the existing number of distributing organizations and dwelt at length upon the "mad methods" which are destroying the popularity of pictures he at least served to start the executives of all other motion picture organizations talking and brought forth responses not only from these magnates, but from exhibitors in all parts of the country.

The ruinous overheads maintained by various companies, he pointed out, have produced three results: They have imposed an unbearable burden upon individual organizations, increased the rental costs of pictures to exhibitors and resulted in price-raising to the public which tends to make pictures an exclusive instead of a democratic amusement available to all of the people.

One of the first big factors in motion pictures to take cognizance of Mr. Goldfish's statement, which occupied several columns of space in the New York Times, was Stanley V. Mastbaum, the powerful Philadelphia exhibitor and distributor of pictures through the Stanley Booking Company. Mr. Mastbaum sent a telegram to every producer of pictures and every motion picture trade journal.

An equally prompt response giving the exhibitors' viewpoint came in the form of the following letter from William Brandt, president of the Associated Motion Picture Exhibitors of Brooklyn, who said:

"I read your interview in the New York Times with considerable interest. In these days, with theatres closing up on every hand because of diminished patronage and increased overhead, it is certainly refreshing to know that there is at least one man who is thoroughly conversant with the fundamental reasons. You certainly have struck the rotten spot in the motion picture apple. What a pathetic sight to see the distributors and exhibitors disrupting the entire industry over the 15-cent-a-reel-tax squabble when within their combined reach is the tremendous savings of $10,000,000 a year, just for the asking. You are entitled to the thanks of every man who has the industry at heart for your clear exposition of the facts.

Keep it up, go to it, and know that you have my very best wishes for your success."

"Half Million Waste a Week," Declares Mastbaum

In Open Telegram to Leading Producers Philadelphian Alleges Exhibitor Is Carrying Tremendous Burden of Waste—Amalgamation Is Offered as the Cure

A HAND grenade that exploded with terrific force was turned into film ranks last week by Stanley V. Mastbaum, the prominent Philadelphia exhibitor. It came in the form of an open telegram to fifteen of the leading producers and distributors and the trade press.

Charging a waste of a half million dollars in overproduction, overdistributing and overadvertising, Mr. Mastbaum declares that the exhibitor is carrying this burden and asks, "How much longer can he do so?" Bringing figures to the support of his charge, the Philadelphian then declares amalgamation of effort to reduce duplication of effort to be the only cure for present conditions.

Many Opinions

A few of the expressions of opinion brought forth from film men by Mr. Mastbaum's telegram, will be found on the opposite page. The telegram follows, in full:

Five hundred thousand dollars is wasted weekly by overproduction, overadvertising, too many exchanges, which necessarily means that the exhibitor must pay. How long can he continue to pay? What will happen when he cannot continue to pay? Do you know that the producers are conducting their business in open warfare on each other? The exhibitor must pay for all the tremendous salaries paid by the manufacturers in every branch of the business. What is the solution? Who will solve it?

The crisis will soon be at hand. There is but little time to save the motion picture industry from several severe setbacks. Should these be temporarily avoided, others will come and will continue until the motion picture industry is standardized on a sound basis. In the meantime the exhibitor must pay.

The manufacturers cannot help the exhibitor because the manufacturers have made no effort to help themselves. The trouble is at the manufacturer's end, not the exhibitors.

There are three factors that make for success in any line—observation, deduction, concentration. Why not apply them to this business?

Features released per month by various organizations, based on any eight weeks' period for two months, October, 1917, and November, 1917: Artcraft, 2; Bluebird, 4; Butterfly, 4; Fox, 6; Goldwyn, 2; Metro, 4; Mutual, 8; Paramount, 8; Pathe, 4; Perfection, 4; Select, 4; Triangle, 8; Vitagraph, 4; World, 4; miscellaneous, state rights, etc., 14. Total, 80.

This makes a total of 80 pictures purchased during each four-week period at a negative cost running all the way from $12,000 to $160,000 per feature. It is true that there are very few made as cheap as $12,000 and very few made as high in cost as $160,000. A fair average negative cost, however, would be about $40,000; so that, taking this four-week period and dividing it into 80, we find that we are manufacturing in America at the present time 20 feature negatives at an average cost of $40,000 each, amounting to $800,000 per week in negative cost.

In addition to this negative cost, there is a positive cost of prints to be added. Anywhere from 20 to 45 prints are used on each production; a fair average would be 30 positive prints. Positive prints on a five-reel subject cost at the present time $225 each; therefore the positive prints that are being used would cost $6,750, and 20 times $6,750 would amount to $135,000 for positive prints of features only.

The overhead for the handling of these features is immense. In each territory there are at least 12 offices, meaning salaries for 12 managers, 24 solicitors, 12 office rents, and 12 separate and distinct inspecting forces, shippers, nightmen, etc.; and all this in at least 25 points in the United States and Canada.

The American market cannot possibly absorb these expenses. The burden is placed on the American public and the exhibitors. Not over nine features could be legitimately absorbed, and if the negative cost were reduced and carried by nine features, there would be remarkable saving for the exhibitor and the manufacturer. If distribution, now handled by not less than twelve distributors, were concentrated in not more than two, or better yet, in one center, an immense overhead could be saved for the exchanges, and thus for the exhibitors. It would be a practical saving in our business by co-operation and concentrated efforts of not less than $500,000 each week, as follows:

Saving of 10 negative costs at $40,000 each, which would amount to $400,000 each week. Saving 10 times 35 positive prints, which would amount to $67,500. Saving of overhead and operation of exchanges by concentration, which at a very modest estimate would be $32,500 per week.

In total this is an estimated saving of $500,000 per week.

Why should we, as exhibitors, carry an unnecessary burden of $500,000 per week? No other line of business would. These conditions can be cured by amalgamation.

Capital Meeting a Blunder, Says Varner

"Will Only Gum Up the Machinery," Says North Carolinian, Who Doubts Ochs's Sincerity and Recalls Some History

H. C. VARNER, of North Carolina, legislative representative for the A. E. A., declares the planned Ochs gathering for Washington on December 11, 12, 13, to be a move that "will only gum up the machinery so badly that it will be impossible for the rest of us to accomplish anything for the relief of the exhibitors."

Further, in recalling the history of the last tax fight in Washington, Mr. Varner declares that he doubts Lee Ochs sincerity as, "it is not my opinion that Ochs wants to do anything except stall the exhibitors and make a big noise."

The letter, which was written to Samuel Bullock, chairman of the Cleveland Exhibitors' Committee, follows:

November 30, 1917.

Mr. Sam Bullock,
Motion Picture Theatre,
Cleveland, Ohio.

Dear Mr. Bullock:

I am in receipt of the statement that you have issued and sent to the trade papers, and I have read your note with interest. It seems to me that we are in a very bad condition. I believe that there ought to be a getting together of the exhibitors; but I seriously doubt the advisability of the Washington meeting, especially under the auspices of Lee A. Ochs and the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League. I doubt their sincerity, as it was only last May this same aggregation assembled in Washington, and in a solemn meeting behind closed doors prepared a brief advocating that a tax of 10 per cent. be placed on exhibitors, or rather they called it the Canadian system. And I was the only man present that objected to this scheme, and I continued to object and continued to fight, and this same crowd in New York declared me an outlaw and attempted to destroy me—that is, destroy my influence with Senator Simmons and the Senate Finance Committee. Therefore, I cannot believe in their sincerity.

They must be born again, that is born of the new spirit before they will represent the honest exhibitors of the nation successfully. About the only thing that I expect from the Washington meeting is that they will gum up the machinery so bad that it will be impossible for the rest of us to accomplish anything for the relief of the exhibitors of the nation.

It is impossible to tell Lee Ochs anything, especially is this true when he is compelled to depend upon the manufacturers of films for advertising to support the Exhibitors' Trade Review, and when it comes to this point naturally his human nature exerts itself, and he is not likely to cut his own throat—that, knowingly do it.

I don't know what I shall do, but I hardly think that I shall attend this meeting, as it is not my opinion that Ochs wants to do anything except stall the exhibitors and make a big noise, and try to impress the exhibitors of the country that he is their friend. Ochs knows who feeds him, and he is going to listen to his master's voice and not commit suicide if he knows it. The only hope of the exhibitors of this country is through the new organization, the American Exhibitors' Association. If the bona fide exhibitors of the nation rally around that association they can make their influence felt, not only in Washington, but in the offices of the big film manufacturers of the country.

Personally, I have nothing against the film manufacturers and would not hurt a hair on their heads, but I do not believe in surrendering the rights of the exhibitors to the manufacturer or to anybody else. I think we should all work for the common good of the industry.

With best wishes and highest personal regards, I am

Very truly yours,
H. C. VARNER.

Florence Atkinson Painfully Burned in Accident

Florence Atkinson, who has the role of the vampire in "The Marionettes," which Clara Kimball Young's company is finishing, was painfully burned about the head, arms and shoulders on Friday of last week at the Thanhouser Studio in New Rochelle, where the company is working.

Vitagraph Wins Final in Anita Stewart Suit

Appellate Division of Supreme Court Affirms Ruling of the Lower Court—Restrains Player from Making Other Contracts

THE Vitagraph Company has won the final round in its suit against Anita Stewart and Louis B. Mayer, of Boston, it was announced last Saturday, immediately after the court decision had been handed down.

On Friday, November 30, the Appellate Division of the Supreme Court of New York with Justices J. Proctor Clarke, Francis M. Scott, Lloyd Smith and Alfred Page sitting, handed down a unanimous order affirming the injunction against Miss Stewart and Mr. Mayer which was granted by Justice Edward G. Whittaker in Part One of the Supreme Court of New York on Friday, October 19. The injunction restrains Miss Stewart from acting for any corporation or individual other than the Vitagraph Company, and Miss Stewart and Mr. Mayer are restrained from advertising or announcing that Miss Stewart is to work for any other company or individual; and Louis B. Mayer, is specifically enjoined from "enticing, inducing or causing the defendant, Anita Stewart, to fail or refuse to work in the employ of the plaintiff," and is further enjoined from employing her.

Miss Stewart and Mr. Mayer, in carrying the case to the Appellate Division of the Supreme Court, sought to have the injunction set aside. Instead the Appellate Division found for the Vitagraph Company, affirmed the injunction handed down by Justice Whittaker and merely increased the bond to $20,000.

The injunction as originally obtained by the Vitagraph Company remains in full force.

When Justice Whittaker of the Supreme Court handed down his injunction, the decision was heralded as one of the most unusual ever obtained in the motion picture industry, for in reality it marked the first successful effort of a manufacturer to hold a star to a contract when the latter sought to get away. It was regarded as a significant thing at the time that the court did not render a written decision, and of even greater significance is the fact that the decision of the Appellate Division results in a unanimous order which is issued without even an opinion.

Albert E. Smith, president of the Vitagraph Company, when advised of the order of the Appellate Division on Friday, said: "There is really nothing for me to add to what I said when Justice Whittaker handed down his decision in October. I stated at that time that our action in this suit was a business matter and was started in self-protection. We regard Miss Stewart's services as of extreme value to us and in view of the vast amount of money that we have spent in making her the popular favorite that she is, we intend to retain those services. There is also the broader principle involved of the relation of players and producers, and in this case we hope to establish for all time that contracts of stars with their employers are just as valid and binding as any other form of contract."

Washington Theatres Doing Normal Business

A. Dresner, of Exhibitors' Film Exchange, Reports Business Good—Smaller Houses Further South Hard Hit

A. DRESNER, general manager of the Exhibitors' Film Exchange, Inc., Washington, D. C., dropped into the MOTION PICTURE NEWS offices last week and reported on conditions in the Capital City after the first two weeks that the war tax on admissions to motion picture theatres had run its course. He said:

"Conditions in Washington are normal without a semblance of poor business reflected by the box-office receipts. The exhibitors here have complied with the Government's request of collecting the additional penny on ten cent admissions, two on the fifteen and so on up the scale and they are working hand in hand with the Government to facilitate in every way possible, the collection of the tax. The public is paying the tax willingly and there has been no indication of the falling off in receipts.

"Further south in Virginia and the Carolinas, the smaller houses have felt the effect of this tax. They have been hit hard but when the patrons in these smaller towns fully realize that the increase in admissions is made imperative, not by the exhibitor but by the Government, business, I believe, will resume its normal standing in these communities.

"There are three theatres in Washington, the Virginia, Maryland and one colored house, that have held to five-cent admission. One of these is considering raising the price to ten cents.

"Three exchanges in Washington are paying the fifteen cents reel tax and giving the exhibitor service at the same price as before the tax took effect. They are Triangle, Mutual and the Exhibitors Film Exchanges. I find that I can supply my customers throughout the states of Maryland, Virginia, North and South Carolina, Florida, Alabama, Georgia, Mississippi, Tennessee and Delaware with service under the old rates and make a good fair profit.

"In regard to the delegation of exhibitors that is being organized to convene in Washington during the first part of December, I will say this much. It is fine but I am not in favor of having this delegation force the issue before Congress. The Government is forced to collect an enormous tax to carry on its part in the war and every one should expect to pay his or her part. If Congress has imposed an unjust tax on the motion picture industry, they will rectify this imposition. I do not think it good judgment or practical for a delegation of exhibitors and others interested in the motion picture industry, to put up a howl at this time. There are other taxes to be laid by Congress and if the industry antagonizes our legislators, they are not going to benefit thereby. I am heartily in favor of the delegation visiting Washington and presenting their case before Congress but I am not in favor of this delegation going there with fight in their eyes. If any wrong has been done through the medium of the tax legislation, it will be remedied."

Newark Exhibitors Thrive on Thanksgiving Day

Holiday crowds that patronized Newark, N. J., motion picture houses proved that the war tax and the higher prices of admission had not seriously influenced their enthusiasm for films. Thanksgiving Day more than 48,000 persons attended the larger and more representative picture houses where the admission prices ranged from 10 to 20 cents. Managers without exception report the biggest holiday crowds of the past five years. There was not a motion picture house in the central part of the city but what commenced to turn away patrons with the showing of the first morning exhibitions. It is estimated that from motion picture houses alone the government collected in Newark on Thanksgiving Day more than $1,000 in war taxes.

Brooklyn Exhibitors Take Action on Reel Tax

At a meeting held on the afternoon of November 24, following a somewhat divided session that had been held two days earlier, and which latter meeting resulted in several exhibitors of Brooklyn declaring their intention to cancel Vitagraph and Fox film service because of the fifteen-cent tax charged by the exchanges, the fifteen members of th Brooklyn local of the M. P. E. L. of A., in whose hands the Fox and Vitagraph cancellations had been placed, decided to withhold them temporarily. This action was taken after William L. Sherry, of Paramount, appeared before the committee and addressed them for two hours.

It is understood that George Balsdon, branch manager of the Vitagraph Company in Brooklyn, previously notified all Brooklyn exhibitors who had refused to meet the fifteen-cent tax that their service was discontinued.

The exhibitors, at the meeting November 22, decided to send six members to the congress of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League called for Washington December 11.

Stars Consent to Attend Exhibitors' Ball

The committee of arrangement for the New York exhibitors' ball at Terrace Garden, December 7, announced this week that several stars have consented to appear in specially staged tableaux.

S. M. Berg, the musical director, has written some original music to accompany these features of entertainment, which will be of a most novel and impressive character. The sale of boxes has been most good, and already the following companies have reserved them: Triangle, Foursquare, Hallberg, Metro, Trade Review, Select, Moving Picture World, Nicholas Power Co., Morning Telegraph, Vitagraph, Paramount, Simplex Precision Co., Fox, Ivan, Pioneer, Meyer & Schneider.

Our First Aid, Course For Use in Educating Your Patrons to War Taxes and Coming Admission Boosts

Secrets of the Movies

A Series of Heart-to-Heart Talks With Our Patrons

No. 1

DID you ever stop to think how short a time ago it is that you used to hesitate at the thought of going to the "movies" in the evening?

The theaters were small, and not always well ventilated. The lighting was bad—when you left the ticket taker you stumbled around in the darkness to find a seat.

And then the pictures! But we will say more about them in our next talk. This one is intended to recall to our minds what changes have come even in the theaters themselves in so short a time as four or five years.

Remember the music? A lone piano player trum-trumming in a maddening, sing-song way. Comedy or drama, it was all the same to him. His tin-panning almost drove you from the theater when the bad air, uncomfortable seats and noisy ushers had failed.

Maybe it was worse. Some theaters added a trap drummer or violinist to the piano player—that only multiplied the agony.

And the flicker! Didn't the films hurt your eyes in those days. They danced about, or else the light was poor. Sometimes they would break right in the middle. You remember. Why in those days if the manager's payroll was over fifty dollars a week he thought he was running a circus. Now he is lucky if he gets off with ten times that. Yet this is only one item of increase. Later when we tell you why it has jumped we will tell you of the other items. And—

Have you ever stopped to think of what little change there has been in admission prices? Sugar, eggs, meat—all the things which are just the same now as five years ago—have doubled in price. And picture entertainment, which has improved so wonderfully has hardly changed in price.

When war conditions first began to be felt many experts said, "picture theaters will have to do away with their fine music and expensive features." But we said, "No! With our backs to the wall we may have to slightly raise prices. But we will fight against that to the last, and above all we will not decrease quality. Now, more than ever, people need and want refined, quality entertainment. And we will show them that—

We Are Doing Our Bit

Mid-West Exchanges Squabble Over Reel Tax

Has Reached Point Where Exhibitors Look on with Interest, and Bet on the Finish—Some Exchanges Said to Be Losing

ACCORDING to latest reports from Omaha, there is a fight in Nebraska and Iowa against the 15-cents-per-reel tax per day, but it is between the exchanges, and not including the exhibitors. It has reached an acute stage. The exhibitors, who themselves took drastic steps on November 1 to wage a fight against the tax, are now just about in the interested spectator class. And they are witnessing a fight full of interest.

The exchanges charging the tax are said to be losing business. Individually, the exchange managers deny this, but they readily admit the managers of the other exchanges charging the tax are "just about on their last pegs," to quote one manager. The other managers, when seen, declared this particular exchange which had boasted good business was due for the dump.

The only way to describe the attitude of the managers whose exchanges are not charging the tax is to say they are tickled to death. And they are reaping big business.

An illustration of how bitter the fight is becoming is shown in the action taken in organizing a bowling league. The managers of the Universal, Bluebird, Vitagraph, Pathe, World and Fox exchanges met and formed a league. The Mutual, General, Standard, Triangle and state rights managers were excluded from the league because their companies were not charging the 15-cent tax!

"Well, I guess it is up to us to organize a league and challenge 'em to a duel in the alley," joked John W. Hicks, manager of the General exchange."

The tax managers also held a meeting to discuss the tax situation. At this meeting they voted to carry out the instructions from their New York offices and charge the tax, cancelling service to any exhibitor who refused to pay the 15 cents per reel. It was at this meeting, confidential in nature, that it became known the managers other than the one being interviewed had confessed to serious losses in business. Even the manager being interviewed, one after the other, admitted he had received numerous and vigorous kicks, with a large number of exhibitors paying the tax under protest. That these exhibitors will attempt to get back this tax in the event the exchanges retreat from the 15-cents-per-day-per-reel policy is certain.

North Carolina Exchange Man Discusses the Tax

Comes to the Aid of Exchanges Which Met Censorship Methods in Charging Reel Levy—Shows Need of Co-operation in Quarrel

WILLIAM CONN, of Bluebird Photoplays, Inc., of Charlotte, N. C., has written MOTION PICTURE NEWS a very interesting letter concerning the footage tax squabble, which seems to have abated none despite the recent victory in Cleveland of the exchanges over the exhibitors.

The letter indicates cool and deliberate as well as sane thought on the subject and is probably nearer to a solution of the mixup than anything that has been tried to breach the split.

Mr. Conn said: "It is very regrettable to me to note that the controversy between the exhibitors and the distributors in regard to the reel tax is showing no signs of relaxation. I have carefully read the articles appearing in the various trade journals for the past two or three weeks and there is one in particular that is very interesting to me inasmuch as it pertains exclusively to the situation in the State of North Carolina and I cannot refrain from expressing myself in reference thereto. Being in daily touch with the exhibitors throughout this section I find that the article referred to is incorrect almost in its entirety. I am forced to state that I do not find conditions existing such as the author intimates.

"It is true that a few exhibitors have voiced a general protest against the charging of the reel tax by the exchanges, but I am quite sure that they do not fully understand its true nature. One exchange manager has been unjustly censored for his apparent stand in the matter and circulated reports have been brought to bear upon his individual standing. One not familiar with the situation would think he was personally responsible for the tax ruling, and I positively know that this manager has only acted in strict accordance with instructions issued by his employers. The exhibitor who now refuses to pay it willingly still has the wrong conception of its meaning, and instead of throwing his hands in the air when explanations are offered should listen to reason.

"Regardless of where the money comes from the Government has insisted upon the payment of the film tax, such as it did the admission tax, but I do not think it intended that the distributor and exhibitor should dig down into their pockets and pay it for those who are fond of entertainment. It is true that the movies are by no means a necessity, nor is the cigarette, but at the same time the latter is purchased, and the tax paid, without the slightest protest. We know that our Government has called upon the exhibitor for assistance in many ways during this time of peril. It does this knowing that he deals directly with the public. On the other hand, the distributor in his line of endeavor is powerless to obtain this tax from the people who should pay it, but at the same time he is held strictly accountable and it seems to me that co-operation from the exhibitor is unquestionably imperative.

"The cost of film production is rarely considered by the average exhibitor. He forgets that in most instances he nowadays secures a feature production at a figure similar to that which he paid two or three years ago for an ordinary four reel program of short subjects. The manufacturers no doubt made money on their short reel productions, but how many theatres are presenting this class of programme at the present time? The industry has been elevated, it was bound to progress, the exhibitor clamored for features and I have no knowledge of any refusal on the part of the manufacturers to give them features, and a general record will show that the manufacturers' revenue has steadily decreased. I have been identified with exchange work in the South for the past several years and I will venture to say that with two or three exceptions no concern has shown the slightest margin of profit on their Southern offices. The overhead expenditure of an exchange has been greatly increased by taxation on telegrams, telephone calls and railway transportation, but exhibitors are not asked to help in bearing this additional expense. If so there would be good reason for objection..

"In the majority of places the exhibitors have increased the admission price from 5 and 10 cents to 10 and 15, and even 20 cents. This policy is proper and should be inaugurated everywhere, but with this substantial increase some exhibitors are vigorously protesting the payment of the reel tax, and I for one am unable to understand it. Another point I would like to have explained is this. In the event that the film and admission tax is reduced, will the prices of admission be reduced.

"I trust this letter will find its way into the colums of your paper so that we may hear further from the matter referred to. At the same time I do not want one single exhibitor to misconstrue my meaning. I have many friends among the exhibitors of the South and I am with and for them at all times, and I feel that the confusion that has resulted by the charging of the tax should be done away with. It appears to be an industrial feud in this immediate vicinity and one faction or the other should get busy."

Leading Motion Pictures Hold Screen at Palace

During the run of "Hero Land," the war relief bazaar, at Grand Central Palace, the Entertainment Bureau of the Stage Women's War Relief has been given the opportunity, through the courtesy of the various producers, to show many feature productions. Among these have been Montagu Love in "Rasputin" and "The Awakening," World-Brady pictures.

This week at the bazaar Jesse Lasky has consented to the use of a Marguerite Clark picture. Other features of the week will be Madge Evans in "The Adventures of Carol," Alice Joyce and Earle Williams.

Michigan Exhibitors Thankful Branch Is With Them

When Thanksgiving rolled around last week the exhibitors of Michigan found several things to be thankful for, but none of more importance, apparently, than the fact that Ray J. Branch has brought order out of chaos in that state.

In a letter under date of November 27 Branch is praised without limit for his great powers of organization. It is claimed he has done more to bring the Michigan exhibitors together than any ten men ever did.

Four hundred exhibitors are backing the Michigan organization, which Branch started booming on November 6.

"Mystery Ship" Trade Showing Pleases Universal

The trade showing of the Universal serial, "The Mystery Ship," at the Broadway theatre, November 22, was well attended by prospective exhibitors of the picture, and they, as well as Universal, appeared well pleased with the picture.

Ben Wilson and Neva Gerber are the featured players. Sam Zierler, supervisor of the Universal Film Exchanges of New York, announced this week that exhibitors are booking the serial in greater numbers than any yet produced by Universal.

Cleveland Company Appeals for Shows for Over-seas

The Industro-Scientific Film Company, of Cleveland, in a letter to MOTION PICTURE NEWS, has called attention to the great need of old and cast-off films for showing to the soldiers across the seas, and states that already thirty reels and a machine have been sent over. The small number sent, however, will hardly be a "drop in the bucket," it is cited, as there are many places to use them.

The letter in part said: "Many of the film exchanges 'junk' their old reels, and many are lying idle on the shelves. These are just what are wanted 'over there.' It is up to us to keep them supplied with new ones, as the thirty reels already sent will soon grow stale. We will gladly see that they are put into shape and forwarded to France, and will return a receipt signed by Red Cross officials for all films received by us."

Here is another excellent chance for exchanges and film companies to "do their bit." S. Goldstandt is assistant manager of the Industro-Scientific Film Company.

New York Local Takes Decisive Action on Reel Tax

Sidney Ascher, speaking for the New York Local of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League, offered a resolution which was unanimously carried at the meeting of the local last Tuesday morning at 11 o'clock at the headquarters of the league, 218 West Forty-second street, which placed the league on record as opposed to the 15-cent reel tax an dalso that its members were in full accord with the action taken by the Brooklyn Local in its decision to cancel contracts held by its members.

Several of the members spoke at length on the situation and the consensus of opinion was that all members of the local should follow the steps taken by the Brooklyn local and refuse to pay the tax of 15 cents per reel per day.

Some of the members were in favor of the members as a unit, cancelling all contracts held by them with companies which insisted upon the payment of the 15-cent tax and patronizing those companies which were not charging the tax. This was objected to by some of the members on the ground that proper service could not be obtained since the companies not charging the tax were not releasing a sufficient number of pictures to supply the demand. The question was referred to a committee for further consideration.

Sidney Cohen and Charles Haring spoke at length and were in favor of less radical measures. They suggested that the local should await the action taken by those who will convene in Washington in December. They are not in favor of hasty measures.

Northern New Jersey, Queens, the Bronx, Yorkville and Jamaica were represented at the meeting at which there were approximately seventy members present, including a delegation from Brooklyn.

It was said that the meeting was one of the most enthusiastic ever held by the New York local and one of the largest in point of numbers. There were discussions, both pro and con, some wanting drastic action, others content to await the outcome of the meeting to be held at Washington.

It is probable that all the New York locals will consolidate. No definite action was taken on this suggestion but it was decided to refer same to a committee for investigation and action will, no doubt, be taken at the next meeting. It was suggested that all locals unite and establish headquarters in Manhattan and have two representative men from each local represent their local at the meetings to be held in Manhattan and that the action of these men be binding on all locals of Greater New York.

Universal Shows Features at Broadway on Friday

The Universal Film Company announced last week that beginning Friday morning, December 7, a Butterfly and Bluebird feature will be shown at the Broadway theatre for the benefit of the trade each Friday.

Carl Laemmle, president of Universal and director-general of Bluebird, believes that exhibitors will take advantage of these showings, as they make it easy for them to see the pictures before they book them.

Nebraska and Iowa Make Admission Advance

Sioux City Exhibitor Holds Back and Is Threatened with Boycott in Letter to Exchanges—Public Sees Clearer

OVER their first fear that to increase the admission price to their theatres would be unpatriotic, exhibitors of Iowa and Nebraska are answering the demand of higher operation costs by raising the cost to the motion picture patrons. They are convinced such action is necessary, and after careful consideration they are convinced such action is not unpatriotic.

WANTED BOOSTERS!

A Plea for "Stay-at-Home Patriots"

A TERRIBLE war, this; isn't it? Having an awful effect upon business? Making you give up luxuries? Are you willing to assume a new responsibility? It's sure to be appreciated by those chaps who are giving their lives and blood for you. Anyway, read this letter:

"Enclosed pleased find check for $9.18 for Our Boys in France Tobacco Fund. This represents our first week. Hope to be able to send in a nice check each week.

"Your great work for this cause should be indorsed by all exhibitors and boosted.

"Very truly yours,
"(Signed) F. W. Striker,
"Kalispell, Mont."

While a state-wide move to raise was halted, in many cities and in numerous individual instances increases were made. One of the most noticeable was at Sioux City, Iowa, where the picture business had been held back by a plague of 5-cent houses. The exhibitors of that town, with the exception of one man, increased the admission price. Because he refused to co-operate, they then united to boycott him by threatening to discontinue service from any exchange that dealt with him.

Here is the letter they wrote to the exchanges: "At a meeting of the motion picture theatre managers of this city, it was unanimously decided that in order to meet increased operating expenses, taxes, etc., all theatres charging an admission price of 5 cents should advance their price to 10 cents, this advance to take effect November 1.

"We, the undersigned theatre managers, representing practically every theatre in this city, take this opportunity of advising you that in the future it will be impossible for us to show in any of our houses any film which will be shown in any 5-cent theatre in this city.

"We feel that we are justified in asking your loyal co-operation and support in this important matter, which we earnestly believe is one of mutual benefit. Signed L. B. Longnecker of the Sun theatre; J. C. Duncan of the Plaza; Royal Amusement Company of the Royal theatre; J. W. Weil of the Strand; J. W. Waters of the Lyric; J. K. Schlauk of the Princess; W. E. Lang of the Scenic; M. A. Shulkin of the Hipp and Model theatres; H. Shulkin of the Olympic, and C. E. Hoffman of the Gem."

The Garden theatre at Atlantic, Iowa, announced a jump the other day from 10-20 to 15-25 cents. A number of Omaha 5-cent houses have raised their admission prices to 10 cents, in one marked instance right across the street from a larger and better theatre that is charging 5 cents. E. Olson of the Olson Opera house, Alliance, Neb., boosted his price from 10-15 to 15-20 cents and when complaints were made he closed the house rather than continue at the lower price without a profit. Within a few days he was petitioned to re-open his theatre, assured that the patrons would be glad to pay the higher price.

Numerous other individual instances of increases in admission prices are showing up every day throughout Iowa and Nebraska.

The motion pictures of South Omaha are the only ones known to have advertised that they would absorb the war tax on admissions. They made a play of the fact and appealed for more patronage because of it.

Marjorie Daw Recovers from Recent Injury

Marjorie Daw, leading woman for Douglas Fairbanks in his new picture for Artcraft, "The Modern Musketeer," is rapidly recovering from her recent injury, it is reported, and it is expected that work on the production will be continued within the near future. Miss Daw recently broke her leg in a scene for "The Modern Musketeer," which necessitated the holding up of the production. In the meantime all the sets are being prepared under the direction of Allan Dwan, so there will be no delay in shooting the balance of the film when Miss Daw is able to take up her work.

Helene Chadwick Makes Flying Trip Through Canada

Canadian exhibitors had an opportunity during the past week to see a young star travel in their midst and captivate their audiences by her charm and ease of manner and speech. Helene Chadwick, Pathe player, by special arrangement between President J. A. Berst of Pathe, Louis Gasnier, studio manager, and L. Ernest Ouimet of the Specialty Film Import, Ltd., of Montreal, made a personal appearance tour of the principal Canadian cities. She appeared at five Montreal theatres on November 26; at two Toronto houses on the 27th; three Ottawa theatres on the 28th, and was the star of the occasion at an exhibitors' ball at Winnipeg on the 29th.

Without a moment's rest Miss Chadwick started her homeward journey by bidding good-bye at two Winnipeg theatres on the 30th and wended her way home via Minneapolis and Chicago.

Downhearted

And a Few of the "Small Timers'" Reasons

The True Story of a Man Who Had to Hide From His Patrons and the Tale of an Eighty Per Cent. Man [Few more interesting stories of real exhibiting experience have appeared in a picture trade publication than the following letters to MOTION PICTURE NEWS from two small town managers. The letters are selected from a number received at this office as being typical of the conditions faced by the free lance struggling in almost barren soil.

One is from a Canadian exhibitor showing one night a week in a town of 1,000. It is printed exactly as written, and in the exhibitor's own words we find a mixed tale of humor and hardship. The second letter is selected as typical of the attitude of the rural exhibitor toward the exchange and is representative of complaints received from a number of theatres.—EDITOR'S NOTE.]

He Had to Hide

Editor MOTION PICTURE NEWS.

Dear Sir:

I AM running in a small town of 1,000. I can only run once a week, although I make other towns during the week. I wish someone would tell me how to make a small town pay. I am going to tell some of the experiences of a small town exhibitor. If you wish to publish this you can, or any part of it.

I opened a new theatre last February, so I wrote to a certain film exchange that had been advertising great what they had, and I thought that here was my chance to get something good for my opening night. I ordered from several subjects, so that I would be sure to get one of them, which I did. Well, sir, I advertised this feature as being great (which no doubt it was one day), as it featured one of the very best stage actresses of the day. I was never so disappointed in my life, the feature was cut up so, and what was left was in such bad shape that we didn't know what it was.

Do you know, after the show I went out and had to I would not meet the people coming out, (which is my general rule). Now, we have to pay for this in advance and we have no "come-back." But just take it another time. I thought I would try a great war picture that was very popular. When I got it the first night, I didn't know what to do. Understand, I have no time to run these for they are sent to me the same day and sometimes it is late before we get them.

Well, I got through somehow. The next day I cut out and patched over 75 places besides cutting out a good many feet altogether. I paid $150.00 for a week's run. Of course when I wrote them they were very sorry and all that, and of course they asked if I hadn't made good money, which I had to admit I did, but at what cost to my business!—as my patrons are the same people every night.

Well, I said after that, no more high price features for me. But I had to try it again. This was a big patriotic feature which I must say was the best I ever put on—if only it had been in running order! I opened this in a small town on a fair night. I had a $150.00 house and the very first reel began to kick off the sprocket every two minutes or so.

I thought maybe something had gone wrong with the alignment. I looked it over; everything seemed alright. I looked at the film and there was the trouble: all one side of the sprocket holes gone and the other nearly gone. I could do nothing with it but go ahead and trust to providence to get into some good stuff.

So I kept on till the crowd began to get weary, and then the gallery started "what's the matter with the machine," "get a new operator," etc., but I kept right on, perspiring from head to foot ($150.00 house). Well, I got through that reel without losing my temper. How I did it I don't know. The second reel was in fair shape, good enough to let them see that my machine was alright, also that the operator—was a wonder! After the second reel I made my little speech, said that I was not to blame and that I paid money enough to assure good stuff. I said I would try and do the best I could under the circumstances and if they had a little more patience I would get through, and I think after that they felt sorry for me. I had some trouble at the end of the third reel. The next day I went to work and I worked 6 hours steady. What I could not repair I cut, and got through the week another $150.00 besides paper.

In your projection articles I don't see anything about using gas. I am using gas now as our town plant is not to be depended on. I have used A. C. but didn't like it and besides it was too expensive, so as I had to use gas on my road trips, I thought I would try it at home. With a 55-foot throw it was some undertaking, but I have succeeded in getting a splendid light, steady and soft. I made my own burner (or had it made) and use the pastil reflector with a protector for same, also of my own, I can make these pastils last me two weeks or more on two hours run nightly. I think that would be as cheap as carbons. I use the oxy-acetyline gas, same as the welding gas, and I should judge it cost me about 25c. per hour. To anyone wishing to know more about this light I will very willingly tell more. Now you can please yourself about writing up this, anyway I have it off my mind.

I have a little suggestion to offer which might be useful to operators, that is in case of a break. I never use a pin as it takes too long to join. I keep several pieces of zinc cut, and just push them through the film. They most always fall out in the rewind so you can find your break.

Yours truly,
J. H. JENKINS,
Lyric Theatre,
Boissevain, Manitoba, Canada.

Trouble of a Small Timer

Editor, MOTION PICTURE NEWS:

Dear Sir:

I READ nearly everything published in the trade papers on building up theatre patronage and smile to myself often as I think of some of the difficulties in my way in an effort to follow some of the simplest suggestions.

I have one of the 80 per cent. theatres seating 370 in a town that should do twice the business that I do, and, you may believe me I want the balance of that business, but to come back to what I started to say: I run features from four of the most prominent producers, and thought that I would try a program and limited mail list; and my trouble commenced.

You will realize that in running the high class features that I am using, that they would have to be booked at the minimum price, and that some of them have begun to get a little old, although they come in good shape. It looks as though some of the exchanges, and especially two that make a large noise about their service to the exhibitors, think they need do nothing but send the reels and bill.

I'm getting out a program, copy for which should go to the printer in good time and allowance should be made for making up copy, which should not be hurried, also for mailing. One company in particular, which makes its own selection as to what it gives me, on a standing order, often sends me a feature before I know what it will be. They send good pictures. But what advertising value has it for me? My advertising facilities, two weekly newspapers, are rotten at best and the exchanges make it worse; they answer my letters when they feel like it and that is about as often as not.

Press sheets I get occasionally but not often enough to be of real value. Page after page has been written about lengthening the life of film by taking care of it. Of what particular value is it to the small theatre when he has to pay a higher rental than he can afford because he has to run it without information in time to make use of it?

Seems to me that if a feature is worth keeping on the exchange list it is worth keeping up all the advertising help, especially as the exchanges charge a good profit on all of it.

I often wonder how long we poor simps of exhibitors in the small towns will continue to stand for the rotten treatment we sometimes get. Why, I had one exchange send me a 6-sheet poster C. O. D. for 40 cents, and I had no unpaid accounts with them!

I have been waiting to see what your service bureau will have to offer when it gets to the country weekly where they usually set ads all in one type, and I hope that the editor will have some good serviceable solution. OLIVER T. LANDIS.

The tax, the draft, the reel tax, charities and high prices generally are making such theatres as this one gasp for breath. What of them?

The man who built this nice little theatre sank a large bankroll in it. He is one of the industry's mainstays, like all the thousands of little fellows in different parts of the country. What are they going to do?

Charles C. Perry Takes Charge of Milwaukee Strand

Charles C. Perry, who was assistant to Theodore L. Hays, manager of the New Garrick in St. Paul, since that theatre passed under the control of Finkelstein and Ruben in August last, resigned recently to accept the active management of the Strand theatre in Milwaukee.

The new connection will offer Mr. Perry a splendid opportunity for the development of the talent and ability he has evidenced in connection with motion pictures.

Reid to Write Title for W. H. Productions

Hall Reid, the famous playwright and author of many American plays, among them "Human Hearts" and "The Confession," has been engaged by the W. H. Productions Co. to write titles, it is announced. Mr. Reid is now re-editing the William S. Hart feature, "The Two-Gun Man" in "The Bargain," which will be distributed through the W. H. Productions Co. on the open market.

The W. H. Productions Co. are of the opinion that titles should be specialized just as carefully as any other part of a picture and that they are a very important feature in connection with a picture.

Mr. Reid said that he believed Hart had never posed in a picture excelling this one. He is of the opinion that success in great quantities often takes the keen edge off the actor, and that when they are climbing they work harder than after absolute recognition has been obtained. As "The Two-Gun Man," Mr. Hart makes every possible effort to put the character over, and there is not one chance sacrificed and each and every scene is acted with energy, vim and excellence. It goes swiftly, adroitly, dramatically and consistently. Mr. Reid, in order to prove his contention to himself, went to see the very latest Hart release and pronounces "The Two-Gun Man" a superior production.

New Haven Expects Poli Decision in December

New Theatre Was Permitted to Remain Open But One Evening Since Its Completion—Sunday Shows Hang in the Balance

AFTER more than two weeks of skirmishing, during which the opening of the new Poli playhouse at New Haven, Conn., has been delayed, a decisive battle is expected early in December between city officials and legal representatives of Sylvester Z. Poli, owner of a chain of theatres. Permitted to open for one evening the largest playhouse in New England, Mr. Poli was ordered to close the structure until he had enlarged the main entrance, which, the authorities say, is not large enough to comply with the city ordinances.

While this conflict has been raging, the Protestant ministers of the city have induced the mayor to order all Sunday night shows abandoned. Permission for these shows had been given, contrary to state laws, on the claim that all receipts were to go for aiding New Haven men serving in army and navy. Police have instructions to close up the theatres hereafter and to allow no performance under any circumstance. Police officials say they welcome the order because too small a portion of the receipts go to the soldiers.

Owners of the theatres, some twenty in number, are indignant at what amounts to substantially charges against their integrity. Attendance on Sunday evenings has not been particularly heavy and the owners say the receipts could not possibly have been as large as the police claim they were. Theatre owners say that the general public here has not wakened to the fact that Sunday shows are given, or that they are so much under control of the spirit of the long-prevailing blue laws that they do not appreciate the new privilege.

Meanwhile the Ministerial Association found the mayor in receptive mood following his conflict with Mr. Poli and had no trouble in inducing him to stop Sunday shows. The mayor waited ten days after he heard the ministers' complaint and then took action that gave the owners of the theatres only two days to discontinue plans for a winter of motion picture entertainment. Ministers say the picture shows have caused a serious falling-off in Sunday night church attendance that cannot be tolerated.

The Poli Palace, built at a cost of $1,000,000 and seating 3,400 people, has had a cordon of police guarding it during the controversy whenever it appeared likely that a performance might be given. For the opening night the aldermen passed over the mayor's veto the grant of special permission to open. Mr. Sylvester Poli appealed to the Superior Court for an injunction, which was denied on the ground that the case must be argued on its merits befor a court.

Next, the police department granted a license for motion pictures only when the state police declared such a license could be issued if the audience were limited to 1,800 people. Mr. Poli promised to rope off a section of the theatre, but the mayor refused to be satisfied. His building inspector declared ropes would be useless to keep people out when the whole town was anxious to see what is declared to be the finest theatre interior in New England. The police department had positive orders to withdraw their license and under no condition to permit shows there.

Brandt Quits Sick Bed to Conduct Serial Plan

Idea Is Said to Have Met With Such Success in Preliminaries That He Wants to Be the Man Behind the Gun—Exhibitors Pleased

UNIVERSAL announced last week that Joseph Brandt, general manager of the organization, is getting up from a bed of sickness to take personal charge of Universal's prize-awarding plan for the best ending to "The Mystery Ship," the serial with Ben. Wilson and Neva Gerber. The "best ending" campaign has met such favor in its preliminaries that Mr. Brandt declares that he must get personally behind the first shove and keep things booming from the very outset.

Exhibitors have expressed themselves to Universal Exchange managers as heartily in accord with the novel method employed to interest the younger generation in tests of ingenuity. Any child fifteen years of age, or under, is entitled to try for a prize, without cost or restriction, by shaping their suggestion in an outline for an ending in 300 words. There will be no fee whatever, nothing to buy (not even a ticket to a theatre) and no scheme to keep the plan at any other level than open and above board, it is said.

Liberty Bonds, War Certificates and Thrift Stamps, totaling $1,000, will be distributed in accord with the judgment of a committee of newspaper writers. The awards range from War Certificates of $2.00 (thrift stamps) to $100 Liberty Bonds for first prize; $50 for second and $20 in War Certificates for third prize. There shall be no requirements to visit a moving picture theatre in order to compete and stand an equal chance—but it is a human certainty that once a "kiddie" starts the story he or she will be very apt to find his or her way to the nearest theatre where "The Mystery Ship" is exhibited.

"The Mystery Ship" is Universal's thirteenth serial and the supposed "hoodoo" has been shunted away from the voyage of the adventurous craft even as the first episode is launched. The campaign opened December 1 and ends March 30. Ten episodes are complete, edited, revised and ready for release.

You are not going to war. The men who are need all the comforts you can give them. Help them get cigarettes. That is your patriotic duty. If you aren't helping in the "smokes" campaign, get busy—now. Don't be a slacker!

Minneapolis Votes Thanks to Exchanges Paying Tax

The Resolution Committee of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' Corporation of the Northwest, at Minneapolis, has voted thanks to the film exchanges who have voiced their intention of absorbing the footage tax.

The resolution, signed by C. H. Hitchcock, O. C. Stelzner and W. G. True, reads as follows: "Whereas, The motion picture distributors of the United States have arbitrarily and unjustly, and we believe unlawfully, decreed that each reel of film shall be assessed 15 cents to cover the Federal war excise tax; and Whereas, This assessment, now in force, works an undue hardship upon the exhibitor of motion pictures and jeopardizes his business; and Whereas, The Mutual Film Corporation, the Triangle Distributing Corporation, and the General Film Company, through their presidents, have announced their determination to absorb the war excise tax and have instructed the managers of their various exchanges to cancel the 15-cent assessment; Therefore, Be It Resolved, By the Motion Picture Exhibitors' Corporation of the Northwest, that the thanks and commendation of the members be extended to the Mutual Film Company, the Triangle Distributing Corporation and the General Film Company, their presidents, for their fairness and justness in meeting this situation; Be It Further Resolved, That the members of this organization endeavor, whenever and wherever possible, to book the productions of the Mutual Film Corporation, the Triangle Distributing Corporation and the General Film Company, not only as a matter of principle, but because of the high standard of quality in production which is maintained by the Mutual Film Corporation, the Triangle Distributing Corporation and the General Film Company, and urge action upon the part of exhibitors not affiliated with this organization."

Henry MacMahon Completes His Lists for the Trade

Henry MacMahon, who is conducting a bureau of general literary service to the industry, with headquarters at 321 West Fifty-fifth street, has completed his lists of authors, editors, syndicates and feature writers, it was announced from his offices last week, and he is now offering them to scenario and publicity departments.

In regard to his plan, MacMahon said: "I aim to facilitate the relations between the world of letters and the world of pictorial art. For example, I have compiled the names and addresses of the 600 most distinguished fiction authors in the U. S.

"The service rendered to publicity departments is to put them in touch with the men behind the scenes of newspaperdom. Hundreds of tons of useless motion picture mail are dumped on the desks of dramatic editors throughout the country.

"My list of 500 newspaper editors standardizes a careful selection of those daily mediums which encourage and support the motion picture. As even more valuable however, I regard the shorter list of feature syndicates and writers and editors of magazines. These are the real men behind the scenes."

What Kind of a Fellow Is—Fox?

Being a Glance at the Real Human Side of the Big Men of the Picture Game—Caught in Action!

By William A. Johnston

A CAREFUL computation, in which an expert statistician assisted, proves conclusively that William Fox works twenty-six hours out of every twenty-four.

The special figures given us by the Fox publicity department are forty-six hours per day. Allowing for the usual 100 per cent. reduction in press agents' figures and also Mr. Fox's final admission that he eats lunch once a week, we are able to arrive at our own total.

After considerable difficulty an interview was finally arranged in Mr. Fox's private barber shop, reached through a secret panel from the projection room. Time: 1 o'clock in the morning.

The writer met Gus, the barber, going up in the elevator to fill his regular appointment.

In the barber shop we found a cabinet sitting silently, composed of the scenario editor-in-chief, the chief sales manager, an attorney, a director, the head of the London office, the general manager of the Fox circuit, and a representative from South America who came into New York at 12, midnight.

Enter Mr. Fox, bowing pleasantly to Gus and the other gentlemen present.

To Gus: "Shave and facial massage, Gus. Trim the hair and mustache."

To the other gentlemen: "Please be brief."

Following the reports Mr. Fox spoke incisively, through the lather.

To Gus: "Not so close, Gus."

To the Scenario-Editor-in-Chief: "I don't like the scenario."

"But it is now practically your own, Mr. Fox."

"Very well, make it all mine. Meet me at the golf links tomorrow morning and we'll work on the train coming in. The climax needs strengthening."

To the attorney: "Any film monopoly on the horizon?"

"Not as yet, Sir."

"Well, start a suit, anyway. This industry must be free, or—" here Gus applied the lather and Mr. Fox snorted angrily.

To the Director: "Where are the 'takes' in scene two hundred and thirty-eight? Should have been here at four twenty-five?"

"Well, there were just a few feet."

"Makes no difference. I want to see every foot—understand, every foot—keep the lather out of my nose, Gus."

The London Manager: "Is my report satisfactory?"

"Witch hazel," said Mr. Fox, "and keep the towel out of my mouth."

"No," resumed Mr. Fox, "it is not. You have skipped seventeen British theatres, in the cities and towns of Manchester, Glascow, Aldgate, Plumstead, Aldershot, Bournemouth—see me at the office tomorrow at twelve thirty-six."

To the Fox circuit manager: Put a new projection machine in the ———— street theatre; spend $2,476.38 on the ———— avenue theatre; build a new theatre, corner ———— and ———— street. Here are the plans.

To everybody: "All over, gentlemen. I've got to go to work."

"But, Mr. Fox, MOTION PICTURE NEWS wants an interview."

"I dislike personal publicity," said Mr. Fox. "How does my cartoon look. What do you want to know?"

"Well, what is your answer to Mr. Mastbaum's telegram?"

"Why did he send it?" continued Mr. Fox.

"Is that your answer?"

"It is."

"Will you merge the Fox Film Corporation?"

"My business," answered Mr. Fox, "is making and showing pictures. "I'm William Fox, and always will be."

WHAT OTHERS SAY OF HIM:

"He's a boy for play, and a fiend for work."

"He can build a photoplay and a photoplay theatre—every detail."

"Six out of every seven nights he is at work in his office."

"He plays golf as he works and plans—alone."

"His business hobby is independence."

"He is the aggressive figure in the film business."

"He's a fighter."

"He takes big chances."

"He demands that business be played wide open."

"He is impetuous—but clear-eyed."

ALMOST A TRAGEDY

Someone Stole Ten Pennies from His Smoke Fund!

ENCLOSED find check for $2.63 amount donated by my patrons to the "Our Boys in France" Tobacco Fund since my last remittance which was October 16. The war tax is making the contributions to the Tobacco jar come a little slow, but as you said in your letter of acknowledgment I am "just keeping plugging at it."

My jar is situated in such a way that I have to remove it every day when I close for supper then again at night. I took a chance one day and left it out during the supper hour. When I returned it was broken into and the 10 pennies or more, gone. What do you think of that? It seemed almost like a tragedy. I replaced the jar but it will not remain out any more when the theatre is closed.

I just received a letter today from my grandson who is in training camp at Pensacola, Florida. He leaves in three days for France. He is an aviator.

You surely are to be commended for this fine work you are doing and hope it will be crowned with success.

Very truly yours,

McVey Gets a Commission in Aviation Section

Expects to Be Ordered to France Shortly—Jacobson Enters Quartermaster's Division—Metro Contributes to All Branches

IT was announced last week that Hartley McVey, brother of Mrs. Sidney Drew, and formerly associated with Mr. and Mrs. Drew in the production of Metro-Drew comedies, has received his commission as lieutenant in the aviation section of the United States Army. Lieutenant McVey is now awaiting orders to proceed to France, where he hopes to be successful in seeing S. Rankin Drew, Sidney Drew's son, formerly a Metro director, who is already in the aviation work abroad. Both young men have received thorough training. Lieutenant McVey in this country, and Mr. Drew in France, are now fully equipped to use their training to good purpose.

Another employe to leave to enter the service is Charles A. Jacobsen, who enters the quartermaster's division as corporal. Mr. Jacobsen's immediate destination is Camp Joseph E. Johnston, Jacksonville, Florida.

He has been with Metro for two years in the capacity of purchasing agent. In Jacksonville he hopes to find his friend and former fellow-Metro employe, Benjamin A. Boyar, who is also a member of the quartermaster's department. Mr. Boyar was assistant manager of the Popular Plays and Players Studio.

Metro has contributed men to all branches of the service. Aviation has claimed not a few, the navy has had a strong appeal, and the infantry has gained several recruits from among Metro employes. Lieut. James M. Loughborough of the regular army received his final training at the Officers' Training Camp, at Plattsburg. He was formerly manager of publicity for Metro, and Arthur James' right-hand man. Bennett Molter, formerly assistant director to William Christy Cabanne, joined the French aviation service before the United States entered the war, but will now be transferred to the aviation section of this country. Two other Metro men who have enlisted in the flying corps are Fred Sittenham, formerly assistant director, and Frank Cummings, assistant cameraman.

Virginia Chester Featured in Mena Production

Mena Film Company Engaged Miss Chester to Appear in Featured Role of "By Super Strategy"—Under Production at Hollywood

MENA FILM COMPANY announces that Virginia Chester, who appeared under the Universal banner in program features and who was known as "The girl from the golden West," will be featured in "By Super Strategy" now under production at the Mena studios in Hollywood, California. Miss Chester since her appearance in Universal features has been playing on the vaudeville stage and returns to the screen after an extended absence.

Miss Chester will be rememberd for her work with Pathe where she played leads for about two years in Pathe productions. She was playing in musical comedy when a Pathe director saw her and engaged her for her first part in pictures.

It is said that the part which Miss Chester will interpret in Mena's production, "By Super Strategy" calls for a wide range of dramatic talent. The story, by a sequence of episodes, depicts events recounted in Biblical history. It is said that the story is unique in construction and contains a world-wide message with a depth of purpose never before attained on the screen. Howard Gaye is directing the production. The release date has not been announced.

Frank Whitson has the role of Abraham.

Miss Chester is an accomplished actress and it is expected that she will add not a little to the value of this production.

"Hero Land" Bazaar Sets Aside Motion Picture Day

It was announced last week that Maibelle Heikes Justice, the photo-dramatist, has been appointed to arrange for Moving Picture Day and Evening, under the auspices of the Authors' League of America, at their booth at Hero Land on December 5. On that date everything will be turned over to the industry and its individuals, it is said, as a truly representative day for motion pictures.

Among the stars expected to be guests of Miss Justice on this day are Fannie Ward, Hazel Dawn, Helen Ware, Mrs. Sidney Drew, Juliette Day, Pauline Frederick, Shirley Mason, William Farnum, H. B. Warner, Sidney Drew, Frank Mills and others. Among the dramatists will be Cyrus Townsend Brady, Rex Beach, Louis Joseph Vance, Elaine Sterne, Mary Rider, Henry Albert Phillips, Epes W. Sargent and others.

Klaw Selects Kessel to Give Cantonments Pictures

The New York headquarters of the War Department Commission on Training Camp Activities, Entertainment Service, are now located at 1520 Broadway, with Hollis Cooley as general manager.

Marc Klaw, under whose direction the "smileage book" was devised, has selected Adam Kessel, Jr., to look after the motion picture branch of the service.

Navy Suggests Producers Shoot Posters in Scenes

Through Wells Hawks, the United States Navy Recruiting Bureau has suggested in a letter to producers and others in the motion picture industry that a fine advertisement can be given the navy by the use of posters in scenes of motion pictures. In many productions, it is cited, there are street scenes where posters appear. If in making these scenes United States Navy posters are used their display would be of great advantage to the service and add to the realism of the scene.

Suitable posters, it is announced, will be mailed on application. The address is 318 West Thirty-ninth street, New York.

Directors' Association Hears Important Business

The regular meeting of the Motion Picture Directors' Association for this week was scheduled to be held at the rooms in Fifty-fifth street on December 4 at 8:30 in the evening. Every member was urged to make a special effort to attend, as business of importance was on the slate for attention.

Several applications were to be voted upon and several papers were to be read, and it was expected the dance committee would have a very interesting report to make.

Fox Releases "His Smashing Career," December 9

"His Smashing Career," the Fox-Lehrman Sunshine Comedy scheduled for release December 9, is said to concern a story depicting the adventures of Hundred Horsepower Harry, a valiant automobile racer, in his efforts to win a girl whose father does not fancy Harry in the light of a prospective son-in-law. There are declared to be some remarkable auto stunts in this Sunshiner.

The cast includes Billie Richtie, who is "Little Peter"; Gertrude Selby, whose role is that of the Girl; Billy Bevan, who makes a lively Father, and Victor Slim Potel, whose part is that of the judge of the races.

"His Smashing Career" was produced under the direction of Henry Lehrman.

Baltimore Showman Donates Entertainment to Soldiers

An entertainment under the auspices of the exemption board for the drafted men of the Twentieth District was held recently at the Bridge theatre, Baltimore. The theatre and show were donated by Louis Schlichter, president of the Edmondson Amusement Corporation, which concern owns the theatre. Two children entertainers who recently sang at Loew's Hippodrome here also rendered songs at the performances. No admission was charged, and there was a collection taken.

The management of the West End also placed its house at the disposal of Mrs. J. Henry Strohmeyer of the Ladies' Auxiliary of the Sixteenth District drafted men at Camp Meade on Sunday night. William Broening, State's Attorney, made an address.

Nebraska Exhibitors Use Tact in Legislation

Co-operate with Women in Their Campaigns for Better Films, and Thus Head Off Troublesome Bills—Furnish Advertising

THE women of Nebraska are taking a more prominent part in the motion picture business this year than ever before, according to reports from Omaha. By co-operating with them in their campaigns for better films, the exhibitors are taking the best steps possible to head off future danger of troublesome legislation, as well as getting considerable advertising.

The women's clubs of Omaha last winter gave the Saturday morning children's matinees a thorough trial, and reported at the close of the spring season that they had been a big success. These matinees are being continued this winter, with family Friday nights in addition. Managers at whose theatres the Friday night programs are being tried say they are not such good money-makers as they are good advertising features. Types of the family Friday night programs are shown by those reported last week: Apollo: Julian Eltinge in "The Princess Charming," and a Black Diamond comedy. Suburban: June Caprice in "Every Little Girl's Dream," with a comedy. Lothrop: Baby Marie Osborne in "Sunshine and Gold," with a comedy. Hamilton: Marguerite Clark in "Amazons," and a comedy, "Captain Zink's Alibi." Edison-Conquest programs are presented Saturday mornings at the Strand and Muse theatres for children's matinees.

Typical of the situation throughout Nebraska was a letter sent to the daily paper at Kearney, Neb., last week by the Nineteenth Century club of women, in which the ladies of the civics department of that organization expressed publicly their "thanks to the managers of the Kearney motion picture houses for their efforts along the line of showing better pictures here." "We would especially mention the features," they continue, "Jack and the Bean Stalk," "Snow White" and "Seventeen." "We urge the co-operation of our movie house patrons in this campaign for better pictures which is being waged in our city and state," the statement continues. "Our moving picture house managers will give us what the people demand and let us all work together for a good, clean and wholesome class of films."

MUSIC

Whether You Like It or Not

PROBABLY one out of every five or six people has no "ear for music." The tin pan piano at the nickelodeon sounds just the same to him as Rothapfel's orchestra.

But this class of men and women who have no musical sense is in the minority. The larger number, as you would find if you made an investigation, are keenly sensitive.

Are you trying to please this large, discriminating class? Are you providing them with music appropriate to the pictures that go on your screen? You'll be surprised to find how inexpensive it is to provide good, suitable music. And you'll be surprised, too, to find how easy we make this important problem for you in our Music Department. It is on page 4243.

Washington Worries Over Lack of Film Building

Material Scarce Because Government Takes It for Camp Construction, and Completed Buildings Are Also Used by Uncle Sam

THE housing of the film exchanges of Washington in quarters in compliance with the stringent fire regulations continues to be a matter of concern to exchange managers. The impossibility of securing a film building, as has been planned by several real estate corporations, is due to the Federal Government monopolizing all possible building material and labor for camp construction and the erection of Government office buildings.

More than this, almost every new building under erection or completed within the past few months has been taken over by Uncle Sam for executive or army or navy purposes. This is what happened to a prospective film building on G street near Ninth, in which several of the exchanges had subscribed as renters.

Another thing that has deterred the erection of such a building is the announcement from the Treasury Department that banks should make no loans for private business purposes; that the United States Government needed all the money they had to loan.

The only thing the exchanges could do was to put their exchange quarters in a fire-proof condition as much as possible in accordance with the local fire regulations. This has been done by every exchange manager, but just at what moment the fire marshal may call for exact compliance with regulations cannot be foreseen.

Burton Holmes Puts New York on January List

Burton Holmes, it was announced last week, will give his annual series of Travelogues in this city, beginning the early part of January.

His subjects this season are said to be entirely new in word and picture, being the results of his travels this last summer in Australia, Tasmania, New Zealand, the Fijian, Samoan and Hawaiian Islands and in strange and heretofore unexplored parts of Japan, his series ending with a trip to Alaska and the descent of the Yukon River.

Help Smoke the Kaiser Out!

Motion Picture Division of the Our Boys in France Tobacco Fund

Entire Fund Total to Date.....$109,727.40
Motion Picture Division, Total to Date..... $418.75

A SPLENDID patriotic opportunity is given to every American exhibitor to be of some use to our soldiers in France. They want "smokes" more than anything you can send them. Motion Picture News, which is the official organ of the campaign, urges all exhibitors to place receptacles in their lobbies, for the collection of coins and packages of cigarettes.

No cigarettes can be accepted except in original packages and on which the revenue stamp has not been broken. This is an order from the Government.

How to Go About It

1. Send to Motion Picture News for a card, inviting your patrons to drop pennies and packages of cigarettes into the bowl or box provided.

2. Arrange with the commissary department of your nearest cantonment for distributing (unbroken) packages of cigarettes. In case you have superfluous packages send them directly to Motion Picture News, New York, N. Y.

3. Pennies and other coins collected should be deposited at your bank and a check sent weekly to Motion Picture News. For every 25 cents you collect, you will receive a postal of thanks direct from the trenches. For example: If you contribute $10, you will receive 40 postcards of thanks direct from the trenches in France. These should be displayed in your lobby, photographed for slides or sent out to your mailing list.

IN AND OUT OF TOWN

Nat I. Brown, general manager of Paralta Plays, Inc., returned to New York last week after several weeks' absence, during which time he was at the Paralta Studios, Hollywood, Cal., devoting his time to activities at the studio. Mr. Brown reports progress in every branch of the business.

Maurice Fleckles, vice-president of the Renowned Pictures Corporation, left last week for an extended trip through the West in the interest of the two new features recently acquired by this company, "Souls Redeemed" and "Weavers of Life." He expects to be absent from the New York office for several days.

Leon D. Netter, Masterpiece Film Attractions, came to New York last week from Cleveland to attend the meeting of the National State's Rights Association. He returned to Cleveland Saturday.

M. H. Hoffman, M. H. Hoffman, Inc., left New York Monday for a tour of the country. Mr. Hoffman will visit every important city in the United States in the interest of the Hoffman-Foursquare Pictures. He expects to be absent from the New York office for several weeks.

H. J. Sheppard, prominent in the independent branch of the industry, was in Ossining last week, where he showed William S. Hart feature, "The Two-Gun Man" in "The Bargain" to the members of the Mutual Welfare League of Sing Sing Prison.

Stanley Mastbaum, of Philadelphia and Stanley theatres, was in New York last week on business. He returned the latter part of the week.

Fred C. Quimby, Pathe Exchange, Inc., left New York last week for an extended trip through the West. Mr. Quimby expects to be absent from the New York office for about ten days.

E. Mandelbaum, of the Stillman theatre, Cleveland, was in New York last week on business.

Charles Christie, general manager of the Christie Film Co., Los Angeles, arrived in New York last week in the interest of the company.

H. A. Spanuth, Commonwealth Pictures Corporation, was in New York last week, where he showed Commonwealth's latest production for the independent market to the New York trade. Charlotte, the champion woman skater, is featured in the production. Mr. Spanuth returned to Chicago Saturday.

S. L. Rothapfel, managing director of the Rialto theatre, who has been absent in the West for several days, returned to New York last week.

W. R. Rothacker, Rothacker Film Corp., Chicago, was in New York last week on business. He returned to Chicago Friday.

THE WEST COAST

"BEST KIND OF A BUY"

"On my recent trip through the West Coast States I found MOTION PICTURE NEWS to be the strongest trade paper. Exhibitors everywhere read it.

"They are delighted with the West Coast sub-edition, looking forward to it eagerly each week. Its advertising pages ought to be the best kind of a buy for the owner of territorial rights to pictures in these eleven Western States."

The above is the voluntary testimony of Frank Backer of the Mammouth Film Corporation, 729 Seventh Avenue, New York City.

Products Company Opens Salt Lake City Office

THE value of motion pictures as a commercial asset are being set forth by Edward A. Joyce, fiscal agent of the Motion Pictures Products Company, Inc., who has been in Salt Lake City, Utah, for the purpose of opening offices.

The company which Mr. Joyce represents is headed by J. W. Lee, who for many years was general manager of the entire western agency of the Edison Motion Picure Company, and who has also assisted in the production of several large features for the Pathe and Mutual companies. The vice-president is E. A. Morton and the secretary-treasurer is C. G. Harris.

"Motion pictures," said Mr. Joyce, "have been underestimated as advertising and educational mediums. It has progressed rapidly in the presentation of the drama, but producers so far have not given the attention that is necessary to the commercial value of the films. There is at present a great demand for industrial films, for safety-first films and for intelligently arranged advertising films. That is the purpose of the Motion Picture Products Company. We intend, after we have been financed, to turn out films of a commercial value. We will not end here, however. We will cover all phases of the motion picture business. We are arranging to establish exchanges for the distribution of our own films and for the distribution of plays turned out by other companies."

Portland Exhibitors See-Saw on Admission

TEN-CENT vaudeville matinees in Portland have resulted in the inauguration of an admission-price war by the Star and Sunset theatres, two of the down-town film houses of the Oregon metropolis.

On November 1 both of these houses advanced entrance fees, the Sunset from 15 cents straight, with five cents for children, to ten and twenty cents at night, with a retention of the old matinee schedule. The Star went from 15 to 20 for adults, and from five to ten for children.

Suddenly the Star shifted back to the old schedule, the theatre paying the war tax, and the Sunset went the Star one better the next day by resuming the old scale for evenings and clipping a nickel off the matinee figures, making it five and ten cents.

The Hippodrome and Strand theatres, which give a combination vaudeville photoplay programme for ten cents in the afternoon, with the Hip 20 cents at night and the Strand 15 cents, have been playing to unusually big business with the film houses at 20 cents. Hence the sudden decision to meet the competition with a price cut by the two smallest first-run houses.

"I can't give the public a high class motion picture entertainment for less than 20 cents," declared John A. Jennings, owner of the Sunset, when he made the change, "but if it's a question of making the public a present, why not make the gift a real one."

The action of J. C. Stille, manager of the Star and People's theatre, in shaving the extra nickel from the Star prices, was forced because of the close proximity of that house to the Strand.

E. J. Myrick, one of the leading exhibitors of Portland, who manages the Liberty, Oregon's largest photoplay house, reports that business has been under normal except when the bigger features are shown. The public jammed his house during screening of "The Moth," and for this class of picture there was little or no complaint on the score of increased price.

"When the public realizes that we film men are not crooks, but have been forced to raise prices or give them cheaper entertainment, the situation will adjust itself," comments Mr. Myrick.

Salt Lake Exchanges Handle Tax Without Gloves

THE motion picture exchanges of Salt Lake City, Utah, have banded together and have assembled a concise letter which they are sending out to the exhibitors in the Intermountain section of the west. Ten exchanges are included in the plan to place their views on the war tax before their patrons. They are: Universal Film Exchange, Fox, Vitagraph, Paramount, World, Metro, Pathe, General, Artcraft and George Kleine System. The letter in part follows:

"The exhibitor should not fool himself. In most contracts between distributors and exhibitors there is a cancellation clause, and no exhibitor hesitates to cancel when his business does not permit him to pay the prices agreed on for pictures. Every distributor who does not honestly and straightforwardly announce as we have announced that we are compelled to collect substantially the same amount as we are required to pay to the Government will be forced to cancel his existing contracts and raise his prices, or he will try to make the exhibitor think he is a philanthropist and actually gets an additional return sufficient to cover his tax and more by taking on at a higher rate than he is asked before, the business which we lose through cancellation.

"It is all absurdly simple. As the cost of product increases the sales price must increase or business must go into bankruptcy. And with business gone, what of the boys 'over there?'

"Incidentally, and to set any fears or suspicions at rest, there is not a penny of profit in it for us to collect 15 cents per reel per day from exhibitors. As a matter of fact the most expert accountants in New York have demonstrated that the tax actually costs over 16 cents per reel per day for every reel that works. But to simplify bookkeeping the tax was fixed at 15 cents. The only persons who can possibly object to the present arrangements are those who do not fully understand it.

"This same identical proposition is operating in England to-day and has been for over two years. In fact the Government got the idea from England, where there has never been the least trouble about it or the least objection by exhibitors or anyone else. The producers passed the tax on to the exchanges. The exchanges passed it on to the exhibitors. The exhibitors passed it on to the public, and nobody kicked.

"We are a nation at war. Not at play. War is hell. We've got to go through hell and taxes before we can expect to reach peace and pleasure. Those of us who are not shouldering a gun and offering our lives, as the flower of the nation's young men are doing, will do well to face whatever music remains to be faced at home—whether it is taxes or sacrifice or privation of any sort."

San Francisco Dines S. L. Rothapfel

THE TURNER & DAHNKEN CIRCUIT gave a luncheon in honor of S. L. Rothapfel, the New York motion picture man, at the Press Club, San Francisco, on Wednesday, November 21. Guests, including all the prominent film industry representatives in the bay cities and many well-known newspaper men, numbered about a hundred. Al. C. Joy, president of the Press Club, acted as toastmaster.

In his address Mr. Rothapfel mentioned that two years before, speaking in the same place, he had prophesied that the motion picture program was to go. "Now," he added, "I want to make another prophecy. The program is coming back. But it is the program that you exhibitors are going to construct yourselves. Put thought and intelligence into your programs and strive for individuality."

Of the war tax, he said that instead of "dilly-dallying with the pennies" an advance of five cents on every admission price had been made in his theatres and not one complaint had been made. This year, in spite of the war, the Rialto would make $300,000, he declared, and was spending $125,000 for newspaper advertising. He mentioned an innovation being adopted in his New York theatres—a perfume room—from which scents suitable to the scene would be forced out into the theatre, as the fragrance of new-mown hay, to accompany a picture in which it would be appropriate.

Mr. Rothapfel advocated the maintenance of the best prices and high-class entertainment, mentioning that in the new Rivoli he has 400 seats at $1, and that these have been sold for a year in advance.

"If you haven't the ability to produce a big show, the best kind of a show," he urged, "hire somebody who has. Make people come to your theatre on account of the house. Get them in the habit of coming blindly, as it were, not on account of the picture you are running, but because it is the theatre they want to attend. Go back to your theatre and sit down, in the dark-room if necessary, and concentrate. Think what you can do to improve your shows."

Activities in Los Angeles, Salt Lake and Spokane

H. D. NAUGLE, general western representative for Greater Vitagraph, has returned from a three months' trip over his entire territory, and also from a stay of several days in New York where he conferred with General Manager W. W. Irwin on matters of the organization. Mr. Naugle reports conditions are better than one would think with the exhibitors in all parts of the country he visited. The war tax is playing havoc with the receipts of theatres in all territories, but the general tone is for the improvement rather than for a deeper cut in the receipts. The most unfortunate feature of the war tax, according to Mr. Naugle, is that it was not specifically stated by the government who should pay the reel tax, and thus a great deal of ill feeling would have been eliminated.

CHARLES FITZGERALD, who for several years was booker of the Los Angeles General Film Exchange, and who has served as salesman for the Greater Vitagraph at Salt Lake, has been added to the staff of the K-E-S-E Exchange by Manager E. H. Silcocks, where he will serve as booker.

T. C. MALCOLM, who is managing the Tally exchange conducted in connection with the First National Exhibitors' Association, is now looking for a location on Los Angeles Film Row (Olive Street), and expects to open an exchange, or rather move the present one to the new quarters by January 1. Mr. Malcolm reports the two subjects being handled by the Tally organization "On Trial" and "A Morman Mail" are booked solid up until February 1.

MANAGER H. H. Hicks of Los Angeles Select Branch gave a very terse report of conditions in six words: "'Over There,' over big, over here." The subject was shown at Tally's Broadway Theatre.

MAL SIMMONS, who was recently transferred from San Francisco branch of Goldwyn to manager of the Los Angeles branch, succeeding G. C. Parsons, has tendered his resignation and left for New York where he will accept the general managership of the new State Rights Exhibitors, Inc. Mr. Simmons has been identified with a number of the coast exchanges, and has the reputation of making exceptionally good contracts. He has had a very wide experience and by Los Angeles film row men is considered a very capable man for the new position.

MANY of the managers of Los Angeles exchanges attended the opening of the new Liberty theatre at Fresno on November 27. Among those who made arrangements to be present at this event were Managers H. H. Hicks of Select, E. H. Silcocks of K-E-S-E, H. D. Naugle, Greater Vitagraph, and Harry Leonhardt, Goldwyn.

HARVEY GROSSMAN, salesman for the Los Angeles All Star Feature Distributors' Exchange, is home from a trip through Arizona, and reports exceptional business there because of the activities in mines and exceptional crop in the irrigated district.

News Notes from Utah

ONE of the oldest theatre buildings in Utah was destroyed by fire November 18, when the opera house and motion picture theatre at Brigham City, near Salt Lake City, was razed. The building was erected in 1868 by the Mormon Church and used as an amusement hall, but of recent years fell into private hands and has been conducted as a motion picture house. The loss by fire has been reported as $10,000.

"THE EYES OF THE WORLD" played a return engagement to Salt Lake City, Utah, the week of November 18 at the Strand theatre, and according to all reports did as big a business as it enjoyed at its first showing there. M. M. Stewart, publicity manager for the W. H. Swanson theatres, has made arrangements to handle the picture for several return engagements throughout Utah.

W. L. MERRILL, manager of the Triangle Exchange at Salt Lake City, Utah, has just returned from a trip over his territory in the mountain country. He says a number of houses have been forced to raise their prices and that they are getting the business without any kick from their patrons.

Here and There in Spokane

A FIRE which started in the operating room of the Pathe theatre in Spokane, Saturday, November 10, badly injured the interior and caused the theatre to be closed for several days. This theatre is owned by C. P. Stillwell, who also conducts three other Seattle houses. As the result of the fire Mr. Stillwell has decided to replace all union help with non-union operators. The other houses under the management of Stillwell are The Casino, Rex and Unique, all in the downtown business district of Spokane.

THE CLEMMER RED-HEAD CLUB of Spokane, originated by Dr. H. S. Clemmer, one of them, promises to become a nation-wide organization. This club is composed of almost 100 red-headed boys of Spokane, who weekly are guests of the Clemmer theatre management. Dr. Clemmer now plans to get in touch with all theatre managers who are of the reddish-blond complexion in the hope of organizing red-head clubs in connection with their theatres and associating them with one national organization. The Red-Head Club has proven very beneficial to the Clemmer theatre, in that it has secured publicity otherwise impossible.

SAM W. B. COHN, recently appointed secretary and manager of the Liberty theatre, Spokane, is probably one of the oldest "youngest" exhibitors in the northwest. Mr. Cohn's experience in theatrical and film work embraces twelve years of press-agenting, exhibiting and managerial duties both in the movies and legitimate. From the frozen barriers of Nome, Alaska, to the milder climate of the Pacific northwest, Cohn has exhibited feature pictures and written newspaper copy. As manager of the Liberty in Spokane, Mr. Cohn brings to this position experience which will undoubtedly prove valuable in assuring the future success of "the finest picture house in the whole Inland Empire."

Chaplin's New Studio Takes Shape Rapidly

WORK of creating the new Charley Chaplin Film Company studio at Hollywood is progressing so rapidly that General Manager John Jasper advises it will be possible for the comedian and his troupe to begin making his first picture within the next ten days. The building of the studio is being recorded on a celluloid strip, and when it is completed a film not exceeding more than three hundred feet will show the work from start to finish. Cameras are trained on the site from two locations where derricks are used in order to get the best possible bird's-eye view. Two weeks ago the site, which consists of almost a block, was covered with a lemon orchard, the crop of which has been harvested. A row of twelve handsome dressing rooms, a 30 x 50 foot carpenter shop, an open air stage 70 x 260, garage building 30 x 40, and foundations laid for the administration building have been accomplished within a fortnight. According to the plans, one hundred and ten feet of the stage will be enclosed in glass, and immediately back of this will be erected a large property room and setting storage warehouse. The administration building will be of old English type of architecture and will face on La Brea avenue. On the other end of the block a handsome residence is being remodeled to suit the desire of Mr. Chaplin, for it is here that he will make his future home as soon as a passport can be obtained for his mother, now in London.

In Los Angeles Studios

A PROJECT has been launched among the studios for the active co-operation of players with the Red Cross chapter of Southern California. The plan provides that the Red Cross shall furnish to actresses knitting material, that they may all be busy during the time they usually waste in waiting for the making of scenes. H. M. Horkheimer, president and general manager of the Balboa Amusement Producing Company, was the originator of this plan, which has been put into active operation. The managers of practically all of the Southern California studios are taking an active interest in this work, and it is anticipated that studio people will in the very near future turn out a great quantity of sweaters and other knitted apparel for the soldiers, as well as making hundreds of bandages for the medical corps. The plan has been endorsed by the officers of the Los Angeles Red Cross chapter, and they are now working out the plan of getting the scheme into operation within the next few days.

FRANK POWELL, who was recently engaged to produce the next Rex Beach picture, "Heart of the Sunset," together with the business manager of the company, arrived in Los Angeles last week to look over locations and to secure players for many of the parts in this coming release. When Mr. Powell left New York it was his intention to produce "Heart of the Sunset" in Los Angeles, but while en route he found most desirable locations in Texas, and thus his plans were changed. Mr. Powell is engaging players through Willis & Inglis agency, who will accompany him to Texas, where he will be met by a number of the players who will come on from New York. It is very probable that Mr. Powell will return to Los Angeles following the completion of "Heart of the Sunset" for the making of other subjects.

PLANS for the organization of a comedy producing company, to be known as Screen Arts Films, Inc., have been made through Willis & Inglis of Los Angeles, and a company for the production of twelve, two-reel light comedies has been organized. Active production work will be started during the coming week. Fay Tincher is to be the featured player of the series, which will be directed by Al Santell.

SMALL bowls in the lobbies of Los Angeles theatres that are collecting cigarettes and pennies in co-operation with MOTION PICTURE NEWS for the Boys in France Tobacco Fund last week inspired Baby Helen Marie Osborne to inaugurate collecting admission at the studio in order to swell the fund. After learning from her father L. T. Osborne, the purpose of the cigarettes Baby Marie induced the property man of the studio to secure a receptacle for her, and every morning she has appeared at the gate and collected toll to the extent of one or more cigarettes from each one of the employees who entered.

A PHOTOPLAY company has been organized for the production of juvenile, or rather, boy pictures, each of which will be of two reels and for release by the General Film Company. Stories for these photoplays are being written by Judge Willis Brown, late of the juvenile court of Salt Lake City, and the scenario writing and production is under the direction of King W. Vidor, late writer for the Universal.

THE King-Bee Film Company, making two-reel comedies featuring Billy West, have completed the first subject made since coming to California, which has been titled "The Slave," and will be released under date of December 5. Arvid E. Gillstrom was director of this, and Manager Louis Burstein advises the supporting cast for West includes the former favorites of this plant, Babe Hardy, Budd Ross, Beatrice Joy and Leo White. The company within a day or two will begin filming a western subject which will probably be named "The Prospector" in which West will have a burro, untouched by leather heretofore, as his principal support, at least in many of the scenes.

West Coast Exhibitors

H. W. WHITSON, owner and manager of the Plaza theatre at San Diego had a very successful run during the showing of the Jewel Production "The Man Without a Country." The last day of the showing Mr. Whitson wired the Los Angeles Jewel Exchange stating it was the most profitable week's business of the present management of this theatre, and added that he had made new records for the house. Mr. Whitson took advantage of the opportunities offered for this subject, and secured the co-operation of all the patriotic and charitable organizations of San Diego who materially aided him in boosting the picture. In addition to this he had a splendid electric sign placed in front of the theatre advertising the subject.

CONSIDERABLE extra advertising has been given the first Lois Weber Production to be released by Jewel Exchange, "The Price of a Good Time," which opens at the Superba theatre in Los Angeles during the coming week. Fifty additional billboards, each of twenty-four sheets, were used in connection with an extra amount of newspaper advertising. Manager Dave Burshon, manager of the Los Angeles exchange, got up a series of postcards which were mailed out to patrons. The copy used on these cards was as follows:

"What Is The Price of a Good Time?"

"Don't Be a Moocher! P (l) ay The Price of a Good Time!"

"Did You Ever Have the Price of a Good Time?"

"You Will Have To P(l)ay the Price of a Good Time!"

Frisco Auditorium Cannot Show Pictures

PROMPT action by the motion picture men of San Francisco has brought about a settlement of the question whether the great municipal Auditorium can be diverted to use as a motion picture house in opposition, at occasional times, to the established theatres representing heavy investments. And the question has been decided in the negative.

In the middle of November John Boggiano, representative of the Italo-North America Commercial Union, which on behalf of the Italian government is exploiting official war pictures, arranged for the use of the Auditorium, he acting in association with some theatrical men. Of course, the motion picture men were eager to help in any Italian benefit plan, even to the use of their theatres if necessary, but there seemed to be some question as to how much of the proceeds would go to the purpose announced.

So a committee of movie men was appointed and Eugene H. Roth, E. B. Johnson, Norman Eisner, I. Oppenheimer, L. Weinberg, Jack Partington, Herman Wobber and Howard J. Sheehan went before the Board of Supervisors, accompanied by a couple of attorneys, and demanded a hearing. The committee demanded answers to these questions: 1. If the war films are being shown for charitable purposes, what percentage will charity get of the proceeds? 2. If charity is a secondary consideration, is it fair to the moving picture theatres to rent the Auditorium at a nominal figure to a commercial enterprise?

The committee asserted that the state right to the pictures about to be shown in the Auditorium had been offered to the theatres for $20,000. If the exhibition were to be a bona fide one for charity, the theatres would not only withdraw all opposition, but would contribute ushers, music, managers and whatever else might be needed to make it a success. An understanding as to the use of the Auditorium for commercial showing of pictures was desired, however.

Boggiano made a statement in which he showed that the film exhibition was not a private trade enterprise and that all the net proceeds would be sent to Italy and divided between relief for the dependent families of soldiers and Italian Red Cross.

The committee made no further opposition, but assurance was given by the supervisors that the huge municipal structure would not be rented for motion picure purposes except in bona fide charity or war benefit work.

Among Coast Theatres

SO successful was the business secured during the showing of the first Monroe Salisbury subject released on the Bluebird program that Manager J. A. Quinn of the Rialto theatre, Los Angeles, has booked "The Savage," which will be the program at this downtown first-run house in the very near future.

CARL RAY, who has owned the Strand theatre at Riverside for the past two years, has disposed of this property to Douglas Jarmouth, late owner of the Colonial theatre in Los Angeles. The Colonial is on the corner of Fifty-fourth Street and Vermont Avenue, and this was recently sold by Jarmouth to Walker. The retiring manager of the Riverside Strand theatre, Mr. Carl Ray, is now interested in several theatres in Montana, and in the near future will open a new house in Arizona.

W. J. HESSEN, who has successfully conducted the La Salle Theatre, on West Adams Street, Los Angeles, has sold this house to Mr. H. D. Litchfield.

B. L. HUBBEL has purchased the Crescent theatre in Los Angeles.

FRANK S. DAVIS has purchased the Colonial theatre at Uplands, Cal., from J. B. Lampere, who has bought the Crown theatre of F. Jackson, which is located in Sawtelle, Cal., twelve miles from Los Angeles.

LOUIS Baumgardner is the new owner of the Electric theatre at Santa Paula, having purchased this recently of Alexander Briggs, who has taken over the Academy theatre in Los Angeles.

C. L. LANGLEY, who is building the Taft theatre at Taft, Cal., one of the most prosperous oil towns of the state, advises that the new house of 1450 seats will be opened about January 15th. This is to be a combination theatre with sufficient stage equipment and space to accommodate road show attractions, but Mr. Langley states there will only be an occasional show of this kind, the house being used for motion pictures fully 80 per cent of the days. The theatre is located on a lot 75 x 125 feet, and will have a balcony containing 625 seats. The equipment for the projecting room has already been purchased and consists of Powers 6 B. projecting machines, B. & L. dissolver and a 72-ampere Westinghouse generator set.

NATHAN MANN, who has the Empire theatre at San Pedro, is now having plans made for a new house which will be built on the lot immediately adjoining his present theatre. The plans will provide for 850 seats.

MANAGER H. L. MONAHAN of the theatre at Brawley, Cal., has changed the name of the house from the Gilbo to the Liberty, and it was reopened under the new name during the past week.

BECAUSE of the embargo placed on films, the shipment to Calexico will be cut off within the next few days, and thus considerable business will be taken away from the Los Angeles film exchanges, who supply many houses in Mexico.

THE ARROW THEATRE at Mexicali, which is just two blocks across the Mexican-United States border from Calexico, is to be closed. It is stated this will be very beneficial to American exhibitors who are located in Calexico, as the Arrow theatre is a combination of a dance hall and motion picture house.

MANAGER GEORGE SCHLESSINGER of the Pastime theatre at Bakersfield has been in Los Angeles making bookings for his theatre during the coming months.. Schlessinger's house maintains the policy of five changes each week.

What's New in Oregon?

CHESTER SMITH has bought the Liberty Theatre, of Burns, Ore., from Cligan & Thompson, and is arranging a programme of features for his pictures.

ACCORDING to a letter received by C. M. Hill, of the Portland Paramount-Artcraft Exchange, the film boys at American Lake, members of the new National Army, have organized a movie club and will make some short-reel subjects. Robert Karie of Paralta is one of the most prominent of the film men at Camp Lewis.

JACK LANNON, of the Greater Features Company of Seattle, booked "The Witching Hour" with J. C. Stille of the Peoples Amusement Company when the popular distributor was in Portland last week.

C. M. HILL, the Progressive manager; Art Kolstadt, Hood River exhibitor, and Joe Dietsch, of Perfection Pictures, invaded a Portland restaurant the other day, partook freely of fried mushrooms, and all three were on the hospital roll for several days.

H. H. BROWNELL, well-known Portland cameraman and film salesman, is now a cameraman at Universal City. Brownell left last week for the Southern California film colony. Brownell has been making Oregon pictures for five years, has turned the crank at several Pendleton roundups, and transplanted much magnificent northwest scenery and many news events to the celluloid.

NEITHER C. Bettinger or Lew Cullins of The Dalles have raised admission prices as yet, but both declare that the absorption of the admission tax has eliminated profits and they are looking forward to a "hard winter" unless they tilt the admission fee a trifle.

GUY MATLOCK, who operates four houses at Pendleton, raised prices from 25 to 28 cents at one of his houses, but the results were not satisfactory and he has eliminated the penny change system of admissions.

AT La Grande, Meyers and Leiter, who conduct the Arcade Theatre, have not raised matinee prices, collecting 11 cents instead of 10 and 6 cents instead of 5, but have gone to 10 and 20 cents for evening shows. An intelligent educational campaign resulted in a full appreciation of the need for an increase.

J. P. COTTER, who operates the Orpheum, Grand and Empire theatres at Baker, is another exhibitor who has the confidence and good will of his public to the extent that when he explained that he was forced to jump to 10 and 20 cents business was even better than usual. Mr. Cotter used much newspaper space and utilized other publicity methods.

RALPH RUFFNER, who deserted the Liberty Theatre, Spokane, to manage the Columbia Theatre, Portland, for Jensen and Von Herberg, and to handle publicity for both Columbia and Liberty, has been spending a week meeting old friends in the Rose City. Mr. Ruffner lived in Portland for a number of years before going to Montana.

DIRECTOR WALTER EDWARDS, of Triangle, has taken up the making of an original photoplay by Jack Cunningham, who is also accredited with writing the continuity. This is titled "Evidence." The entire cast of principals for this is announced to include J. Barney Sherry, Audelle Higgins, Pauline Starke, Eugene Cory, and Howard Davies. This will be the first appearance of Miss Higgins and Davies in Triangle films.

TEXAS GUINAN, who has been a member of the Triangle organization for the past two months, is to be starred in a western subject at present known as "The Gun Woman." The role is that of a woman who depends upon a gun in the early frontier days to settle her grievances. Francis MacDonald, late of Universal, and Ed Brady are members of the cast. This film is to be made by Frank Borzage, who has just completed "Until They Get Me," which features Joe King, supported by Pauline Starke and Jack Curtis.

Going the Rounds in San Francisco

TWENTY-FIVE members of the Motion Picture Association of Northern California were in session at their rooms in the new California Theatre when S. L. Rothapfel of New York dropped in. The session was resolved into an informal reception, during which the New York exhibitor answered many questions and discussed conditions of the industry in New York and San Francisco. Mr. Rothapfel inspected the new theatre, which he declared to be worthy of Broadway.

TURNER & DAHNKEN began a run of San Francisco's new morality play, "The Finger of Justice," in the T. & D. theatre at Oakland on November 21 with tremendous attendance at the opening. The Rev. Paul Smith, on whose anti-vice crusade the picture is founded, appeared in person and told why he had produced the film.

THE motion picture operators in San Francisco are trying force the exhibitors to raise their pay from $35 a week for eight hours work to $40 a week for six hours. The demands are under consideration.

AN organ is being installed by the American Photo Player Company in a theatre erected at Menlo Park, Cal., where the Camp Fremont cantonment is located. Another big organ has been supplied by this firm to the new Liberty theatre at Fresno, and still another to one of the theatres in Joy City, the amusement annex to Camp Lewis at American Lake, Wash.

CHARLES MORSE, a San Francisco cameraman, who has been in Honolulu for the past year, is enlisting in the Photographic Division of the United States Army.

THE McDonald theatre at Richmond, Cal., has been sold by Tom Spees to Hoots & McDaniel, formerly of Santa Clara.

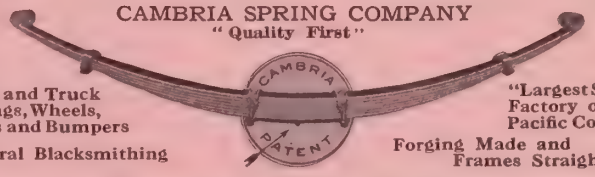
CHARLES ROHRER of the Nippon theatre, Sacramento, has assumed the Edison theatre in the same city, the former owner, Mr. Marks, having been drafted.

ART SMITH, the aviator, and Albert Menasco, his assistant, have returned to San Francisco from the Orient, Smith entering the United States Army aviation service. They tell of the motion picture industry in Japan that strict censorship regulations, eliminating all "blood and thunder" productions, which were very popular there, and that as a result Asakusa park, the motion picture street in Tokio, was closed. "Everybody in a movie theatre in Japan sits on the floor," said Smith, whether upstairs or downstairs. "The highest priced seats are at the top of the house, just under the roof."

WALTER PREDDY of San Francisco has supplied equipment for a new theatre, built by Mr. Johnson of the Smith Lumber Company, at Bay Point, Cal.

FRANK ATKINS, manager of the Marysville theatre, has put a big Hawaiian vaudeville act on the road.

HARRY NAUGLE, western manager of Greater Vitagraph, visited San Francisco on his way back to Los Angeles after three months in New York.



MANAGER COHEN of the George Kleine System gave a preview of the new "Quo Vadis" at Photo Players' hall, San Francisco, on November 22. Exhibitors from all over northern California attended.

RECENT visitors in San Francisco: Dave Berchont, Universal and Bluebird manager, Los Angeles; E. S. Stark, manager Opal theatre, Hollister; A. A. Berrard, manager of the Modesto theatre, Modesto; William Johnson, manager of the Edison theatre, Newman.

The "NEWS" advertisers believe YOU worth while; justify them.

Any Fool Can Criticise

— and criticism that tears down without offering improvements that build up, is the work of a fool.

FOR three years I have said most all motion picture advertising is rotten. It is worse than that; it is unintelligent.

Suppose this, for example: You make a statement or a proposition to the Exhibitor. You are honest and sincere about it, but the Exhibitor thinks you are a liar. The fact that he is wrong makes no difference; you have made a mistake and put out an unintelligent advertisement.

Reverse the thing: Suppose you lie to him—maliciously or otherwise—and he believes you. You're cutting your throat, because sooner or later that lie will come out. In either case you have lost or destroyed confidence that you vitally need.

Any producer who thinks he can disregard the Exhibitor should have his head examined.

Another thing, the bulk of the unintelligent advertising comes from headquarters—the boss—and should not be laid at the door of the advertising department.

It's a peculiar thing that the boss, along with everything else he has to do and has to be familiar with, thinks way back in his head that as an advertising man he would be a "wiz." He's wrong. If that were the case he would be an advertising man and be just as successful and just as advanced financially in the advertising field as he is in his present position. Nevertheless, the boss digs up some pet notion, or idea, and jams it down the throat of his advertising department. Of course the boys want to hold their jobs. The result is an ungodly mess.

I hope some of you fellows who are running things see this. Don't get the idea I am talking to your competitor. Don't consider yourself a noble exception—it's ten thousand to one I am stepping right on the middle of your foot.

The day for brain storms in motion picture advertising and merchandising is past. The industry is solidly up against the real thing and it takes no trained observer to watch the survival of the fittest.

Here's My Definite Proposition

I WILL demonstrate my ability to be constructive as well as critical. I will do this on your own problems without cost to you.

Send me copies of your advertisements, or plans, past or present. I will make notes of mistakes and suggest improvements.

Or make an appointment with me and I will go over personally any proposition you wish to consider and can tell you about the effect on, or result from the Exhibitor.

I ought to be able to do this because after working with and for exhibitors individually, I determined to find out something about exhibitors collectively. So I put in eight months traveling all over the United States. I traveled forty thousand miles. I am not through yet, but I know pretty well what the Exhibitor wants and needs.

To this knowledge I add the result of fifteen years' merchandising and advertising experience. I think I have a reasonable perspective and know pretty well what will naturally develop and what must be done to make money producing pictures.

Within the next sixty days I will make another trip East. If you are not in or near Los Angeles meanwhile I can see you where you are.

Don't consider this advertising thing a matter of designing or writing something to appear in print. Advertising and merchandising are inseparable and are just as much a fundamental part of your business as production.

If you take up this proposition of my demonstrating, constructive work and I return to you anything of value you will pay me for it. That's up to you.

If you can use my service, we can get together.

Dedicatory Notice: This is not a department—it's a pleasure. That is, to the chap who writes it. The effect on the reader is not guaranteed. It's a supposed burlesque on the motion picture news (take it either way) of the preceding week. And some other things.

"THE taxes and handicaps that have been placed on the nation's industries are but drops in the five oceans," warns the main editorial, "compared to the demands which must be made by Congress before we shall have passed the darkness of war and post-war days to the peace that was ours before the gauntlet was cast."

Whereas we should have said it:

NOW: $ $ $ $.

SOON: $ $ $ $ $ $ $ $ $ $ $ $.

"This is the spirit," says the same W. A. J., "that will show Uncle Sam how he can secure more revenue by keeping in business theatres which a few faulty features of the law are driving to the wall."

And faulty features NOT "of the law!"

"Blustering, bickering, ballyhooing," emphasizes the editorial, "will not clear the eyes of a Congress that knows us only through tales of million-dollar salaries."

US?

In her wire notifying the News that she had withdrawn the use of her name from the Louise Glaum War Luxury Fund, promoted by one C. D. Fox, now under indictment, the vamping Louise says:

"I cannot comprehend the stripe of man who would apply such despicable methods of greed in this hour of our country's destiny."

Well, I can. The prison kind.

But "despicable methods of greed" reminds us, Miss Glaum, of excellent works of perfection!

Like this kolyum!

OH, THEN, ABRAMS INTERVIEWED THE PAPERS!

(From Report of Mr. Abram's Visit to Milwaukee.)

"While there, Mr. Abrams put over considerable publicity in the way of interviews with the papers."

If the News "Smokes" fund will buy the boys in France the certain sort of weed that Aubrey Kennedy smokes we can smoke them Boches out!

While "concentrated puffing at Bert Ennis' Best," says Harry, "would dispel the worst Hun gas attack!"

If riding around the country getting receptions is Ben Shulberg's idea of work, mine is to be Chaplin's publicity man!

A recent press agent yearn set forth that Director Giblyn had been "made a member of the General Committe on National Organization of the Home Furnishing Industry." Expect to see that Tom Ince has been elected to the Promotion and Development Committee of the National Association of the Cement Industry!

And Herb Brenon to the Improvement Committee of the Wine Dealers Association!

Frank Crane says he'd like to be on the Membership Committee of the Association to Exterminate Press Agents!

"How I Happened" is the title of a biographic squib by Mary MacLaren. If films could speak, I would like to hear what a lot of so-called features would offer under this heading!

Is the Ghost in Paramount's "Ghost House" the same that walks for Jack Pickford every Saturday?

HOW NEW ORLEANS PAPERS GIVE FREE ADVERTISING

(From Exhibitor Service Bureau.)

"In the first place notice the newspaper chart showing where and when pictures are to be seen during the week. This is a free contribution to the theatres, but of course none are included in this chart who do not advertise!"

Jewel Carmen, the radiant beauty.

Lillian Walker, the darling of the screen.

Irene Castle, the best-known woman in America.

WHY NATURAL?

(From Report of Mr. Brady's Chicago Speech.)

"As a producer and for the producers he said that every man in the business, with the exception of a natural few unprincipled ones, were striving to give the best kind of pictures."

So Billy is going to make his pictures West!

Since other firms have shown pictures in Sing Sing, the First National might show "Alimony" in Ludlow Street Jail. (This quip will only get over in New York!)

His announcement of "Mr. J. Warren Kerrigan" and "Miss Bessie Barriscale" makes me wonder if W. W. H. is New York Heralding the fil-lum business?

"Clune's Auditorium," says W. H. Clune, "had the premier presentation of the world's greatest pictures, such as 'Birth of a Nation,' 'Ramona,' 'The Eyes of the World,' etc." When you recall that W. H. C. produced the last two, you count him due for our "cheerful admissions" department!

Fox announces "The Pride of New York." It must be Winnie Sheehan!

"'For Sale,' by Fred Jackson," says a Pathe announcement, "has been purchased for Fanny Ward!" While Triangle says that "Mr. Butter*fly*" is being made by Director *Hop*per! And Essanay that Taylor Holmes will be in a Wode*house* play!

Denver Screen Club Changes Weekly Luncheon Place

The Rocky Mountain Screen Club of Denver is now holding its weekly luncheons at the Metropole Hotel instead of the Albany, and the membership is well pleased with the change. At last Thursday's luncheon H. Bradley Fish of Goldwyn and R. J. Churchill of the Fox corporation, the committee appointed to arrange for the use of the Auditorium for the annual Screen Club ball, reported February 12 as a tentative date. It is believed that date can be secured, but the installation of Denver's big municipal organ makes the date uncertain. It is believed, however, that the installation will have been completed before that time. The positive date will be announced as soon as possible.

Several stars will undoubtedly be present, and those from Los Angeles will travel by the Southern route to avoid probable snow blockades which prevailed last year.

Rothapfel to Solve Problems of Service Bureau Readers

¶ Exhibitors everywhere are to have the greatest "consulting expert" in the world of motion pictures at their call —free of any charge or obligation.

Samuel L. Rothapfel, genius of presentation and recognized everywhere as the foremost exhibitor of the globe, creator of the Rialto and the Rivoli theatres is the man.

Hereafter Mr. Rothapfel will answer through the Motion Picture News any question from any exhibitor concerning his problems. The only conditions to this announcement is that the questions must not require opinions regarding individual pictures or brands and that all questions must come through Motion Picture News. Mr. Rothapfel will ignore inquiries from any other source.

¶ Mr. Rothapfel is today the best fitted man in the whole industry to perform such a service for the exhibitors of the country. No one realizes more fully the value of real service. And because of the real interest that he feels in his fellow exhibitors wherever they may be, Mr. Rothapfel has agreed to give his valuable time to the personal consideration of individual problems that may be presented to him.

There will be no camouflage to this. Every inquiry that comes to Motion Picture News marked for the attention of Mr. Rothapfel will go to him and he will dictate the answer. These answers will be published in Motion Picture News. With the coming opening of the magnificent Rivoli, which is to surpass everything known to the industry, and his continued personal direction of the Rialto, Mr. Rothapfel is to have the greatest responsibility. But he is willing to give still more of his time to be of service to his fellow man.

¶ "Seeing the Rialto with Rothapfel" has proved one of the most popular features of the Exhibitors' Service Bureau. Each week one of Motion Picture News staff sits through the presentation with Mr. Rothapfel and then presents to the exhibitors of the country the exhibition as arranged by Mr. Rothapfel and his own comment on this. Scores of letters have been received commending this feature; it has attracted instant attention from Broadway to the hamlet.

This department will be continued, but its field has been somewhat limited, for it, of necessity, must be confined to the lessons brought out by the particular presentations and Mr. Rothapfel's explanations of how he accomplished the results and his suggestions to others.

¶ But now the field is open to everyone, whether you are showing the most expensive super-feature or a program of single reels. Whatever are your problems with the presentation of pictures, Mr. Rothapfel will answer them for you.

You have the thought and the expert advice of the world's greatest exhibitor.

You could not buy this consulting service of the genius of presentation.

But you can get this advice, the most notable single service ever offered the showmen of the country through Motion Picture News, and through that medium alone.

Remember that this is the only way you can have your questions answered. And remember, too, that Mr. Rothapfel will not enter into the discussion of the merits of productions.

Don't ask foolish questions; don't make your questions involved. Ask one thing at a time and your answer will have prompt and earnest attention.

With this aid of Mr. Rothapfel Motion Picture News believes that it has reached the SUPREME in SERVICE FOR THE EXHIBITOR.

Getting Newspaper Co-operation

Proper Action on the Part of Exhibitors Will Bring Much Free Publicity

FOR several weeks we have been talking to you about the way that you should advertise. To an extent this referred to what you should do for the newspapers, inasmuch as the amount you spend in exploiting your house does benefit these publications on the basis of value received. Now we want to talk about what the newspapers should do for you, the things that you have a right to expect, the things that you cannot get—and the real measure of co-operation between the theatre and the press.

We believe that nearly all over the country the feeling between picture theatres and newspapers has died out. It came from the fact that motion pictures were first regarded as the rage of the hour, a passing fancy, and because they adopted the "bally-hoo" methods of exploitation. Gradually as they grew stronger and began to kill off the legitimate theatres, they still stuck to the same methods of violent lobby displays and still ignored the newspapers. With few exceptions the newspaper has had to educate the motion picture manager in the way to advertise; it has been a hard game of persuasion, but where a serious attempt has been made in the right spirit, both parties have gained much.

There are a few newspapers in the country who still pursue the "high brow" attitude toward the motion picture, but they are rapidly passing. There are many, many others who are not giving the pictures the attention they should have, but investigation shows that in most cases their efforts have not called forth responses for exhibitors in their communities. There can be a great deal more done in getting the newspaper and the exhibitor closer together. We want to tell you how you, as a showman, can help in this movement which is bound to be of the greatest advantage to you.

Merely as a basis of this talk we have reproduced on the opposite page some portions of the photoplay departments of various newspapers. No effort has been made to select the best photoplay departments in the country, but at the same time they are representative of the papers who are seeking to co-operate with the picture houses.

Most newspapers realize the enormously large per cent of the public that is interested in motion pictures. There is not a newspaper in the country that has ever started a real department of this sort that has ever discontinued it. Several, during the early period of the white paper scare, either cut down the space that they were giving to motion pictures or dropped the department altogether. The cry from the readers was such that the departments were promptly reinstated. At a later date we are going into some detail in telling you just what the various newspapers are doing for motion pictures, and the treatment of individual photoplay editors is very interesting, but here we can only deal in generalities. We have tried before to tell you why you should advertise. In the great majority of cases all the motion picture theatres have to do is to start a concerted movement in this direction and the newspapers will be found ready to meet them more than half way.

The greatest trouble with exhibitors is that each one is so suspicious of his rivals that it is hard to start a concerted movement to pledge newspaper advertising in order to get newspaper co-operation. If they would get together on this single point the results, in many cities, would be astounding. But we still have left the old, true story of the "bellwether." Some one has to blaze the way in advertising and those of the rest who really want to survive will follow.

Remember this in all your advertising. A newspaper has to make out its budget much further in advance than most business concerns. In these days of scarcity, white paper, inks, etc., have to be arranged for as much as a year in advance. A newspaper has to have a definite plan ahead, and in order to arrange that plan it has to have a more or less definite idea of what its income will be. In your case it has to know that you are going to be a regular advertiser; not that you are going to use a certain amount of space each day but that your expenditure over a certain time is going to be, roughly, such and such an amount. Especially the newspaper cannot afford to start a special department like a photoplay column and depend only on the sporadic advertiser. It would be just as foolish as for you to try to figure your theatre business on the receipts for a single day. So it is well to take into consideration that it is the REGULAR who counts in governing the policies of a publisher.

But let us consider that you, and the enterprising fellow exhibitors of your city have determined to become regular users of display space. Then what is the next thing that you should do? What can you expect the newspaper to do for you in addition to giving you the display matter for which you actually pay?

As we have advised you before, talk over your problems with your newspaper publisher. Tell him that you are going to spend all that you reasonably can on advertising and then ask for his co-operation. With the exception of a few cities the paper will be ready to give the everyday advertiser a story in the Sunday department, and where the expenditure justifies it, photographic reproduction. The larger papers use what is called "layouts." In other words, the theatre sends in the photograph that it desires used and this is put with the pictures sent in by the other houses and made into a single cut, the whole occupying the amount of space that the newspaper has decided to give. Most of the papers, however, are unable to afford layouts but they will be found ready to use the cuts or mats which are furnished by the exhibitor, and which the exhibitor in turn can get from the exchange (if the exchange is up to the times). Many manufacturers make the mistake of seeking to adorn these cuts which they furnish with their names or brand marks as big as possible and so make them apparent free advertising and therefore harder to persuade the newspapers to use. There is great need for reform in this "free service" of the manufacturer. It is time for many of them to stop trying to "sneak over" something for their own direct benefit.

Now we would suggest to every exhibitor that he encourage his Sunday papers to the use of as much GENERAL photoplay news as possible. The more the newspaper keeps the public interested in the doing of players and the gossip of coming production, the greater your box-office receipts is going to be. Don't expect this matter to be direct advertising for your theatre. Would you expect your paper to run a column of personals about the players and in each one to mention that this star is "going to be seen soon at the Gem theatre"? Let us tell you, in the first place, that no self-respecting newspaper is going to do this. And in the second place, such matter will be passed over by the average reader as pure advertising and its benefit will be lost. But try to keep your stars before the public by the indirect style, the news style of stories.

Publicity departments furnish the photoplay departments of the larger papers with matter of more or less news value. You should see to it that the companies with whom you are booking supply your newspaper with this matter. But you have a remedy in preparing your own matter from the press sheets, and better than all, from the columns of the NEWS. Letter after letter has been printed in these pages from leading photoplay editors of the country who declared that they got the greater part of their news here. Careful reading of the NEWS and rewriting the various items that concern the people who appear regularly on your bills and the productions that you know are to be shown at your house will be likely to prove acceptable to your paper. The smaller the paper the more necessary will it be for you to aid in the preparation of this matter, for none but the larger dailies can afford to employ a man whose entire time is devoted to photoplay work.

How Some Newspapers Aid the Motion Picture Exhibitor

These more or less random selections show what Sunday papers are willing to do. At top Detroit Free Press and two pages from Cleveland Plain Dealer, in center three pages from Baltimore American and at bottom two pages from Pittsburg Press and one from Syracuse Herald.

But the greater volume of advertising contributed by you and your fellow showmen, the more atention will be paid to this end of the work.

This matter has referred to the Sunday reading matter. Most of the papers will be found ready to give you short daily stories, if you are a regular advertiser. In preparing this matter, avoid exaggeration and adjectives. Try to make your reading matter meet the requisite of NEWS so far as possible. Remember that you are not deceiving the reader by exaggeration and lurid writing. What you want to tell are the facts, briefly and simply. You will find the Ready Made Ad Talks appearing in this paper each week of great value to you, for they tell you in brief, clear form what the pictures are about. Above everything else never say in your reading notices that "this is the star's greatest picture" or that it is "greater than the 'Birth of a Nation.'" A lot of misguided publicity writers are using these terms every moment, but keep away from the danger yourself. Remember that even more than in your display announcements, where the reader understands that you are making the statements, you ought to keep away from such exaggerations in the matter you are making the newspaper stand for. When you get the confidence of your paper don't abuse it because you may be able to "slip over" something once in awhile.

Live newspapers will be willing to print account of novel ideas that you use and many of them will aid you in special little stunts. Often, where you are doing big advertising on special pictures, they will use cuts for you during the week, and this is a splendid form of publicity.

Now to go back to the reproductions of pages from various newspapers. You will note that the Baltimore American, besides printing the "chart" to which we referred last week in the article on neighborhood houses, and the "layout" on current attractions, also prints pictures and stories about things of interest in the photoplay. These, of course, do not undertake to say every time a story is printed about Theda Bara that she is to be seen at the Majestic theatre soon, but they do give the fans the sort of news gossip about her that they want and it is the invaluable sort of publicity that we have just mentioned. The same is true of the Cleveland Plain Dealer, two pages from which we have also reproduced, and of many other papers through the country. Co-operate fully with the newspapers and encourage them to use this sort and be content with the indirect advertising that you get from it. You will profit from every photoplay fan who is created.

Your relations with your newspapers should be as close as possible. Don't get peeved over the little things, but look on this service from a broad viewpoint. Don't be selfish and expect every line of this reading matter to rebound to your individual benefit. You want co-operation; you need not expect the paper itself to be turned over to you.

Always use a typewriter in preparing your matter. Of course, you should use but one side of the paper and should triple space to give ample room for editing. Make your matter as brief as possible. Most of the publicity men, even the highest paid one often seem to strive for quantity rather than quality. It is better for you yourself to edit your own matter with a firm hand, leaving in the things that you want to appear in print, than to have your editor, in his haste hew out half of your matter because you have overstepped space limits.

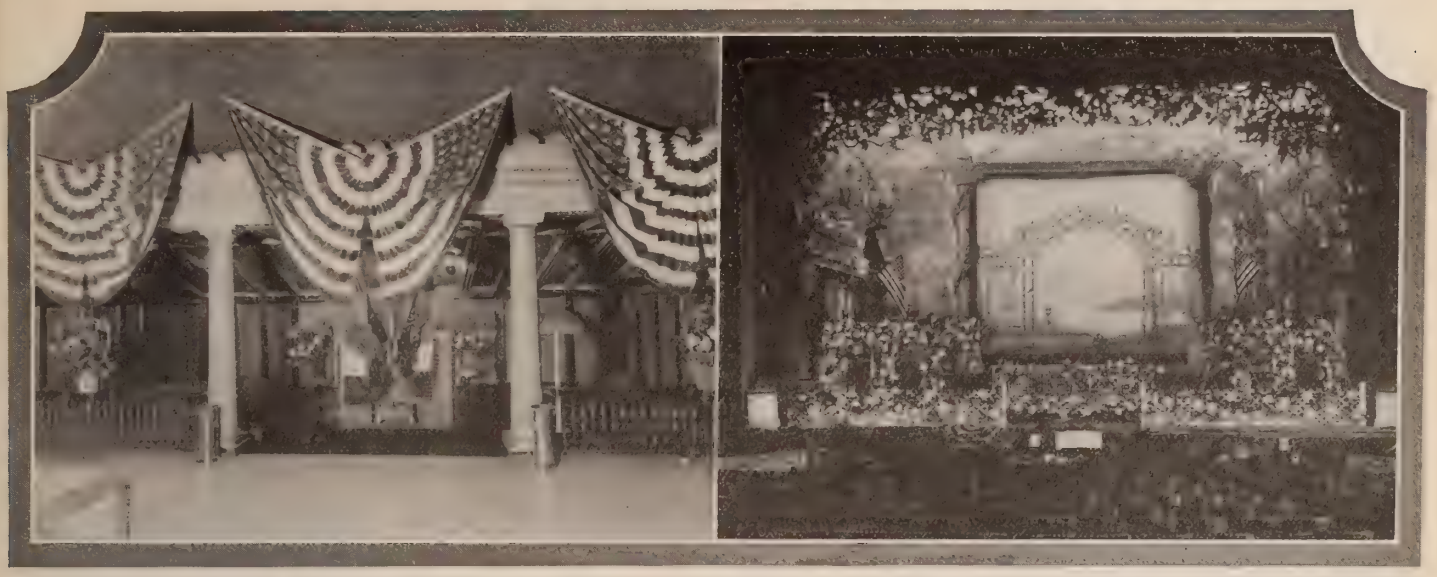
Get this copy to your paper as early as possible—the day before if you can. Remember that this is not "spot" news, and it stands a better chance of being used if it beats the up-to-the-minute news into the office. The newspaper is not going to stop work on a big murder story and turn the machines over to setting up a free reading notice about your attraction.

Where your newspaper makes its own cuts, get the photographs to the paper as early as possible. It seems to be a habit with exhibitors, newspaper men report, to bring in the photos at the last moment and then fail to understand why they are not used. Possibly the section of the Sunday paper in which the photoplay news appears is printed Friday night and the cuts ought to be in at least two days earlier. This is one of the little things that you ought to find out for yourself. It is what we mean by co-operating with the newspaper.

We cannot urge too many times that you do get in touch with the publishers of your papers—the photoplay editors where such departments exist. Co-operate to the limit and advertise to the fullest amount that you can afford. You will be amazed at the results.

We cannot provide more than general rules for the preparation of your matter, but if we can instill the spirit of GET TOGETHER with your newspapers, we feel that we have done a great deal.

Three Newspapers Unite for Exploitation of Patriotic Film



THREE of the largest newspapers in the Northwest recently conducted one of the most unique campaigns in exploiting a motion picture that has ever been known in this country. The campaign lasted for three weeks, was entirely free, and was conducted by the Minneapolis Journal, St. Paul Ditpatch-Pioneer-Press and the Duluth Herald. The picture was the Jewel production, "The Man Without a Country."

These newspapers combined to awake the people of their section to the necessity of good citizenship, the theme of the production. When the film was booked in the twin cities of Minneapolis and St. Paul and later in Duluth, the three great newspapers combined forces to make "The Man Without a Country," a smashing and convincing patriotic argument.

The combined circulation of the "twin city" papers was 400,000. Each gave advertising space running from three columns to half pages, backed by running stories in the news columns. The Minneapolis Journal besides boosting the picture for a week on November 11 devoted one and three-quarters feature pages to a reprint of Edward Everett Hale's story, with a two-column review of the feature.

The St. Paul Dispatch commented upon the film in its editorial columns and wound up a two weeks' advertising campaign with a three-column fifteen-inch display. The Duluth Herald followed the lead of the other papers when the feature was shown there.

Make your theatre the THING, and then you won't have to worry about changing film services or flitting stars.

Buffalo Neighborhood House Manager Tells Some of Secrets of His Success

EXHIBITORS all over the country can get an inspiration from a twenty-two year old showman. He is Edward L. Hyman, who directs the destinies of the Victoria, a 2,000 seat neighborhood house in Buffalo, N. Y.

There is the embodiment of youth at the Victoria. It reaches out to the patron from the moment that one sees the blooming flowers in the outer lobby, and the spirit is carried through the lobby itself where a red lamp glows with a homelike invitation. Then there are roses and chrysanthemums and carnations filling many vases, adding an intimate appeal.

Mr. Hyman believes in being "fussy" about litle things. He believes in giving his theatre the atmosphere—and the atmosphere here is that of home. And he has made the house so distinctive that although it is in the upper western section of the city people come from every district to enjoy the brightness of the house. The theatre has an auto patronage that would make big profits for any house anywhere.

"Keep with 'em, not behind them," says Mr. Hyman. "When it's cold outside and our lobby is warm and redolent with the aroma of flowers, and inside the portico of our rest room is clustered with flowers brought into relief with lights, don't you believe that makes 'em talk, and tell others what novel things we try to give them here?"

Uses All Novelties

Mr. Hyman is a minute-man in this respect. He doesn't allow moss to grow around the front door of his think emporium. Everytime there is an opportunity to present a novelty, he does it. He makes use of occasion and circumstance.

For instance, the other night when the dimmers dimmed nearly out between shows, the curtains parted slowly and up from the floor of the stage rolled the American flag, standing out in relief against the dark because colored lights were behind it. As the glowing emblem covering the big stage brought forth applause, Harry Mason, a soloist who sings at the free city band concerts during the summer, sang a military ballad and a follow-up slide on the screen spoke briefly and courteously of the Y. M. C. A. war campaign for funds.

Of course this isn't a wonderful idea but it was unlooked for and a surprise. It made the people talk right there in the show. In fact everytime they come to the Victoria they look for a touch of realism, something unusual, not the same old overture, weekly, comedy and feature.

That very same night he showed movies of the Buffalo drafted men in camp.

Knows His Patrons

Another thing has spelled success for Edward L. Hyman and the Victoria. He is not afraid to let his patrons know who he is. Although he shows to crowded houses in his big beautiful theatre each night, hundreds know him by name and stop at the office to comment or suggest a picture. But that isn't all, Mr. Hyman greets the patrons coming in or leaving and when they depart he asks them if they liked the show.

"If a man or woman asks you to get a certain picture, and you already have booked it for the future, accept the suggestion as if it was a brand new idea to you and suggested by them. It will please the suggester and it won't hurt you. Don't for Heaven's sake snap him up in a cold manner and say sharply: 'We will have that picture surely, it has been booked here for some time.'"

The Victoria stands out like a beacon, is a true statement and not a simile. Mr. Hyman conceived the idea of having large lights with giant reflectors behind them to illuminate the entire front of the white marble building. This is aside from the facade lights and the big electric sign. The scheme has worked out well for when one is a mile away from the theatre, the glow is conceivable. This is not expensive either, in fact the Hyman ideas are all inexpensive but they are human and appeal.

These are a few of the Victoria policies that might be adopted by any neighborhood house:

A consistent endeavor to introduce clean novelties in the program, such as special stage sets for war campaigns, holidays, etc.

Injection of special music features into the program by high class instrumental soloists known and liked by the patronage. Not a highbrow soloist but someone they like and know.

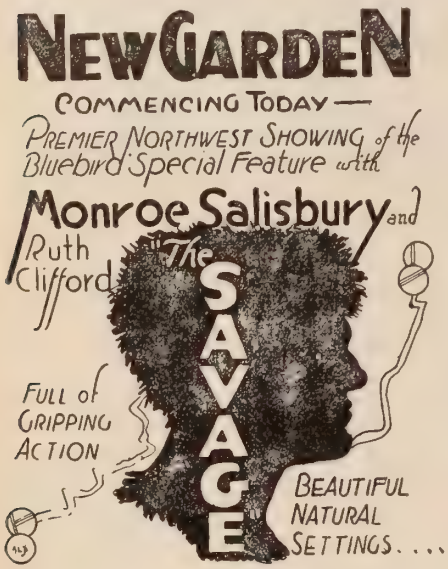
The highest class features. The Victoria shows Paramount, Artcraft, Goldwyn and others first on the West Side. Plenty of variety.

Meeting the moods of the audience. Figure they are wearied from work when they arrive. Give them a light lively overture, something short and snappy in a news reel, a pair of lively songs by a classy singer, a good feature with love in it, an educational reel that does not bore, and a comedy that sends them away laughing and ready to come back next week.

Don't give 'em a chance to argue. If they do let them argue. Maybe they have a right. Try to right the wrong.

Advertise and keep the Victoria before the public continually. The Victoria keeps small ads, changed daily, in the amusement columns of all daily newspapers where the theatregoer can find them when he wants information.

The Victoria uses a program, written in homey language with a personal appeal. This program, containing breezy chatter, is sent to 5,000 homes through the mail, the mailing list having been obtained in the theatre. The mail carriers aid in keeping dead-wood out of the mailing list by reporting all those who have moved away or who have moved into the section.



Mr. Hyman has a clean theatre, smiling courteous attendants, and he says the reason is because every person in the Victoria knows that Mitchell H. Mark, the owner, has confidence in everyone of them and expects them to do their best every minute.

"I don't deserve such a lot of credit,

Your Idea—and Ours

WE have told you many times that where you can afford to design your own advertising and have facilities for getting the engraving done promptly, it is far better than mere type displays. The Strand and Garden theatres, Minneapolis, have a publicity manager in J. L. Johnston who designs his own advertising and does it effectively. The result is that the displays stand out amid the mass of other type advertising on the same page. And then, again, there is something distinctive about this, and as long as the designs follow the same general style they will be immediately recognized as that of a particular theatre.

See how much stronger the outline of the head of the savage in this display stands out than would the name of the star or the title of the picture in ordinary type. The essential thing in the design of an advertisement is to achieve something that will immediately catch the eye. This display certainly has that quality.

Make your theatre a proverb in the minds of your patrons—a proverb for quality.

IF you give passes at your theatre, make them worth something to you, not only to fill your house for the time, but to make business for the future. As a general rule, we do not believe in passes, because they encourage in the public mind the idea of "something for nothing" and they inspire the feeling that you are about to bunk the public. But there are times when they are worth while—when you can really make the passes do you a service.

In this case the Harlem Strand theatre, a new house, used the passes on the opening of "Who Is 'Number One?'" serial. But it was not only to get the crowd at the first episode. Being a new house a mailing list was one of the most necessary things and these slips, which had to be signed by the user to make them good, supplied an excellent basis for such a list.

THE MANAGER

Old man inspiration is an awfully helpful fellow to have around the shop.

HERE is probably the record tie-up of motion picture theatres with national advertising. This was done in connection with the campaign of Paramount-Artcraft in Philadelphia recently. Twenty-eight theatres in the city, suburbs and nearby New Jersey towns occupied space in the Evening Ledger. The advertisement as paid for by Paramount was the same that has appeared in the Saturday Evening Post. The theatres occupied the space on the sides of the display and at the bottom and each one of them got as much benefit as if it has paid for the entire page in the newspaper.

Watch these things. Take advantage of every cent that your producers or distributors spend for you. A number of these companies are not putting out a lot of money for exploitation. Get in on the ground floor and not only reap the benefits for yourself, but a tthe same time make yourself popular with your local newspapers.

What does an anniversary mean to you? Merely another year gone by?

IT would be trite to say that you ought to make your program interesting—that it ought to carry something more than a mere announcement of the pictures that you are to show during the week. Little notes about the players, their doings, their coming productions are worth while, but it is even better when you can pull some stunt that will keep your people looking for your next week program. Manager C. D. Buss of the Third Street theatre, Easton, Pa., keeps his patrons interested with a stunt that has been used by several of the more prominent newspapers in their photoplay departments. For instance, he prints on the cover the eyes or lips or nose of a couple of players and invites his patrons to name them. The answers are printed the following week. These cuts are inexpensive and you can get any quantity of material from the pictures of the stars that you ought to have in your stockroom. And it's a popular game. We know of one newspaper which received over eighteen hundred answers to one of these puzzles.

Advertising made P. T. Barnum. Get the habit and you can be the Barnum of your section.

TWO inquiries in a week have asked how the Rialto and Strand theatres, New York, advertise, so we are reproducing two displays here. However, these are not to be taken as models for advertising through the country as conditions are so different in New York from other cities that what would be good advertising here would be bad in other sections of the country. In the first place, a great share of the people who go to these theatres go rather to the theatre itself than to the special picture. Both houses have kept their productions up to such a high standard and pay so much attention to the music, the animated weeklies, the educationals and to the presentation of the picture that the feature does not stand out as it would in another town. For that reason these theatres feature largely the name of the house. And there is another reason for this, for in the mass of theatre advertising in the Sunday papers, it is important to direct the reader's eye to the theatre he is looking for.

One display in your lobby that people see is worth a dozen that you force your patrons to stumble over.

HERE is a case of "sacrificing" type displays to cuts. We quote the word for it is the opposite of sacrifice. It has made the display a hundred per cent stronger than the average advertisement, a thousand per cent more convincing than is most displays occupying an equal amount of space (four columns by 12 inches) in which many managers would be tempted to try to tell "all about" the production and string in an endless array of adjectives.

Hayakawa is exceptionally popular among the patrons of the Liberty theatre, Portland, Oregon. So, very apparently, the thing to do was to take advantage of his popularity and this was accomplished by using a large outline head and then a scene from the productions. The preparations of the ad. was very simple for the designer had only to cut out the figures from the photographs and paste them on cardboard. Then note that very small space is given for the type display—for the simple reason that the cuts have already "put over" the punch.

The spider is awfully busy, but of what use are the cobwebs, anyhow? Is your business just as useful?

WE are fond of impressing on you in discussions of good advertising one thing—WHITE SPACE. We have shown you a number of good examples, and here is another from the Lyric theatre, Spokane, Wash. And though a small house this is one of the most intelligently advertised theatres in the country. And there is nothing small in the amount of space that is used. For instance, this display was five columns wide by sixteen inches deep. It dominated the entire page. The theatre got this effect by using one of the ad designs supplied by Artcraft, but he was not satisfied with that and he used three times the space that the design called for—not a lot more printed matter but for the white space to make the display stand out over every other advertisement in the paper. And it did.

WEEK after week we have been telling you of novel ideas used by P. E. Noble, manager of the American theatre, Butte, Montana. Both ideas and Mary MacLaren come from Butte. How many showmen of the country are combining displays with their electric signs. Here is what Noble did when he showed "The Whip." He used one of the 24-sheets and made a cut-out of it, and then put the title in in electric letters. This was fastened by iron extenders to the bottom of the house sign. The plan is very simple, quite inexpensive and wonderfully striking. It immediately attracts attention not only on account of the display itself, but because it changes the entire front of the theatre at night. There is scarcely a production with which the same thing cannot be done, provided the twenty-four sheets contain striking pictures which occupy only a portion of the sheet. The result is that two words in electric lights have a most striking effect.

"Turning Over New Leaf," Easy with Aid of Service Bureau

Along about this time of the year there's a lot of talk about TURNING OVER A NEW LEAF with the New Year.

For some months now the NEWS has offered you something new to the motion picture industry in a real Service Department. Are you taking advantage of it to the fullest extent?

You don't have to wait for the first of 1918 to turn over a new leaf. First turn over all the leaves of this department and read everything you find on all of them. Then write and tell us how we may help you further.

but it belongs to Mr. Mark, for he doesn't interfere and has confidence that those who work for him are up on their toes every minute. A young man does his best work when his employer lets him work out his ideas and allows him to let off his steam in ideas. But—when the big moments arrive the owner is the man who figures out the crisis things. I may be a half-way decent manager, but their are times when age, experience and counsel serve as a rudder.

Vitagraph Begins Drive on Newest Serial

Greater Vitagraph announces that it has set a new record by distributing the complete plan book for use of exhibitors in exploiting "Vengeance—and the Woman," the latest serial, a full month in advance of the release of the initial episode. In addition prints have been shipped to all exchanges for prerelease showings.

The plan book is very complete and is in fifty pages, the covers being in colors. It includes advance press stories for each of the fifteen episodes, complete novelization for newspaper use, reproductions of star cuts and advertising displays, full music cues and two pages devoted to special stunts for use in getting unusual publicity for the serial.

There will be another strong billboard campaign. Early in December twenty-four-sheets will be posted in every city in the country over 10,000 and later the smaller places will be covered. This campaign will be two to three times as great as that on "The Fighting Trail."

Is This Your Theatre?

In this column the Exhibitors' Service Bureau will print comment from week to week on theatres actually visited, pointing out faults found and commendable features. The name of the theatre will not be mentioned, but if it applies to you and you want improvement, write to this department.

THEATRE L. is today the most successful house in a city of about 80,000 people. This is largely a manufacturing and railroad center where the workmen get good wages and where prosperity has been unusually great for several years past.

But the manager of this theatre was strictly "up against" it when he determined to open a house, because the city was literally in the hands of a "trust," every motion picture house in the center of the city—some five of them—being controlled by the same firm. It was a monopoly that had been considered impossible to break. Several had attempted the task, but they all met the same end—the sheriff's hammer or sale to the "trust."

This man's father had recently died and the chief piece of property left was on the main street of the city and in the business section. It was sufficiently large for a motion picture theatre seating 800 and the young man after examining the revenue from the property while it was leased for business purposes decided that he could make far more with a motion picture show—provided he could make good. But before he took this step he gave the situation careful study.

He was familiar with well operated motion pictures in other cities by observation and he soon found out that there was not really a well run house in the city. The general manager was trying to give his attention to all, the house managers were little more than office boys and the exploitation was poor, the "trust" demanding so much free matter from the newspapers for such a small expenditure in advertising—on the ground that they controlled the field—that there was a practical break. The strong point of the opposition was that it was able to control most of the better film services, because it controlled the field. Right here the young man figured it out that he could score his success and make this very fact hurt the opposition—that he would force them to pay so much for the services that this charge would bring their ruin.

Determined then to go the limit, he mortgaged the property and spent $25,000 converting the building into a motion picture house. Some of this was spent on the front but the most of it went to the interior. He got the advice of men long in the business on every expenditure that he made, and he was sure when the theatre was finished that he would have the very best that his money could get. One thing he provided for first was an orchestra, and an organ, for the tin-pan music of the other houses was one of their worst features.

Then he went to the exchange city and visited the representatives of the companies he believed made the best pictures. He offered them more for their product than the combination was paying—but all of them turned him down, for they had had bitter experiences with others who had tried to "buck the trust." But his personality made an impression and they thought about the matter a whole lot after he had left. But he didn't get the pictures, and inasmuch as three of the rival houses changed three times a week and two changed daily, there wasn't very much left open for him. Then he went home and took up the newspaper question. There was one morning and one evening paper. This young man surprised the advertising managers by telling them how much he was going to spend—it was twice as much as the trust was paying. They were pleased, but they were careful not to extend him long credit.

Still he couldn't get the pictures he wanted. But he decided that he would get the very best that were left. There were no arrangements by which he might see available films in advance in his home city, so he evolved a novel plan. He subscribed for daily papers in ten cities where there are notable theatres and he proceeded to pick for his feature pictures that had been shown at these houses, those which were available. The opposition has never learned to this day where he got his tips. He decided to change but twice a week and then gave his strongest attention to the news reels, the educationals and short comedies. The other houses had been putting on strong features and any old thing for the rest of the bill. And he had music with his pictures, indirect lighting and all the other conveniences, and courtesy ruled everywhere.

He played the newspapers strong both in his personal relations and his expenditures. At first the opposition was tickled because he was spending so much, but newspapers were awakened into ADMIRATION and proceeded to help this youth along to success in a whole hearted way. After this house had won the inside track with the newspapers, the other began to advertise stronger and beg for aid, but the advertising managers never forgot who had been responsible for increase in advertising, and Theatre L. can get today five times as much for the expenditure of a dollar as can the rivals.

There isn't space here to tell of the other things that the new manager did. But he appealed to the highest element, conducted the cleanest house, gave real music and real service. His features were possibly not so good as others, but the way he put them on made them BETTER. His success was immediate, though he had raised the admission price. In three months the theatre was the talk not only of the town, but of the exchange city. He was offered

Milwaukee Theatre Devotes Booklet to Teaching Its Employees Idealism

COURTESY is one of the big things in theatre management. That is why we try to impress this on you week by week. And courtesy applies just as well to the hundred seat house as it does to the Strand or the Rialto.

About two months ago we printed a story about the New theatre, Fort Smith, Ark., which had adopted the Statler hotel rules for its theatre. The New made a hit and it is gaining patronage every day. So far as we know this house, in a comparatively small city, was the first to publish a special booklet aimed at courtesy to the patrons.

Manager George Fisher of the Alhambra theatre, Milwaukee, has prepared a booklet whose reading will be of value to every manager. It would be well for all exhibitors to hand this copy of the NEWS around to all the employees and have them read it. Courtesy is one of the cheapest things in the world—and it is a NECESSITY. The first few pages of the Alhambra booklet parallel very closely the Statler rules as interpreted by the New theatre. Then this follows:

"A theatre has just two things to sell.

"One is entertainment, the other its service.

"A theatre that sells poor entertainment with poor service is a poor theatre.

"A theatre that sells good entertainment with Paramount service is a Paramount theatre.

"It is the object of the Alhambra to sell its guests PARAMOUNT entertainment with PARAMOUNT service.

"We want all guests who enter the Alhambra theatre to do so because they believe they are buying something here better than can be bought anywhere else.

"Every employee of this theatre—Cashier, Doorman, Chief Usher and Assistants, Maids, Nurses, Footman, etc., etc.—is in a measure charged with the responsibility for seeing that our guests go away pleased—NOT DISAPPOINTED. For instance:

"If I were an USHER or a MAID—

"I would endeavor never to appear overworked, tired or 'grouchy.' I would try to ascertain the guest's preferences as to seats, then politely lead the way to them. If impossible to meet the guest's desires, I would impart the fact politely and offer the best to be had, even going out of my way, in dealing with a 'fussy' patron, to accommodate such to his or her complete satisfaction. I would never entertain my friends while on duty and would avoid congregating at the aisles and visiting with my fellow workers, that it is my first duty to avoid cause for even one dissatisfied guest and that guests come to the Alhambra to see and hear the entertainment offered, not to listen to the conversation of house employees. In case a guest was dissatisfied and I was unable to remove the cause I would call the manager at once.

"If I were the CASHIER—

"I would be ever genial and greet guests with a smile; remember to say 'please' and 'thank you' and in general to impress—but not offensively—the purchasers of tickets or those making inquiries with my unvarying good-nature. I would do my entertaining of friends before or after hours and courteously but firmly discourage all attempts to entangling conversation.

"The person calling on the telephone is probably as important as the guest at the window. I would politely ascertain the wants of all such and do everything within reason to satisfy them. If the party wanted is not in I would courteously ask caller if he or she desired to leave a name or number so the call could be contemplated later, remembering always that even one dissatisfied guest of the Alhambra is just one too many.

"If I were the DOORMAN—

"I would greet guests with a smile and a hearty 'good afternoon' or 'good evening.' I would stand always when on duty and watch for opportunities to extend small courtesies to guests of the theatre. I would stedfastly refrain from entertaining friends or allowing them by conversation or otherwise to interfere with my duties. I would cheerfully answer all questions of guests and in all other respects show a desire to be of the utmost service and thereby exonerate myself from the responsibility for even one dissatisfied guest. If, however, a guest were dissatisfied despite all I could do, I would call the manager immediately in the hope that he could smooth the troubled waters where my efforts failed.

"Every item of extra courtesy contributes toward a better pleased guest, and every pleased guest contributes toward a better and bigger Alhambra.

"You can help make it so. WILL YOU?"

Shea's Hippodrome Links Close with War Conditions

MANAGER HAROLD FRANKLIN, of Shea's Hippodrome, Buffalo, is keeping his house closely hooked up with the war. During the past week an excellent stage setting, which is reproduced on this page, was employed to mark America's active participation in the fighting in Europe. The overture for this occasion was "Evolution of Dixie." To say that this made a hit is putting it very mildly.

Shea's Hippodrome is also adapting itself to war conditions. The weekly program has been "Hooverized." The current issue is a neat affair containing sixteen pages. The advertising occupies less space, the displays being smaller, this resulting in a saving of the paper. And the artistic effect is still maintained.

Mr. Franklin is insistent on electric signs and urged exhibitors to save the electricity on the inside of their houses. He says:

"There appears to be some confusion among the theaters in this city as to the actual requirements of the Fuel Administrator. This is in connection with the order not to light any signs until half an hour after sunset. There are many ways that theatres could cut down the consumption of electric current without the necessity of eliminating the electric signs at any time, which, of course, you know, is one of the important adjuncts of the modern theatre. Any house could cut its light consumption in the inside to half of what they use now without it having any material effect.

"We all realize that this is war, and every one would be only too glad to help the Government and sacrifice such light as is used for artistic effect. If our country needs power for munitions plants this is one way to get it, but, it is a great mistake and danger to the motion picture industry to eliminate electric signs."

Seeing the Rialto with Rothapfel

S. L. ROTHAPFEL is home again, bringing with him his transcontinental "bad cold." He took it with him to the Pacific, it staid with him there and then came back with him again. But in spite of that handicap he is full of new vigor and big, startling things may be expected of him at the Rialto and at the Rivoli, which is soon to open.

And with his return the overture, which is played this week, "Wagner's "Rienzi," brings the story of an incident when Mr. Rothapfel was just coming into that unquestioned leadership in the field of exhibition. He was then directing the Regent theatre and he had booked "Quo Vadis." He was then, as now, always hunting for new ideas. He wanted to do "something different" with this picture which was then one of the biggest creations of silent drama. He was at a loss until he walked into Aeolian Hall and heard the Philharmonic Orchestra play this overture to "Rienzi." It was just the thing to fit his production. It struck him so forcibly and convincing that he told us Sunday that he ran into two horses and fell on a street car in his hurry to get back to the Regent and try the effect with the music. It was the eagerness to do that is always with him.

So, if one were not accustomed to Rothapfel's methods of doing things one might be left to believe that there was something of the inspiration in the way this overture is being played this wek, with the most wonderful lighting arrangements we have seen with an overture yet. First with the crescendo of the trumpets there come effective flashing on the red lights, and then a fading into the purple and then a return to the brilliant red effects and finally a fading into the bright, full illumination at the end. Lighting, like music, cannot be turned into the written words, but one might feel the spirit of the music in the lighting, even if one could not hear.

"Fishing for Fish," made for Educational Films under the direction of Robert C. Bruce, is the scenic for this week and it is one of the clearest and most interesting of such pictures that we have seen. The title, as in all the Bruce pictures, with their human, happy spirit adds great enjoyment. At the end of the scene a clever "shot" is brought in with the picture of the day's catch frying over the open fire.

With special stage settings that won marked approval, Sascha Fidelman, concert master of the Rialto orchestra, then rendered Schubert's "Ave Maria." The presentation panels at either side of the screen showed night scenes in the country, and the center first rather dimly outlined a church window. The violinist appeared dressed in a cowl and accompanied by organ and harp rendered this wonderful selection, and just at the end the picture of the Madonna appeared upon the window, a striking and appealing effect.

Mr. Rothapfel volunteered that he had a poor lot of material to deal with in the selection of the Animated Magazine, and that he had to go over much more material than usual in order to reach the effect. But one would never have suspected any difficulty from the result on the audience. The secret? The music and the grouping. That is possibly getting to be a somewhat old story to you who read these talks, but they are the big things of picture presentations. Think it over.

Opening with a drum patrol the first picture is that of President Wilson reviewing the officers' training camp at Fort Myer. After the drums came sixteen bards from "Pro Patria" and then swung into Sousa's "Diplomat" march. Artillery Rookies, in a field meet, brought a touch of humor with "Woonsocket Gallop." The effect so far was of all Americans getting ready, on equal footing for the war and to carry this effect stronger there was flashed one of Hy Mayer's cartoons. First it showed master and footman, and then came the transition, with both of them made into soldiers, and with this came a drum roll which was highly effective in bringing strong applause. To the tune of "Mikado" Japanese were shown buying horses in this country, and then came an exceptionally amusing "Katzenjammer" cartoon, "Tempest in a Paint Pot," played to the selections, "Shadowland Fox Trot" and "My Sweetie Inspecting the Polish Legion in France" was shown to Saint-Saens' "Military March," which continued into remarkably interesting pictures of engineers following up the work behind the battle line, under German fire. King George was then shown awarding Victoria crosses, while the orchestra played "Rule Britannia," and then came another cartoon, "The British Lion Hitting the Hindenberg Line," and with it a crash from the orchestra and flashes on the red lights which ended with all the members of the orchestra crying "Byng" and the crashing music echoing it. The effect was tremendous.

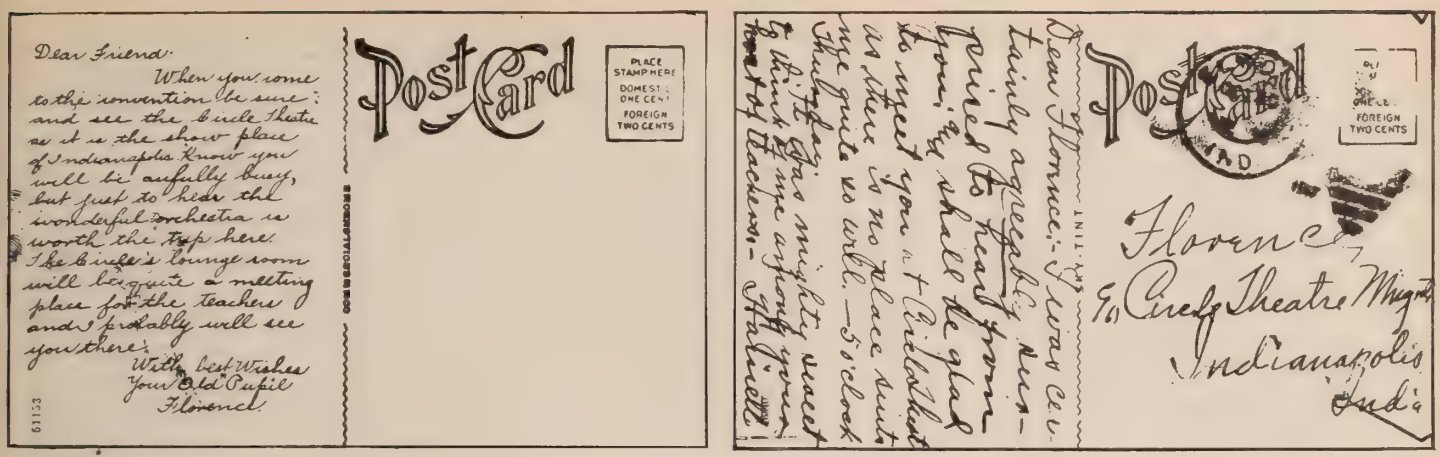
Note what we have said about the flashing light effect. Next came Mlle. Madelein D'Espinoy, favorite French soprano, who dressed in the uniform of a vivandiere sang Donizetti's "Daughter of the Regiment" with brilliant results. Again toward the end of the selection came the flashes of red. They helped greatly to put the selection over. Those who could not understand the words entered into the spirit of it, they caught the martial swing of the music and the fervor of the fire with the flashes. Now note, from overture to this selection there were carried through these series of flashes.

"Until They Get Me," an unusual Triangle picture, kept the audience in strained attention throughout and its striking situations. Mr. Rothapfel booked it for that reason, because it was a picture that passed from the beaten paths and contained very strong heart interest.

The comedy element is again supplied by the Drews, this delightful Metro offering being "Too Much Henry." As it began the story of the wife, who wept violently every time her husband went away came the strains of "Absence Makes the Heart Grow Fonder," turning into "This Is the Life" during the happy domestic scenes and then blending into the siren song from "Leave it to Jane."

The point to this talk this week is this. Here is a program without an especially big feature, without a commanding star, and, as Mr. Rothapfel said, it took difficulty to create a satisfactory Animated Magazine. The result was as splendidly satisfactory a performance as we have ever seen at the Rialto.

Don't leave it to a commanding feature or a world-famed star to put a presentation over for you. Make yourself do it.

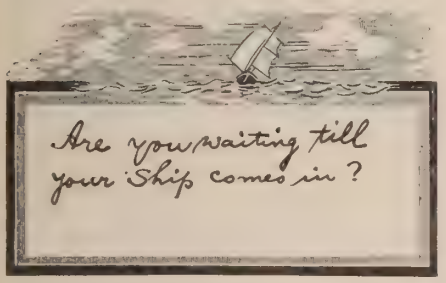


AT THE STRAND WEEK OF DEC. 2

TUMULTS of applause come from the audiences at the Strand theatre this week on account of the way in which Managing Director Harold Edel has arranged the Topical.

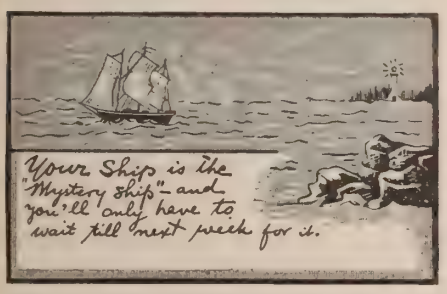
It opens with pictures of Canadians, back in England from the front, at their games and then passes into pictures of the Italians mounting their big guns. These were Hearst-Pathe. Then comes a Paramount-Bray showing the methods of manufacturing candy, and is followed by pictures from Cleveland, O., showing lake steamers being cut in half for transportation to the Atlantic. "Helping Win the War Through Aeroplanes" delighted the audience, and this was followed immediately by a cartoon showing the Kaiser hiding from America's army of the air. Then came the feature. First there were shown pictures of the "Rainbow Division," whose safe arrival in France has just been announced, as they marched down Fifth avenue, an old picture, pieced in, and this was followed by a tableau effect, with quartet in uniform seated before their tents. They sang "Tenting To-night on the Old Campgrounl," "Keep the Homelights Burning" and "Smile" with tremendous effect, and then there faded into the background pictures of Washington and Lincoln, and then finally into the center, Wilson. The audience went wild and similar scenes were followed when the pictures were again taken up showing Pershing reviewing the American troops. The Topical ends with a review by President Wilson.

Hervert's "Irish Rhapsody" is the orchestra number, with light effects, this week, while Marie Zentay, violinist, is heard in Zsolt's "Valse Caprice" and "Gavotte," by Martin.



"Tom Sawyer," with Jack Pickford, a Paramount, is the pleasing feature, and the comedy, Victor Moore Moore in "Toothaches and Heartaches." "Salmon Fishing in New Brunswick," an Essanay, showing many newspaper men as participants, is the pleasing educational, and Pathe Yellowstone Park pictures represent the scenic.

Teaser postcard sent out by Circle theatre, Indianapolis, to Indiana teachers and one of the many replies.



Canadian Universal Uses Clever Postcard Stunt on Newest Serial

CANADIAN UNIVERSAL FILM COMPANY, Toronto, through its publicity service bureau has been putting over some clever teaser campaigns, especially on the serials. "The Mystery Ship," the latest of the chaptered stories, has been responsible for a series of three postcards which attract especial attention. While these have been created largely to attract the attention of the exhibitor, the exhibitor can in turn use them to build business at his theatre.

Serials offer probably the best opportunity for card exploitation because they cover such a length of time that it is justifiable in starting the campaigns on them considerable dates in advance. In case you are going to show "The Mystery Ship" we would advise you to send out the first of the cards three weeks in advance of the showing of the first episode and then follow it a week later with the announcement that "Your ship is the Mystery Ship." The third card ought to be received the day before the serial opens.

As a general rule postcards will be found better business getters than form letters. In the first place, they have the advantage of necessary brevity. Then they attract immediate attention. Lots of people will open an envelope and when they see that the content is an advertisement, throw it away. But anyone, out of natural curiosity, will turn over a postcard and the message goes home immediately.

How Theatre Forced Place for Self

three of the leading services in that space of time, but at his leisure he picked the ones he wanted and more at his own terms. Six months later he was offered a half interest if he would "merge." Instead of that he built two houses in the suburbs and another house in the section of the city where the manufacturing classes lived.

Since his start two of the three legitimate or vaudeville houses have closed and one of the trust houses has passed away. Theatre L. and its subsidiaries doesn't try to be a trust so far as controlling films is concerned, but it is pre-eminently the TRUST so far as controlling the confidence of the public. Theatre L. could put on a bad picture tomorrow and get away with it, for because of his careful selection and his methods of exhibition it would be hard to convince any one that it was a bad picture—simply because they saw it at Theatre L.

"Florence" Postcards Bring Thousands to the Circle

HERE is a clever idea that was used by S. Barret McCormick, managing director of the Circle theatre, Indianapolis, with splendid results.

Recently a convention of the school teachers of all Indiana was held in that city and more than 10,000 were in attendance. Mr. McCormick conceived in advance a plan for not only drawing the attendance of the delegates during the meeting, but to getting the most valuable sort of advertising for his house all over the state.

As a matter of fact, there are no better lot of boosters for a theatre than teachers, and once you get them interested in your house you are going to build patronage. They may not know that they are advertising your theatre, but they will do it more or less unconsciously in their talks among their friends and in their references in the classrooms.

Some days before the meeting was to begin Mr. McCormick mailed to every teacher who was expected to attend one of the cards signed "Florence," directing attention to the Circle. Note that an appointment was made for meeting there, and it was instilled into the minds of every one that this was the central place of Indianapolis. So effective was the campaign that scores of replies similar to the one reproduced were received by "Florence." Some who realized that it was only a publicity scheme wrote letters congratulating the fictitious young woman and the theatre on the novelty.

Here is a plan that can be used in the case of most any convention. People coming to a strange city are naturally looking for amusement, and this plan will result in your theatre being the first place that the visitors see. Visitors are not likely to read the newspapers carefully, and anyway this advance preparation is the very best sort.

It's worth trying the next time a convention meets in your city.

Steve Brodie was unknown until he jumped from Brooklyn Bridge. His name got in every paper in the country. Take a "Brodie" and get your theatre before the public.

Mme. Petrova in Powerful Dramatic Story, "Daughter of Destiny"—Timely

(Petrova Pictures Seven-Reel Production)

Mme. Petrova, pronounced by the critics as the greatest of emotional actresses, will appear on the screen of the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week in her latest work before the camera, "Daughter of Destiny." Mme. Petrova is the author of this photoplay. It was directed by George Irving. In the supporting cast assisting her in the interpretation of this dramatic version of current world events are: Thomas Harding, who has the principal male role; Anders Randolf, Robert Broderick, one of the best-known character actors on the screen; Henri Leone, Richard Garrick, Carl Dietz and Warren Cook. "Daughter of Destiny" carries action and punch in every scene. It presents one of the best bits of dramatic acting ever projected on the screen of any theatre. Its theme is timely—one in which we are all interested and one that in its revelation will hold from the announcement of the title to the last flash. Mme. Petrova has the role of Marion Ashley, daughter of the newly appointed minister to Belmark. She marries Franz Jorn, an artist, whose art is followed in order that he may more easily carry out his duties as spy for the imperial government. He urges Marion to disclose secrets which he knows her father to possess. Jorn arouses the suspicions of Morhange, of the French secret service. He searches Jorn's studio and finds evidence that points to Jorn as a spy. In a fight that follows Jorn kills Morhange, and Jorn, to destroy all evidence, places his ring on the finger of Morhange and burns the studio. Marion falls in love with Leopold, crown prince, and the events that follow tell of her adventures in attempting to make marriage with him possible.

Ethel Barrymore in Her Latest Screen Success "The Eternal Mother"—Gripping

(Metro Five-Reel Production)

Ethel Barrymore is seen in her latest Metro production, "The Eternal Mother," adapted from Sidney McCall's novel, "Red Horse Hill," by Mary Murillo, and produced under the direction of Frank Reicher, and personally supervised by Maxwell Karger, Miss Barrymore, who is known to millions for her work on the speaking stage and more recently for her work before the camera, is seen in the role of Maris, who marries against her father's wishes a man who turns out to be a worthless drunkard. Her little child, Felico, is the only bright spot in her miserable existence. Maris is forced to work and provide for her little daughter. She gets a position as stenographer in the office of Dwight Alden, a wealthy mill owner. She receives word that her husband and child have been killed in a railroad accident, and when Alden learns of this he asks her to become his wife. They are married and live happily, until a few years later, when her husband, whom she thought dead, returns with a woman named Kate. He is known as Winch, and he and the woman depend upon the little Felice, who obtains work in the mill, for their support. Felice is injured at her work in the mill. From this time on there is a fierce struggle by Maris to obtain the child of her own flesh and blood, care for her and at the same time conceal the fact from her husband, who is cold and heartless, but loves her and she loves him. Winch threatens blackmail and tells Alden all. Maris leaves with Felice and they live in a cottage together. She longs for Alden, and one day he comes to her and explains that he has changed and asks her back with her child.

Mary Anderson in "When Men Are Tempted"—Adapted from Adams' Work

(Vitagraph Five-Reel Production)

Mary Anderson is the featured player in "When Men Are Tempted," the latest Vitagraph feature to be shown at the ——— theatre. Miss Anderson is supported in this picture by Alfred Whitman, who was seen to such good advantage in "The Flaming Omen." Others in the cast are: R. Bradbury, Otto Lederer and S. E. Jennings. "When Men Are Tempted" was adapted from the work of Frederick Upham Adams, entitled "John Burt," and was produced at Vitagraph's western studios under the direction of William Wolbert. Two college chums are in love with Jessie Gordon (Mary Anderson). John Burt and Arthur Morris are the best of friends, having attended college together, but they cannot agree upon the question of who shall have Jessie. Young Morris' father owns the town, as the expression goes. He induces her to go on a trip with him in his yacht. Burt rescues her from the hands of Morris and Morris is beaten in a fight that follows. Burt flees the town to escape prison for assaulting Morris and goes west. He discovers a rich mine about to be sold for taxes and also discovers that it is the property of Jessie. He wires Jessie to hold to the property and he lays claim to it until she and her father arrive and establish title. "When Men Are Tempted" is full of action and presents some beautiful exterior scenes of western country. Miss Anderson has a part that offers her every opportunity to appear at her best.

She will be seen at the ——— theatre ——— week in "When Men Are Tempted," written by Frederick Upton Adams.

(Mutual Five-Reel Production)

"New York Luck" is the latest picture in which William Russell appears as the featured player, and it is a corker for real, live, actionable drama. It is seldom that Mr. Russell is seen in a picture that does not present real, live action. In his late picture he is supported by Francelia Billington, who has been seen opposite Mr. Russell in some of his best photoplays; Harvey Clark, Clarence Burton, Edward Peil, Alfred Ferguson, Frederick Vroom and Carl Stockdale. As Nick Fowler in "New York Luck," Mr. Russell presents one of the most fascinating roles of his career on the screen. "New York Luck" is not the best work Mr. Russell has done, but it is just as good. Nick is a telegraph operator at a small country station. As one of the few daily trains pass his station a girl drops a handbag from the window, containing her photograph, which Nick finds after the train has passed. The girl was accompanied by Jimmie Keen, a motion picture director. The girl's photograph appeals to Nick and he decides that if she is as nice as she is pretty she is worth looking up. Thereupon Nick leaves for New York to make his fortune and to win the girl. Fate is unkind to Nick, for he is prevented from seeing Jimmie Keen, the director, by an impertinent office boy. While Nick is in the office a stranger enters and accidentally drops a photograph with the same girl's likeness as the one he possessed. The stranger turned out to be the leader of a band of crooks. Nick is induced to join them, and he unconsciously leads the crooks to justice, wins the girl and his fortune because he writes the story, and sells it to Jimmie Keen.

(Mutual Five-Reel Production)

Margarita Fischer is seen for the first time in many months in "Miss Jackie of the Army." This is a comedy-drama and one of the best a motion picture audience has seen for many moons. The story was written by Beatrice Van and William Parker and adapted to the screen by Chester B. Clapp. The production was made for the American Film Company, releasing on the Mutual program, under the direction of Lloyd Ingraham. Miss Fischer is seen in the role of Jackie Kerwood, daughter of Colonel Kerwood. From childhood Jackie wanted to be a boy. She wished to be in the trenches and fight like other men and like her dad. Jackie was told to stay at home and knit by the women of the army post, but she indignantly refused. She tries to organize a brigade of girls, but her father did not think much of the idea and discouraged her in the attempt. She had decided to run away from home when she discovered evidence that led her to believe that a spy was working in the neighborhood. Here was her chance to be a detctive and like a man. She told them at the post, but the men would not pay much attention to her assertions. Lieutenant Adair is fond of Jackie and the lieutenant has his suspicions also. Sure enough, the one she suspected was a spy and was bringing information to a number of other spies, all of whom were arrested after Jackie had convinced her father and others that she was right.

(Red Cross War Council Five-Reel Production.)

The motion pictures of the National Red Cross Pageant made under the direction of William Christy Cabanne, present one of the most gorgeous spectacles representing dramatic tableaux ever projected on the screen. The pageant was staged, last October, on one of the beautiful estates at Huntington, L. I., for the benefit of the National Red Cross. Many of the brightest lights on the screen and stage are represented in this marvel of beauty and splendor. Among the famous stars of both screen and stage who are seen in these pictures are: Ethel Barrymore, John Barrymore and Lionel Barrymore, Hazel Dawn, Ina Claire, who is now playing in "The Tiger Rose," one of the biggest successes of the season of speaking drama; Tyrone Power, famous character actor; Francis White, of the team of Rock and White, noted vaudeville artists and dancers; William Rock, of this team; Blanche Yurka, Gladys Hansen, Rita Jolivet, one of the few survivors of the Lusitania, and a noted French actress; E. H. Sothern, famous for his characterizations of Shakespearean roles; Lumsden Hare, Ernest Glendenning, Adrienne Morrison, Philip Tonge, Eve Le Gallienne, Marjorie Rambeau, Helen Ware, Mrs. H. P. Davidson, wife of the chairman of the National Red Cross Council; Mrs. Ben Ali Haggin, society woman, and others. In this production you will see one of the most beautiful pageants ever staged. Adolf Bohm's Russian dancers give an exhibition of the terpsichorean art which, in itself alone, is well worthy a place of the utmost prominence in the most worthy production for the screen. See this.' It's worth the time and money of any and all patrons of the motion picture.

(Fox Seven-Reel Production)

Another of the Fox Kiddie Features, "The Babes in the Woods," with Francis Carpenter and Virginia Lee Corbin, the two little people who enacted the leading roles in Mr. Fox's production of "Jack and the Bean Stalk." These two child actors have made a reputation for themselves which is held by few, if any, child actors. Their latest pictures, adapted from the story as suggested by the fairy tale, is one of the brighest, cleanest and most enjoyable bits of screen entertainment ever made possible by children. In the supporting cast are: Violet Radcliffe, the child "heavy"; Carmen de Rue, Herschel Mayall, Rosita Marstini, Robert Lawler, Scotty McKee, and Teddy Billings. The adaptation was made by Bernard McConville and produced under the direction of C. M. and S. A. Franklin, the two directors who created "Jack and the Bean Stalk." The scenes in this late production were taken in the Grand Canyon, Colorado; in California, in the section where grow the famous redwood trees, and in Hawaii. All the charm as suggested by the original story of "Babes in the Wood" has been created on the screen. This production promises to meet with the same high praise from the public that was accorded the last work of these two youngsters, "Jack and the Bean Stalk." It is for the grown-ups as well as the children and will furnish sound entertainment for all.

The latest Fox Kiddie picture in which Francis Carpenter and Virginia Lee Corbin, stars of "Jack and the Bean Stalk," appear is "Babes in the Woods," adapted from the fairy tale. It will be seen on the screen of the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week.

(Select Pitcures Five-Reel Production)

Alice Brady is seen in her first picture for the Select Star Series, "Her Silent Sacrifice," a five-reel photodrama adapted from the famous play, "The Red Mouse," by Henry J. Dam. Eve Unsell, who has written the scenarios for hundreds of famous screen plays, made the adaptation. Edward Jose directed. This is Miss Brady's first appearance in Select Pictures, and, if this production can be cited as a criterion for others to come, she will make a decided hit with her audience when she is seen on the screen of the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week in "Her Silent Sacrifice." She presents the role of Arlette, daughter of the proprietor of the village inn. Richard Vale, a young American looking for local color, stops off at the inn and sets up his studio in the attic of the old mill house.. Arlette meets him and she is induced to pose for a picture. Vale's ready cash is soon gone and he is at the point of financial embarrassment. Prince Boissard, a patron of art and a libertine, comes to the village to rest, meets Arlette and falls in love with her. She discourages his advances until he promises to make Vale one of the best artists of the time. She agrees to the bargain. The artist becomes the prince's protege. Arlette is sent away to study and develops into a beautiful woman. Vale is sent to study art in the European art centers. In the background is the shadow of the sacrifice she must make and she is unhappy. How Arlette is saved from the sacrifice and the happy reunion of she and Vale is told in the closing scenes.

"Vengence Is Mine"—Mrs. Vernon Castle's Latest Work—Society and High Finance

(Pathe Five-Reel Production)

The fourth of the series of Castle-Pathe Plays, featuring Mrs. Vernon Castle, of dancing fame, titled "Vengeance Is Mine," adapted to the screen by Howard Irving Young from the popular novel by John A. Morosco, will be seen at the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week. The theme deals with society and high finance and presents one of the most fascinating screen dramas in which this star of the ballroom floor has been seen. Mrs. Castle's last picture, "Sylvia of the Secret Service," was highly commended by the press and public and the management of the ——— theatre promises his patrons that every minute of the sixty-odd minutes that are spent in a review of this picture will be thoroughly enjoyed. There is action every minute that it is before you on the screen. "Vengeance Is Mine" is interpreted by a cast of unusually talented screen artists—Edwin Hoyt, Frank Sheridan, Reginald Mason, Ethel Grey Terry, Frank Monroe and Julia Stewart. It will be remembered that Mr. Teden and Mr. Monroe presented important parts in two of the biggest stage successes of last season—"Upstairs and Down" and "Cheating Cheaters." George Fitzmaurice, who supervised the direction of Mrs. Castle in this production, has produced a picture that is snappy in action and presents a photoplay in true dramatic form. Frank Crane was in charge of the actual work. The settings for the picture were designed by Vincent Collins, a noted Fifth arvenue art director.

Late Chapter of "Who Is Number One"—Thrill in Every Foot of Film

(Paramount Serial—Two Reels)

The Fifth Episode of "Who Is Number One?" is titled "The Halls of Hazard," and presents one of the most stirring chapters in this serial story revealing the activities of the T-T-T against the life and property of the Hale family. Aimee Villon (Kathleen Clifford) and Tommy Hale brave all dangers that they might defeat the plans of the gang. There are events chronicled in this chapter which disclose some real thrillers. Aimee is seen in most daring feats and there is action from the first flash to the fade-out.

The Fifth Chapter of the Paramount serial, "Who Is Number One?" will be seen on the screen of the ——— theatre ——— of ——— week. Kathleen Clifford in the featured role.

"Her Sister's Rival," with V. A. Polonsky, Noted Russian Actor, Featured

(Pathe Five-Reel Production)

With a cast composed of talented Russian actors and actresses, the latest production of the Russian Art Film Corporation, releasing on the Pathe program, "Her Sister's Rival" comes to the ——— theatre ——— week. V. A. Polonsky, one of the best-known actors on the Russian stage, supported by a competent cast of Russian players, presents the featured role of Prince Baskoff. V. V. Colodna, who presents the principal feminine role, opposite Mr. Polonsky, is one of the most beautiful women on the Russian stage and considered a talented emotional actress. "Her Sister's Rival" tells the story of sisters who fall in love with the same man and of this man's perfidy after he has obtained the confidence of one and the love of both. Nita is the adopted daughter of Mme. Kromoff and Mary is the daughter. The girls have been reared as sisters by Mme. Kromoff. Mary accepts the prince's proposal of marriage despite her mother's objections and Nita, who also loves the prince, in a fit of pique, turns to another suitor. The prince, after the honeymoon, turns to his old tricks of gambling and drinking, and is not long in dissipating his wife's fortune. With the source of supply cut off, the prince resorts to criminal means and is detected but is spared by Bartinsky, a wealthy banker, who had married Nita. The authorities learn of the evidences and when they surround the house preparatory to enforcing the law the prince ends his own life. In "Her Sister's Rival" Pathe offers an unusual picture and one that will hold the attention throughout the five reels.

Sessue Hayakawa Impersonates Clever Japanese Detective in "The Secret Game"

(Paramount Five-Reel Production)

Sessue Hayakawa, the talented Japanese actor, who has been seen in some of the most stirring dramatic screen presentations of the past three years, is the featured player in "The Secret Game," a late Paramount production, under the direction of William C. De Mille. The story was written by Marion Fairflax, one of the best-known scenario writers of the present day. "The Secret Game" is a corking good photoplay, with a corking good cast of Paramount screen artists. Those who have important roles in the supporting cast with Mr. Hayakawa are: Jack Holt, Florence Vidor, Mayme Kelso, Charles Ogle and Raymond Hatton. He presents the role of Nara-Nara, a famous Japanese detective, who is assigned to prevent the destruction of a fleet of American transports on their way to a Russian port. There is discovered a leak in the official circles through which information of importance is reaching the enemy. The leak is traced to the office of Major Northfield, V. S., quartermaster of the Pacific coast. Kitty Little, a stenographer in the office, is of German parentage, and that it was through the influence of Dr. Smith, a friend of the major's, that she obtained the position. It develops that Dr. Smith is in league with enemy interests. Nara-Nara discovers all this information, and his experiences and adventures in following up the different clues form a series of dramatic events which, when chronicled on the screen, present action, finesse in dramatics and sustaining interest.

Carlyle Blackwell in Human, Appealing Story, "The Good For Nothing"—Different

(World Five-Reel Production)

"The Good for Nothing" is one of the most human, appealing dramas Carlyle Blackwell has ever appeared in. And this statement is made in face of the announcement only a few weeks ago by World Pictures that Mr. Blackwell was to celebrate the occasion of his hundredth production. The story was written by Alexander Thomas and produced under the direction of Mr. Blackwell himself. In the principal feminine role you will see Evelyn Greely. Other members of the supporting cast are: Kate Lester, Charles Duncan, William Sherwood, Muriel Ostriche, Eugenie Woodward and Katherine Johnston. Mr. Carlyle impersonates Jack Burkshaw, who is liked by everyone whom he meets, but who hasn't the business instinct and has failed in every business adventure. He has not seen his mother for ten years and he has a sudden desire to see her. Ten years before his father had ordered him from the house and he had never returned. He goes East and locates his mother, who has married a wealthy man. His stepfather advances the money and Jack goes to northern New York, where he buys an up-to-date stock farm. Here he becomes a prosperous farmer. He learns that his stepbrother is a "bad egg." He decides to reform his stepbrother, if such a thing be possible. The manner in which he goes about this task forms the chief incidents of this most entertaining story told on the screen by Carlyle Blackwell and a strong supporting cast of well known World stars.

Dorothy Dalton in "Love Letters" Powerful Drama by Shannon Fife

(Paramount Five-Reel Production)

Dorothy Dalton, who was seen last in "The Price Mark," and who has accomplished such excellent work before the camera, is coming to the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week in "Love Letters," by Shannon Fife, who wrote "The Rainbow Princess," in which Ann Pennington was seen, and "The Reward of Patience," in which Louise Huff was seen. His late work is without doubt the best he has done for the screen, and Miss Dalton interprets the principal with true dramatic feeling. "Love Letters" was produced for Paramount under the personal supervision of Thomas H. Ince, and it presents one of the best dramatic creations of his career. Miss Dalton has the role of Eileen Rodney, young and beautiful ward of John Harland. She becomes fascinated by Raymond Moreland, a teacher of a weird Eastern creed. He ignores the women who are fascinated by his words. He is attracted by Eileen and asks her to go to India with him, and she consents, thinking that he means to make her his wife. She learns differently, however, and leaves him to return to her guardian, whom she marries. Moreland returns later and he threatens Eileen with exposure unless she comes to his apartment. She wishes to get her love letters back and decides to go. She learns that he has no idea of returning the letters, and, after a struggle, she escapes without the letters. The next morning she learns that Moreland was murdered during the night. Her husband is district attorney. How is the mystery solved?

Violet Mersereau in "The Raggedy Queen" an Interest-Impelling Story of a Waif

(Bluebird Five-Reel Production)

Violet Mersereau, the beautiful little Bluebird star, whose golden locks and tomboyish ways have won for her the applause of the millions who have seen her on the screen, is to be seen at the ——— theatre in her latest capers as she interprets the role of Tatters in her latest success, "The Raggedy Queen." In the supporting cast with Miss Mersereau are: Grace Barton, Donald Hall, Robert F. Hill, Charles Slattery, James O'Neill and Frank Otto. This is a typical Mersereau picture, because it presents Miss Mersereau in the role of a little girl who inclined to be tomboyish and who is a carefree urchin in a little mining town where she can live with Nature. Tatters is brought to the mining town of Oresville by "Crazy" Anne. There she lived her young life under the guidance of a woman who was demented. Tatters meets Hugh Tillson, a New York millionaire, the owner of the mines, who comes to Oresville to avert a strike among the workmen. Tillson's secretary, David Grant, is sent in advance of his employer. He meets Tatters and they become close friends. Because of the seriousness of the impending strike and the failure of Grant to return to New York Tillson goes to Oresville. He, Grant and Brennon get together in the company's offices and a disgruntled employe plans to blow up the building. Tatters saves the three from death and Tillson takes her to "Crazy" Anne's hut, where he discovers that "Crazy" Anne was his former maid and that Tatters is his child.

"Fighting Mad," with William Stowell Featured—Story of the "Forty-Niners"

(Butterfly Five-Reel Production)

J. G. Alexander and Fred Myton wrote the late Butterfly photoplay in which William Stowell is featured. Betty Shade has the leading feminine role and Helen Gibson, who has been seen in the railroad series, "The Hazards of Helen," presents the role of Mary Lambert. This is the first time that Miss Gibson has been seen in a straight dramatic role. "Fighting Mad" is the title of this late Butterfly and presents William Stowell for the first time as the featured player. He will be remembered for his excellent work in support of Dorothy Phillips as her leading man in some of her best-known feature plays. "Fighting Mad" presents a strong, virile theme and tells a human, appealing story on the screen. It tells the story of the days of the "Forty-niners," when gold glistened on the hillsides of California. Mr. Stowell presents the role of Dr. Lambert. He and his wife settle in the heart of the mining region. Dr. Lambert is a doctor of souls as well as of the body, and he directs most of his attentions to cleaning up the town. In his enthusiasm for his work he neglects his wife. "Clean-Up" West, a gambler, is shot in an attempt to cheat at the game, and Doc takes him to his home for treatment. West and Doc's wife become friends and West persuades her to leave with him. She tells her husband that she is going to visit her family and meets West. West soon tires of her. A baby is born. She is lost on the plains and is found by Faro Fanny, a dance hall queen. How Dr. Lambert gets revenge and his meeting with his daughter years later follows.

LIVE NEWS FROM THE PRODUCERS

Antonio Moreno and Helene Chadwick Are Heading the All-Star Cast of Pathe's Special Feature, "Naulahka," in Eight Weird Reels That Promise to Hold Interest From First to Last. George Fitzmaurice Directed the Production

Pathe Thinks "Naulahka" Its Greatest Feature

Cast, Under Direction of George Fitzmaurice, Includes Doraldina, Antonio Moreno, Warner Oland, Helene Chadwick and Others

WHAT Pathe considers the biggest special feature it has ever made, under the title of "Naulahka," was announced last week for future release, the exact date remaining open until Pathe officials decide when to give the picture to the exhibitors.

The multiple-reel production was scenarioized by George B. Seitz from Rudyard Kipling's story, and was made by Astra under the direction of George Fitzmaurice. One of the most carefully chosen casts ever directed in a picture is claimed by Pathe as one of the features of the production, which is said to be on a large scale. Doraldina, the Hawaiian dancer formerly in vaudeville, is one of the players. Others are Warner Oland, well known heavy; Helen Chadwick, Mary Alden, J. H. Gilmour and additional supporting members.

George B. Seitz is the author of "The Iron Claw" and other serial and feature hits as well as director of "The Fatal Ring," considered the most successful serial Pathe has ever had. His script of "The Naulahka" is said to be a splendid piece of writing, having been read and approved by Rudyard Kipling without a single change having been made in the manuscript.

"The production is said to breathe the spirit of Kipling which Mr. Seitz seems to have caught in the scenario and Mr. Fitzmaurice to have held in direction to perfection. Mr. Fitzmaurice has spent a great deal of time in India and knows it like a book. The result is said to be a picture which is as nearly perfect as brains and unlimited money can make it," an official stated. "The method of release has not yet been determined."

Mutual Stars Work on New Year Productions

Edna Goodrich Cast in Satire on Social Conditions, Called "Her Second Husband"—Ann Murdock Stars in Feature, "My Wife"

NEWS of accelerated activity at the various studios making pictures for Mutual release was announced this week, and from all accounts exhibitors and the public are in line for some very excellent productions bearing that trade mark.

Edna Goodrich, whose Mutual successes have become proverbial, has been furnished with what is claimed to be the best medium in her quintette of dramas bearing the Mutual stamp in "Her Second Husband," a satire on modern social conditions in Gotham, written for her by Hamilton Smith. It is set for release December 31.

As though to center interest in the family, Ann Murdock has been devoting herself to the completion of "My Wife," which has been produced at the Glendale (L. I.) studios of the Empire All Star Corporation under the direction of Dell Henderson.

Included with Miss Murdock in the original cast of "My Wife" are Herbert Druce, formerly with Sir Henry Irving; Amy Veness, Rex McDougal and Ferdinand Gottschalk.

Another production just finished at the Glendale studios is "The Girl and the Judge," starring Olive Tell, who is supported in the cast by David Powell as leading man.

At the Santa Barbara studios, Mary Miles Minter is putting the finishing touches on "Mlle. Tiptoe," which has been directed by Henry King.

William Russell is well suited in his latest play, "In Bad," which is scheduled for early release on Mutual calendar.

Enid Bennett Makes Headway on Paramount Picture

Enid Bennett, one of the Thomas H. Ince stars in Paramount pictures, is said to be making rapid progress in her first production under these auspices. It will present her as a girl whose life has been spent in the woods in Wisconsin. Miss Bennett's first Paramount picture is expected to be exceptional in quality. It has not yet been named, although the production is well under way.

Madge Kennedy Feature Progresses in Georgia

The filming of exterior scenes for "Oh, Mary, Be Careful!" with Madge Kennedy as the star, is progressing satisfactorily in Georgia, according to telegraphic reports to Goldwyn from the company, which is working on location with Savannar as headquarters.

Several successive days of cloudy, half-rainy weather delayed the camera work for just that length of time, but Miss Kennedy and the eighteen members of her company were not idle. Director Arthur Ashley, making the most of the situation, caused a dozen scenes to be rehearsed in the ballroom of the hotel. This saved several hours in the aggregate when the time came to "shoot" the scenes.

Neill Evolves New and Unusual Lighting Effects

When Dorothy Dalton's new Paramount photoplay, "Love Letters," is shown upon the screen, it is expected to show some new and altogether unusual lighting effects that Director Neill has evolved. This production, supervised by Thomas H. Ince, is said to be unique in every respect. Mr. Neill made use of a series of opaque screens, a battery of electric lamps and huge black velvet curtains by which means he has secured particularly beautiful and striking photographic results, it is said.

Artcraft Produces Maeterlinck's "Blue Bird" at Fort Lee

Will Be in Nature of a Spectacle, Screened Under the Direction of Maurice Tourneur—Walter E. Greene Believes Production Will Be Modern Masterpiece of the Screen—No Distribution Change

WALTER E. GREENE, president of Artcraft Pictures Corporation, announced last week that his organization is in the midst of production work of a screen version of Maurice Maeterlinck's "The Blue Bird," and that the feature, which will be in the nature of a spectacle, is expected to be a screen masterpiece of the first magnitude.

Work on "The Blue Bird," it is made known, has been under way at the Fort Lee studio for the past three weeks, under the direction of Maurice Tourneur, who, upon completing Elsie Ferguson's newest photoplay, "Rose of the World," was selected to stage Maeterlinck's play.

Play Created Sensation

"Considered the world over as a literary and dramatic masterpiece," said Mr. Greene, "this subject proved one of the greatest achievements of the celebrated Belgian poet and dramatic author. The fantastic play pleased young and old alike in this country as well as abroad. In London, it originally opened at the Boudoir theatre in December, 1909, where it created a sensation and attracted devotees of the true dramatic art and further enhanced the fame of Maeterlinck. Proclaimed a wondrous production of great scenic magnitude, this play was presented in ten scenes and took four hours to portray. With its American appearance in New York at the New theatre, a play house erected to present the world's most renowned dramatic offerings, the production was revived with two additional scenes, in February, 1911. Its success here is now a matter of theatrical history and will be well remembered by the many thousands that crowded the theatre nightly. Among the players who appeared in this presentation were Ethel Landon, Gladys Hulette, Pedro de Cordoba, Olive Wyndham, Ethel Brandon, Edith Wynne Matthisen and other similarly talented artists.

Tourneur's Record Counts

"To stage the elaborate screen adaptation, which closely follows the play, Artcraft selected Maurice Tourneur, the accomplished producer of various artistic screen triumphs including such Artcraft offerings as the Elsie Ferguson productions, 'Barbary Sheep' and 'The Rise of Jennie Cushing.' Mr. Tourneur's record as a producer of exceptionally artistic photoplays has won him an enviable standing not alone in film trade circles but among the photoplay public as well. A master of screen craft, the talented French director has always displayed in his productions a certain touch of the artist which has made them exceptionally distinctive.

"The important task of preparing the scenario for this gigantic film was entrusted to Charles Maigne, whose work in connection with the production of other Artcraft pictures, notably the Elsie Ferguson films, speaks well for the result of his efforts on the Maeterlinck subject.

Maurice Tourneur, Who Is Staging the New Artcraft Spectacle, "The Blue Bird"

"In the screen presentation of Maurice Maeterlinck's world famous classic, Artcraft has achieved another triumph in keeping with its high standards and policies. It is entirely fitting that this masterpiece of the drama should be presented by Artcraft Pictures, whose trademark is synonymous with the acme of motion picture perfection."

Distributed as Usual

In connection with the method of release on this production, Mr. Greene said: "The release of 'The Blue Bird' will mark one of the greatest accomplishments of Artcraft. Although of unusual magnitude, the picture will be handled through our usual distributing system, which means that the exhibitor will be given the opportunity to present it in his theatre. The foundation upon which Artcraft is built is to serve the exhibitor with 'the biggest and the best pictures.' No cinema is too big for our distribution to exhibitors and accordingly the motion picture theatre will be able to present 'The Blue Bird' rather than the legitimate theatre, which as evidenced in the past, occasionally scores a ten-strike with a big feature, to the loss of the regular exhibitor. Neither time nor expense is bieng spared to make this the film achievement of the year and for this reason a definite release date cannot be named at this time."

Thomas H. Ince Erects Studio in California

Plans Structure at Culver City to Cost Over Three Hundred Thousand Dollars—Expected That Work Will Begin Immediately

IT was announced last week by Famous Players-Lasky Corporation that contracts have been signed by Thomas H. Ince, producer of Paramount and Artcraft pictures, for the erection of a big studio at Culver City, California, which will cost about $300,000 exclusive of $52,000 expended for the land. The new plant will occupy fourteen acres fronting on Washington Boulevard. Ground will be broken in a few days and work will progress rapidly.

"More than two years ago," said Mr. Ince, in discussing his second invasion of Culver City, "I discovered the advantages of this location for a studio site. I had had an experience of more than five years along the oceanside, and what gray hairs I have, were caused by the worry attendant upon the financial strain of having to sit idle with hundreds of high-priced players on my hands waiting for the heavy fogs to lift.

"I think I can say in modesty that the studio I constructed at Culver City, and which I occupied for more than a year was complete and excellent in every particular. I found my work easier than in former locations; there was an almost total absence of fogs; the transportation facilities were admirable; the city scenes in Los Angeles were readily available; and the mountain, valley, and hill scenery, so essential to motion picture production, was ours to 'shoot' without the necessity of long journeying.

"When I closed by relations with Triangle Film Corporation and established the Thomas H. Ince Studios, Incorporated, with such well known stars as Dorothy Dalton, Charles Ray, and Enid Bennett appearing in Paramount pictures; and the William S. Hart Productions, Incorporated, to make Artcraft pictures with that actor, it became necessary to utilize what studios I could find available at the time. Within a fortnight of the announcement that I intended to build another studio, I had tempting offers to locate in San Francisco, San Diego, Santa Monica, Hollywood, and one or two other neighboring towns. Culver City, however, appealed to me as best."

First Tom Mix Drama Begins Its March to the Screen

Work is progressing nicely, according to announcements from William Fox this week, on Tom Mix's first drama for Fox. The picture, which is said to tell a story of the West, has been titled "Cupid's Round Up." Edward J. LeSaint and Mix are staging the production.

Another interesting bit of news from the Fox offices this week is that which indicates that Sonia Markova's second starring subject, scenes of which are being made in Massachusetts, is to be called "A Heart's Revenge." The story is said to be particularly suited to the star's talents.

Petrova Discusses Screen Interpretation Art

Believes That Dramatic Intensity Is Best Portrayed by Quiet Methods—Answers Her Critics Who Think She "Lacks Fire"

Madame Olga Petrova, Star of "Daughter of Destiny," Teaching Her Dog New Tricks

MADAME PETROVA, the Polish dramatic artiste, now appearing in the first of the starring features bearing the stamp of her own organization, last week permitted her press department to issue an announcement from her concerning "repression" as applied to acting. The star takes exception in her remarks to the statements of several of her critics who have described her acting at various times as "too repressed and lacking fire."

"During the considerable length of time covering my screen career, it has been my lot to invoke the ire of certain critics who have gone to some lengths to point out the 'coldness' of my art. In various pictures I have been accused of lacking the dramatic intensiay and 'fire' which they consider necessary for the portrayal of certain characters. My stage training, secured in one of the finest schools of expression in the world, the Polish theatre, involved an intensive study of the human emotions so constantly employed in stage and screen work. I have been taught that it is not necessary to resort to extravagant gestures in order to depict anger, passion, love or the various other emotions which actuate human impulses. On the contrary, it has been proven, particularly in screen depiction, that the most convincing points may be 'registered' by a single gesture of the hand or an expression of the eye.

"What certain of our critics mistake for 'coldness' is simply an overweening desire on my part to appear natural. They forget that the greatest moments in every-day life are always devoid of the excitement and sensationalism too often injected into the same situations when visualized on the screen. The true art of interpretation on stage or screen is to be natural at all times, and I am more than willing to bear the brunt of critical disfavor in order to carry out that ideal to its fullest extent.

"When the occasion demands, whether it be in real or 'reel' life, I am fully capable of rising to the heights of dramatic intensity required of the existent situation. Until then, I am content to offer in my present starring vehicles what I consider to be the type of woman met with in the walks of everyday life. In the final analysis, the verdict of popular approval rests with the great motion picture public, and thus far my so-called 'coldness' has failed to lessen in any noticeable degree their appreciation of my efforts."

Bluebird Screens "The Green Seal" on West Coast

Charles Edmund Walk's novel, "The Green Seal," a mystery story, is being filmed at the Bluebird West Coast studios under the direction of Stuart Paton, from the screen version by A. G. Kenyon, who recently joined the Bluebird writing staff. The book is said to contain all the ingredients that go into the ideal picture play—suspense, strong love interest, stirring action and baffling mystery in full measure, and all of these elements have been developed to their utmost possibilities in the scenario.

Carmel Myers plays the principal feminine role, and opposite her appears Ashton Dearholt, who recently finished an engagement of two years with the American Film Company and who makes his bow in Bluebird photoplays in "The Green Seal." In the supporting cast are Betty Schade, Harry Carter, Alfred Allen, Frank Deshon and Frank Tokanaga.

Contrasting Players Support Mary MacLane for Spoor

A contrasting group of players supports Mary MacLane, the writer, in her first and only photoplay, "Men Who Have Made Love to Me," produced by George K. Spoor.

Considerable thought, it is said, was given to the selection of the six characters, ranging from that of a prize fighter of crude though honest heart, to a literary man of disdainful and fearless disposition.

Each of the six is designed to represent a different type of suitor and are cast as: The Callow Youth, played by Ralph Graves; the Literary Man, by R. Paul Harvey; the Younger Son, by Cliff Worman; the Prize Fighter, by Aladar Prince; the Bank Clerk, by Clarence Derwent, and the Husband of Another, by Fred Tiden.

Jaxon Comedians Demonstrate New Hilarity Stunts

Pokes and Jabs, the Jaxon film comedians presented in General Film releases, are said to demonstrate some new features in the current release, "How It Worked." This is the fourth of the latest set of six Jaxon comedies for General Film release.

In the current Sparkle comedy, "Smashing the Plot," Billy Ruge takes the part of an organ grinder who is pursuaded to assist in the destruction of a railroad bridge by a band of anarchists.

Broadway Star Makes Feature Without Any Women

"The Fourth at Salvador," an O. Henry story of Central America, being made by Broadway Star Features for release through General Film, will no doubt be one of the most unique things of its kind. There isn't a woman, leading or otherwise, in the entire story, General Film announced this week.

The story deals with the attempt of a small group of Americans, aided and abetted by a Britisher, to celebrate the glorious Fourth in a lively fashion. Just when they were all set for a celebration which they anticipate will be heard back in the states a revolution breaks out, and the celebrators run afoul of the president's army. Their noise-making stunts and gun firing are so realistic that the regular army becomes frightened, allowing the rebel army, of which the celebrators have become unwitting aides, to assume charge of the republic.

Fifth Avenue Shop Helps Mabel Normand Feature

Mabel Normand's newest feature for Goldwyn Pictures promises to have atmosphere that will be among the most genuine ever injected into a reel production. The picture, which has not been named, revolves around a fashionable modiste's shop, and to make the atmosphere genuine Goldwyn has engaged Hickson, the Fifth Avenue creator of things feminine, to supply costumes and mannequins to wear them.

The new picture, it is said, will give Miss Normand the opportunity to wear some of the most fetching apparel she has ever worn in a film subject.

Henderson Directs Edna Goodrich in Unnamed Feature

Dell Henderson, it was announced this week by Empire All Star, has finished his sixth picture for that company and is now engaged in directing Edna Goodrich in her newest picture, for which no title has been chosen.

Mr. Henderson and Jack O'Brien, who is directing "The Girl and the Judge," Olive Tell's starring feature, are old friends, and often recall the days when they were author, leading man and director combined. "The first time I saw him," said Henderson in speaking of O'Brien, "was nearly ten years ago in a small Western town."

Atlas Corporation Gets Sterling as Director

The recently formed Atlas Film Corporation, of Boston and Newton, Mass., which is an enlargement of the former Dadmun Company, announced this week that it has engaged Richard Sterling, formerly of the Eclair Company, as director of a series of modern "Peck's Bad Boy" stories. Plans for the pictures are said to be nearing completion, and it is expected Sterling will begin actual production this week, with Leland Benham and his sister, Dorothy, as leads. Harrie Orvis will be in the comedy line-up, it is said.

"The Planter" Proves Box-Office Value of Star

The box-office value of the star is said to be proven effectively in the success which has been attained by "The Planter," the seven-reel Mutual special which was released November 14. The star in the picture is Tyrone Power, celebrated American actor. The picture is built on the novel "The Planter," from the pen of Herman Whitaker. From the box-office as well as an artistic angle, actor, story and author are effective drawing cards, according to reports.

Large Cast with Vivian Martin in "Fair Barbarian"

To interpret the many characters in the the story of English country life (whose decorum is upset by the advent of a dashing little American girl), "The Fair Barbarian," by Frances Hodgson Burnett, a large cast of players has been chosen to support Vivian Martin in the production of the picture for Paramount.

Miss Martin appears in the role of Octavia Bassett and the other members of the cast are: Charles Gerrard, Douglas MacLean, Al Paget, Jane Wolfe, Helen Jerome Eddy, Josephine Crowell, Charles H. Geldert, May Busch, Elinore Hancock, John Burton, William Hutchinson, and Ruth Hanforth.

The picture will be released by Paramount December 17.

Crampton Is Mascot and Player in Walthall Picture

Besides the acting of Howard Crampton in Henry B. Walthall's new Paralta picture, "Humdrum Brown," Mr. Crampton will be supposed to aid in quite another way. He will be the mascot, the "good luck" person of the play. Mr. Crampton has already proved himself, many times, to be a potent factor of fortune in plays directed by Mr. Rex Ingram, it is said. The two first worked with each other in the Bluebird play, "The Great Problem," in which Mr. Crampton played the part of the comedy butler, and "stole" the play. Then as Baron Maupin in "Black Orchids," and in various other plays which Mr. Ingram directed, he played with artistry, and invariably the plays succeeded. So Mr. Ingram has come to look upon Howard Crampton as his lucky omen.

Mr. Crampton played six years with the Universal in New York, in company with King Baggot, before joining the Paralta forces.

Adams Makes Good in Wholesome Comedy Creation

Rex Adams, the new star in the comedy heavens, has successfully established his "screen quality," it appears from reports concerning his first picture, "His Awful Downfall," which is incidentally the first release of the Wholesome Films Corp.

"Exhibitors have certainly taken to Wholesome comedies," said General Manager Weisfeldt last week. "Rex Adams as our principal comedian, leading a band of sure-fire fun makers, is a positive assurance of what exhibitors and the public may expect in this line from Wholesome."

Adolph Zukor, Mary Pickford and Her Mother, Mrs. Charlotte Pickford, Out for a Breath of Salt Air On the West Coast

Zukor Thinks "Stella Maris" Pickford's Best

Insists the Star Will Register Her Greatest Triumph in the New Production—Gives Her Opportunity for Double Role

ADOLPH ZUKOR, president of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, upon his return to New York from California last week, announced the completion of Mary Pickford's newest Artcraft picture, "Stella Maris," and expressed enthusiasm over the dual characterization presented in this picture. This production was adapted from William J. Locke's book by Frances Marion, and staged by Marshall Neilan.

"The production of 'Stella Maris' is the most remarkable thing which Mary Pickford has ever done for the screen," was the declaration of Mr. Zukor in an interview at his New York office. "Miss Pickford has made a wonderful success in charming characterizations from child life, bringing joy to millions of hearts through her winning personality, but I am sure all will agree with me, when they have seen 'Stella Maris,' that her work in this will be long remembered as one of the outstanding accomplishments in screen art.

"The fact that Miss Pickford plays a double role, one of two distinct personalities," continued Mr. Zukor, "has made this a triumph all the greater. My only fear is that some, who have not studied Miss Pickford's features, apart from the curls and her appearance in dressed-up roles, will declare that the character of Unity in 'Stella Maris' is not Mary Pickford at all, but some very talented girl who bears a remarkable likeness to the Artcraft star, In fact, after a group of us had watched the picture in our projection room, one of the invited visitors, complimenting Miss Pickford on her winning role of Stella, concluded her congratulation by saying, 'You were wonderful as Stella Maris, Miss Pickford, but who is the remarkable girl who is almost your double as Unity, the little orphan.'

"The most wonderful feature of the production to me," said Mr. Zukor, "was the rapidly changing contrasts in the two characters played by Miss Pickford as the scenes unfolded. They tell me that in producing the play, the star appeared in a few scenes as Unity, then made her change of costume and make-up to play scenes as Stella Maris, all in the same day. The mere matter of these changes, striking as they are, was probably not the greatest difficulty, however, since the great contrast is in a deeper thing—the personalities of two girls."

Detective Forms Picture Company in Los Angeles

Norman Webb, of Los Angeles, last week announced in a letter to MOTION PICTURE NEWS that he has been appointed publicity representative for the newly formed William J. Otts Film Syndicate in that city, and stated that the company expects to produce a series of six and seven-reel mystery stories around the experiences of Mr. Otts, who was for nine years a detective. Webb announced that Lilac Lynard has been engaged as leading woman of the company, and that work has begun on the first production.

Charlotte Film Breaks Ice for Commonwealth

Initial Spanuth Production Passes Critical Test, and Is Harbinger of Additional Features and Stars to Be Presented

H. A. Spanuth, Commonwealth Corporation's Head

WITH the preliminary showing before general release of the first production made by Commonwealth Pictures Corporation, and which feature brings to the screen Charlotte, considered the premiere ice skater of the world, it appears that Commonwealth has firmly established itself in the realm of pictures, and that not only will the initial release meet with more than passing success throughout the country, but further pictures now being planned will be eagerly awaited by exhibitors and the public.

H. A. Spanuth, head of the Commonwealth organization, sincere in his convictions that in Charlotte's first production he has one of the soon-to-be hits of the screen world, brought the feature to New York for a special showing, which was given at Wurlitzer Hall on Friday, November 23. The audience was not alone large, but enthusiastic as well, and the consensus of opinion after the presentation was that Commonwealth has given the industry a genuine asset in Charlotte and a real picture in "The Frozen Warning," by which title the production will be known.

Among those present at the special showing of "The Frozen Warning" was Mark Luescher, the widely known publicity representative of the Hippodrome, and his wife, and both expressed themselves as highly pleased with the production from every viewpoint. Judging from other reports it is apparent Mr. Luescher's opinion of the film is a reliable gauge by which to arrive at an average estimate of the impression made. Critical as private audiences usually are, "The Frozen Warning" warmed a place for itself and its star, and with these two firmly ensconced in the estimation of exhibitors, it naturally follows that Commonwealth is a name to conjure with in future activities within the motion picture sphere.

Concerning the release of the Charlotte feature, Mr. Spanuth remarked to a representative of MOTION PICTURE NEWS that he has as yet come to no decision concerning the distribution of the picture. Although it is known he has had several excellent offers for the production, the exact channel of distribution remains to be chosen, with chances about even between the state rights plan and the distributors' method. It is expected that Mr. Spanuth will announce the closing of a deal one way or the other very shortly.

Regarding further production made by Commonwealth, which will present additional stars to the screen, including Naomi Childers, for whom a subject is now being chosen for immediate production, Mr. Spanuth said that it is his intention to establish for Commonwealth a string of exchanges, using the no-deposit system in booking the films. This is no doubt of great interest to exhibitors who have been acquainted with Mr. Spanuth's excellent methods of the past. From all accounts, the exchange plan will be worked out coincidental with the production of Miss Childers' feature, and will be put into practice with the release of that picture.

In order to secure the best available material for his stars, Mr. Spanuth stated that Commonwealth is in the market for scripts. Additional stars will be signed up in the near future, also, according to Mr. Spanuth, who is on the look-out for players of ability.

It has not yet been decided whether future Commonwealth productions will be titled through the prize-awarding plan, as was "The Frozen Warning." The idea worked out admirably with the Charlotte film, and furnished no end of advertising that should prove valuable to exhibitors using the feature.

Mr. Spanuth will remain in New York, at the Astor Hotel, another week on account of the many deals for his company which he has on hand.

Pathe Gives Frank Keenan Strong Story for Debut

In "Loaded Dice" Pathe believes that Frank Keenan has as his first feature under the Pathe banner one of the strongest stories of his photoplay career. In it he plays the part of a masterful man who accomplishes his ambition regardless of all opposition. "Loaded Dice" was written by Ellery H. Clark, with a scenario by Gilson Willetts, and is directed by Herbert Blache.

It is expected that the picture will be ready for assembling and titling within the next few days.

Otto Directing Kathleen Clifford in New Comedy

Henry Otto, who produced "Undine" and "A Modern Lorelei," has begun work, it was announced last week, on a new five-reel comedy by Karl McInroy. The picture features Kathleen Clifford, the Horkheimer-Paramount star. Frederick Church is the male lead, and the supporting cast includes Neil C. Hardin, Jr., Gordon Sackville, Rita Harlan, Corenne Grant, Leslie T. Hope and Marie Van Tassell.

William S. Hart Gets Back to Work After Accident

William S. Hart, who has been resting as a result of a recent accident in the staging of a scene when he tore his arm and smashed a finger, is back at the studio and work on his new Ince-Artcraft release is now again well under way. It is expected that this production will be finished shortly.

Simultaneous with "Big Bill's" return to work comes the announcement from Artcraft Pictures that the title of the photoplay now being produced has been changed from "The Bloodhound" to "Dead or Alive." The picture, it is promised, will offer several surprising feats of the daredevil character even for a Bill Hart production. "Dead or Alive" was written by Denison Clift and is scheduled for release the middle of January.

Wallace Reid Stars in Paramount January Release

"Rimrock Jones," by Dane Coolidge, is to be produced with Wallace Reid in the leading role, and released by Paramount in January.

The picture was scenarioized by Harvey Thew and Frank X. Finnegan and affords, it is said, one of the best roles for Wallace Reid that he has had in a long time. A strong cast will support him and the scenic features are expected to be particularly striking. The story is said to abound in startling situations and a strong vein or romance runs through it.

On Dec. 17 Mr. Reid, supported by Ann Little, will be presented in the Paramount picture, "Nan of Music Mountain," by Frank Spearman. The scenario of this picture is by Beulah Marie Dix and it was directed by George Melford.

Fox Photographers Experts on Shooting Walsh Stunts

It often is almost as difficult to obtain satisfactory photographs of stunts as it is to devise and carry out the stunts themselves, according to the William Fox offices. This was said to be true in the case of one of the scenes in the George Walsh photoplay, "The Pride of New York," which William Fox plans to release as a special feature on December 9.

Arrangements had been made with a contractor erecting a building at Madison avenue and Fortieth street, New York, to have Walsh hauled twenty stories into the air at the end of a chain. It was necessary, of course, to show that the actor really was performing a daring feat—not merely dangling a few feet above a studio floor. Three cameras accordingly were used. One was on the ground, pointing upward, taking the whole flight. For close-up purposes and to show the roofs of adjoining buildings, another camera ground away from a position on the fifteenth floor. It pointed downward and showed Walsh being hauled up. A third camera, on the twentieth story, caught the actor as he rose the last five flights and came "over the top" to safety.

In the cast besides Walsh are Regina Quinn, new to Fox forces, as leading woman; James A. Marcus and William Bailey. R. A. Walsh wrote and staged the production.

Brenon Shows "Romanoff" Feature to Invited Crowd

The new Times theatre, at Eighth avenue and Forty-second street, opened on Wednesday evening, November 21, with a special showing of Herbert Brenon's "The Fall of the Romanoffs."

The showing was arranged as a special event for the opening by S. J. Berman, who is sales manager for the New York and northern New Jersey territory of the Brenon Distributing Corporation. The audience, an invitation one, was enthusiastic over Mr. Brenon's spectacular cross-section of contemporary history.

The invitation showing was Manhattan's first glimpse of "The Fall of the Romanoffs" since the production ran for three weeks at the Broadway theatre. It will not be seen again in this field until it is launched on January 6 with a state-wide premiere. Mr. Berman announces that at least twenty theatres will show "The Fall of the Romanoffs" simultaneously during that week.

Famous Players-Lasky Name Next Pennington Film

"Calvary Alley," the latest novel by Alice Hegan Rice, who wrote "Mrs. Wiggs of the Cabbage Patch," has been chosen as the next Paramount picture starring Ann Pennington.

"Calvary Alley" is a story said to be filled with pathos, comedy and human interest in large measure. It will afford the most important role for Miss Pennington that she has, as yet, been given in her screen career, according to Paramount.

Charles Giblyn, who directed "Scandal" with Constance Talmadge; "The Price She Paid" and "The Foolish Virgin," in which Clara Kimball Young was starred, has been secured to direct Miss Pennington in this new picture. From all reports "Calvary Alley" should constitute a production above the average in entertaining qualities and dramatic interest.

Lockwood and Company Take Scenes in Lumber Camp

Harold Lockwood and his company, Metro has announced, are now in one of the lumber camps near North Conway, N. H., taking exterior scenes for his next Metro wonderplay, "The Avenging Trail," under the direction of Francis Ford.

"The Avenging Trail" is a drama of the timberlands adapted from Henry Oyen's novel, "Gaston Olaf," by Fred J. Balshofer and Mary Murillo.

"The Hidden Hand" Chalks Up Another Pathe Success

"Another Pathe success" appears to be the verdict of audiences and exhibitors on "The Hidden Hand," Pathe's Big Four serial, the latest of continued plays released by this "house of serials." The faith of exhibitors in its drawing power seems to be evidenced in the fact that bookings on "The Hidden Hand" are above the average and the class of houses in which it will be shown is of the best. The new serial features Doris Kenyon, Sheldon Lewis, Arline Pretty and Mahlon Hamilton.

General Film Gets in Season With Xmas Story

Announces "Whistling Dick's Christmas Stocking" for Release December 22—Establishes Record with Another O. Henry Production

GENERAL FILM this week made two announcements that will no doubt be met with much interest by exhibitors. One concerned a Christmas feature that will be released December 22, and the other indicates a new record for attractions, established by an O. Henry picture.

An O. Henry Christmas story, "Whistling Dick's Christmas Stocking," a two-reel feature, will be released on December 22. It is one of the few Christmas stories ever written by O. Henry. George Cooper and Adele De Garde are featured in this picture. Cooper impersonates a musically inclined tramp whose search for cozy winter quarters leads him into an amazing Christmas Eve adventure.

An attraction record for four-reel features has been established by "A Night in New Arabia," the O. Henry story released by General Film Co., in which J. Frank Glendon and Patsy Deforrest are featured. Beginning with a record-breaking run of a week's duration in the Alcazar theatre, Chicago, this satirical comedy on life in "Bagdad-on-the-Subway" has found a welcome place on the programs of many of the well known Chicago theatres, and is being booked in all large cities for seven day engagements. Few of the "O. Henry" pictures released to date have commanded more notice than this feature, which shows no signs of abating its bid as one of the best drawing cards of its kind. It received approval from the reviewers on the Chicago daily papers.

H. C. Miller, manager of the Alcazar theatre, at the conclusion of the week's showing at this theatre, declared "A Night in New Arabia."

J. P. McGowan and Helen Holmes Leave Signal Company

WITH the completion of the fifteenth episode of "The Lost Express" for the Signal-Mutual serial, J. P. McGowan, producer, and Helen Holmes, star of the Signal Film Company, sever their connections with that organization.

The Signal Company was organized by Mr. McGowan more than two years ago, and has made several successful serials including "Railroad Raiders," "The Girl and The Game," "A Lass of the Lumberlands," and the one which is now being completed, "The Lost Express."

For a time the Signal Company devoted its time to the making of five-reel subjects, the most noteworthy of which is one in which McGowan took the name role, "Whispering Smith." A sequel to this photoplay was "Medicine Bend," and in many theatres the two pictures were projected as one program consisting of ten reels. A record business was reported from a number of the larger theatres which showed the subject in this form, and the two films, as well as all of the Signal releases are still bringing good revenue to the Mutual exchanges.

Future plans of Miss Holmes and Director McGowan will not be made known for several weeks, but it is understood they will play in multiple reel subjects in the future instead of serials.

Rastrelli Proves Lively in "Depot Romeo"

Amedee Rastrelli, Essanay's French comedian, who succeeded Max Linder, is said to perform some of his liveliest feats in fun making in "A Depot Romeo," a current General Film release in one reel.

Walthall's First Paralta Reaches New York

"His Robe of Honor" to Be Shown to Trade Shortly, and Will Be Released Through Hodkinson—Two Leading Women

HENRY B. WALTHALL'S first Paralta play, "His Robe of Honor," written by Ethel and James Dorrance and adapted for the screen by Julian Louis Lamothe, was recently completed at the Paralta Studios in Los Angeles, and the first print was received in New York on Thursday of last week.

A private screening of the production was given for the officers and attaches of the organization, all of whom were most favorably impressed, and the general opinion was that the picture will prove to be one of the biggest box-office attractions of the season.

In this photoplay Mr. Walthall has two leading women. Miss Mary Charleson, who has appeared opposite him in many of his successes of the past, is seen in the role of Roxana Frisbee, an adventuress who assists the lawyer in his underhanded methods. The role of Lora Nelson, the girl who awakens his nobler instincts, has been allotted to Lois Wilson, whose work in J. Warren Kerrigan's first Paralta Play, "A Man's Man" received the unstinted praise of all the critics who have reviewed the film. The remainder of the supporting cast includes Noah Berry, Jr., who plays the part of the political boss; Eugene Pallette appears in the role of his younger brother, who faces the electric chair on a murder charge, and whose case is fought by Julian Randolph; J. J. Dowling as Bruce Nelson, and Ray Laidlow as Robert Partland, attorneys for the Traction Company, which the shyster lawyer has bled unmercifully with his damage cases, and Fred Montague as Million Mulligan, one of the gangsters.

A trade showing of "His Robe of Honor" will be arranged, it is announced, for in the near future and the production will be released about the first of the year through the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation.

Fox Builds Paris for "Les Miserables" Film

Huge Set Erected Somewhere in New Jersey Said to Have Cost Fifty Thousand Dollars—Director Lloyd Insisted on Real Money

THE William Fox publicity bureau insists, in an announcement this week, that no greater example of camouflage and stage carpentry has ever been offered than the building and painting of an entire cross-section of Paris for use in the production of "Les Miserables," which William Fox offers.

The production called for the Paris of Victor Hugo, and entailed an enormous amount of research for drawings and descriptions of the Paris of that time. Nine city blocks were built at what was said to be a cost of $50,000 and so perfectly was it all reproduced that French military officers visiting New York insisted that it was not a reproduction at all, but Paris, itself, the real Paris, according to report.

This Paris was rebuilt "somewhere in New Jersey," and the greatest attention was paid to the most minute details. In paving the streets, the cobble stones were deftly shaped to show the ruts and erosion of heavily laden carts and were colored to give the appearance of age. Drains were set in the hollows so the streets might not be overfull of puddles.

So insistent was Director Frank Lloyd upon historical accuracy and detail that in the scenes in which money was used, he hired from collectors the gold and silver coin of the period he was using.

Nothing was neglected; nothing overlooked, and no detail, however small, had been counted unimportant. There were the houses with their gabled roofs and little second-story balconies; the stores and cafes, particularly the Cafe Corinthe, dingy with age, with its little tables set out on the narrow sidewalk and protected by small awnings.

Select Pictures Changes Name of Alice Brady Picture

ALICE BRADY'S second Select production, in which she plays the immortal rôle of "Jane Eyre," is now finished and cutting of the film is under way, it was announced last week by Select.

The screen version has been taken from an adaptation by Paul West of Charlotte Bronte's novel, and owing to certain necessary departures from the plot of the original story, the book title, "Jane Eyre" is not being used. "The Lifted Cross" was first suggested as a title for the photodrama, but has since been definitely rejected and "Woman and Wife" adopted in its stead.

"Woman and Wife" has been screened under the direction of Edward Jose, who directed Miss Brady's first Select production, "Her Silent Sacrifice." In her interpretation of the appealing and unhappy Jane, Miss Brady is said to give a fine bit of characterization and rise splendidly to the emotional demands on the part. She is supported by Eliott Dexter in the role of Rochester, Jane Eyre's fascinating and unhappy lover, and by a cast which includes Helen Lindroth, Victor Benoit and Helen Green.

"Woman and Wife" will be distributed through the Select exchanges.

Selig Assembles Youthful Cast for "Orphaned Annie"

The child cast, especially the principals, of "Little Orphaned Annie," adapted from James Whitcomb Riley's poem, and being produced by Selig, are said to be in their own right a whole constellation of youthful stars. Headed by Colleen Moore, there are in the supporting cast Doris Baker, Lillian Wade, Billy Jacobs, Bennie Alexander and George Hupp. Colin Campbell is directing.

Earle Celebrates Third Year with Greater Vitagraph

William P. S. Earle, director for Greater Vitagraph, last week celebrated his third year as a member of that company's studio organization, and the anniversary event served to call attention to the number of features which he has produced. Among them are "Within the Law," "Whom the Gods Destroy," "The Courage of Silence," "Mary Jane's Pa," "The Law Decides," "I Will Repay," and "Who Goes There,"

William P. S. Earle, Vitagraph Leading Man

the latter two being his most recent releases. He also has completed "His Own People," a Blue Ribbon feature which will be released the latter part of December, and assisted Commodore J. Stuart Blackton in the production of "Womanhood, the Glory of the Nation."

Mr. Earle is regarded as one of the most versatile men in motion pictures and in addition to his success as a director has received recognition in several other lines of artistic endeavor. He is a playwright, short-story writer and song writer, several of his songs having been published by Jos. W. Stern. Prior to joining the Vitagraph company he conducted a photographic studio on Fifth Avenue and there made a special study of light effects.

Petrova Three-Sheet Graces Century Theatre Set

Through an arrangement recently made between the Petrova Picture Company and the management of the Century Theatre, a three-sheet poster of the motion picture star is being used in a scene of the Dillingham-Ziegfeld production of "Miss 1917," at the Century Theatre.

Goldwyn Promotes George Bertholon

George C. Bertholon, who has been an assistant director at the Fort Lee studio since the formation of Goldwyn Pictures, has been made assistant to Aubrey M. Kennedy, director of productions, it was announced by Goldwyn last week.

Brenon's "Empty Pockets" Cut and Ready for Release

"EMPTY POCKETS," upon which Herbert Brenon has been working since the conclusion of "The Fall of the Romanoffs," is now practically finished and ready for release. It is his fourth production within the year, and it is his second picture of this type, his first melodrama being "The Lone Wolf."

Taken from Rupert Hughes's novel, depicting the various phases of New York life from the tenements in the slums to the mansions on Fifth avenue, "Empty Pockets," is said to be one of the swiftest and most timely melodramas that has even been projected on the screen.

"Empty Pockets" is said to contain several twists and turns and innovations that have never been introduced into moving picture scenarios before. It also contains some entirely novel situations.

The cast of this picture includes Barbara Castleton, Bert Lytell, Malcolm Williams, Ketty Galanta, Peggy Betts, Susanne Willa, Ben Graham and Thornton Bastion.

Triangle Engages Virginia Foltz for "Evidence"

Virginia Foltz, daughter of Clara Shortridge Foltz, Los Angeles club woman and suffrage leader, has been engaged for an important role in "Evidence," a forthcoming Triangle feature. At one time Miss Foltz was one of the best known musical comedy actresses in the country.

Work on "Evidence" is progressing rapidly under the direction of Walter Edwards at the Triangle Culver City studio. Jack Cunningham wrote the play, and it is said that "Evidence" is a play of the type that Henri Bernstein would have been proud to have written for the French stage. The leading male characters are a highly successful criminal lawyer and his closest friend, a physician. The theme of the plot is based on the attorney's assertion that almost any one could commit deliberate murder, give himself up and escape punishment by securing competent counsel.

Exhibitors Appreciate Jewel Publicity Helps

Exhibitors throughout the country, who have used Jewel productions are said to be enthusiastic over the publicity help furnished them by the local agencies.

A publicity man attached to each Jewel Exchange, is ready at a moment's notice to "go over the top" backed by the full force of the national organization, and exhibitors in numerous towns are turning over their entire publicity campaign on Jewel productions, to the local exchange, to handle.

With each Jewel production, the exhibitor may obtain free of any charge, the use of ten styles of scene and advertising cuts, the latter being the finest money can produce.

In addition hand-painted lobbies, framed or in sets are furnished for the price of expressage. Two styles of one, three, six and twenty-four sheets comprise the paper display while window cards and rotogravure heralds are furnished practically at cost.

Clara Kimball Young and Corliss Giles in "Shirley Kaye," the Newest of the Select Pictures Star Series

Clara Kimball Young Gets "The House of Glass"

Melodrama Will Be Produced to Follow "The Marionettes," Work on Which Is Nearly Completed—Distribution Through Select

CLARA KIMBALL YOUNG, in the face of what is said to have been tremendous competition, has secured the screen rights to "The House of Glass," it was announced last week. This was a stage success of a few seasons ago. Owing to a number of prospective purchasers, it was said Miss Young was obliged to pay a record figure for the play, but her satisfaction in securing the melodrama overshadowed its price.

"The House of Glass" is described as a powerful melodrama from the pen of Max Marcin, and with Mary Ryan in the leading role had a run at the Cohan and Harris theatre two years ago. It is the story of a reformed girl crook and her desperate efforts to regain her lost status in society. The plot abounds in tense scenes and thrilling moments and the role of the little exthief affords a rare opportunity for emotional acting.

The end of the week will witness the last bit of filming on "The Marionettes," and work on the new play will follow immediately. Scenario writers are already busy on the script and nothing is being left undone to facilitate production. It is Miss Young's determination to make "The House of Glass" the banner play of the year.

"The Marionettes," which is now being completed, will be one of the holiday releases and will follow "Shirley Kaye," Miss Young's latest picture. Distribution will be through the Select Pictures Corporation.

Hutchinson Reaches Santa Barbara on Inspection Tour

PRESIDENT SAMUEL S. HUTCHINSON of the American Film Company, arrived at the studios in Santa Barbara, Cal., Tuesday, November 20, on a hurried inspection tour.

Mr. Hutchinson's mission is in the furtherance of improvements started in every department of the studio. The technical end of the business will be given particular attention. Considerable activity is noticeable in the scenario department and President Hutchinson is very much elated over the prospect of high class stories on which the American Film Company has options.

"We feel that the story is becoming more and more important in the making of the highest grade productions," said Mr. Hutchinson. "We have arranged for the purchase of several of the better class books and magazine stories by well known writers. Some of our productions recently released, such as 'A Game of Wit,' by Daniel Frederick Whitcomb, a widely known author; Charles T. Dazey's 'The Sea Master,' in which William Russell was the featured player! 'Betty and the Buccaneers,' by James E. Hungerford, featuring Juliette Day, are highly satisfactory stories."

De Mille Begins Plans for "Whispering Chorus"

Kathlyn Williams, Elliott Dexter and Raymond Hatton Are Leads in the New Artcraft Production, First of De Mille Special Series

FOLLOWING the completion of the final preparations of Geraldine Farrar's new Artcraft picture, "The Devil Stone," Cecil B. De Mille has commenced preparatory work on the production of "The Whispering Chorus," from the novel by Perley Poore Sheehan. This film will be the first of the series of special Cecil B. De Mille super-productions for Artcraft release, featuring the artistic accomplishments of this director as well as the work of casts of well known artists. The Artcraft release schedule, as announced by President Walter E. Greene, several months ago, calls for four of these special De Mille subjects during the year.

The novel of "The Whispering Chorus" has not as yet been published and its appearance on the book market is being withheld so that it can be released simultaneously with the De Mille-Artcraft film. Jeanie Macpherson, author of the Farrar-Artcraft scenarios as well as various other De Mille successes, has returned to California after a vacation in New York, and has commenced work on the film adaptation of the Perley Poore Sheehan novel.

According to Mr. De Mille, this is one of the most gripping and interesting stories ever brought to his attention. In addition to its dramatic theme, the story allows this directer to disclose his best talents in motion picture technique. Several departures in plot construction as well as photography are promised by the producers in this film and it is expected that "The Whispering Chorus" will far outshine even the previous successes of De Mille.

In staging the new series of De Mille-Artcraft offering particular care will be given to the selection of casts. Each character will be given to a player who has established a reputation in the motion picture world and an artist particularly adapted to the part. For the first picture a number of players have already been selected including Kathlyn Williams, Elliott Dexter and Raymond Hatton.

Rialto Features Triangle Picture This Week

"Until They Get Me" Is First Production from That Company to Play Rialto in Some Time—Jack Curtis Has Outlaw Role

IT was announced last week that the feature production of the Rialto program for this week would be "Until They Get Me," a Triangle subject with Jack Curtis, Joe King and Pauline Starke. The fact that the Rialto booked the production is of more than passing interest to the industry, as it has been some time since features of that company played the Broadway picture palace. The contract was closed after a private showing of the picture on Thursday of last week, and it is said Mr. Rothapfel termed it "a splendid picture."

"Until They Get Me," is a play of the Northern country, showing the work of the Royal Northwest Mounted Police, and has Pauline Starke in the leading role. The picture opens in a town on the Canadian frontier, when Kirby (Jack Curtis), an outlaw, dashes into a saloon and offers $20 and his own jaded mount, for a fresh horse. An owner of a pinto accepts the offer and in consideration of the deal offers to purchase Kirby a drink. In his haste, Kirby flings the other man's hand from the glass and the insulted reveller reaches for his gun. Quick action follows and when the smoke of battle has cleared, the former pinto owner lies dead and Kirby has gone.

Pauline Starke, who plays the part of Margy, is only sixteen years old and has risen to stardom through the excellence of her own efforts. After getting work as an "extra" in the Triangle studios, she executed each role offered her with an unassuming determination to reach the top. That she has succeeded remains for the judgment of those who depend on Mr. Rothapfel for the best screen productions of the day. She has previously appeared in the following Triangle features: "The Rummy," "Puppets," "The Wharf Rat," "Cheerful Givers" and "Madame Bo Peep." "Until They Get Me," was written by Kenneth B. Clarke and was produced by Frank Borzage.

Spoor Releases "Uneasy Money" in January

Taylor Holmes Feature Will Be Backed by Big Advertising Campaign in First of Series to Be Released at Various Times

BACKED by an unusual advertising campaign, including the posting of billboards throughout the country, George K. Spoor is planing to offer, it was announced last week, the Taylor Holmes feature, "Uneasy Money," as the first of a series of ultra-features to be released at various times regardless of a fixed program. "Uneasy Money" is scheduled by Mr. Spoor for the early part of January.

The story is from the pen of Pelham Grenville Wodehouse and ran as a serial in The Saturday Evening Post. The story opens in England, where Mr. Holmes, as "Lord Dawlish" is bequeathed a million pounds by an aged gentleman whom he cured of the habit of slicing at golf. A niece and nephew in America are cut off with a shilling and a hundred dollars, respectively, and when Lord Dawlish hears of it he makes an endeavor to restore to them their just portion. Such an endeavor is not easily accomplished, however, and the incidents of his efforts are amusing and numerous.

In the cast with Mr. Holmes are Virginia Valli as Elizabeth Nutcombe, the niece; Arthur Bates as Nutty Nutcombe; Virginia Bowker as Lady Wetherby; Fred Tiden as Lord Wetherby; Lillian Drew as Claire Edmont; James F. Fulton as James Pickering, and Rod LaRocque as Johnny Gates, an American newspaperman.

Mr. Holmes, who is also seen as Ruggles in "Ruggles of Red Gap," already has the support of Lawrance D'Orsay as the Honorable George, Frederick Burton as Cousin Edgar, Edna Phillips Holmes as Klondike Kate, Lillian Drew as Mrs. Effie, and Virginia Valli as Mrs. Judson. To this cast Mr. Holmes has added Charles Lane, who has been with William Gillette, Ferdinand Munier, and Miss Rose Mayo.

Norma Talmadge Finishes Rupert Hughes Drama

Norma Talmadge's new picture, "Ghosts of Yesterday," an adaptation by Mildred Considine of Rupert Hughes' drama, "Two Women," has been completed, it was announced last week by Select Pictures, and the star has gone to Atlantic City for a brief rest.

It is said by Select that Miss Talmadge

has probably achieved the triumph of her career in "Ghosts of Yesterday." Her interpretation of the role which Mrs. Leslie Carter made famous is said to be the most pretentious thing she has done and leaves nothing to be desired by the critic. In it she sets new standards and establishes her position as an emotional actress.

"Ghosts of Yesterday" is scheduled to follow up Miss Talmadge's latest release, "The Secret of the Storm Country," and will be distributed through Select Pictures.

Edison Completes Cantonment Scenes for New Feature

A COMPANY of Edison players, headed by Marguerite Courtot and Ray McKee, under the direction of Alan Crosland, returned last week from the cantonment of the United States Marine Corps at Quantico, Va., where, under conditions which duplicate the west front in Europe, the final scenes in a war play have been completed. The production, which has the indorsement of the United States Marine Corps and high officials at Washington, is based upon the story, "The Three Things," by Mary Raymond Shipman Andrews. No pains are being spared to make the motion picture production distinctive among the many films the war has inspired. Mrs. Andrews's story is not merely a narrative of hardships, struggles and atrocities, but has, in addition to these familiar elements, romance and love.

The story is of a well-bred young man, in whose life three things stand out prominently—race prejudice, class distinction and unbelief in God. Though born in the environment of Christianity, education and wealth, it is not until his soul has been tempered in the forge of war that his prejudices disappear and his vision clears.

The principal roles are entrusted to Ray McKee as Phil Landicutt, and Marguerite Courtot as Virginie Harbrok, a Belgian girl. The call of the struggle comes to Phil, and he goes with the marines to France. While out with a patrol, he is trapped in the garret of a Belgian cottage, where, hiding in a dark corner, he comes upon the girl, Virginie. The invasion of Belgium and the ruthless destruction of life and property by the invaders have brought to her the things which every Belgian girl has suffered—the father "somewhere out there," the mother and the little brother shot down in cold blood, for a thing of which they had even no knowledge, she exposed to atrocities worse than death. These things she tells Phil in hushed whispers, while the invaders search in vain. Back home, Phil's mother will care for her, if she is able to get through, while he goes on to the front. Then the terrific battle scenes, the inferno of No Man's Land, the voice from beyond, the sharp struggle, a stinging pain, back of the lines, the hospital, across the seas and home. And there, the girl waiting, and life to begin all over again. The production abounds in thrilling situations and touches that will tug at the heartstrings.

The production is to be in seven reels and will be released as a Perfection Picture through the George Kleine System during December.

Harley Knoles Assisted by Kelson in "Sealed Orders"

Harley Knoles will be assisted by George Kelson in producing "Sealed Orders" for World-Pictures Brady-Made. This screen drama is being adapted from the Drury Lane stage play of the same title. Mr. Knoles and Mr. Kelson are brothers. Kelson is the family name, Mr. Knoles having rearranged the letters in adopting a professional pseudonym, English fashion.

Scene from "The Auction Block," Rex Beach's Drama, Which Is Being Distributed by Goldwyn Pictures Corporation

Goldwyn Cashes In on Four Sterling Pictures

"Nearly Married," "The Auction Block," "The Cinderella Man" and "Thais" Said to Be in Big Demand Among Exhibitors of Country

THE Goldwyn Pictures declaration that "good pictures cure bad times in the theatres" is considered by that company and verified by the acknowledgment from exhibitors of Goldwyn wisdom in releasing in quick succession four pictures of the caliber and drawing power of Madge Kennedy in "Nearly Married" by Edgar Selwyn; Rex Beach's "The Auction Block," Mae Marsh in "The Cinderella Man," by Edward Childs Carpenter, and directed by George Loane Tucker, and Mary Garden in "Thais," by Anatole France.

Each of these productions possesses proved-in-advance drawing power and the quartette was greatly strengthened by the inclusion of Rex Beach's production which had been produced to sell at advanced rentals and, in fact, had been booked at advanced prices by many Goldwyn contract customers to be played in between Goldwyn Pictures. These Goldwyn customers found themselves in the position of having contracts that they had signed for this separate attraction returned to them by Goldwyn. They now receive "The Auction Block" at their regular Goldwyn rental and as a Goldwyn Picture. This picture is released December 2.

Keen anticipation is shown for the screen debut of Mary Garden in "Thais." Frank Crane, the director, and Hugo Ballin, the art director, have made this a most notable work.

"Nearly Married," the first of these four pictures to be released, already is scoring a success throughout America and Madge Kennedy has brought delight to Goldwyn by establishing herself.

Petrova Permits Impersonation at Southern Bazaar

Through arrangements completed last week between the Petrova Picture Company and Miss Corrine Chisholm, motion picture editor of the Birmingham News, an interesting innovation is promised during the Bazaar of the Alabama Equal Suffrage League to be held in Birmingham this week.

Through the courtesy of Madame Petrova, a member of southern society circles and one of the leaders in the suffrage movement in the south, will impersonate the Polish actress throughout the week of the bazaar. An exact reproduction of one of the large sets used in "Daughter of Destiny," the first Petrova picture, will be erected in order to give the affair a touch of realism and a force of carpenters and property men has been loaned by Madame Petrova to the southern suffrage workers for this purpose. Using the set as a booth, the young lady who will impersonate the actress will sell autographed portraits of the star. The proceeds from these sales will be devoted to the furtherance of equal suffrage.

Mary Garden Finishes Production of "Thais"

Work of Assembling and Titling Feature Now Under Way at Studio in Fort Lee—Goldwyn Compliments Staff on Picture

MARY GARDEN has completed the final scenes of Goldwyn's master-production of Anatole France's "Thais," it was announced this week. The work of assembling and titling the thousands of feet of film is now well under way at the Fort Lee studios of the company and trade prints of the production is expected to shortly be in the hands of exhibitors throughout North America.

Goldwyn regards the prompt completion of this production as a testimonial to the willing good nature of its star and to the efficiency of its technical staff. Frank H. Crane, the director, and Hugo Ballin, art director, mapped out a time schedule that was carefully adhered to from the filming of the first scene to the last. When it is recalled that this schedule provided for a trip to Florida and took into account all possible delays because of bad weather, it can be perceived that it was carefully arranged.

Miss Garden and her company encountered cloudy weather in Florida for a brief twenty-four hours and a zipping nor'wester almost wrecked the Alexandria street scene erected in the studio compound; but save for those two instances there were no material delays.

While Miss Garden is resting preparaneeds to the technical staff and in a comparatively short time the armored cars were ready.

tory to beginning work in her next Goldwyn production, Director Crane is busy cutting, titling and assembling "Thais." In the work of titling he has an expert assistant in the person of Henri C. Olinger, professor of literature at Columbia University. Mr. Crane and Prof. Olinger have found that the continuity, or working scenario of "Thais," prepared by Elfrid A. Bingham, contains many excellent subtitles that can be used almost in their entirety.

Fox Builds Tanks and Trenches for Walsh Feature

Having reproduced the Sphinx and the Pyramids of ancient Egypt for "Cleopatra," the mosques and minarets of Oriental Bagdad for "Aladdin and the Wonderful Lamp," the Nashville of 1830 for "The Conqueror" and the mob-swept streets of Paris for "Les Miserables," all within the last few months, the William Fox technical department has added another to its list of achievements in the construction of tanks and trenches which are duplicates of those "over there."

These newest products of constructive genius will be seen in "The Pride of New York," a photoplay starring George Walsh. Unable to borrow the original tank that was brought overseas to aid in the Liberty Loan drive, Director R. A. Walsh told his

Charles Brabin Completes Second Metro Production

Metro announced this week that Director Charles Brabin has completed a new Metro production, "Red, White and Blue Blood," starring Francis X. Bushman and Beverly Bayne, which is his second Metro picture with these co-stars. The feature was written by Shannon Fife and adapted by June Mathias.

Brabin entered the motion picture industry in 1908, and has played both leads and heavies, in addition to directing. Among the productions directed by Brabin may be named "The Woman Hater," "Temper," and "The Raven," featuring Henry B. Walthall; "Babette" and "The Sixteenth Wife," with Peggy Hyland and Marc McDermott; "Persuasive Peggy," starring Peggy Hyland. Brabin's first production directed for Metro was "The Adopted Son," co-starring Francis X. Bushman and Beverly Bayne.

Goldwyn Pleased with Welcome Given "Nearly Married"

Goldwyn has been looking for big things from Madge Kennedy, and the motion picture critics of the American press are said to have joined in that expectation since the release of her first screen play, "Baby Mine." In her second production the beliefs and the hopes of the profession seem to have ben satisfied, if one may judge from the chorus of praise evoked from the dailies by "Nearly Married," Edgar Selwyn's comedy-drama.

As an example, C. Bonte, critic of Philadelphia, writes of the "finished artistry of the Goldwyn staff of directors, supervisors and photographers," as a prelude to a tribute to "the winning Madge Kennedy." "She is possessed," says Mr. Bonte, "of the utmost in picture charm, and also has genuine good looks, not of the usual movie type."

Three O. Henry Players Return in "The Last Leaf"

THREE O. Henry players return to the screen this week in the current General Film O. Henry release, "The Last Leaf." Mildred Manning, star in many of the early O. Henry pictures, makes her reappearance after an absence of several months. She is joined in "The Last Leaf" by Patsy Deforrest and Bernard Siegel, both of whom are well known for their work in O. Henry pictures. Miss Deforrest's last appearance was in "A Night in New Arabia," while Mr. Siegel is remembered in "The Love Philtre of Ikey Schoenstein."

Jeanne Paige and William Lampe in "The Skylight Room," an O. Henry Picture Released by General

"The Last Leaf" is described as an exquisite and intimate drama of life in the Washington Square artists' colony in New York. Old Behrman, after a lifetime of effort to paint a great masterpiece, finds the opportunity to fulfil his ambition during the illness of "Miss Johnsy" (Miss Manning), even though he sacrifices his life in doing it. "Miss Johnsy," too ill to care for life, tells her companion she will die when the last leaf falls from the vine just outside the window. Gruff, kind-hearted Behrman hears it, and that night in a storm paints his masterpiece, a leaf which is so realistic and holds on so tenaciously in the wintry blasts that the young artist is persuaded to make a successful fight for life. The old painter, however, becomes a victim of pneumonia and passes away in a hospital.

The first of the O. Henry Central American stories, "The Renegades," will be the next Broadway Star Feature.

Metro Builds Bungalow for Ethel Barrymore Feature

For the staging of scenes in "An American Widow," a forthcoming Metro wonderplay starring Ethel Barrymore, the complete interior of a cozy bungalow was erected at the Metro studio. This production is a picturization of Kellett Chambers's play, adapted by Albert Shelby Le Vino and directed by Frank Reicher.

Ethel Barrymore Completes Metro Production

Worked at Studio in Evenings and Rehearsed for Legitimate Stage During Day—"An American Widow" Directed by Reicher

METRO PICTURES CORPORATION announced last week that Ethel Barrymore has completed her work in the preparation of Metro's forthcoming screen version of Kellett Chambers's play, "An American Widow," under the direction of Frank Reicher. In order to do this in record time to prepare for her season on the speaking stage, the star was obliged to work at the Metro studio during the evening, giving her daytime to rehearsals of Edward Sheldon's version of "Camille," with which she will open her winter's program of stage productions.

Associated with the star in both screen and stage productions is Arthur Lewis, who will have the part of the elder Duval in the new version of "Camille." Mr. Lewis is best remembered in "The Marionettes," with Mme. Nazimova, now a Metro star, and with Maude Adams in "The Legend of Lenora."

Director Reicher had no difficulty, it is said, in securing the hearty co-operation of the other players, cameramen and assistants, in order to enable Miss Barrymore to complete the production of "An American Widow" ahead of schedule. As a result, the picture will be released December 17, a week ahead of the time originally announced for it. By a coincidence, the star's debut in her new stage production, under the management of the Charles Frohman estate, will take place on the same date in Washington, the play coming to New York a week later.

"An American Widow," the final screen offering in which the star will be seen before her appearance on the dramatic stage, furnishes her with a comedy role, a young widow who is quite willing to marry again, but who stipulates that her husband must have a title.

Miss Barrymore is supported by a cast including Irving Cummings, H. Dudley Hawley, Arthur Lewis, Ernest Stallard, Alfred Kappler and other well-known players.

"Alimony" Released as First National Initial Feature

THE organization and equipment of the nation-wide distributing service which is to handle the exchange end of the First National Exhibitors' Circuit's business have at last been accomplished, according to an announcement issued this week from the circuit's New York offices.

"Alimony" will be the first release, and is said to be available immediately following its exhibition in the circuit's own theatres. The circuit's purchasing board expects unusually good results from this "dark horse," which they regard as one of the big "finds" of the year.

"Alimony" is to go forth well equipped with advertising aids which have been designed by a former exhibitor. Some new and effective touches in copy and make-up of posters and lobby matter are promised. both the sensational and sentimental angles of appeal are to be exploited.

Other releases to follow are Mme. Petrova in "Daughter of Destiny," which has been held up until December 23 to allow ample time for laboratory work; Herbert Brenon's "Empty Pockets" follows about January 1; Chaplin's first "Signature Protected" comedy on the comedian's new contract will be ready some time early in the new year.

L-Ko Adopts Star System for Comedy Companies

Various Organizations Under J. G. Blystone Will Each Have Director—Mack Swain and Hughie Mack Among the Bright Lights

IT was announced this week that Julius Stern, president of L-Ko, has decided to adopt the star system in presenting the several comedy companies that are under the general supervision of J. G. Blystone, with an individual director for each organization. The trade-mark has been largely depended upon by L-Ko for its past prosperity, and results have shown that a business sign serves mighty well in advancing the particular line of films that provide the interlude of laughter in picture programs. But President Stern believes that the time has come to make a further advance, by adding stars to the increasing advantage the L-Ko trade-mark brings to exhibitors.

Some weeks ago Mr. Stern went to Hollywood, Cal., where L-Ko studios are located, and consulted with General Director Blystone. When the situation was canvassed and the decision reached, contracts were closed for the appearances of Mack Swain, Hughie Mack, Myrtle Sterling, Gale Henry and Bobbie Dunn to appear as L-Ko stars.

Mr. Stern declared in his statement concerning his advance in policy: "There's no reason why a good comedy will not make a better advertising proposition for exhibitors if the name of a comedy star is coupled with the announcements. We have decided to feature our stars in conjunction with the trade-mark we have created by years of earnest application. The players we begin with have all established an individual reputation for fun-making with theatregoers that cannot fail in adding to the attractiveness of L-Kos in their presentation of clean, wholesome and inoffensive comedies of the strenuous type."

Theda Bara Completes Twenty-Seventh Picture

Was Directed by J. Gordon Edwards, Who Has Directed Twenty-three Features for William Fox—Feature Is as Yet Unnamed

THEDA BARA, under the direction of J. Gordon Edwards in the William Fox Eastern studios, has completed another Standard Picture, it was announced by Fox Film Corporation last week.

The production is Mr. Edwards's twenty-third picture for William Fox and the twenty-seventh that has been made by Miss Bara. The filming of the production has required about six weeks, work having been commenced shortly after Miss Bara and Mr. Edwards returned from California to witness the first showing of "Cleopatra" at the Lyric theatre in New York.

The title for the feature has not been selected. It is the story of a girl who is raised under Puritanical influence in Greenwich Village, New York. She is induced by an artist to pose for a painting of the Madonna and in the studio meets a friend of the artist, who accomplishes her downfall. The remainder of the story is devoted to her subsequent unfortunate life, her chance meeting with the artist later, her agreement to pose for another picture, another meeting with the artist's friend and her peculiar and highly dramatic form of revenge.

The story is by E. Lloyd Sheldon. The picture probably will be a January release, although there has been no decision announced regarding the date.

Edna Purviance Visits New York for First Time

Edna Purviance, Charlie Chaplin's feminine lead who has co-operated with him in the manufacture of laughs in his recent pictures, is visiting in New York for the first time.

Miss Purviance, who hails from the Golden West, is said to have found a trip to New York necessary in order to secure a new stock for her extensive wardrobe. She arrived unheralded, but her presence soon became known and she has lacked a minute to call her own since leaving the train. In addition to purchasing her wardrobe, being interviewed and photographed, she has been entertained and feted by many theatrical folk in New York.

In speaking of Mr. Chaplin's new pictures which will be released through the First National Exhibitors' Circuit, Miss Purviance declared that his best work was yet to come and that some of his new ideas for laughs—good, hearty laughs—in his new productions were nothing short of wonderful.

Texas Guinan and Olive Thomas Features Ready Shortly

FRANK BORZAGE, who has completed "Until They Get Me," in which Joe King, Pauline Starke and Jack Curtis have the leading roles, is the director selected to handle the megaphone for Texas Guinan's new picture, "The Gun Woman," a western story. Miss Guinan will be seen as the self-reliant woman who was the product of the early frontier days, the woman who held her own ground in every crisis and settled her grievances with a deadly automatic. Included in the supporting cast are Francis McDonald and Ed. Brady.

Jack Dillon, who has completed Olive Thomas' latest vehicle, a comedy-drama called "Betty Takes a Hand," is about to begin work on Miss Thomas' next subject, "Limousine Life." It is a screen adaptation of Ida M. Evans' story by the same name. The supporting cast for this picture has not yet been announced but will be at the earliest opportunity.

Chaplin General Manager Recovers from Illness

After an illness of more than a week, during which time his case baffled physicians, John Jasper, general manager of the Charlie Chaplin studios, is said to be on the road to recovery and will shortly resume his duties at the new half-million-dollar plant in Hollywood.

Mr. Jasper's illness coming suddenly was the cause of the deepest concern at the Chaplin studios. Apparently in the best of health, the manager was seized with a coughing spell and when he was examined by Dr. J. C. Negley it was stated that he had injured himself internally. Submitting himself to an X-ray examination Jasper was informed that he had ruptured an artery in his chest, slightly above and to the right of his heart. He was ordered to his bed with absolute quiet.

Joe Kaufman Directs New Elsie Ferguson Production

ARTCRAFT PICTURES CORPORATION announced last week that the production of Elsie Ferguson's new screen subject, "The Song of Songs," an adaptation of Edward Sheldon's play of the same name, has been entrusted to Joe Kaufman.

Mr. Kaufman has been staging Paramount pictures for some time past with notable result, and it was he who initiated George M. Cohan into the realms of screen work in "Broadway Jones" for Artcraft some eight months ago.

Mr. Kaufman is staging "The Song of Songs" at the Famous Players-Lasky studio in Fort Lee, N. J., and the screen production of this Broadway play is now well under way. Mr. Kaufman attended the first night of this play at the Eltinge theatre three years ago and liked it so much that he saw the stage presentation four times since. By strange co-incidence Miss Ferguson, who now stars in the film, was also present on the opening night of the play.

Another coincidence in connection with the screening of "The Song of Songs" is the fact that Frank Losee, who now appears in chief support of Miss Ferguson in the film, was scheduled to portray that character on the stage, but on account of sudden illness could not fulfill his engagement. Mr. Losee's work in popular screen hits, notably several recent Paramount photoplays, readily indicates that he will do full justice to the important role accorded him. Crawford Kent, who played lead to George M. Cohan in "Broadway Jones," again comes under Joe Kaufman's direction for Artcraft in this new picture.

You are not going to war. The men who are need all the comforts you can give them. Help them get cigarettes. That is your patriotic duty. If you aren't helping in the "smokes" campaign, get busy—now. Don't be a slacker!

Madame Nazimova Is a Charming Red Cross Nurse in Metro's Production of "The Revelation"

George Beban Tries Lumbering in "Jules of the Strong Heart," a Paramount Production. Again, One of His Chief Duties Is Taking Care of a "Keed"

Superior Cast Surrounds Beban in Lumber Camp Feature

SURROUNDING George Beban in his next Paramount vehicle, "Jules of the Strong Heart," in which he creates the role of Jules Lemaire, a French Canadian trapper, is a cast which is claimed to be superior in every respect.

Mr. Beban is seen in the atmosphere of a lumber camp in the great north woods where men of rough but stout-hearted character ply their rugged trades vigorously amid conditions calling for virility and physical prowess of the most pronounced description.

In the cast are Raymond Hatton, Charles Ogle, Guy Oliver, Ernest Joy, H. P. Carpenter, Edward Martin, James Neill and others. The leading feminine role is played by Helen Eddy, and Donald Crisp is the director of this production, which promises to be one of the most successful in the career of this actor, whose proclivities are already well known.

Pathe Catches Roundup in Three Snappy Reels

Eighth Annual Rip-Snorting Pendleton Event in Which Cowboys Revel Announced for Release as Special Picture December 30

THREE full reels of genuine action, of the "rip-snortin'" kind, are promised by Pathe on December 30, when "The Eighth Annual Roundup at Pendleton, Ore., is released to exhibitors and the public. The West that has almost vanished, fleeing before the advance of fences and the farmers' ploughs, is what the Pendleton roundup represents, and the picture, besides being interesting in all sections of the country, should prove somewhat of a novelty as well. It is predicted that not many years will pass before such typical scenes of the old West will have passed beyond recall.

In the words of Pathe: "Pendleton, Ore., is the gateway to the last West of the the last great unfenced ranges of the country. Eastward of it is the once great Umatilla Reservation where live the remnants of the dwindling tribes of Western Indians. East and West are the chief cattle markets of the world. So it comes about that Pendleton is the hub of the cattle business wheel and is the meeting place of the present and the past. It is the logical place to hold the greatest Wild West show the country has ever seen. The performers in this show are not professional players. They are real cowboys, right from the range, who once a year exhibit in public the skill and daring that they show privately every day in the year in their chosen business. With them in the Pendleton Roundup are their one-time enemies, the Indians, who compete with them in the sports and show a dexterity and daring little inferior to their own. The wild horses ridden by the cowboys, the powerful steers used in the various contests, are not weakened and tamed by long journeys in crowded freight cars. They are driven in fresh from the range and by their activity and viciousness tax the skill of the cowmen to the utmost. In the picture are shown such thrillers as bronco busting, wild horse racing, bull-dogging steers, horse breaking by some of the famous cow girls of the West, squaw races, roping cattle, and riding them. The observer soon becomes conscious of the great danger to life and limb that these contests impose. There are several instances where men and girls are thrown so violently to the ground before the camera that they lie senseless and are taken away to the hospital."

ADVANCE OFFERINGS OF THE PROGRAMS

Pathe Releases "Runaway Romany" December 23

Marion Davies Is Starred in the Production, Which Is to Be Most Extensively Advertised Special Feature Ever Produced

"RUNAWAY ROMANY," a five-part feature, starring Marion Davies, has been announced for release on December 23 by Pathe as a Special Feature and this company is taking apparently justifiable pride in the production as it promises to be one of the most interesting and successful pictures around the holidays.

Last week it was reported that Pathe would release this feature as a Gold Rooster play, but announcements from Pathe indicate the report was premature. It has been selected for the honor of release in Christmas week, it is said, from the standpoint of its merit as a production and its value as a box office attraction.

One of the main points concerning the release, as far as exhibitors are concerned, is the fact that over $50,000 in newspaper advertising has already been spent upon it in the United States, according to Pathe. Still further advertising will be carried and the campaign is expected to continue through December and probably into January. Pathe claims the feature will be the most extensively advertised single special feature ever marketed.

Among the players in the cast are Joseph Kilgour, who has been leading man for Emily Stevens and has been starred in many productions; Pedro de Cordoba, who has appeared with Geraldine Farrar, Elsie Ferguson and other stars; Matt Moore, Gladden James, Boyce Combe and William W. Bittner are also included in the cast which is conceded to be one of the best ever selected to portray such a feature.

Miss Davies, the star, made such an impression upon Pathe in this, her first motion picture, that it is said she will be featured in others in the near future.

For several years Pathe has been one of the largest users of newspaper space in the country, each serial having had spent upon it large sums in this kind of advertising. Now for the first time Pathe puts out a single feature on which has been spent and is being spent sums which are comparable to those spent upon some serials. It is believed that the largely increased attendance which will mark the showing of the picture in the theatres booking it will prove that advertising of this sort pays and pays well.

Laemmle Seeks Knowledge of Bluebird Power

Exchange Managers Will Render Reports as to Drawing Capacity of Every Program—This Method Keeps Line on the Opposition

ACCORDING to an announcement this week from Bluebird, Managing Director Carl Laemmle wants to be put squarely in "the know" on the subject of the drawing power Bluebirds manifest in equal opposition with rival programs of feature productions. To find out exactly how Bluebirds draw with the general public as the court of final decision, exchange managers throughout the country will undertake to render an exact report on a definite date as to the drawing power of every program that may be exhibited in specified localities covering the country.

Here in New York the various heads of Universal's departments have long been visiting moving picture theatres to get a line on what "the other fellow" is doing in the essentials of production. Written reports are submitted giving the reviewer's opinion of the attractions he has seen, incorporating the matters of production, effects, photography, story, settings and an opinion of the artistic abilities the players reflect in their several roles. These reports are systematically dissected, card indexed and incorporated in a weekly synopsis that is sent to Universal City for the benefit of the production and directorial staff on the West Coast.

So well has this idea worked out in the matter of general results that Mr. Laemmle wants to know more, and as nearly exact as possible, about the important item of actual attendance in the localities he has selected. Cities that offer a comprehensive field, wherein the leading programs are all released, have been designated to cover the entire country. Employees of Bluebird will attend the same theatre every night for a week and find out, by personal clocking," how many people are attracted by the various offerings. For a second week this same method will be repeated, and the average attained by combining the totals for two weeks will be used as a basis for computing the result.

"My Little Boy" Holds Screen at Broadway Theatre

"My Little Boy" is the Christmas release at the Broadway theatre this week. Elliott J. Clawson's adaptation of Dickens' "A Christmas Carol" and Eugene Field's "Little Boy Blue" is presented with an all-star cast including little Zoe Rae, Ella Hall, Emory Johnson and Gretchen Lederer. Elsie Jane Wilson is the director and the story takes grown-up and child back into the land of visions which everyone experiences and which makes over a crabbed pessimistic, child-hating old man in the deliciously human story, "My Little Boy."

Artcraft Releases New Farrar Feature December 17

Artcraft's second Geraldine Farrar picture, "The Devil Stone" has received its final preparations for public presentation and will be released December 17, it is anounced. The release by Artcraft of this production marks the sixth Geraldine Farrar cinema vehicle filmed at the studios of the Lasky Company since the prima donna first entered the field of the photoplay, two years ago.

An interesting item in connection with the staging of the Farrar films is the fact that they have all been created by practically the same working organization, including the director, Cecil B. De Mille, who has been responsible for the production of the entire series of features, and Jeanie Macpherson, who wrote the scenarios for the six photoplays.

Lasky Approves Demand for More Wholesome Films

A resolution adopted recently at Albany, N. Y., by the New York State Federation of Women's Clubs in annual convention, protesting against unwholesome pictures and urging that the Federation use its influence to make the films a greater agency for depicting the brighter side of life, has received the entire endorsement of Vice-President Jesse L. Lasky, of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation.

Concerning the resolution, Mr. Lasky said: "It is hardly necessary for me to say that the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation is already in accord with any movement of this description and I feel confident that the productions released through Paramount and Artcraft are in themselves a protest against pictures of obnoxious character, such as are described in this resolution."

Sennett Promises Gale of Laughter December 16

The fun in "That Night," a Paramount-Mack Sennett comedy scheduled for release on Dec. 16, is said to be fast and furious. It is said that Mack Sennett has outdone himself in creating a comedy that goes like a whirlwind, developing a laugh a second.

Featured in the cast are Charles Murray, Wayland Trask, and Mary Thurman, supported by Wallace Beery, Gene Rogers, Eva Thatcher and Tom Kennedy. Eddie Cline directed the picture under Mr. Sennett's personal supervision.

"Taming Target Center" will be the next release following "That Night," and will again bring to the fore Polly Moran, Ben Turpin, Tom Kennedy and Gonda Durand.

Meanwhile "An International Sneak" is released Dec. 2, with Chester Conklin, Ethel Teare, William Armstrong, Lillian Biron and Earle C. Kenton.

Hayakawa Plays Detective in December 3 Release

"The Secret Game," Sessue Hayakawa's next starring vehicle, released by Paramount, December 3, is a romance of the secret service in which Nara-Nara, a Japanese detective, portrayed by Hayakawa, succeeds in saving from destruction American transports, secretly engaged in carrying American troops across the Pacific to the Russian front.

In the course of the plot, it is developed that there is a leak in official circles, which is traced to the office of Major Northfield, stationed in California. Inasmuch as Japan has guaranteed safety to the troopships, Nara-Nara is placed upon the trail and hires an office next to that of Northfield, setting himself up as a Japanese importer.

Florence Vidor has the role of Kitty, while Jack Holt plays the part of Northfield; Charles Ogle is Dr. Smith. Others in the cast are Maym Kelso and Raymond Hatton. William C. DeMille directed the production. The story is by Marion Fairfax.

Sessue Hayakawa's next picture, following "The Secret Game," will be "Hidden Pearls," much of which was made in Honolulu and directed by George Melford.

Camera Shoots Countless Scenes in Goldwyn Feature

No less than 1,087 scenes were photographed for the making of Mae Marsh's third starring feature for Goldwyn, "The Cinderella Man," scheduled for release December 16, it has been announced.

As each scene is usually photographed twice, or in two "takes," to guard against mishaps, this means that a total of 2,074 scenes were photographed, or approximately 40,000 feet of film. As this included duplication, one may say that about twenty reels of 1,000 feet each, were exposed to make the six reels necessary for the completed work. About 780 scenes among those taken were eliminated, leaving about 307 to be shown on the screen.

Mary Miles Minter, the American-Mutual Star, in "The Mate of the Sally Ann"

Victor Moore, Entirely Surrounded by Feminine Beauty, in "Toothaches and Heartaches," His Newest Klever Komedy, Released December 3

Klever Pictures Releases Moore "Toothache"

Newest Comedy Was Written by Thomas J. Gray and Directed by Chester M. DeVonde—Gives Vic Moore Visit to Dentist

ON December 3 Klever Pictures, Inc., released its newest comedy, "Toothaches and Heartaches," with Victor Moore in the chief comedy role. The story for the comedy was written by Thomas J. Gray and was directed by Chester M. De Vonde.

When Vic married Cupid played a trick on him and handed him a lemon in the garden of love. At the beginning of the comedy Vic is suffering from a terrible toothache, and he feels his troubles are like grapes, they come in bunches. His wife tries to soothe him, but this only makes the pain worse. They decide to go to a dentist, and on arriving Vic is confronted with no end of patients in the waiting room. This almost scares Vic off, but he sticks and is soon sitting in the chair. The dentist asks him will he take gas to which Vic replies that he will, if the price is not too high. The dentist administers the gas and Vic passes out. As is the case most times when a person is under the influence of gas, the dreams they have take them on wonderful journeys, and it is needless to say that Vic's gas was no different. It was worse in fact for it takes him on a trip in which he dreams that every pretty girl he meets cannot resist him, even a bride, about to go to be married. He goes along with all these girls hanging on him with no end of funny things happening. His trip ends up in a harem, surrounded by a bevy of beautiful girls which is interrupted by the approach of the girl's sweethearts from whom he stole them. They have clubs and soon start to beat Vic up and by the crack on the head it brings him to in the dentist chair just as the dentist is pulling his tooth out. The dentist hands him his bill for the gas which is fifty dollars. Vic is so elated over his wonderful trip that he agrees that it is worth it. At this moment however, just as he feels that all the beautiful girls in the world are his, his wife comes to him and kisses him. This upsets Vic entirely and grabbing the gas cap cries "Death—where is thy sting," and places the cap over his face, to go under the influence of the gas.

Mutual Releases Margarita Fischer Feature December 10

IT was announced last wek that Margarita Fischer's first production, "Miss Jackie of the Army," under her recently made contract with the American Film Company, has been set for release on the Mutual schedule for December 10.

Miss Fischer, heroine in "Miss Jackie of the Navy," is cast in "Miss Jackie of the Army" as the irrepressible daughter of an American army post, desperately but coyly in love with one of her colonel-father's aides, a young lieutenant. Lloyd Ingraham directed.

Billie Rhodes wears a dress suit, gets tipsy and caught in "Putting One Over," the Mutual-Strand comedy, slated for release Tuesday, December 11.

Jerry uses unfair but effective methods of beating the high cost of living in "Jerry's Boarding House," Cub comedy, released by Mutual Thursday, December 13.

Brenon Engages Le Guere for "Third Floor Back"

Will Play Role of the Artist in Picture with Sir Johnston Forbes-Robertson—Has Good Record on Stage and the Screen

George LeGuere, Engaged by Herbert Brenon for a Role in "The Passing of the Third Floor Back," with Sir Johnston Forbes-Robertson

George Le Guere, the young actor now appearing in "Business Before Pleasure" at the Eltinge, has been engaged by Herbert Brenon to play the role of Christopher Penny in "The Passing of the Third Floor Back," with Sir Johnston Forbes-Robertson.

Le Guere made his first impression on the stage as "Jan," the dreaming Boer boy, with Lena Ashwell, the English actress, in "The Shulamite." From that time on his career has been a series of successes in New York and elsewhere. He has created no less than twelve parts on Broadway in the last few years.

In addition to his stage activities, Le Guere has devoted much of his time to screen work, in which field he has been successful. He has been featured in dramas produced by Pathe, Famous Players, Kleine, Essanay, Universal and Metro. Perhaps his most noteworthy achievement in the film world was his interpretation of the role of the young lover, who protects Shirley Mason in her seven five-reel battles with temptation in "The Seven Deadly Sins." In these McClure productions Le Guere was featured, playing opposite Ann Murdock, Holbrook Blinn, H. B. Warner, Charlotte Walker, and Nance O'Neil.

His role in "The Passing of the Third Floor Back" is that of the young painter who, in order to earn money, is a traitor to his art, wasting his time and talent by painting pictures that are beneath him.

The engagement of this artist entirely completes the cast for "The Passing of the Third Floor Back." Headed by Sir Johnston Forbes-Robertson, it includes: Molly Pearson, Ketty Galanta, Grace Stephens, Ben Graham, Ricca Allen, Augusta Haviland, Dora Mills Adams, Germaine Bourville, Sydney Golden, Thornton Bastion and Robert Fisher.

Director and Star Get Credit for "Blue Jeans"

Metro Congratulates Itself on Excellence of Special Production of the Old Melodrama—Viola Dana Stars; Collins Directs

METRO PICTURES CORPORATION, according to an announcement this week, is congratulating itself on the excellence of its forthcoming special production of "Blue Jeans," a screen version of Joseph Arthur's old melodrama, starring Viola Dana. The star herself deserves unlimited credit in connection with the production, according to those who have viewed the picture at private showings, and another feature of importance has been the production. John H. Collins, in this seven-part de luxe production, has, it is said, justified those who have contended that he is one of the foremost motion picture directors of this country.

When Richard A. Rowland, Metro's president, and B. A. Rolfe, the firm's Western representative, decided that Miss Dana was the star gifted to interpret the part of June, they settled upon John Collins as the logical man to be her director, because of his success in previous Dana pictures such as "The Gates of Eden," "Lady Barnacle," "Aladdin's Other Lamp," and "God's Law and Man's." He is not afraid to be sincere. In fact, sincerity is the keynote of the work of both Miss Dana and her director, and it is said to be just that quality in the work of both that has made of "Blue Jeans" a picture of humaneness.

When the script of "Blue Jeans," adapted by June Mathis and Charles A. Taylor from Joseph Arthur's old play, was given into the hands of John Collins, the young director was besieged by people who had played in "Blue Jeans" at different times in their lives, and by their relatives and friends, who thought they knew how it ought to be played, who wanted parts in the screen production. But the director said, to everyone's amazement, "I want no one who has ever played in the stage production. If possible I would rather have people who have never seen the play at all." The reason for Mr. Collins' decision was soon evident. Twenty odd years ago, when "Blue Jeans" was first introduced, public taste was a different thing from what it is now. Incidents that seemed thrilling then no longer ring true. Collins was putting on a picture for audiences of to-day, not for an audience of twenty-odd years ago."

Musicale Serves Emily Stevens in "Daybreak"

A fashionable evening musicale is one of the features shown in Metro's picturization of "Daybreak," starring Emily Stevens, it has been announced by Metro. The Broadway play by Jane Cowl and Jane Murfin was adapted for the screen by June Mathis and Albert Capellani.

Fox Selects Titles for Three Releases in January

IT was announced this week that titles have been selected for three uncompleted pictures which have been tentatively set for January release as Fox Special Features. The arrangement, as it now stands, is to start the month with a Gladys Brockwell picture and to follow with Tom Mix's first production as a star in Western dramas.

The Brockwell picture is to be called "Stolen Honor" and the Mix debut will be made in "Cupid's Round-up." For the Markova picture, the title "A Heart's Revenge" has been decided upon.

Miss Brockwell's production has to do with the international situation, being, in some of its most important phases, a war picture. Involved in the story are a woman's love affairs, which are worked out under the most trying and difficult conditions. It happens that most of the action is laid in Berlin, and one of the strange coincidences of studio life was the appearance on the ground, during the filming of these scenes, of James W. Gerard, former United States Ambassador to Germany. The period of the play corresponds to Mr. Gerard's term of office and much of the action is similar to that in which the Ambassador had a very real part.

Fox Sunshine Comedies Prove Worth Very Rapidly

William Fox's predictions of success for his new Sunshine comedies are apparently materializing, as the productions are being referred to as among the best yet.

The Sunshine Comedy releases for December and January are: December 9, "His Smashing Career"; December 23, "Damaged—No Goods"; January 6, "Shadows of Her Pest"; January 13, "Are Married Policemen Safe?"

All the Sunshine Comedies are under the personal direction of Henry Lehrman, who has established a reputation as a master comedy creator. He now has four companies at work at Los Angeles making Sunshine Comedies and Mr. Fox announces that he will continue to release a Sunshine every two weeks—twenty-six a year.

Joseph Kaufman Does Good Work in Billie Burke Film

In the forthcoming production of "The Land of Promise," starring Billie Burke, and to be released by Paramount Dec. 10, it is said that much credit must go to Joseph Kaufman, the director, for his remarkable work in securing realistic and beautiful effects. It is a picture, according to report, that called for unusual directorial skill. The wheat fields of Canada, the Rocky Mountains, the farming lands of the Dominion, form the picturesque background for the story of life in a comparatively primitive location. Mr. Kaufman took full advantage of these opportunities and the result is said to be nothing short of exquisite.

Mr. Kaufman himself is well pleased with the picture, which he counts as one of the most satisfactory from every point of view that he has directed.

Brenon Releases "Romanoff" Feature Widely

"THE FALL OF THE ROMANOFFS," Herbert Brenon's historical drama depicting the birth of Russian freedom, will soon be seen throughout the United States.

Montreal and Toronto have been viewing the production and a Washington engagement follows: While immediately afterward "The Fall of the Romanoffs" will be shown throughout New York state. At the same time the various territorial allotments outside of New York are being rapidly arranged. By the early part of 1918, "The Fall of the Romanoffs" will no doubt be on the screens of theatres from coast to coast.

On December 2 the production will, it is announced, open for a two-weeks' run at Thomas Moore's Garden theatre in Washington. The capital showing was arranged through J. D. Williams, manager of the First National Exhibitors' Circuit.

Sergius Trufanoff, otherwise the Monk Iliodor, will appear at the Washington Garden theatre showing, giving audiences an oportunity to see the man who brought about the downfall of Rasputin, the Emperor's illiterate advisor. Iliodor has just appeared at the St. Denis theatre in Montreal, where he was given a sensational reception.

S. J. Berman, in charge of the selling end of the New York territory for "The Fall of the Romanoffs," announces that the production will be launched in this field on January 6, with a state-wide premiere. At least twenty theatres are expected to show "The Fall of the Romanoffs" simultaneously during the week. Mr. Berman expects that over 1,000,000 film fans will see the production before the end of the first week.

Empire All-Star Assembles Nearly All British Cast

The Empire All-Star Corporation has assembled what it considers a notable cast for "The Girl and the Judge," and the majority of the players came from the British Isles, it is said.

Olive Tell, the star, was born in America and educated in London and claims a British grandfather. David Powell, Miss Tell's leading man, hails from Wales. Eric Mayne, Charlotte Granville and Ethel Burke are also British.

Edison Follows Fiction in Its Newest Releases

The Edison Company is following in its releases more and more the trend of present-day fiction. Its next release is scheduled for December 17, under the title of "Salt of the Earth," from Peter B. Kyne's story in The Saturday Evening Post, and features Peggy Adams and Chester Barnett.

"Salt of the Earth" is a story of the "gold days" in the West. The tale of the way two old miners outwit one of the professional swindlers who flourished in the days when any bank could be scratched for gold, is said to be a rare one, and interwoven with it is a love story.

William Wadsworth and Russell Simpson have character roles.

Empire-All Star Announces Coming Releases

Next Feature Will Be "Her Sister," with Olive Tell in the Star Role, Followed by "The Impostor," Starring Ann Murdock

Olive Tell Resents the Insult Offered Her Young Sister in "Her Sister," an Empire All-Star Release

THE Empire-All Star Corporation announced this week that work on "The Girl and the Judge" has been completed, and that, as has been previously announced in MOTION PICTURE NEWS, the next production to be made by the organization will be filmed at the American studio at Santa Barbara, Cal.

In announcing forthcoming releases, Empire-All Star stated last week that the next picture to be released will be "Her Sister," in which Olive Tell is starred. The story is said to be full of dramatic situations and a picturesque element is presented where Miss Tell impersonates Isis, an up-to-date Egyptian seeress.

After "Her Sister" the next Empire-Mutual release will be "The Impostor" starring Ann Murdock and featuring David Powell, who has supported Miss Murdock in four other Empire pictures. Lionel Adams, Richie Ling and Charlotte Granville are other members of the cast. Miss Granville has also an important role in "The Girl and the Judge" the latest Empire picture directed by John B. O'Brien.

The story of "The Impostor" is that of a young girl of refinement who, suddenly finding herself alone and penniless, acosts a young married man who, happening to be of a chivalrous nature takes her to his hotel and gives her food and from this beginning the story threads its way through a maze of complications, for of course he is discovered by gossiping friends of his wife who mistakes a generous, human act for something very different.

In the role of the young girl who so implicitly believes in the goodness of all men, and women, Ann Murdock has a role that is said to be full of possibilities.

Triangle Re-Issues Continue Popularity Drive

Early William S. Hart and Douglas Fairbanks Pictures Said to Be Increasing Sale of New Features—Stars at Their Best

THROUGHOUT the country the demand for the reissues of William S. Hart and Douglas Fairbanks Triangle pictures is said to be progressing ever steadily. Photoplay patrons, according to an announcement from Triangle, are eager to see the re-issues in spite of the fact the pictures all had long runs when first released. Furthermore, this demand is said to show that time need not necessarily relegate a good film to the shelf.

The Triangle Distributing Corporation is receiving telegrams and letters from various exchanges, all referring to the enthusiastic reception accorded the many Hart and Fairbanks pictures produced under the Triangle banner. As a measure of the drawing power of these re-issues, it is cited that the latest pictures released by different companies, with Hart and Fairbanks in the title-roles, are being boomed by the Triangle re-issues. Theatregoers ask for all the Hart and Fairbanks pictures that can be secured.

Not wanting to detract from the present work of these stars, Triangle nevertheless feels the work they did as members of the organization cannot be improved upon. Some advances have no doubt been made, but there have been no advances in genuineness of inspiration or thoroughness of production. Experts believe that it would hardly be possible for either Fairbanks or Hart to improve upon their original Triangle work.

A statement was recently made in which it was asserted that the latest Hart pictures are experiencing a boom directly traceable to the Triangle re-issues now on the market. Such a statement in itself seems to be proof, according to Triangle, that the earlier productions have enjoyed a following all their own and as re-issues, increase the popularity of newer pictures now being shown.

Canadian Northwest Scene of New Bluebird Play

From New York's Broadway, to somewhere in the Canadian Northwest, is a long jump to make in one day, but Dorathy Phillips accomplished it last week at Bluebird's West Coast Studios. Cinematically, of course. Finishing her work under Ida May Park's direction in "Broadway Love" in the forenoon, Miss Phillips started a new play on the same day with Director Allen Holubar.

That is a rather unusual thing at studios, for usually an interval of two weeks or more is required between productions in order to select or design costumes and to familiarize the players with their new rôle. In this cast Miss Phillips had accomplished the preliminary work on her forthcoming picture, "The Girl Who Dared," while still engaged in the preceding one, doing most of the task at night. The story of "The Girl Who Dared" was developed by Director Holubar from an idea suggested by one of James Oliver Curwood's tales. William Stowell, will as usual, appear opposite Miss Phillips, and the supporting cast will include Priscilla Dean, Lon Chaney, Joseph Girard and William Burress.

Fox Plans List of Nine Pictures This Month

"Babes in the Woods" and "A Daughter of the Gods" Released This Week, Followed by George Walsh and Wm. Farnum Features

George Walsh Climbed Here from the Ground in "The Pride of New York," a William Fox Production

NINE photoplays, each expected to be of especial interest, are scheduled to come from the William Fox studios in the East and West during the month of December.

This week two pictures will be issued, it is announced, both on December 2. One is "The Babes in the Woods," a pretentious film version of a world-known story. Francis Carpenter and Virginia Lee Corbin head the large cast which gives what is said to be a fine interpretation of the tale. The Standard picture for December 2 will be "A Daughter of the Gods," with Annette Kellermann, now available for the entire country for the first time.

George Walsh's "stunt" play, "The Pride of New York," which begins with the draft and ends in the trenches, is released on December 9. Jane and Katherine Lee, the inimitable "Baby Grands," as "Troublemakers," are the stars of the Standard picture for that date.

The following week brings the release of William Farnum's emotional drama, "The Heart of a Lion," the scenes of which are laid in the Canadian Rockies. June Caprice in "Unknown 274," dealing with troubles of a foundling, is the special feature for December 16.

On December 23 Jewel Carmen will make her debut as a full-fledged star. She has been provided with a subject called "The Kingdom of Love," a film of an eventful period in an Alaskan mining camp.

Theda Bara in "Du Barry" is scheduled for December 30. Released simultaneously with this Standard picture is the special feature, "Stolen Honor." Virginia Pearson has the stellar role in the latter.

An Old Witch Adds Mystery to the Fox Production, "The Babes in the Woods."

Goldwyn Puts New Scenes in Jane Cowl Photoplay

It was announced last week by Goldwyn that Jane Cowl, when she played a recent engagement at Plattsburg, sent for a cameraman and secured some scenes of military character which have been incorporated in Miss Cowl's production of "The Spreading Dawn," in which she starred for Goldwyn, and which was recently released.

Keystone Labors on Variety of Comedy Films

Five Directors Active on Productions, and Abundance of Material Is Being Prepared—Scenario Staff Adds Two Writers

PRE-HOLIDAY activity is at its height in the ranks of Triangle-Keystoners, according to announcements of sizzling work and preparations received through the Triangle press bureau this week. It is said five directors are putting all their energy behind an equal number of productions, and that an abundance of new material is being prepared. In addition to this the scenario staff, anticipating greater things, has added two members.

Triangle-Keystone Director Reggie Morris is taking final scenes this week for his first comedy featuring Harry Gribbon. "Dancers and Dimples" is the title of the production, and it is thought it will even surpass the Western comedy recently completed by Morris.

Director of Production Albert Glassmire is preparing a new story for Director Morris, and it is expected work will be started this week. The story calls for a great deal of action in a roller skating rink. Thus far the cast that has been selected for the skating rink comedy will be headed by Harry Gribbon, supported by Claire Anderson, Franklyn Bond, Dora Rodgers, Myrtle Lind, Mario Bianchi, and Dorothy Hagar.

Director Herman Raymaker has his sea captain story well under way and plans to start on the boat scene at San Pedro Harbor next week. Director Raymaker has had a blueprint made of the Triangle Film Corporation's barkentine, "The Fremont," upon which most of the action occurs, and is reading everything he can find about hatchways, forecastles, windlasses, et cetera. The leading roles in the new story are handled by Billy Franey, Dale Fuller, Maud Wayne, Milton Sims, Jim Donnelly, Lloyd Bacon and Frank Opperman.

With one of the largest cafe sets ever erected in the Triangle-Keystone studios, Director Charles Avery "shot" one of the greatest rough-and-tumble fights ever used in motion pictures last week for his current comedy, "Courts and Cabarets." The cast in Director Avery's story includes Max Asher, Marianna de la Torre, Myrtle Reeves, Arthur Moon, Baldy Belmont, Peggy Pearce, Milburn Morante and Eddie Gribbon.

Director William Beaudine has his piano mover story near completion. The cast includes Harry Depp, Paddy McGuire, Sylvia Ashton, Ruth Langston, Nate Salmon, Jack Henderson and Ed Baker.

Director Walter Edwards is making a Triangle-Keystone comedy that promises to be a whirlwind of action. One afternoon last week he had Fritz Schade and Chris Richards swinging up and down on heavy ropes.

Ferris Hartman and Harry Wulze are the latest additions to the Triangle-Keystone scenario staff. Mr. Hartman was formerly a Triangle-Keystone director and recently completed a five-reel comedy-drama at the Triangle Culver City studios. When producing comedies Mr. Hartman practically wrote all of his own stories, and his services as a staff writer at the Triangle-Keystone studios is considered a valuable acquisition by Director of Production Albert Glassmire.

"The Land of Promise" Contains Promise of Strong Story

The story of "The Land of Promise," Billie Burke's Paramount picture to be released December 10, is said to be full of human interest and affords the star with a role ideally suited to her qualities as an actress, it is said. Miss Burke is supported by Thomas Meighan and a strong cast in this picture, which is directed by Joseph Kaufman.

Briefly, this is the plot of "The Land of Promise." Norah Marsh, played by Miss Burke, is companion to an elderly woman in England and has wasted many years of her life in veritable bondage. The woman dies suddenly and Norah finds to her surprise, when the will is read, that she has been left virtually penniless. Finally she decides to use her small savings to go to her brother in Canada—"The Land of Promise." Her brother is a farmer in Manitoba, and has married a little waitress, who makes him a faithful wife, but on the arrival of Norah, her sister-in-law becomes jealous of her and she finds herself again unhappily situated. Her life becoming unbearable under these conditions, she recalls hearing Frank Taylor, another farmer, declare that he intends getting a wife to "do the chores." In her desperation she asks him if she will do, and upon receiving his surprised assent, the two are immediately married, going to Taylor's farm some distance away. Then follows the working out of a strange problem which results finally in love entering what has been a loveless home and Norah at last finds the real land of promise.

Billie Burke has started work upon "Eve's Daughters," adapted from the play by Alacia Ramsey, which recently served as a starring vehicle for Grace George during its run at the Playhouse, New York.

Strand in Washington Shows "Fall of Romanoffs"

Herbert Brenon's "The Fall of the Romanoffs" has been launched in Washington, following its hit in the Dominion of Canada.

The historical production opened at Tom Moore's Strand theatre in Washington on Sunday evening, December 2. Herbert Brenon was present, as was his brother, Chandos St. John Brenon, Canadian representative of the Brenon Corporation. Sergius Trufanoff, otherwise the Monk Iliodor, who enacts in "The Fall of the Romanoffs" the role he actually played in the downfall of the Czar Nicholas, appeared in person. He made an address through an interpreter.

Previous to the Washington Strand opening, "The Fall of the Romanoffs" was shown at the residence of Edward B. McLean, owner of the Washington Post. Over 75 guests were present, including the representative legislators, executives, diplomats and society leaders of the capital. This special showing was given on Friday evening, November 30. On the night following "The Fall of the Romanoffs" was shown at the Washington Press Club.

The Washington Strand theatre engagement was arranged through J. D. Williams, manager of the First National Circuit.

"Too Much Elephant" Offers Clever Holiday Stuff

"Too Much Elephant," the current Selburn comedy released by General Film Company, is said to offer some of the cleverest holiday entertainment ever provided for picture fans. This is the second of the series of comedies featuring Neal Burns and Gertrude Selby, who have as their co-star in this picture a trained elephant. The one-reel production is said to be crowded with some of the best animal stunts ever obtained through the medium of the camera.

Pathe Depends on Feminine Stars December 16

Irene Castle, Doris Kenyon and Mollie King Slated to Lead the List in a Special and Two Serials—Other Subjects Also

IRENE CASTLE, Doris Kenyon and Mollie King are announced as the box office stars on Pathe's program for the week of December 16.

"Vengeance is Mine," a Pathe Plays special in five reels, is the feature in which Irene Castle is starred. It was produced by Astra, directed by Frank Crane and the scenario was written by Howard Irving Young from the novel by John A. Moroso. Because of his work in "Arcady" and "Sylvia," Elliott Dexter was again engaged as leading man. The rest of the cast includes Edwin Hoyt, Frank Sheridan, Reginald Mason, Fred Teden, Ethel Grey Terry, Frank Monroe and Julia Stewart.

Doris Kenyon is starred in "The Hidden Hand," No. 4, "The False Locket," with Sheldon Lewis, Arline Pretty and Mahlon Hamilton, produced in two reels by Pathe.

Mollie King appears in the 14th chapter of "The Seven Pearls" serial, "The Tower of Death," with Creighton Hale and Leon Bary, produced in two reels.

Another feature of the program is Argus Pictorial No. 3, a Screen Magazine in one reel produced by Argus Laboratories, Inc.

There are four articles featured in this screen magazine. The first is "Coral Limestone Rocks," showing how the coral islands in the tropic seas are formed. The second is "Crystallization," in which is presented through the microscope the process of crystallization of salts, such as salacin, sulphate of zinc and nitrate of silver. The third is "Tied Dyeing," one of the oldest human crafts, demonstrated under the direction of Professor Edward J. Thatcher, Fine Arts Department of Columbia University. And a touch of humor is provided by Helena Smith Dayton's Clay Folk in "Banquets," in which the amusing antics of the guests at a "stag" dinner are burlesqued.

"Along the Vardar" (European Turkey), Pathe colored travel, and "A Fresh-Water Pirate," Pathe colored educational, form an interesting split-reel novelty.

An International Cartoon and Educational split-reel and Hearst Pathe News, Nos. 102 and 103, complete this program.

Jewel Announces Plans for December Releases

At Least Two Features Are Included for Presentation at the Broadway Theatre—Dorothy Phillips and Mildred Harris Among Stars

OFFICIALS of Jewel Productions, Inc., have made known their plans for December. These include the release of at least two features, both of which will come to the Broadway theatre during the month. The first of these is a story of life in a mining town in which the busy tendrils of a newspaper and its antecedents of politics and trickery enter. This has been titled "The Grand Passion" and Dorothy Phillips is its star. Included in the cast are Lon Chaney, William Stowell and Jack Mulhall as the featured players. This story first appeared in "Adventure" and was titled "The Boss of Powderville." Thomas Addison is the author and Ida May Parks made the screen version.

The second Jewel release for the month of December is announced as "K." It is a Lois Weber production after the Mary Roberts Rinehart novel of the same name which first appeared as a serial in McClure's. Mildred Harris, who first made her appearance as a Jewel-Lois Weber star in "The Price of a Good Time," again stars in this feature with True Boardman playing opposite. No additional Jewel features have been announced for December.

Strong business is reported in all sections of the country from the six Jewel features already acquired. These are "Come Through," written by George Bronson Howard and purchased from Universal; "Pay Me," starring Dorothy Phillips and made by Joseph DeGrasse; "Sirens of the Sea," written and directed by Allen Hollubar with Louise Lovely, Carmel Meyers and Jack Mulhall as the stars. Thanhouser's "Man Without a Country," with the late Florence La Badie and H. E. Herbert; "The Co-Respondent," with Elaine Hammerstein; and Louis Weber's "Price of a Good Time," with Mildred Harris and Kenneth Harlan.

Taylor Holmes Makes Progress as Screen Drawing Card

THAT Taylor Holmes, former stage comedian, now being featured in Essanay comedy-dramas, is fast becoming as popular in the cinema world as he was with the admirers of his work in "Bunker Bean" on the speaking stage, is indicated by the report of exhibitors who went to George Kleine System exhibition rooms to book his latest picture, "The Small Town Guy," released December 3.

With his film reputation firmly established, many exhibitors who had not booked Mr. Holmes's first pictures have contracted for the entire series. These include "Efficiency Edgar's Courtship," "Fools for Luck," and "Two-Bit Seats." All are stories of every-day life and exhibitors say that this brand of pictures have proved most popular with war-time audiences.

Essanay's other Perfection Pictures released during November also are proving good attractions and good results are reported for "The Kill-Joy," featuring Little Mary McAlister, and "Gift o' Gab," with Jack Gardner in the leading role.

Patrons also were pleased, exhibitors tell Essanay, with the new opportunities afforded Little Mary McAlister in "The Kill-Joy." The picture is different from others in which the little six-year-old star has been seen and has won new laurels, they say.

"Young Mother Hubbard," featuring Mary McAlister, and "The Fibbers," with Bryant Washburn and Virginia Valli, also are reported as finding good markets.

"Les Miserables" Follows "Cleopatra" at Lyric

Latter Picture Is Said to Have Had One of Most Successful Showings of Any Fox Picture—Farnum Stars in New Production

"CLEOPATRA," the William Fox Standard Picture which has been running at the Lyric theatre, New York, for several weeks, will make way shortly for William Farnum in "Les Miserables," it was announced this week by the Fox Film Corporation.

The Theda Bara picture, according to reports from the Fox offices, has had one of the most successful showings of any of the William Fox productions that have been given premieres in the Broadway district. The feature is said to have played practically to capacity at every performance and much of the time people have been turned away, it is said. During the last week or two, copies of the production also have been run in other cities. It was the attraction for one week at the Belasco theatre in Washington, D. C., and did a business proportionately equivalent to that done in New York. It also was shown with similar results at the Teck theatre in Buffalo and in Schenectady, N. Y. State.

Both Miss Bara, who is starred in the production, and J. Gordon Edwards, who directed it, have been frequent attendants at the Lyric performances. It is possible that they also may attend during the opening in some of the other cities, but arrangements for this have not yet been made. At Mr. Edwards's suggestion one or two changes have been made in scenes since the first showing, the most important of these being at the introduction to the drama.

The massiveness of the mob scenes has created considerable comment, despite the fact that mob scenes in photoplays no longer are uncommon. Mr. Edwards explains that these all were directed without the use of a megaphone. As a matter of fact, only once during the process of making the picture was a megaphone employed, that being during the filming of the big naval battle, when it was necessary to take a number of "long shots."

Vitagraph Releases "Marriage Speculation"

Is Announced as Blue Ribbon Feature for Week of December 10, with Mildred Manning and Wallace MacDonald in Chief Roles

"THE Marriage Speculation" is announced by Albert E. Smith, president of Greater Vitagraph, as the Blue Ribbon Feature for the week of December 10. Mildred Manning and Wallace MacDonald are featured in the picture, which was produced under the direction of Ashley Miller. Charles Kent also plays an important role in the production.

The story, which was written by Cyrus Townsend Brady, has an unusual plot, it is said, and there are a number of comedy touches that should appeal.

Miss Manning, who has been seen in several Blue Ribbon productions, in addition to her work in the short reel O. Henry subjects, is cast in a congenial role and appears to better advantage in this feature, it is declared, than in any she has appeared in lately. Her role is that of a young girl who agrees to barter her love for an education and introduction in society, jilting her young sweetheart. When the time comes to make good, she steels herself to carry out her agreement, but is saved by the sweetheart she had left behind. Wallace MacDonald plays the role of the sweetheart and Charles Kent that of Mr. Cliday, the aged clerk who drives the bargain with the girl.

Cliday has worked twenty years in a pickle factory and saved $10,000 which he desired to invest so as to insure him a competence for the remainder of his life. He has an acquaintance with Clara Wilton, who works in a confectionery store, an attractive, ambitious girl, and the sweetheart of a plodding grocery clerk.

Cliday tells Clara he will invest his $10,000 in her education and introduction into society—she, in return, to win and wed a rich man who will see that he (Cliday) wants for nothing the remainder of his life.

Victor Moore Parodies Payment-Plan in Klever Komedy

IN "The Instalment Plan," which is announced as a December 17 Paramount Klever Komedy release featuring Victor Moore, a parody on the dollar-down-and-dollar-a-week method of furnishing a house and buying wearing apparel, is said to be laughably depicted. The story is by Thomas J. Gray and is directed by Chester M. De Vonde. D. L. Don, Peggy Adams, Howard Anderson and others support Victor Moore in this picture.

Here in brief is the story: Vic and his family put on no end of airs in their neighborhood, with their motor car and the like, and all the neighbors look on them with envy and wonder how they do it. On the inside of Vic's family we see that he does it by paying a dollar down and an instalment collector a week. It takes all of Vic's time to dodge and sometimes pay the instalment collectors. Despite his instalment troubles, Vic manages to keep up his front and gives a party to which he invites all the neighbors.

Prior to the party, however, he has received letters from the furniture and clothing houses to the effect that unless he pays up his back payments they will call immediately and take away the furniture.

Vic's troubles do not cease with this, for the guests are no sooner gone than the collector of the clothing concern turns up and demands his clothes. After breaking up the "Home, Sweet Home" motto, Mrs. Vic sits down beside Vic and they are soon joined by the parrot, who has been made cageless by the sudden moving of things, and here they are left, altogether a pretty dejected pair, quite finished with the instalment plan.

Constance Talmadge and "Scandal" Appear at Benefit

Constance Talmadge, star in "Scandal," the Select production based on Cosmo Hamilton's novel of the same name, made her official bow to Greenwich, Conn., November 26, when she appeared both in person and on the screen in the Greenwich theatre.

The occasion was a benefit for the New Greenwich Hospital, and a feature of the program was a showing of "Scandal," donated by Lewis J. Selznick, of the evening's entertainment. Mr. Selznick has been a generous contributor to the hospital fund, and the proceeds of the affair are to be devoted to the endowment of a child's bed.

"Scandal" has a peculiar significance for the people of Greenwich inasmuch as the greater part of the film was taken on the Benedict estate. As the film was run off, the familiar scenes were greeted enthusiastically, and when Miss Talmadge was introduced the audience gave her a flattering ovation. Commodore Benedict, a popular figure in Greenwich, who has carried the main support of the hospital on his shoulders, also spoke and complimented the star on her picture.

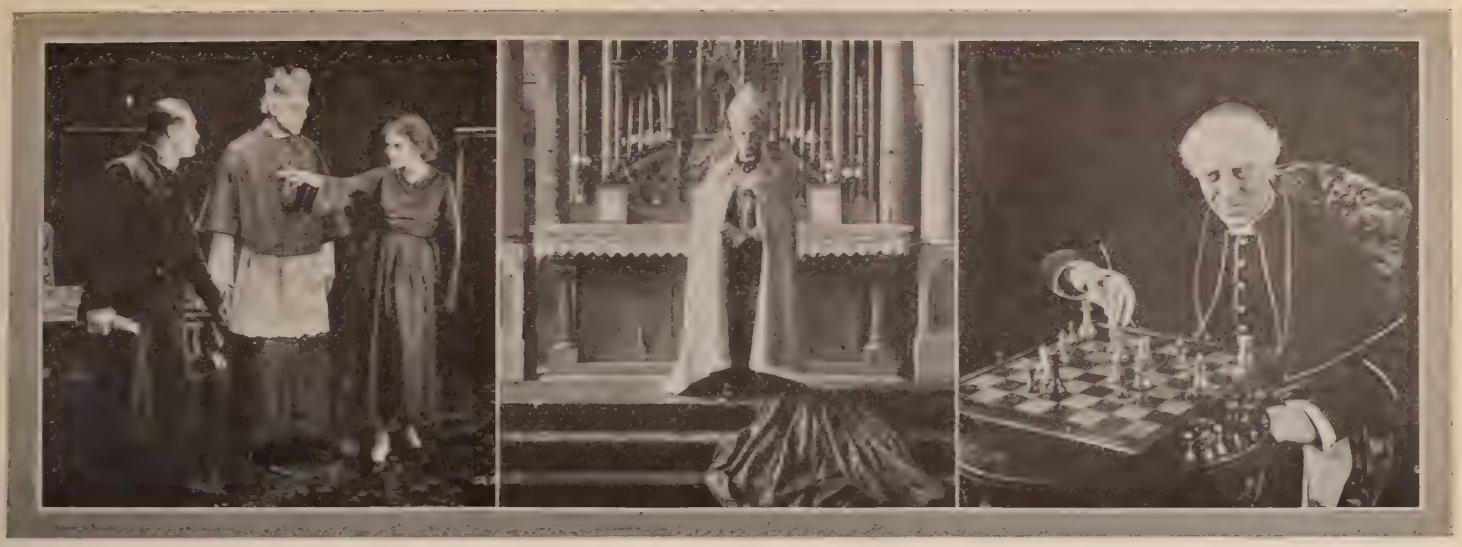
Paramount Presents Jack Pickford in Tom Sawyer Series



Following "Tom Sawyer," which is to be released by Paramount in December 10, Jack Pickford will be presented in "The Spirit of '17," by Judge Willis Brown, of the Chicago Juvenile Court. It will be a January release and later in the new year, "The Further Adventures of Tom Sawyer," will be presented to Paramount patrons.

"Tom Sawyer," screened from Mark Twain's story, comes as a Christmas gift. The scenario was prepared by Julia Crawford Ivers, and the picture was directed by Wm. D. Taylor.

"The Spirit of '17" will introduce Katherine MacDonald, in support of Jack Pickford, and picturizes an original and novel story of how a town was saved from rioters by enlisting the aid of the inmates of a home for old soldiers.

Lowry Uses Many Cameras for Goldwyn War Feature

For the Ira M. Lowry spectacle, "For the Freedom of the World," which Goldwyn is releasing to exhibitors of the country, it is said that twenty-seven cameras were used to get the trench scenes.

"You've got as many cameras as we have machine guns," remarked an officer in charge of the troops who manned the trenches.

Dancer in "Seven Swans" Escapes U-Boat Fate

Grace Martin, one of the dancers in the Paramount Christmas play starring Marguerite Clark, "The Seven Swans," came to America on the ill-fated liner Arabic, which was torpedoed by a German U-boat and carried down a number of its passengers and crew. Miss Martin, who is from the Alhambra, London, told of her terrifying experiences the other day.

Brady Supervises Production of "The Cardinal"

Cardinal Mercier Is Central Figure of the Feature, Which Is Directed by George Archainbaud—Story Laid in Belgium

CARDINAL MERCIER, one of the outstanding figures in the early days of the war in Belgium, has been made the central personage of a new photodrama provisionally called "The Cardinal," directed by George Archainbaud under the direct supervision of William A. Brady, it was announced last week.

The picture, which is not directly a war picture, since it contains no battle scenes, is in eight reels, and the dominating role is embodied by Montagu Love, the principal member of whose support is Jeanne Eagels, the young leading actress of George Arliss's company.

The story of "The Cardinal" is laid entirely in Belgium with the exception of a single episode depicting the history-making visit of Cardinal Mercier to Rome seeking the intervention of the Pope.

At the beginning Belgium is at peace, totally unsuspecting the calamities which are to follow with such astounding swiftness. In the great cathedral, which is thronged with devout men and women, the Cardinal is celebrating mass. Suddenly this scene of tranquil yet impressive religious observance becomes a tumult. German troops rush in with hoarse cries and clattering accoutrements. The people, in mingled horror and indignation, attempt to resist the invading force. A soldier attacks a young woman, who resents the action by slapping his face. Instantly she is shot down and the troops overrun the edifice, brutally ejecting the civilians and advancing even to the altar, where the Cardinal in the full majesty of his holy office, defies them. They retreat, but pile up the furnishings of the cathedral and set fire to them.

From this point onward there is a rapid succession of events military and otherwise, in which "the protector of Belgium" matches his wits against the mailed force of the invaders, playing upon their superstitions, meeting craft with craft and pitting the power of the Church against the enemy's arms.

Universal Specializes in Harry Carey Types

Jack Ford Will Produce Westerns from Stories He Writes with George Hively—Much Care and Time Given to Production

HAVING identified Harry Carey with features that especially involved Western atmosphere, wild riding and shooting, Universal is undertaking a campaign of promotion for this particular style of photoplaying in which Mr. Carey will be coupled with the production of a series of special features, it was announced this week. Jack Ford, who has directed the horseman for many months, will produce these attractions from stories he will invent as collaborator with George Hively.

The Harry Carey features will be given plenty of time in the making. Distances to "locations" will count as nothing if the proper terrain is available once the cavalcade of horsemen and actors arrive. Plots will be studied out carefully, situations involving the dash and daring of the old West will be created, and Universal's Harry Carey pictures promise to the uninitiated the genuine breath of the prairie, the reckless dash and splurge of the plainsmen and the true reflection of a passing era.

The first of these special productions will be "Bucking Broadway," combination of episodes that link the Great White Way with the grassy plains. Molly Malone, L. M. Wells and Vesta Pegg will have the chief rôles in Mr. Carey's support, and there will be a large cavalcade of horsemen to raise the dust and animate the scenes. "Bucking Broadway" will "buck" the asphalt and subway canyons of New York's main street during the current days at the Broadway theatre as a prelude to general circulation December 24.

Dressing Rooms Were Never More Honestly Pictured Than in "Broadway Love," Dorothy Phillips' Forthcoming Bluebird Feature

Bluebirds for January Present Favorite Stars

Carmel Myers, Mae Murray, Ruth Clifford and Franklyn Farnum Among Stellar Lights That Month—Other Features Also Completed

CARMEL MYERS, in "My Unmarried Wife," Mae Murray in "The Eternal Columbine," Ruth Clifford in "The Highest Card," and Franklyn Farnum in "The Catamount," will provide Bluebird attractions for January that promise to sustain Bluebird's reputation for good entertainment. Violet Mersereau in "The Wild Cat" and Dorothy Phillips in "Broadway Love" have also completed plays to add to the good start Bluebird has planned for the New Year. All of the stars are now busy on location, preparing releases far in advance of present requirements.

Mae Murray in "The Eternal Columbine" will offer the art that first gave her public prominence — dancing and pantomime—in artistic combination. Pierrette and Harlequin, stand-bys of the European stage in weaving pantomime of traditional interest, furnish a prelude to Sheridan Bickers's story which Robert Leonard has produced.

Carmel Myers, presenting "My Unmarried Wife," makes her second appearance as a Bluebird star January 7, in a play that promises to fix her in assured favor with the exhibitor and his public. Out of a multiplicity of themes and schemes for photoplay entertainment there has come from Frank R. Adams's story, originally titled 'Molly and I," screen novelty that finds its principal charm in a reflection of everyday life. Kenneth Harlan is leading man for Miss Myers. Beatrice Van, Patrick Calhoun, Mark Fenton and Jack Hutchinson are in the cast.

Ruth Clifford, star of "The Highest Card," will have Monroe Salisbury as her leading man in another Rupert Julian Bluebird. In this new offering Mr. Julian acts as well as directs, essential roles also involving Al W. Filson, W. H. Bainbridge and Reta Pickering in the portrayal of Elliott J. Clawson's screen-plot.

Franklyn Farnum's Bluebird, late in January, will be "The Catamount," based on a story by R. N. Bradbury and F. H. Clark, prepared for the screen by Charles Kenyon and produced by Joseph De Grasse. The plot deals with ranch life. Edith Johnson will be Farnum's leading lady and Fred Montague, Charles Hill Mailes and J. Morris Foster will have supporting roles.

Clara Kimball Young Engages New Leading Man

Clara Kimball Young, who recently completed, with her own company, a screen version of "Shirley Kaye," one of the last season's stage successes, and who is now at work on her forthcoming production of "The Marionettes," has added to her forces Corliss Giles, whose work with Lou-Tellegen in "The Ware Case" and "The King of Nowhere," placed him in the front ranks of the younger actors. His engagement with Miss Young marks his first appearance in pictures.

In "Shirley Kaye," Mr. Giles plays the part of John Rowson, the young railroad magnate with whom Shirley flirts and later falls in love. So pleased was Miss Young with his support and his artistic interpretation of the role, that she induced him to sign up for "The Marionettes." Aside from his work with Lou-Tellegen, Mr. Giles has a long record of achievement behind him; he appeared as leading man for Catherine Countiss, also in "The One Woman" company, "The Iron Door" company and in "Mother Carey's Chickens"; for two years he played stock in the Castle Square theatre, Boston, and for five seasons acted as leading man for Jessie Bonstelle in Buffalo and Detroit.

Miss Young as Shirley Kaye draws the picture of a high spirited society girl whose father is tottering on the verge of bankruptcy. With disaster upon them, she bring to the issue feminine wiles, a clever wit and an uncanny penchant for high finance. In the end she saves the day and wins for herself a husband. It is a role said to be entirely foreign to anything Miss Young has heretofore attempted, and shows the star in a new light. This latest of the Clara Kimball Young productions will be distributed through Select Pictures, and will probably prove one of the season's clean-ups.

"Man Without Country" Recruits for Uncle Sam

Jewel Announces That Picture Has Had Marked Influence on Young Manhood of America—Exhibitor Writes Letter About It

"THE Man Without a Country," the Jewel feature which has been very successful as a motion picture attraction, and which has also been, it is said, the means of securing funds for the American Defense Society, has also done its bit for the country by acting as a recruiting medium, according to reports from Jewel this week.

Letters said to be in the files of the American Defense Society and the Jewel Productions, Inc., show that the picture has had a marked influence on the minds of boys and men who were undecided as to the proper course to take, in doing their duty.

The following example shows that not only in the audience has the picture made an impression but "behind the scenes" as well. R. C. Black, manager of the Campbell theatre, Hazleton, Pa., in a letter to the Jewel offices in New York, said: "I wish to call your attention to the Jewel production, 'The Man Without a Country,' which we ran here this week. I consider it one of the greatest pictures based on the war question ever made. It not only had the desired effect upon the people of Hazleton who witnessed the production and considered it an unusual treat, both in regard to acting and photography but especially in regard to its moral effect to stimulate recruiting. Not only that, but it has been the means of losing my operator as well as a friend of his, who witnessed it and caused them both to enlist in the army.

"This is no joke but it is a positive fact, and you are to be congratulated in having such a fine picture.

"If convenient to you I wish to play a two-day repeat on the same at a reasonable price."

Three "Big V" Companies Busy on New Comedies

Director-Player Lawrence Semon Goes from East to West Coast and Gets Into Action at Once—No Connection with Vitagraph Comedies

PRESIDENT Albert E. Smith, of Greater Vitagraph, announced this week that he now has the three "Big V" comedy companies at work in the Hollywood plant. Lawrence Semon, author, director and star of the original company, who recently signed for another year, left New York some days ago with his company and immediately upon his arrival on the Coast jumped into action. A company of acrobats and girls had been engaged for him by W. S. Smith, western studio manager for Vitagraph.

The Vitagraph president calls attention to the fact that the activities of those three laugh-making companies in the West are distinct from the "Vitagraph Comedy" company in which Edward Earle and Agnes Ayres are starred under the direction of Graham Baker. This is the new brand or high class comedies announced by Vitagraph, the first of which is to be released this week.

The initial "Vitagraph Comedy" will be entitled "The Family Flivver" and will show a little page from real life wherein a young married couple decide to buy their first car, and immediately the two families of the newlyweds declare themselves in on the first ride. This complication is barely met when the bride has a new fur coat sent home on approval with the idea of dressing up to the new automobile. The picture closes with the youthful husband despairingly consulting the checkbook so suddenly transformed into a bankroll ragamuffin.

Earle and Miss Ayres have completed the second in this new series of farces, the title of which will be "Paging Page Two." This is another little episode of married life.

The arrival of the Semon company now gives Vitagraph five companies at work in its western plant, which has recently been greatly enlarged. One of these is a Blue Ribbon Feature company headed by Nell Shipman and Alfred Whitman, under the direction of William Wolbert, a serial company with William Duncan, director-star, and Carol Holloway, at its head, and three "Big V" comedy companies. One of these is the Semon company, another is that with Earle Montgomery, and Joe Rock under the direction of Dave Smith, and the third is headed by Jack Dill and Carolyn Rankin, under direction of J. A. Howe.

J. Barney Sherry Leads New Triangle Program

"Fanatics" Is Slated as First Release the Week of December 9, Followed by Feature, with Roy Stewart and Fritzi Ridgeway

THE Triangle program for the week of December 9, as announced last week, offers features certain to attract attention, according to reports. "Fanatics," with J. Barney Sherry in the leading role, supported by Olga Grey and Donald Fullen, is scheduled as the first release. "The Learnin' of Jim Benton," with Roy Stewart as the star and Fritzi Ridgeway supporting, will follow.

In "Fanatics," the story of a man's desire for "silks, satins, wine and women" is presented. Robert Lathrop (Donald Fullen), an unusually successful business man, casts his career into the mire in order to be near Lola Monroe (Olga Grey) and to lavish his time, money and affections upon her. As time goes by Lathrop's money disappears. Finally he finds himself in a rut. He needs money badly. So he goes to his closest friend, Nicholas Eyre (J. Barney Sherry), steel king and friend of his wife's dead father.

The results of a country school teacher's efforts to convert a ranch owner and two gunmen are shown in "The Learnin' of Jim Benton." Roy Stewart, whose work in Triangle productions has attracted considerable attention of late, plays the part of Jim Benton. Fritzi Ridgeway is the school teacher.

In the Keystone comedy, "The Grave Undertaking," by George Binns and Lloyd Bacon are both very much in love with Maude Wayne. It is a battle of wits between both for the hand of the fair maiden. But one day Maude imagines she sees Lloyd carrying on with another, and in order to get back at him showers all her attentions on Binns. Lloyd can't stand this and he attempts to commit suicide. When two undertakers, both very hard up for want of business, arrive to care for Lloyd, the broken-hearted suitor begins to grow nervous. The undertakers depart, Lloyd stands up, coffin and all, and after being extracted from his "packing," he prevents George from securing a fortune that he (Lloyd) has inherited while he was "dead." Of course, Bacon "brings home the bacon."

"Their Straying Feet" and "When War Meant Peace" will also be released on the regular program for December 9 as one-reel Triangle Komedies.

William Russell and Francelia Billington, American-Mutual Stars, in "New York Luck"

Russian Art Film Leads Pathe Newest Program

The feature of Pathe's program for December 9 is announced as "Her Sister's Rival," a Russian art film (special) in five reels, which is to be released on this date in place of "Over the Hill," first announced.

This is said to be a powerful story artisically handled by a cast composed of the finest actors and actresses in Russia.

Doris Kenyon stars in "The Hidden Hand," No. 3—"The Island of Dread"—with Sheldon Lewis, Arline Pretty, and Mahlon Hamilton; episode in two reels, produced by Pathe. "The Hidden Hand" is already being spoken of as another "Elaine." Scientific impersonation is said to play an important part in this episode, in which it develops that both Dr. Scarley and Doris's Uncle Abner are attempting to gain control of the Whitney estate.

Mollie King appears in "The Seven Pearls," No. 13—"Over the Falls"—with Creighton Hale and Leon Bary; serial, episode in two reels, produced by Astra. In this episode Perry Mason, arch villain, is carrying Ilma, the young American girl, to deliver her to the Sultan. They imprison her in a warehouse. Picking up Stayne's smouldering cigar butt, she blows on it, places it against the little fuse and the heat sets the automatic sprinkler system in action. Harry, hearing the big gong, rescues her.

Harold Lloyd's vehicle is "Move On," a one-reel comedy produced by Rolin. Harold Lloyd, Harry Pollard and Bebe Daniels form the trio that makes this comedy a laugh producer, with the laugh largely on the police force.

"Our National Park"—"Yellowstone Park—Its Terraces" and "The Grand Canyon" form a split reel, Pathe colored travel picture.

New Triangle Feature Progresses at San Diego

Taking exterior scenes for "Mr Butterfly," at San Diego, E. Mason Hopper and his company are said to be securing excellent results. Some of the scenes are being taken in the Japanese Gardens, one of the show places along the Pacific Coast.

"Mr. Butterfly" is a reversal of the characters and situations in John Luther Long's story, "Madame Butterfly." Teddy Sampson will appear in the leading feminine role as a Japanese girl, and Thomas Kurihara and Jack Abbe will also have important parts in the ipcture.

While Hopper and his company are busy in San Diego, stage carpenters and artists are rushing work on the interior sets at the Culver City studio. Everything is being made ready for the members of the company so that when they return they can start right in on the interior scenes. It is predicted for "Mr. Butterfly" that it will be one of the most stupendous productions yet attempted.

Jack Dillon, who is directing Olive Thomas in her latest picture, "Limousine Life," adopted from Ida M. Evans' story of the same name, has been shooting scenes at Norwalk, California, one of the oldest towns in the southern part of the state.

Film Specialties

Bray Pictographs Show an X-Ray of the Teeth

"Making the Ocean Safe" Also Promises Interest as Antidote for Submarines—Monoprinting Still Lives After All These Years

THAT the screen is one of the most important means of disseminating information and entertainment to millions daily has been recognized many times over by everyone in the country, but that its powers as an educational medium have been increasing rapidly seems not to have made a great impression thus far.

As an indication that Paramount-Bray Pictographs are keeping apace with not only entertainment but education as well, a subject made in conjunction with Life Extension Institute of New York, and telling of the importance of care of the teeth, is included in Pictographs No. 96.

It would appear that William Deneau, a member of the 108th U. S. Engineers, has perfected a device that may take the last bit of fear out of an ocean trip through the submarine zone. At least the demonstration of the use of this device, as shown in the ninety-sixth release of Paramount-Bray Pictograph, the "magazine-on-the-screen," would seem to indicate that the hoped-for result has been achieved.

In the ninety-sixth release of Paramount-Bray Pictograph, Salvatore Antonio Guarino, who is endeavoring to revive public interest in "monoprinting," an art originated by the great masters of the Middle Ages, shows how a monoprint is made. Here, probably, for the first time, the making of a portrait by this process is depicted in motion pictures.

Goodrich Dirt and his "Pup" once more step forward to amuse Paramount audiences in this release and in their latest efforts Wallace Carlson, creator of this pair, manages to get them into and out of a great many amusing complications when they essay to do a "turn" as a vaudeville team on "amateur night."

Universal News Reel Does Its Share for Red Cross

In the final drive the Red Cross is making to enroll ten million people to subscribe a dollar each and thus earn the right to wear the Red Cross Button, Jack Cohn, of Universal, in an announcement has given his assurance that the news reel department of Universal will do its share in aiding the campaign.

"When I was down in Washington the other day," he said, "representatives of the Red Cross asked me what Universal was doing to help their campaign. I told them The Animated Weekly, Current Events and The Screen Magazine, the three Universal news reel weekly services, had already sent out a number of Red Cross pictures, but that we would send out more.

"So we are going to make pictures showing what the Red Cross is doing now for our soldiers, both at home and in France, and also pose pictures showing what work they will do here when transports begin bringing back the wounded. We'll show, too, that every dollar given to the Red Cross gets there—that there's no fifty-fifty split with agents."

Burton Holmes Adds Cowling to His Camera Staff

Herford T. Cowling, formerly head cinematographer for the U. S. Reclamation Service, is now a member of the staff of Burton Holmes, whose expeditions are so widely picturized in Paramount-Burton Holmes Travel Pictures.

He accompanied Mr. Holmes on his last summer's wanderings through the South Sea Islands, New Zealand, Australia, The Philippines, China, Japan, etc. Mr. Cowling is distinctly an out-of-door photographer and as such has been exceedingly valuable to Mr. Holmes.

Essanay Scenics Take Audiences into Canada

What is claimed to be some of the most wonderful scenery ever caught by the camera is found in "Banff National Park," a trip through the great playground of Canada, the third of the Essanay scenics released through General Film Company. Unusual photographic effects were obtained, it is said, in filming the wonders of the 2,000 square miles comprising the mountain park region. The falls and rapids of the Bow River valley, a climb up Cascade Mountain, Mount Rundle, nearly 10,000 feet high, and other wonderful peaks and scenic spots are a few of the features in this picture. The Takakakaw Falls are shown in all their splendor, as well as Snowpeak Avenue.

Animated Weekly Covers Phases of World War

The different phases of the world war in its relation to this country are said to be superbly displayed in Universal Animated Weekly No. 100, which covers the ground thoroughly. Scenes from California to far away Morocco are graphically pictured in the latest issue of this popular reel magazine.

The 940 members of the Officers' Training Camp at Fort Myer, Va., pass in review before President Wilson and Secretary of War Baker before receiving their commissions as officers of our army of freedom. Months of training have made the boys both morally and physically fit and they are welcome additions to the new National Army.

Rifle experts who have been "Over There" are seen teaching future generals at Plattsburg how to shoot, and the boys are becoming proficient in the rudiments of small arms practice.

The gas bag is taking its place in war, and this coal furnace product, it is shown, is being successfully used in England as a substitute for gasoline in generating power.

Other scenes are also included.

Women Don Overalls in Universal Current Events

Among the other interesting subjects announced by Universal for its Current Events No. 29 is the one showing how the woman has come to the fore recently to take the place of her stronger brother who may be at war or incapacitated. In the scenes presenting women in men's places are included kitchens in hotels, as chefs, farmerettes in England, reaping the harvest, working on roads and farms, driving a team and various other pursuits.

Other subjects in Universal Current Events No. 29 are "Whisky That Failed to Do It's Bit In War Taxes Drafted by U. S.", "Vast Crops Laid Waste as Huns Flood Farms," "Braved Sea Terrors to Rid World of Hun Apostle of 'Kultur'," "Battle Practice Puts Marines in Fighting Trim," and cartoons from newspapers.

Short Subjects in Review

By Clara DeLissa Berg

DEAR SIR

MAY we respectfully call your attention to the neat plaque adorning the center of this page. It tells a true story, witnessed by our own editorial eyes. "We told you so" last week in our foreword. Here is confirmation.

And now a story of a man not from Missouri—from Jersey, in fact. But a man who had to be shown and set out to show himself. By judicious expenditure not only of money but of observation and thought thereon, he changed a theatre from a money loser to one that is drawing capacity audiences of the best type. The house, by the way, is the Palace, in East Orange, and the name of the astute manager is D. J. Shepherd.

Mr. Shepherd had been lightening his program of one and two features with a certain brand of one-reel comedies, and with topical reels and travelogues. He wanted to find out how great a factor these short stories were in attracting patrons, so he dropped out the comedies. Dead silence.

He then dropped the topicals and travelogues, and immediately came inquiries as to the omission and requests that these subjects be restored. He is now running a Burton Holmes Travelogue and the Universal Animated Weekly the first half of the week; the Paramount-Bray Pictograph and the Universal Current Events during the second half.

Do we generalize truly?

PIRATES AND PIRATE HUNTERS

Not all the fighting and not all the heroes are on the great battle fronts in France and Europe. In far away regions hardly known to us even by name men are on guard against the enemy. It is one of these danger spots that the Pathe cameraman has found and pictured very charmingly in "Along the Vardar in European Turkey" (Pathe Exchange, Inc.). Here the sentries go out in tiny boats along reed-bordered rivers where the foe may well lurk. A three-hundred-year-old bridge offers its arch as a shelter, and a relief expedition with provisions is cordially welcomed. The film is in natural color.

On the second half of the reel the drysticus, a minute but ferocious sort of crawfish, pursues his career of frightfulness (A Fresh Water Pirate) unchecked. Clever titles bring out the humor of life as viewed under the microscope.

ART AND SCIENCE

The mysteries of Oriental art present no difficulties to Professor Thatcher of Columbia University. The old process known as "tied dyeing," by which a pattern of unusual softness is obtained, is demonstrated by one of his assistants.

Her nature gets HER patterns is seen in the wonderful growth of crystals under the microscope. Salicon buds into perfectly symmetrical rosettes; other solutions in solidifying present darting ranks of spears.

"Clay Chappies" gather at a banquet and indulge in toasts of wordly wisdom.

HOT AND DRY OVER THE RIO GRANDE

Tabasco sauce and water! That's what Mexico is coming to, and the man responsible for Mexico's change to non-intoxicants comes from Tabasco itself. In Universal Current Events No. 29 he receives a welcome on returning to his native town after a successful lobbying expedition to the capital that seems to prove the popularity of the new order of things.

A matter which must soon engage the active attention of this country is the care of men disabled in war and their education in new trades. England is already busy with this, and the maimed and blind are shown engaged in useful craftsmanship at the workshops founded in London in memory of Lord Roberts.

Lively work is done by the United States Marines in demonstrating their ability to rescue wounded comrades under fire. The picture is well taken and extremely interesting, as are all of the Marine Corps pictures shown by Universal.

Cartoonists of Baltimore, Buffalo and Dallas contribute their clever ideas in animated drawings.

X-RAYS AND OTHER WORKS OF ART

WHAT HAPPENED

¶ An audience which by eight o'clock filled a large neighborhood theatre——

¶ Enjoyed Pauline Frederick in the feature——

¶ Laughed itself into hysterics over the latest Chaplin farce——

¶ Showed its approval of the Four-Minute Man and the patriotic pictures that followed——

¶ SAT WITH EVIDENT INTEREST THROUGHOUT A BURTON HOLMES TRAVELOGUE——

¶ And rose to the extent of 50% and left the house when a second-rate comedy appeared on the screen!

Of less scientific interest but much more pleasant than the X-ray charts are the pictures obtained by the process of monoprinting. Salvatore Antonio Guarino, chief exponent today of the new-old art, demonstrates both the ancient and the modern method of obtaining a striking and beautiful picture in many colors from a single impression of the plate.

Buxom young ladies' show how the ocean is freed from terrors by donning inflated life saving shirts and bobbing merrily in the waves. The shirt is equally useful to the man in the flooded trench and the duck hunter who takes to the stream in pursuit of his game.

Goodrich Dirt and Spot take a hand in an Amateur Night, but Spot's agile feet prove the more effective members.

ACTION AND MORE ACTION

Hearst-Pathe News No. 96 opens with a "grand smash." A tank in Toronto, just to show how it would go over a German line, stops behind a big limousine, rears on its hind wheels, butts over the automobile, and comes down with a bang. Then it proceeds with unshaken tranquility on its lumbering way. There is considerable debris where the automobile once stood.

Motorcycles are not usually rated as graceful, but the manner in which those ridden by the Texas Dispatch Bearers of the army negotiate bumps and trenches really deserves the adjective. The camera has caught them both head on and from the rear, and discloses the rhythmic vault and descent of each machine as it takes the obstacle in its path.

Not to be outdone by strenuous man, Lake Michigan gets its back up, and lashed by a ninety-mile gale plays havoc with the beach resorts. The curling combers that drench the shore drive in Jackson Park in Chicago are worthy of the Atlantic.

This display of masculine activity is pleasantly varied by a picture demonstrating the making of Mr. Hoover's Liberty Loaf. It is a symmetrical, appetizing loaf, and weighs, exactly as it should, one and a quarter pounds.

WERE HEADS BROKEN AS WELL?

When Lin McLean came East—and Lin McLean was a Wister understudy of his famous brother, "The Virginian"—he found Massachusetts a pretty tame and cold region compared to Texas. That was because he was looking in New England for what he really left behind and beyond the Rockies. No such experience for the cowboys of the western plains in camp in the Bay State (Hearst-Pathe News No. 95)! To start something, they try breaking in the army mules. It looks as though something besides mules would be broken.

The words of the vigorous patriot addressing a huge out-of-door audience in Buenos Aires are not flashed on the screen, but his expression and the hurrahs that follow his address leave no doubt as to the feeling of Argentina over the German order to sink ships "without trace." A stirring welcome is given to the British warship which arrives in the harbor.

Welcome indeed is the sight of carloads of huge beets grown in California, for with their arrival at the refinery the end of the sugar famine is in sight. Excellent close-ups show the grinders turning out the snowy product.

A hint for Christmas. Even the school children are knitting sweaters for the men in camp.

MECHANICS NEW AND OLD

To the Indian his cornmeal, to the Chinaman and other Orientals their rice. That is the popular conception. But as it happens, at least one little group of Indians, the Chippewas of Minnesota, realize the value of rice and go to much trouble to harvest it. Universal Screen Magazine No. 49 shows in picturesque fashion the primitive but persistent and successful methods employed.

We step a long way forward in mechanical ingenuity when we see how handsaws are made by the long-established firm of Disston. The process starts with the hammering of red-hot ingots into slabs, which in turn are rolled and cut. The laborious point-by-point method of toothing the saw is contrasted with the swift process of today. Various steps in the making of the handles follow. Finally comes the test of the perfectly set and sharpened saw in the sliding of a needle down the groove that lies between the teeth.

The wiles of the would-be slacker would be serious were it not for the cleverness of the examining doctor, who, to quote the delicious Bab, of diary fame, "meets wile with gile." Then they become merely funny. Liveliness and a laugh are also contributed to the reel by pictures taken of an open-air circus given to the patients of Bellevue Hospital by members of the Barnum and Bailey troupe.

CONTRASTS

Our splendidly fit and high-spirited men in khaki are a heartening contrast (Universal Animated Weekly No. 100) to those pathetic victims of war whose distress they and we are trying to lighten. With haggard and often tear-stained faces the poor women of Belgium cluster around the officers who distribute shoes and clothes sent by the American Red Cross. Untouched as yet by the hardships of war, our boys learn the niceties of rifle and revolver shooting at Plattsburg, and at "An Atlantic Coast Port" have a glorious time making play of "digging in," wall scaling and rescue work, and top off these more serious occupations with a very funny sack race. Each event displays the splendid agility of these hardy boys, but perhaps that in which they rush to the aid of wounded comrades and with a remarkable dexterity lift and carry them is the most reassuring to those whose own boys are soon to be in danger.

A picturesque interlude in these scenes of America and Europe is a view of the Cadis of Morocco marching in homage to General Lyautey of France on his arrival in their country.

CUTTING OUT THE DENTIST

If ever there is an unwelcome bill, it's the one the dentist sends you for his most unpleasant services. Mutual Weekly No. 152 shows you how you can cut out that bill, or at least cut it down, by using a toothbrush which rotates and does all the work better than you yourself can do it. The pleased expression of the youngster who tries the new invention augurs well for the tooth welfare of the next generation.

Far removed in mechanical power is the huge crane that in five minutes picks up a locomotive and its tender and swings it aboard a steamer headed for Alaska. Still another evidence of Yankee machine sense is the army camp kitchen. To demonstrate to the man in the street how expeditiously Uncle Sam feeds his boys, the Ambulance Corps encamped in Broad street, Philadelphia, lined its field kitchens along the curbs, and dined in the sight of all men.

The reel contains unusually good pictures on the making of big guns in Washington, views of submarines arriving in Spain, and scenes along the front in France.

WHAT EXHIBITORS ARE DOING

San Francisco Press Club Dines S. L. Rothapfel

S. L. Rothapfel, managing director of the Rialto theatre, New York, was the guest of honor at a luncheon at the Press Club of San Francisco on November 21. The luncheon was tendered the Eastern showman by the Turner and Dahnken Circuit and the Press Club. The purpose of the former in arranging the luncheon was to give exhibitors in that section the opportunity of hearing Mr. Rothapfel on the proper exhibition of motion pictures.

Among those present were: Al Joy, San Francisco Examiner; Thomas Noonan, S. F. Examiner; Fred Dahnken, J. T. Turner, E. B. Johnson, C. L. Langley, E. M. Asher, L. R. Crook, of the Turner and Dahnken Circuit; Eugene Roth, California theatre; Howard Sheean, Rialto; Jack Partington, Imperial theatre; Fred Gibbs, Jewel theatre; Leo Weinberger, Strand theatre; Bert Levy, Bert Levy Circuit; L. Greenfield, Joe Levin and Robert Abrams, Kahn & Greenfield Circuit; H. Scott, Park theatre, Alameda; Joseph Bauer, Wigwam theatre; Abe Markowitz, Western Film Co.; H. J. Gosliner, S. C. Martenstein; Sam Harris and Irving Ackerman, Walter Lyons, Hayes theatre; S. H. Levin, M. McCauley, C. W. Goodwin, Larkin theatre; Sam Gordon, Theo. Rothchild, Lyric theatre; C. F. Mayo, A. Eby, Bob Abrams, Leon Kahn, A. Goldberg, E. H. Roth, California theatre; Harry David, California theatre; Val Clement, Portola theatre; Henry Frohman, N. Herzog and Mr. Mix, St. Francis theatre.

The following film exchange managers were also present: Harry Leonhardt, Goldwin; William Citron, Fox; H. Naugle, Ralph Quive, Vitagraph; L. Heyman, All Star; E. B. Mayer and Charles Rosenthal, of the M. & R.; Morris Markowitz, California; Abe Markowitz, Western; Harry Schmitt, General Film; L. Reichert, Metro; Meyer Cohen, Perfection; N. Levy, Mutual, and E. C. Jensen, World.

EXHIBITOR PERSONALS

INDIANA.—Leila Hollin, owner of the Messner theatre at Attica has purchased the Princess theatre at Williamsport, and will assume personal management of same in the near future.

A. M. Robertson of Morocco has bought the Princess theatre at Rensselaer.

Harry Kouk of Lafayette has bought the Tokio theatre from Voorhees and Son and has already assumed the management.

Will Erb is now manager of the Grand theatre, Pleasantville.

J. S. Sowar is remodeling the Princess theatre, Brazil, of which he is the owner.

J. B. Stine has sold his motion picture theatre at Covington to V. R. Emory.

NEW JERSEY.—Morris Scharff will erect a $40,000 moving picture theatre at Newark.

The Broad theatre will be opened at Salem as a moving picture theatre under the management of J. C. Mason.

The Motion Picture Realty Co. has been incorporated at Jersey City, with a capital stock of $500,000. The incorporators are Charles Drapkin, Jeremiah J. Collins and Paul M. Hahn.

The Camp Dix Amusement Co. has been incorporated at Camden with a capital stock of $18,000 to operate amusement enterprises near Camp Dix. The incorporators are George H. B. Martin, S. C. Seymour and J. Vernon Plum.

The Sixteenth Street Amusement Company, of Camden, has been incorporated for the purpose of operating theatres. The incorporators are F. R. Hansel, John A. MacPeak and I. C. Clow.

NEW YORK.—The beautiful new Rialto theatre, Rochester, which H. C. Eyer has had erected at the corner of Main and Elm streets, is now nearly ready to be opened to the public.

The Buffalo Moving Picture Corporation, of Buffalo, has been incorporated with a capital stock of $125,000 by Frank I. Talbot, Maxwell M. Nowak, Ben Starr, S. K. Talbot and Charles McCready.

A new $75,000 theatre will be erected on the Blood property in Central avenue, Dunkirk, by James L. Drohen.

The Colonial theatre Company will remodel the brick picture theatre at 197 Main street east, at an estimated cost of $3,000.

Jack C. Matthews, of Keeseville, formerly of the Colonial theatre, is the manager of the Plattsburg theatre, Ausable Forks, which is leased by the Weber Theatrical Enterprises. Mr. Matthews has been in the theatrical business for twenty-two years and knows everything there is to know about the game in all its branches. He was manager of the Colonial theatre in Plattsburg for several years and made a marked success of that photoplay house.

Lewis H. Finch has sold the Empire theatre business and equipment at Salem and leased the building to Frank H. Balcon, of Amsterdam. Mr. Finch will continue in the ice cream business.

Middle West Exhibitors Conserve the Coal Supply

According to reports from Omaha exhibitors throughout the Middle West are obeying to the letter the rule about turning off the electric signs to save coal. Even the best lighted theatres in the Middle West are without their flashing signs during the hours when lights are prohibited. Small lighted signs, calling attention to the fact that it is a theatre, and in some cases enabling the theatre to show the name of the play, are permitted and are used.

"Seven Pearls" Finds Favor with New York Manager

"The Seven Pearls," the Pathe serial released in September, is drawing the audiences back to his theatre week after week, according to B. S. Moss, owner of several theatres in New York and Brooklyn.

"The story has caught the popular fancy," said Mr. Moss, when asked to what he attributed the success of the serial. "It is one that not only holds the interest of my audiences, but this interest becomes intensified as episode succeeds episode. Added to the story are popular stars, Mollie King, Creighton Hale and Leon Bary, whom the people like, and the Pathe production of serials. This production means stunts and thrills to satisfy the most exacting and the proper atmosphere to the picture.

"I find that scores of girls and women return week after week to see how Creighton Hale is foiling the villains. Many of them say they are sorry the wicked executioner prevents him from making love to dainty Mollie King."

Des Moines Capital Opens New Cantonment Theatre

Taking advantage of the opportunities offered by the construction of the enormous cantonment at Des Moines, a company of merchants and amusement men have opened a big new theatre at Herrold Station, which is situated practically in the centre of the camp, twelve miles north of Des Moines.

The theatre will be under the management of Walter F. Davis, well-known motion picture man.

It will seat more than 1,500 people. Everything has been done to make it a first-class house. It will have some forty thousand soldiers to draw upon for patronage.

Thanksgiving Show Pleases the Children

The management of the Gertrude McCoy theatre, Fulton avenue and Baker street, Baltimore, presented on Thanksgiving morning a special matinee for children. The performance started at 9.30 in the morning and the main attraction for the occasion was "Your Obedient Servant," adapted from the story, "Black Beauty."

NEWS NOTES FROM CANADA

Canadian Exhibitors Divided on Raising Prices

The opinions of the exhibitors throughout the different provinces of Canada vary as to the advisability of raising their prices. In some districts the reports are good and to the effect that the raise in admission did not materially affect their receipts, while on the other hand, other districts claim they will have to go back to the old prices.

In the maritime provinces the exhibitors have introduced vaudeville into their houses, with a substantial increase in price, and all records to date point to success in this line.

In British Columbia the exhibitors, through their new association, are endeavoring to educate the people by various advertisements in the newspapers the reason for the increase in admission prices, explaining to them very carefully the increased expense of conducting their theatres, including the new war taxes recently levied in that province, increased rental, etc., that they are now called upon to pay.

There seems to be no real reason why the exhibitors cannot keep their theatres open at a reasonable profit if they cater to the public. The people must have amusement to offset the worry and strain under which they are living because of the war, and after all the moving picture theatre is the cheapest and best value for the money that can be obtained.

Canadian exhibitors as a whole are very optimistic and are standing up under the heavy strain of four years in a country at war with a remarkable spirit of patriotism.

Sandusky Exhibitor Discovers Way to Get Pennies

George Schade, owner and manager of the Schade theatre in Sanducky, O., has hit upon a scheme whereby he will not run short of pennies. As most exhibitors are having the same trouble collecting enough coppers, Mr. Schade's original method of handling the situation may be of benefit to others. This is how he did it. All children who brought him 100 pennies were admitted free of charge, as well as receiving a shiney silver cart wheel for the pennies. Three things were accomplished.

Canadian Universal Shows Pictures to Insane

The Winnipeg office of the Canadian Universal Film Co., Limited, has just closed a contract with the Manitoba Government for one program per week to be shown in the Brandon Asylum for the Insane.

This program will consist principally of educational reels. This is quite an innovation on the part of the Manitoba Government, it being the first time exhibitions of this kind have been shown to the inmates of the institution.

Ontario Censors Visit Goldwyn Plant at Fort Lee

To signalize their visit to the Eastern film capital, the members of the Ontario, Can., Board of Censors, who spent the past week in New York, visited the Goldwyn studios in Fort Lee, N. J., and watched Mary Garden, Mae Marsh and Mabel Normand at work. The party was headed by C. W. Matthews of Toronto, who expressed himself as personally most gratified at the opportunity of seeing "the Goldwyn Standard" in actual application at the studio.

Roosevelt Meeting Causes Slump in Toronto Houses

The box office receipts of the suburban motion picture theatres in Toronto, Ont., showed a decided slump on the night of November 26, due to the mass meetings at the armories addressed by Theodore Roosevelt. The downtown houses did better than usual.

Although Roosevelt arrived at 1 P. M. pictures showing his arrival in Hamilton and Toronto were flashed on the screen of the Regent the same night.

New Philadelphia Theatre Is Called the Rivoli

The Philadelphia correspondent of Motion Picture News comments as follows: Without the knowledge or consent of the natives of Philadelphia, some unknown persons have taken it upon themselves to call that city "slow." If it is, then it is not due to the motion picture industry, for it has slipped one over on New York City by reopening the theatre at Fifty-second and Samson streets and calling it the Rivoli. It is just possible that this name was suggested by a well-known brand name for underwear garments, and then, too, it might have been gleaned from the sign announcing the opening of a palatial photoplay theatre in the metropolis, under the guidance of Rothapfel. Carl Miller, formerly of the Knickerbocker theatre, is manager of the playhouse, which opened on Thanksgiving.

Palace in Des Moines Consumes the Soldier Tax

The Palace theatre, Des Moines, has made itself very popular by taking upon itself the burden of the soldier's war admission tax. The close proximity of Camp Dodge to Des Moines has made the soldier patronage a thing to be sought for. Although little has been said about it, the fact has been known for some time that the soldiers hated to "pay to fight," as they called it when forced to pay an amusement tax.

The Palace management realized the depth of this sentiment and has accordingly erected a sign in their lobby which states that they will pay out of their own pockets the war tax on each soldier admission.

Four Theatres in Winnipeg Raise Admission Price

The four largest downtown picture theatres in Winnipeg, the Lyceum, Dominion, Province and National, have raised their admission prices, beginning December 3, from fifteen to twenty cents. This, in the opinion of the managers, is necessitated by the increased cost of feature film rentals, together with multitudinous taxes, both city and provincial.

The Manitoba censor board charges $3 per reel for all pictures censored, and the exchange men "take it out" on the charge exacted from the exhibitors. The law providing for censorship of all pictures exhibited in Manitoba has now been in force almost two years.

Philadelphia Keeps Things Lively in the Industry

Things are moving along in the picture industry in Philadelphia, according to the latest reports, which include the following: The Central Market Street Theatres Company have taken over the management of the Regent theatre, Market street below Seventeenth. This addition gives General Manager Frank Buhler six theatres along the principal business street and leaves the Stanley Company the Palace and Stanley theatres, while the Family belongs to Al Boyd. Those under the control of the C. M. T. Co. are Victoria, Regent, Princess, Savoy, Market Street, Ruby and Auditorium. They are all within a radius of a mile on one street.

Stanley Mastbaum is responsible for the naming of the new William Fox Jewel Carmen production, "The Kingdom of Love." Possibly he got his inspiration from his own throne room, where he is popularly known as the "King of Philadelphia Photoplay Magnates."

"Every little Sunday has a movie all its own," and Philadelphia exhibitors saw the Mutual's production of "The Planter" with Tyrone Power at the Locust theatre.

Parkway Company, in Baltimore, Buys Wizard Theatre

The Parkway Amusement Company last week purchased from the firm of Bohannon, Lewy and Fuld the Wizard theatre of Baltimore, Md. This makes the fourth theatre in Baltimore that is now being controlled by the Parkway Company. Bernard Depkin, Jr., supervising manager of the Parkway interests, will become active manager of the theatre and will attend to the booking of the house. It is understood that there will be only first-class Paramount and Artcraft pictures shown at the Wizard, which is one of Baltimore's finest motion pictures in the shopping and business district. Messrs. Bohannon, Lewy and Fuld, while not taking an active interest in the management of the theatre, will continue to hold interests in the house.

JUST FOR FUN

By LONGACRE

A Tragedy of Which We Were an Eye Witness

LAST Friday afternoon it was cold and bleak. One could easily ascertain this by conversing with the bar-tenders in the saloons. They dispensed with the largest quantity or nickel beers since winter was declared on by the weather man. Pedestrians scurried hither and yon, anxious to get under cover and except for a pretty stiff gale Broadway even, was practically deserted save for an occasional passerby but with one notable exception.

This exception stood firm despite wind, cold and Rector's on the north-east corner of Forty-eighth street and Broadway, gazing intently skyward, or so we believed when first we saw him—for indeed it was a him. He carried rather a heavy load—of averdupois that is—was safely on the distant side of two hundred pounds and wore a blue coat and a black derby besides other men's furnishings. And he gazed intently, fixedly, steadfastly upward.

Sensing a tragedy of the winter such as a man freezing in his tracks we finally approached after watching him for a good five minutes. What was our astonishment to discover him to be none other than Walter Kane Hill, who needs no further introduction.

"Why Walter," we gasped, "what's the matter?"

"One hundred and forty-three, one hundred and forty-four, one hundred and forty-five," was his reply, his words coming slowly and distinctly.

In growing fear we shook his arm. Something had gone wrong. Then an idea suddenly seized us! It was Friday, Walter's pay day, well do we know it, because Saturday is ours.

"You don't have to count it out here do you, Walter?" we inquired. "It's all there without a doubt, every dollar of it."

But he went on and on "One hundred and sixty-six, one hundred and sixty-seven, one hundred and sixty-nine, one hundred and seventy."

Our first conclusion had proven wrong, we realized from the poor fellow's attitude. But then we saw something that we were sure would take Walter's attention away from mere figures—mere numerals, that is. A young lady was hurrying across Broadway. She didn't feel playful at all, but the wind has a way of playing with anyone whenever it wants to, specially if there are skirts in the case.

"See, Walter," we exclaimed, "there is real hosiery for you. Fine isn't it, there are, after all some compensations in a windy day," we added quoting the celebrated publicity purveyor himself, but even this moving exhibition of stuffed silk had not the slightest effect on him.

He was up in the two hundreds then and going strong. "Two hundred and fifty-three — four — five — six — seven — eight—etc." Utterly dismayed we reclined on Rector's step. The life had weakened Walter beyond repair. He was a good fellow when he had it we thought, but now, it had him. That was evident.

"Two hundred and sixty-nine," he went on, "two hundred and seventy," we thought of ringing for an ambulance, "two hundred and seventy-one, two hundred and seventy-two," he stopped with a gentle fade such as is appended to final love scenes.

Springing to his side we made ready to catch him as he fell but the stalwart man only turned to exclaim: "Hello, kid" in his usual gracious manner, "I knew I was right all along. Arthur Leslie bet that there were two hundred and seventy-three stars in that Universal service flag up there and I knew from the start there was one less. Now to collect. Seeyulater."

EXTRA! EXTRA!!

NOW if ever is the time to use that caption. Old J. H. Gilmour who has died in practically every previous picture he has appeared in lives all the way through "Over the Hill," a coming Pathe release.

SOME PRETENDING

JUMPING JERRY WILSON, man about town of parts and of jobs, tells the following little story on himself which happened quite long ago.

He was "acting" now and then for Metro, although he confesses that his name never even appeared as among those present in "others in the cast." When it came to producing "The Pretenders" Jerry was summoned by the director.

"I want you to do a bit as a multi-millionaire," said he.

"Oh, you do, do you?" Jerry came back. "Well, would you mind lending me five dollars so I can 'feel' the atmosphere of the part?"

WEST MAKES A FEW "STATE-MENTS"

BILLY WEST the Chief "Funster" of the King Bee comedies says that the best pencils are made in Pencil-vania (Penn.); the best collars in Collar-ado (Colo.); the finest cans in Can-sas (Kansas); the best doctors in Ill-inois (Ill.); the best sewers in Main (Me.); the happiest marriages in Marry-land (Md.); the best priests in Mass (Mass.); the biggest debts in Oh-I-O (Ohio); the best tax payers in Tax-as (Tex.); the finest wiskey in Wisk-consin (Wis.); the best losers in Lose-iana (La.) and the most lively girls from Ida-Ho (Idaho).

We might ad that Billy West is one of our best "Nuts" even if he does not come from Brazil.

"CRANE WILBUR PREACHES ON TEMPERANCE." This is only the head of a page story, but, oh, Crane, Crane, we haven't the heart to read it.

A WOMAN writes to Triangle: "I have a four and one-half year old boy, a bulldog and a fine specimen of Java monkey who play nicely together. Will you be able to find work for them at the studio?"

Listen, woman, why not try this: Send the boy to school, sell the dog and ship the monk back to dear old Java?

"THE camera's teeth," shrieks Vitagraph's press agent. Well, why not? It's got legs, head and eyes already. Let's have it human while we're about it.

EDITORIAL

Here is our little Christmas list of what we would like in the way of gifts from the press agents. You will notice that the things we desire are gifts of omission rather than commission, but be that as it may. No more:

"Inimitable comedians."

"Supreme emotional artistes."

"Most laughable comedies yet released."

"Virile, human characterizations."

"Adds further to her (or his) laurels."

Stories of how the wonderful makeup of a character actor fooled the corner policeman.

Feature articles concerning the manner in which an actress was discovered observing her picture from beneath a seat in the balcony.

Recipes of how to grow pretty, thin and fat.

Comedians' jokes.

Pictures of famous female stars at work in war gardens.

Squibs regarding the number of fish caught by Mr. Director while off on a much needed vacation (always the first one in two years).

The various peculiar letters received by stars (and others) from admirers.

Estee Studios Offers Modern Conveniences

EUGENE SPITZ, president of the Majestic Electrical Appliance Company, Inc., 5 East Fourteenth street, announces that the property at 361-363 West 125th street, New York, has been remodeled, and now represents one of the most modern and up-to-date studios and laboratories in the East. The studios are known as the Estee's Studios and Laboratory. The work on the studios has been completed only recently, and every modern appliance and convenience known to the art of producing pictures is available.

The studio and laboratory occupy three floors of a modern brick building, which had undergone thorough repairs inside and out. The floor space is 25 by 50, the main floor given over to executive office room. The first floor is devoted to the cutting room and fifteen modern dressing rooms, with all modern improvements.

The lighting equipment is of the modern type. There are fifteen Cooper-Hewitt overhead lights; fifteen Cooper-Hewitt banks and twenty arcs and spot lights available. The overhead lights are of the modern trolley-system type, which can be readily moved to any place of vantage over the studio floor. The building is equipped throughout with the sprinkler system as a fire extinguisher. There are large exits and entrances on both the 125th and 126th streets sides, and these entrances will allow the most bulky props to be carried in and out without inconvenience. The elevator shaft is of sufficient size to permit of a large automobile to be taken on any floor and to the studio floor. The studio space is not obstructed by posts of any kind, the director having a clear, unobstructed space in which to work.

The dressing rooms are the most modern. Shower baths are available and convenient to the dressing rooms. There are about thirty-five carloads of scenery and props of all descriptions at the disposal of the director, and an electrician and carpenter are always available.

The basement of the building is devoted to floor space for a carpenter shop and paint shop. The property room is large and spacious.

Mr. Spitz says that he spared neither money nor labor to make the Estee Studios the most modern possible. He said, also, that negotiations were under way whereby he was to lease the studio for a period of five years to one of the biggest producing companies. He said that he would not announce the name of the lessee until the lease had been actually signed.

Mr. Spitz has been indirectly connected with the picture industry for sometime. The Majestic Appliance Company, Inc., of which he is president, manufactures the Universal Photo Lamp, made expressly for motion picture and portrait studios, or other lines of photographic work where actinic light is required. Mr. Spitz, in connection with his work as studio owner, also furnishes electric lighting for purposes of taking exterior and night scenes where the light of a studio cannot be used. The automabile truck which Mr. Spitz has for transporting his electrical appliances can be driven any distance and light furnished at the most out-of-the-way place.

Jacobs, of Cleveland, Visits Exhibitors in Ohio

G. J. Jacobs, associated with Leon D. Netter in the Masterpiece Film Attractions, of Cleveland, has spent the past six weeks combing the Ohio territory, in order to get a general idea of the attitude of the exhibitors all through the state. "Everybody is complaining about business," said Mr. Jacobs upon his return. "The exhibitors are unsettled. They don't know what they want to book. They don't know what their patrons want to see, and the consequence is that they are booking only from day to day. Whatever can be had in the open market, they will go out and buy, but they are afraid of programs. I didn't find this condition only here and there," continued Mr. Jacobs, "but I found the state of affairs to be pretty much the same wherever I went."

"Such a condition is bound to affect the industry, and everybody connected with the industry feels that there is some radical change in the wind. Just what that change is going to be, no one has definitely stated, but the general impression is that it will work for the ultimate good of the motion picture industry."

Universal Combines Exchange Interests in Chicago

It was announced last week that arrangements have been consummated whereby Universal's Chicago interests will hereafter be operated from one exchange located in the Consumer's Building, at No. 220 South State street, where Bluebird headquarters have heretofore been situated. The Laemmle Film Service, of Chicago, has been taken over by Universal, and the three distributing plants have been assembled for separate and distinct operation at one address.

By this move the distribution of all Universal products will be expedited, making it more convenient for exhibitors to transact their business in Chicago and centering Universal's interests with a view to greater efficiency in every particular. An important consideration, of advantage to exhibitors, should result from the fact that showmen may now arrange for every class of pictures on the market without leaving Universal's premises — everything from state right features, to comedies, news weeklies or program pictures being available under one roof.

There has been a rearrangement of the management of Universal's Chicago interests brought about by the consolidation of the Laemmle Service, Universal, Butterfly and Jewel interests. I. L. Leserman will be in charge of Universal releases; C. R. Plough will handle Bluebirds, and I. Van Ronkel will look after the Jewel state rights features. The new order of affairs went into effect November 26.

Ashley Miller Completes "A Matrimonial Speculation"

Ashley Miller, Vitagraph director, has completed a five-reel version of Cyrus Townsend Brady's "A Matrimonial Speculation," and, instead of resting during the preliminary preparation of an American feature, as yet unnamed, is staging two O. Henry stories, "The Last Leaf" and "The Clarion Call."

It was also announced last week that Mrs. Miller (Ethel Browning) has completed a scenario for Mme. Nazimova, Metro star, under the title of "The Revelation," and it is expected the feature will be announced for early release.

Hodkinson Receives Much Mail on Paralta Releases

Since the announcement was made a short time ago that Paralta Plays were to be distributed by the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation, exhibitors throughout the country have been writing direct to the New York office of the distributors, at 527 Fifth avenue, to secure a Paralta franchise as quickly as possible, it was announced this week.

The Hodkinson organization is establishing exchanges across the country as rapidly as possible, but in the meantime a great number of contracts have been closed.

Music and the Photoplay

By W. E. GREENE, President of Artcraft Pictures Corporation.

Second only in importance to the house itself is the matter of appropriate music in the proper presentation of photoplays. With the growth of the motion picture, and its uplift from a manufacturing project to an artistic industry, music has become a vital consideration.

When the producer has spent a vast sum of money, often running into six figures on a photoplay, he has brought together an artistic ensemble, in which the composite work of numerous artists are harmoniously joined together. In an Artcraft picture we have such stars as Mary Pickford, Douglas Fairbanks, William S. Hart, Elsie Ferguson, Geraldine Farrar and George M. Cohan, admittedly the premier stars of the screen and stage. Their work is directed by such wizards of the screen as D. W. Griffith, Cecil B. De Mille, Thomas H. Ince, Maurice Tourneur, Allan Dwan, John Emerson and other famous producers. Expert photographers film the scenes and attend to the developing and printing.

When the producer has finally placed the picture in the theatre he has exhausted every avenue and used every means at his command to make a pleasing picture, but as viewed on the screen it appeals only to the sense of sight, and is, in fact, "the silent drama." The addition of musical accompaniment gives it tongue, and in reality furnishes the soul of the production, as well as making it doubly attractive by appealing to the sense of hearing of the audience.

The value of the recent Artcraft spectacle, Geraldine Farrar in "The Woman God Forgot," was greatly enhanced by the accompanying music, which has no doubt had much to do with the great success of even this magnificent production.

D. W. Griffith's "Birth of a Nation" was made a stirring subject by the accompanying music, and no one who has witnessed the picture will ever forget the high bugle notes as the Klu Klux Klan appeared, which fairly lifted the audience out of its seats, Consideration of these two pictures, which are conceded to be the most stupendous and artistic film productions in the history of motion photography, produced by Cecil B. De Mille and D. W. Griffith, respectively, shows that the best photoplays it is possible to make, entirely regardless of expense, are made materially more pleasing by the addition of the proper musical accompaniment.

AMONG THE EXCHANGES

Select Appoints Manager for Pacific Northwest

Select Pictures Corporation, it was announced last week, has engaged J. S. Woody as general manager of the Pacific Northwest territory, with headquarters at Select's Seattle exchange.

Mr. Woody was scheduled to arrive in Seattle, December 3, from New York, accompanied by Arthur S. Kane, general manager of Select, who at the same time started on his recently announced trip to the various Select exchanges in the central and middle west districts.

In order to accept the newly-created position as Pacific Northwest general manager for Select, Mr. Woody resigned the position of manager of the Chicago branch of Triangle, which he had held for the past six months. Prior to taking charge of Chicago for Triangle, he had been manager of the Triangle New York exchange.

Mr. Woody handled the Arbuckle campaigns in Chicago before he went to New York to take charge of the Triangle branch. He is credited with having put Arbuckle across in the Chicago territory.

About 1912 J. S. Woody became associated with the General Film Seattle exchange. He was then under Arthur S. Kane, who was at that time special representative of the General Film Company. Mr. Woody's return to work in a company of which Mr. Kane is general manager brings them together again after a lapse of five years.

Here and There

J. W. Scott, of the Denver Mutual office, has returned to that Rocky Mountain metropolis from a northern Colorado trip and has been getting acquainted with his bride of six weeks. He has been at home only one week since his marriage.

M. H. Hoffman has opened the new Denver exchange of Hoffman-Foursquare, Inc., at 1735 Welton street. The exchange will handle distribution of independent subjects in Colorado, Wyoming, Utah and New Mexico.

J. B. Roden, manager of the William Fox offices in Salt Lake City, has returned to the Utah metropolis following a conference in Denver on matters concerning both offices.

Hugh Rennie, Denver manager of Select Pictures, is contemplating a visit to all exhibitors in New Mexico, it was reported last week.

J. M. Cummings, who was recently appointed manager of General's Cleveland office, has been advanced to special representative and has gone to Chicago. From there, after several weeks, he will go into Southern territory.

Dan Phillips, formerly manager for General at Columbus, has been sent to Cleveland to take the place made vacant by J. M. Cummings' promotion.

The Cleveland Kleine-Edison exchange has added a thoroughly equipped projection room to its present suite of offices in the Sincere Building.

The U. S. Exhibitors' Booking Association has opened a Cleveland office in the Sloane Building. A. A. Lee is manager of the branch, which has started with "The Zeppelin's Last Raid."

Ray Powers, auditor of the Victor Film exchange, was in Cleveland recently and entertained the executive members of that branch at a luncheon at the Hollenden.

W. S. Rand, Denver manager for Goldwyn, has reported a big run on "For the Freedom of the World" and "The Manx-Man," particularly in southern Colorado and in New Mexico.

General Film is replacing features with variety programmes in Denver and adjacent territory. The Denver exchange finds, it is said, that four-reel Falcon features with a comedy and educational make a splendid variety combination.

Michalove Succeeds Woody at Chicago Triangle

A change occurred recently in the Chicago office of Triangle when J. W. Woody, manager of the local office, left for New York and his place was taken by Dan Michalove, who up to the time of being transferred to Chicago was Triangle manager in Minneapolis. Mr. Woody's stay in New York was only temporary, as he left almost immediately for Seattle, where he has received an assignment from Select Pictures Corporation. Before he left the Triangle employees showed their appreciation of his generalship during the past six months by presenting him with a handsome diamond stick pin.

Mr. Michalove, who succeeds Mr. Woody, had been in Minneapolis as head of that exchange only four months, when he was switched to the larger Chicago office. He has been in the distributing end of the film business but a short time, but is thoroughly conversant with the problems of showmanship, having operated the five theatres controlled and owned by S. A. Lynch in Ashville, North Carolina, for the past ten years.

James B. Kelly Joins Southern States Film Company

James B. "Smiling Jimmy" Kelly, who until a few days ago was connected with the Consolidated Film and Supply Company as salesman and manager, serving that organization about seven years, resigned November 24 to assume the duties of general Southeastern representative and manager for the Southern States Film Company, with headquarters at Atlanta, Ga.

Joe Leo Moves Up in Fox Circuit of Theatres

Joe Leo, who has been for many years a well-known figure in the film world, has been appointed assistant to the general manager of the William Fox circuit of theatres, now consisting of twenty playhouses, most of which are in Greater New York.

Mr. Leo was closely associated with Mr. Fox in the latter's pioneer days as a showman and as a motion picture producer. It was he who opened the first theatre Mr. Fox ever had, and as the circuit grew his duties were enlarged correspondingly. For several years Mr. Leo had a booking office upon which scores of vaudeville houses relied for their acts. About three years ago he returned to the Fox forces and served at first as business manager for various companies of Fox players making feature photoplays. In this way he obtained an intimate knowledge of actual film-making.

Hoffman-Foursquare Exchanges Report Bookings Brisk

Among some of the important bookings arranged for this past week by the New York Hoffman-Foursquare Exchange on "The Fringe of Society," are the Nemo, Fox's, Comedy, and New York theatres.

There have also been, it is announced, important bookings by this same exchange on "One Hour" and "The Great White Trail," as well as from the Hoffman-Foursquare Exchanges in Detroit, Cleveland, Chicago, Buffalo, Atlanta and St. Louis, who also claim that the other features, "The Silent Witness," "The Sin Woman," "Madame Sherry" and "The Bar Sinister," have been in great demand.

Dickinson Moves Metro in South to Atlanta

Arthur S. Dickinson, manager of the Southern headquarters of the Metro Pictures Corporation, is moving his offices from Chattanooga to Atlanta to meet the rapid increase of business Metro pictures are doing in the South. Sales have been particularly heavy, according to Mr. Dickinson, in the States of South Carolina, Alabama, Tennessee, Louisiana, Mississippi, Florida and Georgia the last year.

IN THE INDEPENDENT FIELD

General Enterprises Purchase "The Liar"

The world's rights to "The Liar," a six-part feature starring Jane Gail, former Universal lead, have been acquired by General Enterprises, Inc., it is announced. The picture was directed by William H. Haddock and is a society drama dealing with one of today's most vital domestic problems.

A trade showing of "The Liar" has been arranged at one of the Broadway theatres next week. The exploiters of "The Warrior" also announced this week that they had disposed of several foreign countries for the McClure picture, "The Seven Deadly Sins."

Active preparation has been started for a complete sales campaign in the interests of "Mother" and the two executives of General Enterprises, Inc., will shortly start on a tour of the country to present the Tucker production to the various state rights buyers.

Arthur H. Sawyer stated this week that several leases for tenants in the new Mather Building, at Washington, D. C., had already been closed and many of the film exchanges will be housed in the new building before the 1st of January.

McClure Reports Big Sales of Feature, "Mother"

Arthur H. Sawyer and Herbert Lubin, General Enterprises, Inc., recently appointed selling agents for the McClure feature, "Mother," have sold the New Jersey rights to Martin Wohlfarth, who is a prominent exhibitor of New Jersey, owning several theatres in Lakewood, Springlake and Laurel, N. J. This is Mr. Wohlfarth's first venture into the field of state rights and he has chosen the George Loane Tucker feature, "Mother," with which to begin his exchange operations.

J. E. Kemp, general manager of Westcott Film Corporation of Minneapolis, Minn., purchased "Mother" for the states of Minnesota, Wisconsin and North and South Dakota. This organization recently acquired the rights of "The Warrior" for their particular territory, and Mr. Kemp made a special trip to New York to witness the screening of "Mother."

Messrs. Sawyer and Lubin disposed also of the territory embraced by the States of Illinois, Michigan, Iowa and Nebraska to James R. Grainger, of the Allen Film Corporation of Chicago, Ill. Mr. Grainger, who negotiated the contract for his company, purchased the rights for "The Warrior" a few weeks ago.

King Bee Company Announce Billy West Features

"The Bandmaster," in Two Reels, Will Be Ready for December—The January Release Will Show the Comedian Entangled in a Harem—Title Not Announced

KING BEE FILMS CORPORATION announce that December 1 it will release "The Bandmaster," in two reels, featuring Billy West.

Billy has the role of a trombone player in a jazz band. Through good fortune he gets entree into a house of society, and becomes a bandmaster. While playing for the guests he recognizes an organ grinder who is posing as an Italian count for the purpose of winning the heiress, who is hostess. He exposes the bogus count, but they will not believe him, and he is ejected. He goes to the organ grinder's room, gets his organ and monkey, and returns to the reception. He enters the ballroom, and, when the monkey sees his master, makes one leap on top of his chest, and cries: 'Popper." Billy, having established that Tony is an impostor, is lionized by all present. At the height of his enjoyment the cook to whom he is engaged appears upon the scene, and in a fit of jealousy she grabs him by the coat collar and drags him off to the kitchen.

The January release will be a two-reel comedy featuring Mr. West in a production, the scenes of which are laid in the Orient. Billy finds himself in a harem, and proceeds to play "Romeo" in a fashion that causes the inmates of the harem to elope with him.

Many startling costume effects are promised in this picture and the interior scenes will reveal some of the finest Turkish rugs, furniture and other props ever presented in a comedy photoplay.

Work on Flynn Serial Progressing Rapidly

Whartons Announce That Serial Has Been Under Production Ten Days—King Baggot and Marguerite Snow in Featured Roles

WHARTON RELEASING CORP. announces that the producing company is now hard at work on the William J. Flynn serial, "The Eagle's Eye," featuring King Baggot and Marguerite Snow. The serial will be distributed through M. H. Hoffman, Inc., Foursquare exchanges. The serial was written by William J. Flynn, chief of the United States Secret Service.

During the past ten days the Whartons have been busily engaged in filming the opening episodes of their new serial, "The Eagle's Eye," written by William J. Flynn, chief of the United States Secret Service, starring King Baggot and Marguerite Snow, which will be distributed through M. H. Hoffman, Inc., Foursquare exchanges.

Scenes about New York City, in which the representatives of the Imperial German Government figure socially, have been taken, including the reproduction of the famous United States naval ball, which was held at the Hotel Ansonia in 1915, just prior to President Wilson's review of the Atlantic fleet. This big affair was staged in the ballroom of the Ansonia between 12.30 and 4 A. M., and was declared by several of the guests who had attended the original festivities to be an exact duplicate of the scene amid which the Kaiser's agents added the finishing touches to one of their most ambitious and daring conspiracies. Several hundred people took part in the re-creations of the event, and, according to the report of Leroy Baker, chief of the Whartons' mechanical staff, the lighting utilized amounted to over 450,000 candle-power.

The cast of "The Eagle's Eye" is now practically complete, and in addition to Mr. Baggot and Miss Snow, Harrison Grant and Dixie Mason, John P. Wade, William N. Bailey, Paul Everton and Bertram Marburgh have signed to fill important roles. George A. Lessey, well known as a stage and motion picture director, is handling most of the preliminary work under the personal supervision of Theodore W. Wharton.

Through the influence of Chief Flynn access has been secured to locations that are now absolutely closed to other picture concerns, while excellent discretion is being used in the filming of scenes showing shipping and other activities of vital import in the conduct of the war. Exhibitors who book "The Eagle's Eye" can be assured of several thousand feet of film crammed with news interest that will not be duplicated by any other production on the market.

Courtney Ryley Cooper, one of the most success of contemporary short story writers, is making the screen version of Chief Flynn's expose of the Imperial Government's propaganda.

Fox Gets Inquiries About "Troublemakers" Feature

Evidence of the popularity amongst exhibitors of Jane and Katherine Lee, William Fox's "Baby Grand" stars, is the number of inquiries about their next picture, "Troublemakers," ready December 9, received at the Fox Exchanges. The little comediennes are favorites, and from the Fox offices come glowing reports regarding their work as "Troublemakers."

Cabanne and Lubin Join Forces in Production Branch

HERBERT LUBIN, sales agent of General Enterprises, Inc., announced this week the consummation of a deal whereby William Christy Cabanne and Mr. Lubin have become associated in the film business.

Mr. Cabanne was formerly one of the leading Metro directors and is responsible for two of Metro's successes, "The Slacker" and "Draft 258." He is the author of both these pictures, which have recently been presented to the public through the Metro exchanges. By the arrangement between him and Mr. Lubin a series of pictures bearing the title of Cabanne Superproductions will be released during the forthcoming year. The General Enterprises, Inc., executive has not yet decided upon the channel of distribution through which the new Cabanne productions will be presented, but stated that an announcement covering this phase of the combination would be made later.

Mr. Lubin has been an active factor in the recent sales campaign covering "The Warrior," and prior to this was the holder of the Metro franchise for the Dominion of Canada.

Frank Hall Buys World Rights to "The Belgian"

FRANK HALL, president and general manager of the U. S. Exhibitors' Booking Corporation, announces that he has purchased from Sidney Olcott the world rights to "The Belgian," Mr. Olcott's late production, for the independent market.

"The Belgian," written by Frederick Arnold Kummer, and founded upon the life of a Belgian artist and his adventures in the world war, will follow the big Ince productions, "The Zeppelin's Last Raid" and "Those Who Pay," as the third U. S. release. It will be given to exhibitors in all parts of the world on a open booking policy not later than January 1.

Especial interest attaches to "The Belgian" inasmuch as it represents the initial effort of Mr. Olcott as an independent director financing his own picture. When given a trade presentation recently at the Strand theatre it made a pronounced hit, not only by the power of its story and the excellent acting of Mr. Whiteside and Miss Grant, but also because exhibitors were at once impressed by its money-getting title and setting. Later it repeated its trade showing success at a special presentation before a notable assemblage at the Ritz-Carlton Hotel on the occasion of the recent birthday of the King of Belgium, to whom Mr. Olcott has dedicated his production, "The Belgian."

"The House of Glass," Young's Next Picture

HARRY I. GARSON, in behalf of Clara Kimball Young, has purchased the rights to "The House of Glass" from Cohan and Harris at a figure said to be in excess of $35,000. Miss Young has finished recently her third picture by her own company. It is titled "The Marionettes," and was produced under the direction of Emile Chautard. "Magda" and "Shirley Kaye" were her first two productions.

"The House of Glass" will be her fourth production, which she will start immediately, and which will be finished during the holidays. Immediately thereafter, Miss Young and her entire company will sail for the West Indies, where she will produce "The Claw," the well-known story by Cynthia Stockley, to be followed by a stupendous production of "La Fille Sauvage" ("The Savage Woman") by Francois Curel.

"Who Shall Take My Life?" Opens in Chicago

"Who Shall Take My Life?" Selig's production, offering a theme opposing capital punishment, opened at the Band-Box theatre, Chicago, last week, and it is reported was a big drawing card. The Illinois rights to this production are owned by the Ideal Film Co., Chicago.

Hoffman Will See Exhibitors on Trip Through West

M. H. Hoffman, Hoffman-Foursquare Pictures, announces that he will meet the exhibitors in the following cities on the dates following the names of the cities: Exhibitors of Detroit, on December 4 and 5; of Cleveland, December 6 and 7; of Chicago, December 8 and 9; of Minneapolis, December 10 and 11; of Kansas City, December 12 and 13; of St. Louis, December 13 and 14; of Cincinnati, December 16 and 17.

"Alice Howell Goes Over Well," Says Murray Beier

Murray F. Beier, general manager of the Longacre Distributing Co., has returned to his desk at 1600 Broadway, after a short trip visiting various exchanges in the interest of Alice Howell Comedies, released by the Longacre Distributing Co.

Beier reports that thriving conditions throughout the country indicate that Alice Howell has already gone over the top and occupies the position for which they have laid claims.

Houses in the large cities are showing Alice Howell from three to seven days. Some of the houses running these comedies are the Superba theatre, Los Angeles, 7 days; West End Lyric, St. Louis, 7 days; Strand theatre, San Francisco, 7 days; Princess Theatre, Springfield, Ill., 7 days; Strand theatre, New Orleans, 5 days; Paris theatre, Denver, Colo., 3 days; Idle Hour theatre, Kansas City, 2 days; Strand theatre, Omaha, 3 days; and one or more days at the Chicago Loop theatres, the entire Loew's circuit in the East, and the big circuits throughout Pennsylvania.

Arbuckle Collides with Train in "A Country Hero"

Comedy of the hilarious sort plentifully besprinkled with melodrama and with a genuinely interesting plot, to say nothing of thrills every few minutes, are promised in "A Country Hero," in which Roscoe "Fatty" Arbuckle will again be presented Dec. 10. This Paramount-Arbuckle comedy, the first to be made in California, is said to be unique among fun films, relying as much on the sensational features such as a collision of an auto and a train, a cafe raid, in which "Fatty" hurls a player piano at a guest as anything else, perhaps, for its appeal.

The weighty comedian is now planning a Western Comedy for later production.

Hall Launches New Method of Foreign Distribution

Robertson-Cole Company, of New York and London, to Handle Foreign Distribution of U. S. Booking Corporation's Releases

A NEW method of distributing motion picture productions in the foreign market has been put into operation as a result of the consummation by Frank Hall, president and general manager of the U. S. Exhibitors' Booking Corporation, one of the biggest deals on record, involving the disposal of foreign distributing privileges to productions released by his concern.

The arrangement, which involves an outlay of upward of half a million dollars, gives to the Robertson-Cole Company, of New York and London, the exclusive marketing privileges to the U. S. productions, of which the new Ince spectacle, "The Zeppelin's Last Raid," is the first, and the Ince drama, "Those Who Pay," starring Bessie Barriscale, the second, and Sidney Olcott's war drama, "The Belgian," the third.

The new system of foreign distribution devised by Mr. Hall, employs a number of original ideas by means of which the foreign marketing of pictures will be greatly simplified. It will eliminate the antiquated and expensive method of selling film productions by cable, and as the Robertson-Cole Company has already established a chain of offices in all the large cities of the world, the new arrangement will enable the Booking Corporation to release its subjects simultaneously in all parts of the globe. It will bring the U. S. in direct communication with exhibitors in cities as far remote as Calcutta, Indian; Singapore, Sydney, and other cities.

In consummating the arrangement with the Robertson-Cole Company, Mr. Hall is applying to the foreign market the same ideas he put into effect in the domestic distribution of U. S. subjects. He conceived the idea of marketing his productions through an already established chain of exchanges and selected the Hoffman-Foursquare system, the Globe Feature Film Company for the New England district, the Consolidated Film and Supply Company for the territory south of the Mason-Dixon line, and the Gersten Exchange for New Jersey. The success with which this plan operated impelled Mr. Hall to apply it to the foreign field and the deal with the Robertson-Cole Company, one of the most substantial exporting organizations in the world, was the result.

Robertson-Cole Company after giving the present method of distributing films in foreign countries exhaustive study were convinced of the efficacy of Mr. Hall's plan, and decided to enlarge their system of branch offices for the express purpose of handling the output of the U. S. Exhibitors' Booking Corporation.

It is their intention to give trade showings of U. S. subjects for exhibitors in all of the large cities of the world, to enable the various film buyers in the foreign markets to see the pictures before purchasing them.

Following its alliance with the Robertson-Cole Company, the U. S. Exhibitors' Booking Corporation will begin immediately to develop their foreign business on a large scale. A special foreign department has been established in the executive headquarters of the company in the Times Building, and the foreign distribution will be under the supervision of Miss Edna Williams, through whose efforts, it is understood, the new alliance was consummated. Miss Williams will act as a representative of the Robertson-Cole Company, and henceforth will devote her entire time to the foreign marketing of U. S. subjects.

The arrangement is understood to cover a period of two years and involves a minimum of twenty-four special productions, all of which will be above the accepted program standard of merit. It is the intention of Mr. Hall and William Oldknow, vice-president and treasurer of the Booking Corporation, to select only productions that possess unusual exploitation qualities such as features founded upon a successful play or popular book. In its first three releases mentioned above, the company has set a high standard.

Hoffman Leaves for Tour of the United States

M. H. Hoffman, Hoffman-Foursquare Pictures, Will Visit Every Branch Exchange in Country—Will Discuss Policy with Exhibitors

M. H. HOFFMAN, Hoffman-Foursquare Pictures, left New York last week on a tour of the country that will take him to every city of importance in the United States. He will visit all of the Hoffman-Foursquare exchanges and confer with the branch managers and exhibitors who wish to discuss with him the policy of the company. He will also take up important matters concerning the exploitation of the William J. Flynn serial, "The Eagle's Eye," which is now under production, with King Baggot in the featured role.

Speaking of his trip, Mr. Hoffman said, before leaving New York:

"We have been working hard for six months now, and our exchanges are assuming their rightful degree of efficiency and importance in their respective territories. Naturally, some of those most recently established have not yet had time sufficient to get into full stride, but these newest offices have started in a manner that is most gratifying.

"I am anticipating, with liveliest interest, the many meetings with exhibitors arranged for me by my exchange managers. They all appear pleased with Foursquare product and plans, and to that end they feel that interviews can help in certain plans we are formulating.

"But especially is there a tremendously keen interest in the distribution of the forthcoming William J. Flynn serial, "The Eagle's Eye," which the Whartons are now making. There is every indication that nothing of a serial nature ever created even a fraction of the interest now being aroused by 'The Eagle's Eye.' In the light of all that it is only natural that exhibitors from everywhere are eager to learn, by word of mouth, of the many important matters relating to this serial.

"The part of the country in which I have a deal of interest is the South; and my visits to our exchanges in Atlanta, and the Hoffman-Foursquare just opened in Dallas, as the stop I shall make at New Orleans, should prove illuminative.

"Contrary to belief which prevails in some quarters, the South is experiencing a period of prosperity that can be turned to account by motion picture organizations—if they offer what is wanted. It is a mistake to continue assuming that the South cannot give such business to the motion picture distributor.

"It is true that a year or more ago, when selling the cotton crop was so difficult, that the South felt the necessity for economy. But more than anything else that put a damper on motion picture business in that section was the quality of pictures that some concerns tried to sell.

"No one can, or should, blame the Southern exhibitor for turning his back on program material of the 'ordinary garden' variety. He merely got tired of this class of pictures and refused to inflict it upon his patrons. An inferior picture, cheaply made, the Southern exhibitor didn't want—at any price. But some distributors incorrectly assumed that he wasn't in the market for fine product.

"My long personal contact with Southern exhibitors was of great benefit. I came to understand their business sagacity, as well as their fine personal qualities. What these gentlemen want is the feature of quality—for the quality people of the South. That means pictures of six and seven reels to form the bulwark of their programs, that are strong in every particular and reflect atmosphere."

"The Warrior" Shown to Soldiers at Fort Slocum

"The Warrior," featuring Maciste, which is being exploited by Messrs. Lubin and Sawyer, for General Enterprises, Inc., was shown last week to the soldiers encamped at Fort Slocum. John F. Chenweth, chaplain, United States Army, and amusement officer at Fort Slocum, requested that this feature be shown to the soldiers at the Fort. They expressed themselves as much pleased with the stirring war scenes shown in this feature and, it is reported, the film was cheered for many minutes at the end of the performance.

Rifkin Reports Big Business in New England

Herman Rifkin, Western Feature Film Company, Boston, who bought, recently, "The Warrior" for the New England States, says that business is good in this territory. The feature, he announces, has been booked on the Poli circuit, last week. It is also announced that the feature has been booked at the Palace theatre, Springfield, for a three days' run.

Mr. Rifkin says that the Ivan productions which he controls in this territory, "One Law for Both," "Babbling Tongues" and "Married in Name Only"—all are meeting with big success. He expects to announce, in the near future, the purchase of some new features for this territory.

No Deposits Required by Fun-Art Films for Comedies

Fun-Art Films, Inc., making a series of two-reel comedies for the market, the first, "A Rag, a Bone and a Hank of Hair," which has just been completed, announces that it does not bind the state rights buyer to a contract. The independent buyer may purchase one, or any number up to the entire output without binding himself in any manner. No deposits are required. It is a case of laying the real goods on the counter in the open market and it is strictly up to the judgment of the buyer.

"This really establishes a precedent in the marketing conditions," said an official, "especially in the comedy field, and should be hailed with a great deal of satisfaction by the state rights buyer, and the exhibitors who have heretofore been compelled to sign contracts for comedies still unproduced. It certainly speaks very plainly of the confidence of Fun-Art Films to turn out comedies that will stand on their own merit."

Those who have seen "A Rag, a Bone and a Hank of Hair" pronounce it excellent comedy.

"Fringe of Society" to Run at Loew's New York Theatre

"The Fringe of Society," the Hoffman-Foursquare feature, written by Pierre V. R. Key, featuring Ruth Roland, Milton Sills, Leah Baird and J. Herbert Frank, will have its first run, it is announced, Wednesday, December 12, at Marcus Loew's New York theatre.

Welfare League See William S. Hart Feature

W. H. Productions announces that William S. Hart as "The Two-Gun Man" in "The Bargain," was shown to the members of the Welfare League, Sing Sing Prison, last Tuesday. Mr. Meagher, chairman of the Mutual Welfare League, was pleased with the entertainment afforded by the showing of this feature and expressed himself as follows:

"I wish," he said, "that we could have more of such pictures to use for this purpose, for I feel that showing one of them does more real good than a hundred lectures or talks. It helps the men to visualize their problems and sets a concrete example for a way to overcome them. During the performance the words of Burns came back to me often, 'A man's a man for a' that.' That is really the thought of the story, and I know that is what it meant to the men here. It is a living message that no matter how low a man may fall there is always an opportunity to help himself up again, provided he has the moral courage to make a decisive attempt."

Trade to See "Those Who Pay" Wednesday

"Those Who Pay," a Thomas H. Ince production, featuring Bessie Barriscale and Howard Hickman, announced as the second special release of the U. S. Exhibitors' Booking Corporation, will be shown to the trade Wednesday, December 5, at the Broadway theatre. The production will be given to exhibitors the country over, both on the franchise fixed price and wide open booking policies not later than December 15. The story is founded upon the eternal triangle—one man and two women—and is reported to be one of the most entertaining dramas of this kind ever produced by Mr. Ince.

Ivan Engages "Readers" for Probable Scripts

Will Comb All Channels of Literature for Material to Put in Screen Form—New Year Promises Bright Things for Company

THAT William Humphrey, Edmund Lawrence and F. J. Gordon, as directors for Ivan, are the men who will leave no stone unturned to carry the standard of Ivan film production into the front ranks of the industry is indicated by announcements of progress from that organization this week.

One of the latest improvements in the producing organization is the installation of several "readers," whose duty is not only to read submitted scripts, but every play, novel or romance of any standing in literature, be it foreign or native tongue. This department is under the supervision and direction of Oscar I. Lamberger, Ph.D., who, having been professor of comparative literature, possesses the qualifications to direct the efforts of the "readers" in proper channels.

Unquestionably the united efforts of the energetic organizations knitted together complete, under the management of I. E. Chadwick, more than augur well for the future of Ivan Film Productions.

Ivan announced this week that, although Ivan Abramson is in no manner connected with the company, the firm will continue to do business under the name of Ivan Film Productions.

In regard to its latest product, Ivan stated that perhaps never before has Leah Baird, who heads the cast in Ivan Film Productions' novel picture, "Life Against Honor," had the opportunity to display her artistry as in this production, directed by Edmund Lawrence.

The picture is said to be replete with entirely novel situations, both from the artistic as well as photographic standpoint. It is said that the picture shows a marked departure from the usual Ivan output.

Murphy Gets New England Rights to "Parentage"

FRED B. MURPHY announces that he has just closed a contract with Frank J. Seng, which gives him the distribution rights of "Parentage," Mr. Seng's independent feature for six Eastern States.

Mr. Murphy's first move, after the closing of the deal was to organize the Liberty Film Company, with head offices in Boston, at 209 Pleasant street, and a branch office in Springfield, Mass., located at 167 Dwight street. Sam Moscow, well known to New England exhibitors, will be in charge of the Boston office, and William F. O'Brien will manage the Springfield exchange.

Mr. Seng said: "I believe that every exhibitor in Maine, New Hampshire, Vermont, Rhode Island, Massachusetts and Connecticut will be glad to verify my choice of a distributor in their territory. The very fact that Mr. Murphy has promised to devote every minute of his time to helping the exhibitors in his territory make money with 'Parentage,' is of importance to every one in this territory."

On December 5 "Parentage" will be given a trade showing in one of Boston's finest theatres. It will be presented with full orchestra effects, using the same musical score that was prepared by Managing Director S. L. Rothapfel, of New York's Rialto theatre.

William Franey and Gail Henry Are Said to Have Cooked Up Some New Ludicrous Situations in Universal's Nestor Comedy, "Secret Servants"

Backer Not to Charge Fifteen Cent Reel Tax

Franklyn E. Backer, Mammoth Film Corporation, Reports Good Business in the West—Exploiting "Who's Your Neighbor?"

FRANKLYN E. BACKER, president of the Mammoth Film Corporation, who has just returned from California, where for the past three months he has been exploiting "Who's Your Neighbor?" in eleven Western States, reports a prosperous condition of affairs as applying to the moving picture theatres there. He states that all of the established theatres are doing a tremendous business and that the returns from "Who's Your Neighbor?" have been most satisfactory.

Mr. Backer, who owns over a dozen important state rights pictures for New Jersey and New York territory, comes forward with a very attractive proposition to the exhibitors with whom he is doing business in this section.

Mr. Backer has instructed his manager to refrain from charging the fifteen cents per reel per day, feeling that this item should be charged to patriotism. He states that as a matter of fact it would be most disastrous not to recognize a situation such as confronts the industry at the present, and which may force many desirable accounts out of business through insistence on rentals which, although under normal conditions would be reasonable, can now only be considered high, for the reason that the expectation of profits must be considerably lessened through the diminished attendance caused by unusual calls upon the public purse, with the consequent decidedly smaller balance to be spent for luxuries. Mr. Backer has accordingly decided to "do his bit" by cutting the rental of all his features to the lowest figure consistent with business principles, concluding that this will result in future advantages to both parties concerned.

Regarding the picture which the president of the Mammoth proposes making on the Coast in the near future, Mr. Backer stated that he was not prepared to go into details at the present time, but that the project was in process of financing and the director and star practically engaged.

Garfield Reports Good Business with "Submarine Eye"

Hermann Garfield, who controls the rights for "The Submarine Eye" in the states of Ohio, Kentucky, Michigan and Indiana, has moved his office from the Belmont Building to 706 Columbia Building, Cleveland. Harry Brown, who handled "20,000 Leagues Under the Sea" for the Barnett Film Attractions, has joined Mr. Garfield. "The Submarine Eye" is booked up solid all through Ohio, and Messrs. Garfield and Brown are now directing all their energies on Indiana.

Fun-Art Films to Give Trade Showing This Week

Fun-Art Films, Inc., will give a trade showing of the first comedy release, "A Rag, a Bone and a Hank of Hair," this week. The second picture is now under production. It is titled "Leo Patrick," a burlesque on "Cleopatra." This will be followed by "The Pullman Car Conductor." Ray and Gordon Dooley are featured.

February Exposition Widens Scope of Operations

According to announcements made this week by the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, not only the motion picture industry but other lines of business as well will be interested in the exhibition to be held in Grand Central Palace, February 2 to 10, next year.

Considerable progress was reported at a meeting of the exposition committee last week.

Nearly All Territory Sold for "The Warrior"

A STATEMENT was issued by the General Enterprises, Inc., last week announcing that more than three-quarters of the available territory for "The Warrior" has been sold.

With the completion of several contracts during the past week the following prominent territorial purchasers are now exploiting the film spectacle starring Maciste in their respective districts: Globe Films, Ltd., Toronto, Canada, for the Dominion of Canada; the Allen Film Corp., of Minneapolis, Minn., for Wisconsin, Minnesota, North and South Dakota; the The Clark and Rowland Theatres Co., for western Pennsylvania and West Virginia; the Jordan-Brewster Co., of Seattle, Wash., for Washington, Oregon, Idaho and Montana; the Special Features Co., of Knoxville, Tenn., for Tennessee, Georgia, Florida and Alabama; the American Film Co., of Philadelphia, Pa., for eastern Pennsylvania, Maryland, District of Columbia, Virginia and Delaware, and the Eastern Features Film Co., of Boston, Mass., for the entire district embraced by the New England States.

All of the above-named purchasers of "The Warrior" have expressed themselves as highly gratified at the reception accorded the film by the various exhibitors in their territories. Arrangements have already been completed by Herman Rifkin, of the Eastern Feature Film Co., of Boston, Mass., whereby "The Warrior" will be presented in the houses of the entire circuit of Poli theatres.

Globe Films, Ltd., of Toronto, Canada, owners of "The Warrior" for that territory, reported this week that the picture had been booked for a week's run at the new Marcus Loew theatre at Montreal.

Argus Pictorial No. 2 Released December 2

Pathe Exchange, Inc., announced this week that Argus Pictorial Number 2 was released December 2, instead of November 25, as previously announced.

Cleveland Exhibitors State Position

The following statement from the committee of Cleveland exhibitors responsible for the recent court fight on the 15-cent tax has been received by MOTION PICTURE NEWS:

In August 1914 the war began.

Since December of the same year motion picture theatre managers have paid a seat tax due to the war cutting off United States revenues, previously derived from foreign trade.

In April of present year, 1917, while Congress was framing the War Revenue law now in force, Cleveland exhibitors went on record in favor of a high rate of income tax with the lowest possible exemption provision; $1,000 for single men and $2,000 for married; opposed admission taxes in any form, and so notified Congress through our Senators and Congressmen. Fred J. Herrington carried copies of our resolutions, as National organizer, to seven state conventions and they took similar action.

League members were shocked to receive telegrams from President Lee A. Ochs, a month later, supplemented by telegrams from the attorney of the Pathe Company, asking exhibitors to wire Congress opposing the footage tax on film and favoring an admission tax on receipts.

Meantime, Varner, of Carolina, was on the ground at Washington denouncing Ochs and the manufacturers for trying to "double cross" exhibitors.

These are historical facts.

The muddle thus produced was APPARENTLY cleared up somewhat by July, and at the Chicago convention we were assured that the matter had been settled and the motion picture trade was to be let alone, chiefly because the showmen had given such loyal co-operation in the sale of Liberty Bonds and other propaganda work.

October 3 brought another shock, which showed that the manufacturers had failed to save their own business, and had dragged ten thousand 10-cent theatre exhibitors in with them by advocating jointly with Lee A. Ochs for the admission tax on tickets. It then became a national law.

C. C. Pettijohn immediately advised all exhibitors to do business as usual; keep a record comparing November receipts with the receipts of November, 1916, and prepare statements for action on a repeal or a revision of the law if results warranted such action in December.

On the other hand, Lee A. Ochs advised very publicly, "Raise your prices of admission and pass all the taxes on to your patrons." Another muddle followed. Those who could raise did so, chiefly the strictly high-class "20 per centers." They went up a nickel—not all of them, though.

Another "10 per cent. group" raised a nickel, and are paying the tax.

Meantime the great backbone of the industry—the ten thousand "70 per centers"—find that 11 cents and 6 cents is emptying their theatres, and as the film exchanges started early in October to assess and collect their "15-cent per reel war tax" they became frantic. Something must be done.

It was then that Cleveland men decided to act to show Washington the chaotic conditions brought about by "somebody's muddling."

Just as Lloyd George's "brutally frank speech" at Paris has brought about inter-allied co-operation, we figured that court action against the manufacturers would do likewise and induce Washington to meditate carefully.

We expected a friendly test of the law would clear the atmosphere, but our "friends," the manufacturers, showed no such disposition. They blocked every move in the court proceedings at Cleveland this week, and prevented the opening of our case for evidence completely, and at a meeting with our committee after the trial they insisted that the ONLY SOLUTION was for the 10,000 "70 per centers" to raise to 15 cents, admitting it "might put half of them out of business as well as half of the manufacturers."

Can the trade stand this? If so, which half?

It is no longer a question of "Who is to blame?"

It is, "What are we going to do at Washington?"

We can at least prove that chaos now exists in our business and ask for relief.

That is why Cleveland sued the manufacturers.

Favorable Progress Reported by Fox Abroad

Spain and Portugal Show Interest in Same Productions That Americans Like—Other Countries Also Get in Band Wagon

PERSONAL reports on the motion picture situation in the United States and in Europe, recently brought to New York by Ernest Reed, managing director at London for William Fox, are declared to be highly encouraging and indicative of continued success of Fox productions in that territory. Spain and Portugal, recently booked for pictures that Fox is showing in the United States, are declared to have manifested the same interest in the productions which has been shown in them by the people of this country and elsewhere.

Communications from Johannesburg, Cape Town and other cities in British South Africa, indicate that exhibitors are awaiting the showing there of "A Daughter of the Gods," the Annette Kellermann picture, and the first of the Fox Special Features, which also are to be introduced to the public of that territory.

Theda Bara superpictures, according to cabled reports, have taken well in Peru, Chile and Bolivia. Somewhat less favorable word comes from Central America, but this concerns transportation rather than public attitude toward the pictures, which, it is said, is altogether encouraging. The difficulty in this field is that express and railroad concerns cannot guarantee films will be delivered safely, so that in many cases it is necessary to employ special messengers to carry them from central distribution points.

The universal appeal of Fox pictures, which is the point most strongly emphasized, recently has had new demonstration through successes achieved in Egypt, India, Ceylon, Burmah and the Straits Settlements. The test here, because of the varying and peculiar racial customs and prejudices of the people, was considered particularly severe, but the pictures are declared to have come through with flying colors and now are considered to be firmly established.

Work is now being carried on with characteristic Fox energy and thoroughness through other portions of the civilized world, the very greatest possible assistance being afforded the foreign buyer in the development of territory in any part of the world.

War Injures Picture Publications in Japan

Vitagraph President Gets Letter from Publisher That Indicates Trade Journals Face Difficult Problems Across the Seas

ALBERT E. SMITH, president of Greater Vitagraph, is in receipt of a letter from M. Tokiwa Yuasa, publisher of the Film Record of Tokio, which indicates a troubled condition among motion picture publications of Japan.

The writer says that some of the publications which have been most successful in the past have been forced to discontinue and many others are on the verge of closing shop, owing to high prices, presumably because of the war. The Kinema Record Company, the oldest in Japan, has had to discontinue, Mr. Smith's correspondent asserts, and has sold all its photos in order to help pay its debts. Several other papers are mentioned by name as being in a deplorable financial condition and the writer says that they, too, will have to close sooner or later.

M. Tokiwa Yuasa also volunteers the information that Japanese motion picture patrons incline more to stars than they do the dramas that are presented. This, however, is not unexpected, in view of the fact that the Japanese have always idolized their actors rather than the plays they appeared in.

Mr. Smith, discussing the letter from Tokio, said it was interesting as a sidelight on motion picture conditions in Japan, although there was nothing to indicate that motion picture business had fallen off in the Flowery Kingdom.

"In our regular business with Japan," said Mr. Smith, "there has been nothing to indicate that the attendance in the motion pictures of the country is decreasing, but the letter which has come to me would seem to show that the 'fans' over there are not reading the printed matter in the picture magazines of their country as much as they did in the past. The publisher who wrote to me simply mentioned 'high prices' as the cause for the unfortunate situation in the publishing field, but failed to go into details. I wish he had, because all of the reports which we have had through our foreign sales department have been to the effect that conditions in the Far East, so far as exhibitors are concerned, are as good as at any time since the beginning of the war. We do a considerable business in the Japanese market and have not noted any signs of depression over there.

"It may be that the writer of this letter was referring to the high price of paper as the result of the war and if this is the case it is only local to that particular industry and does not necessarily have any effect on the motion picture business as such. The same conditions prevail, to a greater or less extent in this country."

CHICAGO NEWS AND COMMENT

By WILLIAM J. McGRATH

Censorship Hearing Unearths Charges Against Censor

Dramatic charges against Major Funkhouser stirred the august council chambers one day recently during the hearing on Chicago's censorship troubles before the judiciary committee of the City Council. The hearing came to a sensational climax when Attorney Michael L. Igoe, representing Mrs. Juliette Stuart, one of the censors, charged the Major with attempting to intimidate the members of the censorship board before their appearance before the investigating committee. The Igoe charges came as a surprise and caused considerable stir among the members of the committee which has before it an ordinance introduced by Alderman Steffen providing for a board of appeals to pass on Major Funkhouser's decisions.

When asked why she needed council Mrs. Stuart replied that the Major had declared that she probably would be in danger of losing her job if she gave information to the aldermen.

"This Major of yours has browbeaten women censors on the board and threatened them with discharge," said Mr. Igoe. "Last Saturday, after Mrs. Stuart was subpoenaed before your committee, Mr. Funkhouser threatened her and attempted to intimidate her. He read her and the other censors a rule of the police department which absolutely prohibits a member of that department from giving out any information.

"Neither Mrs. Stuart nor any member of that censorship board is a member of the police department, and I charge that an attempt is being made to withhold information from this committee with reference to censorship conditions in Chicago.

"I read that rule to the whole censorship board," replied Major Funkhouser.

"Do you consider her a member and your other censors members of the police department?" asked Mr. Igoe.

The Major replied that he did and then Mr. Igoe turned to Mr. Ayres, assistant corporation counsel who has been Funkhouser's aid in moving picture fights, and asked the same question.

"She is a member of the police force, not the police department," replied Mr. Ayres.

"Then if she is a member of the police department why does she pay money into the municipal employees' pension fund?"

The testimony on the workings of the censor board showed there was considerable friction there. Major Funkhouser said the chief of police was the real censor of pictures but Mrs. Stuart pointed out that since Chief Schuettler was made head of the police department Major Funkhouser had enjoyed more power with the scissors than ever before.

The other two women censors called were not on the stand long. Miss Kerr, however, contradicted the Major on important points in reply to questions from Chairman Steffen, Alderman Maypole and Alderman Rodriguez. She denied the Funkhouser charges that there had been a difference in the handling of pictures between the Healey and the Schuettler police regimes. She also admitted that if the board was not unanimous the decision on the picture was referred to Major Funkhouser for final decision.

Jones Would Awaken Exhibitors to Censorship

Aaron J. Jones, president of Jones, Linick & Schaefer of Chicago, is ready to go on the mat with those exhibitors who lie back in their easy chairs and refuse to consider that the battle over the question of censorship is an affair which concerns them in the least. Mr. Jones says it is not the producer's fight alone.

"Censorship exists only because of the exhibitor himself," says this live wire exhibitor. "The average exhibitor maintains that he is not interested in censorship but that it is up to the producer only. He is badly mistaken, and does not realize the injury he is doing himself when he airs such views. It does not occur to him that when his patrons leave his theatre, after having witnessed a picture butchered by the censor, that they don't reason why the censoring was done or who produced the picture. They simply go away with a bad taste in their mouths and in time come to avoid the theatre showing the 'bad picture.' It is only by a get together movement among the exhibitors that the right kind of censorship of motion pictures can ever be had."

Hearst-Pathe News Includes Touch of Christmas

The Hearst-Pathe News No. 95, announced this week by Pathe, will spread a portion of Yuletide warmth throughout the houses that show it, according to the schedule of scenes included in the reel.

One of the subjects that will no doubt interest American audiences greatly is that covering "Sammie's Christmas," showing how people of the country have answered the call to send suitable things to Pershing's men in France.

Other scenes in the Hearst-Pathe No. 95 are taken at Davis, Cal., on the French front in France, at Fort Myer, Va., in Argentine, London and in Massachusetts. The cartoons are not overlooked.

Mutual Offices Buzz Like the Proverbial Bee

Mutual offices in Washington declare that they are "as busy as bees" since announcing that Mutual would take care of the war tax. "We are about swamped," declared Edgar Evans. "We have no complaints to register."

Chicago Supply Company Undergoes Reorganization

The Bell & Howell Company, of Chicago, one of the largest manufacturers of camera supplies and moving picture machinery in the country, has undergone a complete reorganization in which an influx of outside capital and a change in the executive heads are the outstanding features.

R. J. Kittredge, formerly president of R. J. Kittredge & Company, is the new president, succeeding Donald J. Bell. Mr. Bell, although withdrawing as president, will still be connected with the company in the capacity of vice-president, and will have charge of the New York offices. Albert S. Howell is also a vice-president, while Charles A. Ziebarth and J. H. McNabb are respectively secretary and treasurer. Before the reorganization Mr. McNabb was general manager for Bell & Howell. Mr. Ziebarth, in addition to his duties as secretary of the new firm, will also act in the capacity of production manager.

The reorganization is expected to enable Bell & Howell to handle a good deal of export business which in the past they have been unable to accept.

Ideal Film Company Handles State Rights Features

The Ideal Film Company is the name of a new corporation formed in Chicago to handle films on the state rights basis. A partnership between N. Blazer, a former State street merchant, and Edward Cohen, city collector for a number of years, forms the working combination of the new concern.

"Who Shall Take My Life," the rights of which have been purchased for Illinois, is the first feature to be handled by this company. Offices have been opened in the Consumers Building and W. F. Maher has been engaged as manager.

Jewel Announces Cast for Dorothy Phillips Film

Jewel Productions, Inc., has announced the cast for its next release, "The Grand Passion," which is a version of Thomas Addison's novel, "The Boss of Powderville," adapted for screen use by Ida May Parks.

Dorothy Phillips has the leading feminine role, while William Stowell as "The Boss of Powderville" has been cast in a part which is said to give him a powerful field for his varied talents.

Jack Mulhall as "Dick Ripley," the energetic editor of the Powderville "Trumpet," is entrusted with a difficult "assignment" and Lon Chaney is said to have achieved a wonderful characterization of the Greek innkeeper. Bert Aplling, Evelyn Selbie and Alfred Allen are others in the cast while hundreds of "extras" make up the balance of the population of Powderville.

Leaks in the Loop

O. F. Spahr, head of Motiograph Projector Company, reports that despite the drop in business during the last two months the year as a whole has been the biggest his company has ever had. South American shipments, he says, have increased over 40 per cent. in the last sixty days.

William Kempe, formerly manager of the Temple theatre on Lincoln avenue, is now in charge of Asher's Calo.

A number of houses which have closed down at various times recently threw open their doors again. The Jewel on West Division street has been reopened, as has the Columbia on North Clark street, the Linden on Belmont avenue and the La Salle at 154 West Division street.

H. J. Bayley, manager of the local Vitagraph exchange, declares that he is being literally buried under the flood of mail that exhibitors are sending in regarding the new serial "Vengeance and the Woman," which Vitagraph is preparing to follow "The Fighting Trail." "It just goes to show," said Mr. Bayley, "that exhibitors do want good serials. They liked "The Fighting Trail" and the same stars are in this serial, so they naturally are interested in it."

Alaska has gone movie crazy, according to O. F. Spahr of the Motiograph Company. They keep sending in orders and increasing the size of them each time, until the last shipment, he says, amounted to half a car load of apparatus.

The Castle theatre celebrated its second anniversary last week. Under the management of Mr. Weil this big little house has come to command a very important position in Chicago's picturedom. It is located in the loop, right in the heart of the city, and during the last two years has made a name for itself as a house of quality.

Dick Travers, former Essanay star, is now a captain of infantry, having received his commission last week along with the other boys who took the officers' training course at Fort Sheridan.

E. H. Goldstein, general manager of the Universal-Bluebird exchanges for the entire Universal organization, was a visitor last week at the local offices.

Fred E. Wright, who has been with Essanay for the past three years, is now making pictures for Pathe. His first production under the new banner will be a five-reel feature starring Mrs. Vernon Castle.

Over two hundred exhibitors attended the prerelease showing of Universal's newest serial, "The Mystery Ship," which was shown at the exhibition room of the local exchange last Thursday. After viewing the first three episodes of the serial sixteen exhibitors signed up to run it for seventeen weeks.

There is one theatre in Chicago's loop district which boasts the distinction of having a woman as its manager. This is the Casino on Madison street, which is owned by Carl Laemmle and Sol Lesserman. Mrs. Emma Cohen, who has been assistant manager of the theatre for some time, was recently given full control of the house and her success has been so marked that both the owners took occasion to compliment her when they passed through town not long ago.

William Dietz, formerly manager of the Milford theatre, is now a salesman for Fox.

A new Flowers & Meyers house, the Oakley, at Chicago avenue and Oakley, opened up November 25 with Mr. Jacobi as manager. The Oakley is a thousand-seater and is the third theatre to come under the Flowers & Meyers direction.

L. J. Jones of Jones, Linick & Schaefer has earned the title of "the penny man" because of his diligence in the search for coppers needed for change in taking care of the war tax. Pennies are at a premium these days and with the various taxes making everything at odd prices Mr. Jones has been an all-important medium in keeping the box offices of the Jones, Linick & Schaefer theatres supplied with the necessary units of exchange.

H. O. Davis of Triangle Film Corporation was in town a couple of days last week, stopping at the La Salle Hotel.

Irving N. Mack, publicity man for Universal, was married to Miss Belle Harris of Chicago last week. The wedding was a private affair and was attended only by the immediate members of both families. Mr. Mack will take "time out" for ten days while on his honeymoon, after which he will return to his desk and continue his bombardment of papers and trade journals with press copy.

A camera crew of the Rothacker Film Company, under the direction of Mr. Klinginsmith, has just finished a big multiple reel industrial subject in southern Illinois and is now at work on a big job in Wisconsin.

Charles Bambara, pioneer Chicago exhibitor and owner of three picture houses at the present time, opened the Parkway theatre, on Broadway, December 1. The house was closed up a few weeks ago because of the competition which is was forced to buck up against when the Covent Garden theatre was opened. Mr. Bambara thinks, however, that he can make a go of it despite the competition, war tax and general business depression.

Things of apparent insignificance sometimes tie up big projects. W. S. Van Dyke, Essanay director, was biting his nails and empurpling the atmosphere one day last week because he had to hold his entire company in idleness while waiting for a pound and a half poodle pup which plays a rather important part in "Sadie Goes to Heaven," a picture featuring little Mary McAlister.

Wholesome Film Corporation, according to rumor, is planning a New York office. Manager Weisfeldt of this mail order concern just got back from the East, so there may be a pretty solid foundation for the story.

"The Flame of the Yukon," starring Dorothy Dalton, was shown to a large group of invited guests at the Ziegfeld theatre Monday morning, November 26. The local board of censors having refused a permit to show this picture some time ago, the Triangle Corporation has taken this means of getting it before the public.

The Laemmle Film Service has been consolidated with the Universal Film Exchange and will hereafter conduct its business under the latter title. The offices of the exchange will remain in the Consumers Building.

Cahill-Igoe are getting up a library of cuts for exhibitors at large. The zincs are made from hand drawings of the different stars and embrace nearly the entire gamut of the well known luminaries. The cuts are one inch wide and two inches high and are expected to be an aid to exhibitors in making up their programmes. A nominal charge will be made.

The Scientific Projection Engineers, Local 110, will hold their ninth annual ball December 5 in the Coliseum Annex. The proceeds will go to the eighty boys of the organization who are enlisted for service in the war.

Jack Gardner, who has been with Essanay up until the present, is now taking a whirl at vaudeville in Indianapolis. The musical comedy star after a brief return before the footlights is planning to go to New York again, but his plans for the future are still in rather a nebular stage. It's more or less of a toss up with Jack as to whether he follows the silent or spoken drama.

L. A. Rozelle of the World Film Exchange reports that exhibitors are now paying the tax of 15 cents per reel without any quibbling. Out of one hundred and ten cancellations, he says, all the exhibitors except twelve came back and signed the new contract, paying the back tax and agreeing to pay the levy as long as it is on.

A camera crew of the Rothacker Film Corporation, under the direction of T. H. Miller, is working on a multiple reel welfare picture in central Pennsylvania.

C. E. Almy, formerly on the city sales force for Paramount, is now city salesman for Metro. William Cook, another salesman for Paramount, left a couple of weeks ago, about the same time C. E. Bond, who was in charge of the Paramount short subject department, severed relations with the concern for which he was working. Mr. Bond is now manager of the Chicago office of the U. S. Booking Corporation.

The Florence theatre, at Chicago and Western, burned down recently when crossed wires set the organ on fire. Before the flames could be stopped they had gutted the whole interior of the house.

The Broadway Strand theatre is charging 15 cents admission during the week, but on Sunday Manager Rubenstein tacks on the additional 2 cents war tax. He feels that if he pays it six days a week the public ought to be willing to pay it one day.

Nathan Ascher of the Ascher Brothers' circuit of theatres announces that starting with "The Savage," the latest Bluebird release, he intends to run all Bluebird pictures throughout his entire string of houses.

Taylor Holmes is planning to take his company to Arizona about December 10 in order to get a little western atmosphere in "Ruggles of Red Gap," the big production that is now occupying his attention at the Essanay studios. Lawrence D'Orsay and Frederick Burton are playing the same parts in the screen productions that they filled when the play was on the legitimate stage.

There was considerable joshing around the Rothacker plant recently when H. J. Aldous, secretary and treasurer of the company, returned from his hunting trip down the Illinois River. In his game bag were found two ducks and half a ton of that delicious fowl, the mud hen.

William Weinshenker, salesman for the Central Film Company, is now manager of Ascher's Milford theatre.

The Chicago Theatrical Protective Union held its annual Thanksgiving ball at the Coliseum.

George M. Laing, who operated the Burton theatre for many years, is now manager of Ascher's Cosmopolitan. Mr. Laing is an exhibitor with lots of experience and was one of the principals in putting on the annual moving picture exposition last July at the Coliseum.

Tom Norman of the Rex theatre, Racine, Wis., was in the World office last week to pay a visit to L. A. Rozelle.

Mrs. Dessez, the only woman boosting educational films, is at work for Kleine talking before women's clubs, etc., in the interests of Conquest Pictures.

Clark Speaks in Behalf of Military Relief Club

Frederick Russell Clark, president of Titan Pictures Corporation, spoke Tuesday afternoon, November 27, before the Institute Woman's Club of the Hebrew Institute, Chicago, in behalf of the American Military Relief Association. The association has inaugurated a series of one-reel moving picture comedies, using such nationally known stars as Ernest Truex, Josephine Harriman, Charles Grapewin and Raymond Hitchcock.

Mr. Clark explained the purpose and work of the association, which is differentiated from similar organizations because while obtaining money for the soldiers and sailors of Uncle Sam it attempts to render service to the contributor as well as to the beneficiary. The American Military Relief Association besides furnishing the boys in the service with necessary funds at the same time is able to give the exhibitor a good comedy for his program.

State Rights Distributors Ready for Opening Gun

D. M. Vandawalker, Jr., vice president of the Doll-Van Film Company, returned to Chicago last week after spending several days in New York where in conjunction with Sol Lesser and others he was instrumental in the perfection of the new State Rights Distributors' organization.

Mr. Vandawalker reports that the association is now ready to do business and that its various exchanges throughout the country have started in to supply the exhibitor with the three big features that have already been purchased. "The Cold Deck," with William S. Hart, "Today" with Florence Reed and the "Mad Lover" with Robert Warwick are the big features already purchased and the association expects to add several new big pictures to this list within the next few weeks or so. "The Cold Deck" will have a five-day run at the Orpheum theatre, Chicago, this week and will be followed by "Today."

THE EASTERN STUDIOS

Duncan McRae is playing the role of Count Barratti in support of Bushman and Bayne in Metro's "Red, White and Blue Blood," to be released shortly.

"The Beautiful Mrs. Reynolds," a forthcoming World-Brady picture, is the four hundredth photoplay in which Carlyle Blackwell has had the leading role.

Pauline Frederick is said to have a winning way with owls. In the filming of "Jealousy" one was used, which showed a dislike for every one but the Paramount star.

It was being told around the Metro studio last week that Francis X. Bushman, who holds thirteen medals for bicycle races, is keeping a close eye on the six-day race at Madison Square Garden.

Mae Marsh set things upside down recently at the Goldwyn studio when she amused herself by ringing all the time cards she could find in the time clock. She thought the bloomin' thing was "props."

The Eastern studios are looking forward to Jackie Saunders's scheduled visit to New York. She comes all the way from California to shop.

Olive Tell, who is making a series of pictures for Empire All-Star, declares that all forms of cosmetics, excepting make-up, are horrid and dangerous. She thinks her golf sticks are the best beautifiers in the world.

Extravagance is the theme of Kitty Gordon's new World-Brady picture. The star wears some stunning gowns and magnificent jewels in the feature.

Rita Dane, prima donna, has decided to plunge into pictures. She tried out as an extra with Goldwyn recently, and has been cast in a Mabel Normand forthcoming release.

Dell Henderson recently completed direction of his sixth picture for Empire-All-Star, and is now directing Edna Goodrich in an unnamed feature.

Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Drew, Metro comedians of the inimitable sort, are considered premier mirth provokers by thousands of theatergoers. A Metro-Drew comedy seems to welcome wherever it goes.

Larry Trimble, producer of Mme. Petrova's second picture, made forty-seven scenes during the course of eight hours recently. Some speed, and all well done, too.

For Montagu Love's next World-Brady feature two blocks of a Belgian street were built full size, and the night before the scene was to be shot a heartless wind storm knocked it all down. Belgium fell, but was rebuilt.

Patriotism is paramount in the Vitagraph ranks. Miriam Miles is passing up all millinery shops and is making her own hear-gear. The money saved is being devoted to various war relief funds. Lucky soldiers!

Realism is all right but it comes high, according to Norma Talmage's audible soliloquy immediately after slashing by mistake an oil painting of herself in "Ghosts of Yesterday." And it was to have been a Christmas gift, too.

Virginia Pearson, in Photoplays Supreme, Made by William Fox

Most every one in the East studios has noticed how rapidly Viola Dana is climbing the ladder of motion picture fame. Just wait until "Blue Jeans" is released.

Marguerite Clark received as a present from a friend recently, a tame fox. Having closed her home at Rye, N. Y., for the winter, she is letting another friend keep the "pet."

June Elvidge, whom Leander Richardson tried to ring in on Arthur James as the June of "Who Is June?" fame, appears with Carlyle Blackwell in "The Beautiful Mrs. Reynolds," a World-Brady masterpiece.

Violet Heming, whose screen beauty has elicited many forms of praise, is expected to bring forth new adjectives when J. Stuart Blackton's feature for Paramount, "The Judgment House," is released.

Jack O'Brien, directing "The Girl and the Judge," in which Olive Tell stars for Empire All-Star, is an old side-kick of Dell Henderson. Both are pioneers in the business, and remember distinctly "doubling in brass."

H. A. Spanuth's presence in New York entitles him to space in this department. His first production, starring Charlotte, the ice skater, appears to be going over, and Commonwealth is planning some great things for the future.

Eric Mayne, Charlotte Granville and Ethel Burke have roles with Olive Tell in "The Girl and the Judge." David Powell is male lead of this Empire All-Star feature.

Alice Joyce has recovered from her recent illness and is finishing up her work in "A Woman Between Friends," for Greater Vitagraph. Tom Herriss is directing.

Edna Purviance arrived in the midst of the Eastern film activities a few days ago and immediately started out to give the Fifth avenue shops the "once over." It is her first visit to New York.

Frank Keenan has been, during the past few days, putting the finishing touches on his first Pathe play, "Loaded Dice," under the direction of Herbert Blache.

Director Charles J. Brabin, of Metro, has completed his second feature for that company, with Bushman and Bayne. It is predicted the production will add new laurels to Brabin's wreath as a director.

Marion Davies, in the Century show, "Miss 1917," will make her debut on the screens of the country December 23, when Pathe releases "Runaway Romany." The feature is said to be from a story Miss Davies wrote.

William P. S. Earle, Greater Vitagraph director, last week celebrated two notable events. One was Thanksgiving and the other was the third anniversary of Earle as a Vitagraph asset. He has directed some corkin' pictures.

Fox photographers are said to favor risky scenes, and they got their wish when "The Pride of New York" was filmed, with George Walsh doing the lead. William Fox plans to release the feature December 9.

Norma Talmadge has migrated to Atlantic City for a few days, after completing "Ghosts of Yesterday" for release through Select Pictures.

Joe Kaufman has been chosen to direct Elsie Ferguson's next Artcraft feature, "The Song of Songs." The production is under way at the Famous Players-Lasky studio in Fort Lee.

Douglas Fairbanks, Without Removing His Make-up for a New Artcraft Picture, Permits Adolph Zukor and Director Allan Dwan to Test His Physical Prowess

RUTH STONEHOUSE, formerly with Universal and more recently with Triangle, has signed a long-term contract with H. Berg, of the Overland Film Company, to appear in photodramas featuring her, it was announced last week.

Miss Stonehouse left on Thanksgiving Day for an extended tour of the larger cities, appearing in person at the better theatres, and after spending a week in New York will return to Los Angeles where it is expected work will begin on the first story under the new contract. The one selected is called "The Wolf Breed," for which the director and cast have not been chosen.

Fox Names Three Features

Titles have been given to three William Fox pictures now in production at the studio. "For Liberty" is the name decided upon for the Gladys Brockwell picture which has its opening scenes laid in Berlin at the time America entered the world war. Director Bertram Braken is well along in the production of this, and it is expected all scenes will be made by the end of the coming week. A great many extras will be required for the scenes which depict German trenches and other war scenes. The arrival of the Sammies on the war front will be a feature correctly depicted.

"A Soul For Sale" is the name given the picture now being made by Director Frank Lloyd which will serve as Jewel Carmen's first starring vehicle. The Lloyd Company was absent from the studio last week, spending the time in central California for scenes that will represent conditions in the Klondike, where a greater portion of the scenes for this photoplay are laid.

The William Fox Western Company headed by Tom Mix and directed by E. J. LeSaint, has "Cupid's Round-Up" as a permanent title for the photoplay adapted by Charles Kenyon from the story by George Scarborough. Mix has surrounded himself with a host of seasoned westerners, most of them being cowboys who served him in the making of former pictures and who know the West as it really exists today, or did in the past few years. Wanda Petit is playing the lead opposite Mix.

Two companies are working at the Sunshine Comedies plant, one under the direction of Henry Lehrman, with Billy Ritchie and Winifred Westover as principals. The second is being directed by Charles Parrot and Lloyd Hamilton is the featured comedian. It is said that additional companies will shortly be added to this organization.

Anderson Arrives on Coast

Carl Anderson, president of Paralta Plays, arrived on the coast recently for an indefinite stay, and Nat Brown, secretary and general manager who has been West, has gone East for a few weeks Since Mr. Anderson's recent visit to the coast, work on the new studio was started, and upon his arrival he was greatly surprised at the progress of the builders. The stages are all completed, and other necessary buildings are nearing readiness for occupancy. Production at the plant is continuing at full capacity.

The Paralta photoplay starring Clara Williams, being made under the direction of Reginald Barker, has been given a permanent title of "Carmen of the Klondike." The story and photoplay is by Monte Katterjohn, author of "The Flame of the Yukon." Three acres of the big exterior lot at the studio were required for the Alaskan village setting which was built for this seven-reel production. A portion of the photoplay has action in winter time, and the cost of covering the setting to show the change of seasons is said to have eclipsed the original cost of the setting. In addition the company will go to Truckee, where many of the exteriors will be filmed after the heavy snows.

A new Paralta organization to be known as Louise Glaum Productions, Inc., is shortly to begin work. Scenario for the first is now being prepared by Monte Katterjohn, and will be of a patriotic nature giving Miss Glaum the role of the daughter of an American family that becomes involved with Germany's secret service organization. The play revolves about the near climax in this hour of America's destiny. The director for Miss Glaum is yet to be selected.

Raymond B. West has completed the production of "Within the Cup," and is now at work on an unusual story which may be titled "Blindfolded" or "Miss Jimmy Valentine." The photoplay is an original one by E. Richard Schayer author of "Rasputin the Monk," who was recently added to the Paralta scenario department.

The cast includes several very appropriate names. "Muldoon the Ear" is taken by Joseph Dowling, the part being that of a crook who lost his hearing by an explosion of "the soup." Jay Marley appears as "Soupy," a yeg. David Kirby will be seen as "Sparks McDonald the Feeler." Pat Calhoun will be "Izzy the Faret," and Jack O'Connor as the detective. The featured part is that of Peggy taken by Bessie Barriscale. Ed. Coxen will appear in the masculine lead.

Triangle Accelerates Activities

ities were taken on at the Triangle Studio at Culver City. No changes are expected at the big Triangle plant for the present, but it is understood that it is Mr. Davis' intention to keep the producing organization up to its present maximum which includes twelve companies producing five-reel subjects or larger.

Director T. N. Heffron has been assigned to the work of producing the photoplay adapted by Hayden Talbot from his original play "Oh Gee!" William Desmond is to be the star of this subject.

The western subject featuring Texas Guinan, which has been titled "The Gun Woman," is nearing completion at Hartville ranch. Francis McDonald is playing the lead opposite Miss Guinan in this subject, and Frank Borzage is the director.

H. D'Elba, who has served as assistant director at Triangle, following work as director and assistant at Universal, has been placed in charge of a company and is now busy with the production of a newspaper detective story which has Charles Gunn in the featured role. The plot pertains to a newspaper man breaking up a political deal and becoming the fusion mayor morality candidate in which he proves successful.

Director Walter Edwards is making the final scenes for "Evidence," which features J. Barney Sherry, and Director Cliff Smith will within a few days complete "The Law's Outlaw," which has Roy Stewart in the featured role. Lynn Reynolds, who has made the last scenes for the film version of the Earl Derr Biggers story, "The Gown of Destiny," is now working with the scenario department in the preparation of his next subject. It is expected that Jack Conway will begin producing a new picture within the next few days. This will have Belle Bennett in the featured role.

Zukor Watches Work Progress

Two gigantic settings built especially for the Fairbanks-Artcraft subject "The Modern Musketeer," occupy almost all of the space on the entire city block on which the studio is located. One setting represents scenes in Paris in the time of the original D'Artagnan, while the other setting is laid in a Kansas town in the present day. This photoplay is being made by Director Allan Dwan, and many of the scenes were filmed this week in the presence of President Adolf Zukor of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, who spent the past three weeks at the west coast studio.

The George Melford-Sessue Hayakawa Company celebrated Thanksgiving by arriving home from a trip to the Hawaiian Islands after an absence of five weeks. The organization, which includes about fifteen people, secured exceptional material for this early day Hawaiian picture.

William C. deMille is to make one more subject starring George Beban, the first having been completed by Beban himself at Balboa Beach during the past week. Work on the next subject was begun last week at the Lasky plant. At this same place, Donald Crisp is directing a subject which has Wallace Reid in the featured role supported by Ana Little, Paul Hurst, Guy Oliver, Ernest Joy and Edna May Cooper.

At the Morosco Studio, Rollin S. Sturgeon is making the final scenes for a photoplay featuring Vivian Martin which will have such well known players as Theodore Roberts, James Neill, Harrison Ford, Jane Wolff, John Burton and others. Many of the scenes for this subject require the use of a mother cat and a half dozen kittens, and they are proving to be the greatest burden of Sturgeon's directorial career, for it is now necessary for him to screen in each setting in order to keep his players in sight. William D. Taylor is continuing with the direction of "Bunker Bean," which is an adaptation from a Saturday Evening Post story.

Jewel Carmen, the New William Fox Star, Consults with Her Director, Frank Lloyd. Billie Foster, Cameraman, Is Also Interested

Ruth Stonehouse, Who Has Signed a Contract with H. Berg to Star in Overland Film Productions

The Artcraft Company, headed by Mary Pickford and directed by Marshall Neilan, has begun work on a new film which requires exteriors found only in the vicinity of San Francisco, and the company has gone there for a stay of several days where these will be filmed.

Triangle Exodus Begins

The first Triangle Keystone Company to be transferred from the Hollywood to the Culver City studio is that under the direction of Reggie Morris, which has started the filming of a roller skating comedy. A very large set showing the interior of a skating rink is built on the mammoth stage at the Culver City plant. Harry Gribbon is the featured comedian of this comedy which is as yet untitled, and the supporting cast includes Claire Anderson, Franklin Baum, Dora Rogers, Myrtle Lind, Dorothy Hager and other well known film players.

"The good ship 'Fremont'" came into use again last week for the Triangle Komedy that Herman Raymaker will make. The boat has been partially rebuilt to suit the needs of this photoplay, and a company of players headed by Bill Franey will take part. The principals are Dale Fuller, Maude Wayne, Milton Sims, Lloyd Bacon and Frank Opperman, as well as a handsome educated parrot that has been well versed in sea terms.

One of the greatest crashes in the history of Keystone comedy making occurred last week when an entire set showing the interior of a large cafe which was furnished entirely with break-away furniture was tipped off. Incidentally all of the furniture was needed for a rough and tumble fight, and the photo comedy titled "Courts and Cabarets" which is being directed by Charles Avery is said to contain more bits of flying furniture than any heretofore produced. Max Asher is the lead of this the "brains" department under the supervision of Director of Production Albert Glassmire up to eight writers.

American Completes Subjects

Two American-Mutual subjects were completed last week. One is "In Bad," the Aztec subject in which William Russell is star, and directed by Edward Sloman, and the other in the cutting rooms is "Molly Go Get 'Em," a Marguerita Fischer photoplay directed by Lloyd Ingraham.

While Director Edward Sloman is editing "In Bad," the company is preparing for the filming of "Polo Jack" from a story by Charles Turner Dazey, adapted for the screen by James E. Hungerford. Miss Francelia Billington is to continue as lead for Mr. Russell.

Marguerita Fischer's third picture, which is next to be made has been given the title of "High Heels." This is a comedy drama from a story by Helen Starr. The supporting cast in both productions has not been named.

George Periolat, who has been with the American Film Company for the past four or five years serving as featured character player, is shortly to leave for an extended vacation, the greater portion of which will be spent at his former home in Chicago. While in the East, Mr. Periolat will make a number of personal appearances at leading theatres in connection with the showing of the coming American Mutual release "The Mate of the Sally Ann," in which he takes the part of a demented sea pilot. The trip will cover about ten thousand miles and provides for visits to Cleveland, Philadelphia, New York, and home by the way of Kansas City, Denver, Salt Lake City and other cities.

The Mary Miles Minter Company combined work and play when they made a trip this week to Los Olivos in the Santa Ynez Mountains, an important feature of the event being a quail dinner at the well-known tavern of Mattei's. The birds were provided by Alan Forrest. The company is working on "Mlle. Tiptoe" being directed by Henry King.

Vitagraph Company Travels

The Vitagraph producing unit headed by Nell Shipman and which has Alfred Whitman as leading man left last week for Mt. Wilson where several weeks will be spent to secure exteriors for a decidedly western photoplay adapted from the novel "Cavanaugh, Forest Ranger," by the author of "The Grey Horse Troop." It is the intention of the company to remain at the summer resort hotels at the highest mountain of southern California until suitable snow scenes required by the story may be secured.

The Big V. comedy company has a new director in the person of Kitty Howe, late of L-Ko Company, who is directing the making of a one-reel slap stick comedy known as "Peanuts and Politics" which will feature Rock and Montgomery. The story for this deals with explosive peanuts made for Germans but which get into motorcycles of Americans and cause a wild chase.

The O. Henry story now being produced by Director David Smith at Hollywood Vitagraph Studio is titled "The Fifth Wheel," and has Chet Ryan and Walter Ryan in the most important roles. A peculiar feature of this subject is that there are no female roles.

The "Vengeance of the Woman" Vitagraph serial company last week worked near Chatsworth Park where a mammoth tunnel set with a special railroad track running into it was built especially for Director-actor William Duncan's organization. In the scenes made here Carol Halloway is seen climbing down a rope, hand over hand, and dropping onto a moving railroad train to cut a fuse attached to explosives on the train which if they should be ignited would destroy the train and tunnel. The scenes were made without accident.

Hart Tries a New Role

The fourth William S. Hart Artcraft subject, now in the making, will offer the westerner in an entirely new role for him, he taking the part of a lumber jack. This photoplay, written especially for Mr. Hart by John G. Hawks, will have exteriors showing many scenes of the California redwood country and lumbering camps of that section, the Hart Company has gone to this region for a stay of ten days. Gertrude Clair takes the leading role opposite Hart, it being that of a mother, and Maude George has been especially engaged to play a heavy role. Other important parts are taken by Hart Hoxey, well known cowboy actor, and Robert McKim who will take the male heavy role. Joe August who has photographed practically all of the subjects in which Hart has appeared is with the company at Santa Cruz, as is also E. H. Allen, general manager of the Thomas H. Ince and William S. Hart Studios.

"Flare-Up Sal," the early day western photoplay, starring Dorothy Dalton, was completed last week, and Director R. William Neill and Miss Dalton are both enjoying short vacations. Mr. Neill is spending a week in San Francisco and Miss Dalton is at Arrowhead Springs.

To the cast supporting Enid Bennett in her first Ince-Paramount subject as yet unnamed, two well known players were added last week. George Nichols will take a very important character role, as will also Lydia Knott. Earl Rodney is playing the lead opposite Miss Bennett and Jerome Storm is in charge of direction.

Universal Starts New One

At Universal City a new production co-starring Monroe Salisbury and Ruth Clifford was begun last week. This is titled "A Wife in Arizona," and is an original photoplay written by E. J. Clawson, who has prepared the scenarios for all subjects in which Salisbury and Miss Clifford have been co-starred.

"The Eternal Columbine," which has Mae Murray in the stellar role, supported by Kenneth Harlan and others, was completed this week, and already the scenario for her next subject has been prepared. No title has been selected for the coming subject.

Dorothy Phillips, Bluebird Star, "Dolling Up" in "Broadway Love"

An accident which resulted very fortunately is reported from Universal City. Eddie Polo was riding a horse along the edge of a cliff where the earth was supported by a huge rock. While posing for a still picture, the rock gave away, and the horse and rider were plunged down the steep decline for many feet, alighting however at the bottom in soft dirt uninjured. The scenes being made were for the serial "The Bull's Eye" which James Horne is directing.

Westerns Nearly Completed

The first western-made Pathe subject, "Kidder and Ko" will be finished by the end of the week and serve as the initial release of Bryant Washburn on the Pathe program. Richard Foster Baker, the director who is in charge of making this, was taken suddenly ill last week, and to insure against delay in the making George Marshall, who is in charge of location selections and other important work at the studio, was pressed into duty as director. Mr. Marshall was for two years director for the Universal Company, and in the event of Mr. Baker's illness proves serious, so that he cannot return to work, the picture will be finished by Marshall.

The Diando Film Company's subject, "Any Home," starring Baby Marie Osborne, will have a very strong cast which was selected by President W. A. S. Douglas. In addition to Lou Cody and Marion Warner who play the parts of father and mother of Baby Marie, Herbert Standing, Katherine MacDonald, Harry Von Meter, Ernest, the little colored boy, and J. H. MacDowell, take important parts. Production work on this subject was slightly delayed one day this week when Baby Marie was presented with a handsome Shetland pony as a gift from her father.

The first western-made Metro subject, "The Legion of Death" starring Edith Storey, has been completed, and the studio staff is now at work preparing settings for the filming of "Revenge" which is an adaptation from the Edward Moffit novel, "Hearts Steadfast." The screen version was prepared by H. P. Keeler, and the direction of "Revenge" will be in charge of Tod Browning. Wheeler Oakman will be the leading man opposite Miss Storey,. Kate Toncray will play the leading character part, and Ralph Lewis has been engaged to appear in the role of the heavy.

Director John Collins and company which includes Viola Dena as star, Clifford Bruce as leading man, Mabel Van Buren and others, are still at work on the Mojave desert, forty miles north of Los Angeles. A mammoth adobe setting was completed at the studio and transported to the Mojave desert location where scenes are being made for "The Tiger Cat" which is an adaptation from a popular novel prepared by H. P. Keeler.

"Lost Express" Is Found

By the end of the coming week the last episode of the "Lost Express" serial starring Helen Holmes which was produced by J. P. McGowan will be completed, the company having finished this week, the last scenes necessary for the fourteenth episode which was titled "Unmasked." In the fifteenth episode which will be known as "The Return of the Lost Express," the train which mysteriously disappeared in the first release of this serial, will be as mysteriously returned. It will be recalled the train was running between two towns fifteen miles apart when it disappeared as though the earth had opened and swallowed it.

The last exterior work of the Signal company, which will be disbanded following the completion of this episode, was done this week at a tunnel in Chatsworth Park, and following the day's work a barbecue dinner was served where William Behrns acted as chef and J. "Pep" took the role of Maitre de Hotel.

The company has, for the past few days, been working night and day in order to get the prints for the last release in the hands of the exhibitors as near December 1, as possible.

SCREEN EXAMINATIONS

"Alimony"

(First National Exhibitors' Circuit—Six Reels)

REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

"ALIMONY" can easily be conceded a prominent niche among the top-notchers of the current year. For material upon which to base his story, the author, Hayden Talbot, has delved deep into the varied intricacies of the divorce courts and the result has cast the picture in a framework of the most entertaining and fascinating sort. It is evident that the directors of the First National Exhibitors' Circuit well realize the needs of their fellow showmen by their selection of "Alimony" as one of their releases. The all-important value of the title has been well insured by the manifold possibilities of the single word topping these six reels and persons attracted by it will certainly not leave the theatre disappointed.

The plot outlines the attempts of a woman scorned to ruin the happiness of the man she once loved and his chosen wife. Her methods are laid with the utmost care and the observer is actually in suspense over the outcome of it all, so complete and well formulated is the network of misleading circumstantial evidence in which she manages to ensnare the husband. Providing the author had not been possessed of a full knowledge of his subject it is highly probable that the lay mind might have picked flaws in his work, but Mr. Talbot has not introduced a false situation, his scenario is smoothly constructed and it moves with a rapidity that never permits the interest to falter.

A cast of uniform excellence interprets the principal roles. The most notable performance is contributed by Lois Wilson as the young wife. Her's is a part calling for the utmost in unsophistication and sweetness and the actress creates the desired impression in her every scene. Josephine Whittell makes her debut before the camera as the adventuress and seems admirably suited to this type of role. George Fisher is real enough as the man in the case and the support from first to last renders adequate assistance.

Emmett J. Flynn directed, the production was supervised by Robert Brunton, long of the Ince forces, while the photography and art work were respectively taken care of by L. Guy Wilky and R. Holmes Paul.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

A slight flirtation with Turner (George Fisher) leads Bernice Flint (Josephine Whittell) to divorce her husband (Wallace Worsley) believing that Turner will marry her. Turner, with a million back of him, enjoys spending it but has not the slightest intention of marrying Bernice. So she, in league with Stone (Arthur Allardt), an unscrupulous lawyer, sets about to damage the happiness of the man who spurned her. When Turner meets Marjorie Lansing (Lois Wilson) her innocence and freshness appeal to him in a new way and he asks her to marry him. She accepts. Bernice and Stone then commence to create a domestic upheaval between the two and succeed in their wicked aim until their ultimate happiness seems a thing never to be attained. But the Turner attorney (Joseph J. Dowling) proceeds to fathom the criminal actions of Bernice and Stone and before long the clouds are swept away and the happiness of the Turners assured.

"The Silent Man"

(Artcraft—Five Reels)

REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

"THE SILENT MAN" offers William S. Hart the rôle of a straight good man instead of the usual good bad man. Charles Kenyon, who wrote the story, has thrown a fine lot of sympathy in the way of "Silent" Bud Marr, the character Mr. Hart portrays, and as a result it creates a strong appeal. On second thought, however, Mr. Hart's grim and determined rendition of the part would result in an appealingly created character no matter what the author had written around it. It is this sure-fire quality that has made every one of the star's performances stand out above the background provided by the story.

Mr. Kenyon has introduced the customary dance hall stuff presided over by the customary vulture; the holdup also customary; worked in a love interest that is both romantic and humorous and wound up with a smashing trial scene in the crude frontier court wherein the Silent Man is proven innocent by an unexpected witness and the villain deservedly lassoed and dragged cursing through the mob to the jail. In fact he has supplied the supreme portrayer of Western characters with a vehicle that utilizes the majority of his many abilities and produces the desired atmosphere of the old West to just the right degree.

The production is typically Ince from locations and settings to the details of the camerawork. Vola Vale, Robert McKim and John P. Lockney figure prominently in the supporting cast which is of even merit from first to last.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

"Silent" Bud Marr (William S. Hart), after locating a paying claim is swindled out of it by "Handsome" Jack Pressley (Robert McKim), a dance hall owner, and Ames Mitchell (Milton Ross), a dishonest agent. When Mitchell sends the first shipment of dust back from the stolen mine Marr holds up the stage and takes it. He also discovers Pressley with Betty Bryce (Vola Vale), a young girl whom, he has married, posing as a man of virtue. Realizing the girl's fate will be the dance hall Marr kidnaps her, and puts her in charge of Preaching Bill Hardy (George P. Nichols), and his wife (Gertrude Claire). Marr is then hunted as a bandit, and a price is offered for his capture. Pressley discovers that Preaching Bill knows of the fugitive's whereabouts, and when he refuses to part with the information burns his cabin and his half-finished church. Betty's brother David (Harold Goodwin) surprises Marr at the point of a shotgun when he comes on the desolate scene, and the hunted man allows the boy to take him into town a captive, in order that he may earn the reward. The trial of Marr is a one-sided affair, with "justice" all in the hands of the villains. The tables are turned, however, by Grubstake Higgins (J. P. Lockney), who instead of being an old miner is in reality an agent of the department of justice. He is well acquainted with the character of Pressley, and demands his arrest. He attempts escape, but Marr ropes him and drags him back to the court house. With Pressley safely out of the way and the facts of his previous marriage to Topaz (Dorcas ffiMatthews) revealed there is nothing to stand between Marr and Betty.

"Her Sister's Rival"

(Russian Art Film-Pathe—Five Reels)

REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

"HER SISTER'S RIVAL" is the best of the Russian Art subjects yet shown. A faint recollection calls to mind the fact that the same statement was made regarding the last one. But such is the case. It presents a powerful story. Not a frantic melodrama with so much action crowded into the lives of the characters that if they were human they would all be dead, but a logical, dramatic piece of work possessing a single situation of great strength from which the utmost suspense has been derived. This seems to prove that pictures certainly can be made more realistic. The stage playwright complains over the American made product; affirms that the producer wants too much action and not enough development. But he will find in the product of the Russian Art Film pictures that have been written and produced with this correction made.

The entire cast appears to good advantage but the most distinctive work is rendered by Vera Colodna, a dark Russian beauty, in the vernacular of the day of the "vampire" type, who besides is an accomplished and finished actress. The names of all the players are not mentioned but each and every one of them handles his or her part with a degree of intelligent appreciation that can be highly recommended.

The direction is good and the production includes a number of expensive as well as artistic settings.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Prince Baskoff (V. A. Polonsky) marries Mary (L. M. Coronva), daughter of Madame Kromoff. His marriage brings him a big dowry which he sorely needs. He really loves Nita (Vera V. Colodna), Mary's foster-sister, who reciprocates. She, however, is married to Bartinsky, a wealthy banker. The situation remains thus strained until Bartinsky, scenting it, pretends to leave on a business trip. Returning at night he finds the Prince in his wife's chamber. In anger he threatens to have the Prince arrested for a forgery he had committed before. Madame Kromoff begs him to hold off and visits the Prince herself. She offers him a gun, telling him that suicide is the only way out for him. The Prince laughs at her and she, taking the matter into her own hands, kills him. It is reported a suicide.

"The Raggedy Queen"

(Bluebird—Five Reels)

REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

MORE vehicle than dramatic structure "The Raggedy Queen," by Nell B. Bronson, serves to bring Violet Mersereau back to the screen-light after an absence of several months. She is seen once more in a harem-scarem type of role—Tatters, a poor youngster living in a mining town believing her mother was a queen and that she is a princess. It offers her a number of opportunities to be kittenish and cut up generally. Fighting with the village children because they refuse to believe her of royal lineage, parading about with a strip of burlap for a train, saving the hero twice from death and finally discovering her long lost father, Miss Mersereau creates a half-humorous, half-appealing character that should very well please her admirers.

"The Raggedy Queen" lacks substance. There are more episodes designed particularly to allow the star to appear to advantage in varying modes than there are those that further the plot. The climax, however, has all the sensationalism of a regular old-fashioned melodrama. One is treated to the sight of a cabin dashed to smithereens over a precipice just after the father of the girl and her sweetheart have stepped safely out of it. It is a very good thrill and well handled.

The support pledged Miss Mersereau is competent but has few opportunities with the single exception of Grace Barton who appears as "Crazy Anne." Donald Hall is apparent here and there but is usually lost and Frank Otto as the hero is negative.

John C. Brownell made the adaptation from the story and Theodore Marston directed.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Reared by Crazy Anne (Grace Barton) to believe that she is the daughter of a queen, Tatters (Violet Mersereau) is constantly at odds with other children of the mining town attempting to prove her ancestry. David Grant (Frank Otto), secretary to the owner of the mines arrives to settle employment difficulties. He incurs the enmity of Lem Braxton (Charles Slattery), a drunkard, who later engages him in a fight and knocks him unconscious. Tatters finds him and cares for him. His absence has worried Tillson (Donald Hall), owner of the mines. He arrives to investigate just as Grant has risen from his bed. Business is discussed in the cabin of the superintendent (Robert F. Hill), which stands on the side of a steep and rocky hill. Lem, still bent on revenge, saws the props of the cabin half through, attaches a rope to one of them and plans to drag the flimsy structure over the cliff. Tatters coming upon them warns the men with a cry and then throws herself on Lem in an attempt to stop him. But, though the men escape, her efforts to save the cabin are vain. It crashes over the cliff and Tatters is buried in the debris. Her recovery is rapid, however, and her happiness is complete when Tillson discovers that she is his long lost daughter.

"The Hidden Hand"

(Pathe—Fourth Episode)

REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

THERE is more action—decisive action—in this episode entitled "The False Locket" than is usually spread over six reels of the average serial. Ramsey (Mahlon Hamilton) is reinstated in the good graces of Doris (Doris Kenyon) when he proves that he is not married. The Hidden Hand manufactures a false locket to fit the precious packet which reposes in the Whitney safe. The false Ramsey breaks into the safe and secures the packet just as Doris rushes into the room. Too eager the tool of the Hidden Hand places the locket in the aperture of the packet. There is a terrific explosion which evidently kills the intruder. Doris sees the paper containing the finger prints of the baby slowly burning. She grasps for it as the Hidden Hand enters. They struggle until the real Ramsey arrives. The Hidden Hand takes flight.

"New York Luck"

(Mutual-American—Five Reels)

REVIEWED BY LISLE M. ALBRIGHT

THIS is a cracking good picture with a wallop at the finish that O. Henry himself might have admired. Just when you think you see through to the happy end, and lie back in your seat contented with having solved the plot and with the cobwebs all swept away, you get a punch right between the eyes. And you sit up and laugh at yourself.

In "New York Luck" Bill Russell raises his batting average with another safe hit and the exhibitor who can't score on it, via the box office route, is slow on the bases. As "you know me" Nick Fowler from Hohokus, who goes to New York to give his ability a chance to expand and to show the folks in that gosh durned town what a regular guy looks like, he is extremely funny. He has another good chance to show his prowess as a fighter even though obliged to scuff 'em up on top of an elevator that has stuck between floors in the shaft.

"New York Luck" is a comedy-drama, well balanced and well thought out, with a kick in the end that doesn't savor at all of an attempt to put a little life in a weak scenario, even at the expense of juggling or breaking the continuity of the story. The kick is just a big surprise and you go out laughing. There is, in fact, nothing to detract from the interest of the picture as acting, directing, setting and photography all come under the general descriptive, excellent.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Nick Fowler's ambitions carry beyond the little telegraph office in the depot at Hohokus. He falls in love with a beautiful girl who gets off at Hohokus one day while the train stops. After her departure he finds a handbag, containing jewelry and her photograph, and he decides to go to new York to seek his fortune and the girl. At a fashionable hotel, while writing a letter back home, another guest enters, drops a photo like the one Nick carries of the girl, which leads to an acquaintance with the stranger, who represents himself as Lord Boniface Cheadle. Nick becomes an unconscious tool of the man, who is Steve Diamond, a notorious crook. The small town Romeo seeks out a motion picture director whom he used to know in Hohokus and tries to get a job, but the office boy forgets the way to the director's office and reports back to Nick that the boss won't see him.

Nick is discouraged with his reception in New York and starts writing a gloomy letter home. Then he changes him mind and writes a blood and thunder story of his imaginary adventures, revolving them around Steve Diamond. The director happens along, sees the letter, buys it for a scenario, and hires Nick, at a salary which to him seems fabulous, to turn out New York ideas. And when Nick meets the leading lady of the company he is to write for she turns out to be none other than the one he has been searching every place to find.

"Fighting Mad"

(Butterfly-Universal—Five Reels)

REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

THIS is one of the strongest and consequently one of the most entertaining features which Universal has released under the Butterfly brand. It is a story of the west beginning in the days of '49 when ministers were as scarce as gamblers were plentiful. The central character, "Doc" Lambert, a doctor as well as a minister, loses all faith in God when his wife dies from the ravishes of Clean-Up West a gambler without a soul. How it is finally restored to him through the medium of his own daughter makes a picture that holds tightly all the while and often grips.

William Stowell as Lambert does one of the best pieces of work in his successful career. His scene at the bedside of his wife when he calls on God for an answer to such punishment is extremely powerful. From here on, despite a skip of fifteen years, the film retains the attention every minute of the way. Stowell dons the makeup of an old man, but one could easily believe he grew it. Wandering from town to town with a dog for his only companion, he makes a deeply appealing figure of the broken Lambert. The story of his daughter introduced here offers new interest and presents a few touches of romance for contrast.

Incidentally Mildred Davis as the daughter is one of the most promising ingenues seen on the screen in some time. If she remains under the direction of E. J. Le Saint who has handled her so well here, she may soon be heard from in larger type. Mr. Le Saint's work is as always finished in every department. The story and scenario were prepared by J. Grubb Alexander and Fred Myton.

Lambert (William Stowell), a doctor and a minister, arrives in a Western town with his wife (Helen Gibson) to live. Lambert finds much to do administering to the needy. West (Hector Dion), a gambler, notices Lambert's wife and eventually lures her away from her husband. Returning disillusioned she dies in childbirth.

With this Lambert loses faith. Leaving the baby on a doorstep he leaves the town and becomes a wanderer, never lifting a hand to behalf of a human being. Years later he returns to the same town and meets Lily Sawyer (Mildred Davis), who works at the hotel of Smith (Alfred Allen). The frank and open manners of the girl start slowly to melt Lambert's heart. When West returns to the village also and sees Lily his passions are further aroused. Fanny (Betty Schade), West's partner, realizing the approaching tragedy, tells Lambert that the girl is his daughter. With which Lambert grasps the long sought opportunity and kills West. This accomplished his regeneration begins and before long his faith has been restored.

"The Secret Game"

(Lasky-Paramount—Five Reels)

REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

"THE SECRET GAME" presents Sessue Hayakawa, the Japanese actor, in the role of a secret service agent of his native country who is partly responsible for the rounding up of a group of German spies. It is a fast moving melodrama from the ready pen of Marion Fairfax with the various intricacies of the spy system brought into full play with entertaining results. Hayakawa performs most effectively in the featured part.

It can be hazarded that "The Secret Game" because of its general character will meet with its full share of public approval, but there are certain inconsistencies about it, certain twists of the plot that gain their points willy-nilly, which prevent it from attaining the usual satisfactory level maintained in Paramount pictures. In other times than these of war one might countenance the extremely unsystematic atmosphere of the Quartermaster's headquarters. A girl stenographer secures a confidential position without more than an endearing glance from the officer in charge, the office is left open in the afternoon for any visitor that chances along and the same girl stenographer receives telephone calls in the office from a German spy without ever being detected until the author wishes it so!

There are other points. By means of a microphone, the spy not only hears the girl in the next room conversing over the 'phone but the party on the other end as well; the final letter received in code by the girl is easily read without the key. But these can be passed over as liable in any spy melodrama. They will hardly be noticed but it is doubtful whether the afternoon tea atmosphere of the army office will pass as realistic.

As for the construction of the main plot of "The Secret Game" it is done with an appreciation of effect except at the last. Hayakawa's Nara-Nara, the Japanese spy who works in behalf of the United States, is an admired figure until he turns around and attacks the girl. This action instead of thrilling, mystifies unpleasantly. Perhaps he had to attack the girl because he was to be killed soon after, but can't an all-around hero ever die? Florence Vidor is a heroine of unusually attractive appearance, handling a difficult part successfully.

William C. De Mille directed. The production is plain but adequate.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Nara-Nara (Sessue Hayakawa), member of the Japanese secret service operating in the United States, is sent to Los Angeles to see that no information regarding the sailing of Japanese transports carrying American soldiers leaks out of the Quartermaster's office. Major Northfield (Jack Holt), in charge of the office has Kitty Little (Florence Vidor) as stenographer. She is in reality a member of the German secret service, taking orders from Dr. Smith (Charles Ogle), supposedly Northfield's sincere friend. Nara-Nara takes the office next to the Quartermaster's, setting himself up as an exporter. Eventually he learns of Kitty's mission, to get the sailing orders into the hands of the Germans. Northfield also discovers her talking with Dr. Smith and gives her some blank papers as the sailing orders. She takes them to Dr. Smith, but Nara-Nara pursues and attacks the girl, first for the papers and then for himself. His better nature is finally awakened by the girl's pleading. He is stabbed in the back by one of Dr. Smith's aides. At this crucial moment Kitty opens a letter from her brother in Germany saying that he is about to be shot for refusing to shoot helpless women and children. So when Northfield arrives she is already a true American, ready to go into his arms.

Raymond Hatton as "Mrs. Harris," another German spy, and Mayme Kelso as another secretary in Northfield's office, complete the cast with a pair of fine performances.

"Vengeance Is Mine"

(Pathe Play—Five Reels)

REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

"VENGEANCE IS MINE," Mrs. Vernon Castle's fourth feature to be released by Pathe, offers the star the part of a young woman, whose father's death has been caused by a powerful financial ring and who swears vengeance. Instead love and a realization that punishment is to be meted out by another, alter her purpose and bring about the correct conclusion of the romance.

This is an adaptation of a novel by John A. Moroso, made by Howard Irving Young and directed by Frank Crane. Its very title is more or less descriptive of the picture's contents, and from the moment that Paula, grief stricken, makes her vow of vengeance, the spectator is quite certain that she will be swerved from her purpose by the ruling element of love. It is, in truth, a conventional plot, presented interestingly.

There is a place or two during the five reels where the incidents of the action are not strong enough to prevent the bare mechanics of the story from bubbling to the surface, but in general it is an entertaining and most satisfactorily produced picture. Mrs. Castle is given an opportunity to dance a little and the gowns she wears can certainly not be listed as conventional.

A large cast has been assembled to support Mrs. Castle, and it may safely be said that it is all-star as well. Elliott Dexter and Frank Sheridan have parts next in prominence to the star's.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Forced to the wall by a powerful financial ring Farrington commits suicide. His daughter, Paula (Irene Castle), seeks to take vengeance into her own hands and hunts the man in the center of the ring. At a house party she meets Dr. Smith (Elliott Dexter), who falls in love with her. A misunderstanding separates them. Unsuccessful in locating the man, but with the knowledge that papers in the home of Van Brunt (Frank Sheridan), one of the leaders of the ring, will identify him, Paula, with the assistance of a new found friend, a reformed burglar, secures the papers. To her horror she discovers that the man is Dr. Smith's father. She leaves vengeance in other hands and accepts the doctor. His father agrees to make reparation when he realizes to what great extent he has erred.

Helen Chadwick, Edwin Hoyt, Reginald Mason, Ethel Grey Terry, Frank Monroe and Julia Stewart have parts of varying importance.

"The Good for Nothing"

(World Film—Five Reels)

REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

PARTLY comedy which is of varying merit and half melodrama which lacks unity, "The Good for Nothing" is not to be ranked with the general run of World Film pictures. Usually this company's product is melodrama, compact, actionful and interesting at the very least. The combination of this type of picture and the almost irrelevant line of comedy attempted by the star, has resulted in lessening the value of each element. Take, for instance, the action transpiring in the West where the hero is shown playing at his work. There is quite a bit of it but narry a touch of plot development. The story never starts until he journeys to the East and even then the hero is less in the limelight than others in the cast.

Carlyle Blackwell, who essays the title part, directed as well. As the comedian and fixer of the story he scores with moderate success. He is often inclined to laugh at his own fun which is rather bad form, but his performance is likable as a whole. Evelyn Greeley is an attractive opposite, and Muriel Ostriche appears in a comparatively minor part as the typical betrayed working girl.

"The Good for Nothing" can best be remembered for its touches of comedy. There is too much of the chicken-chasing episode, but most of the other attempted comedy touches register. Its melodrama can best be forgotten.

A. Alexander Thomas is author.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

After having spent much of his youth in knocking about the West, Jack Burkshaw (Carlyle Blackwell) returns to his home to find his mother (Kate Lester), married to a wealthy widower (Charles Duncan). The atmosphere of the home is rather forced until Jack's coming. He procures a job as manager of a farm, and his success soon wins him the respect, and later the love of Marion Alston (Evelyn Greeley), his stepsister. Jerry Alston (William Sherwood), her brother, a dissipated youth, has betrayed the confidence of a stenographer, Barbara (Muriel Ostriche). Jack learning of this proceeds by a roundabout way to awake Jerry to a sense of his duty to the girl. His own marriage to Marion brings on a complete happy ending.

Eugenie Woodward, Katherine Johnston and Pina Nesbit complete the cast.

"Jerry and the Burglars"

(Cub-Mutual—One Reel)

REVIEWED BY F. G. SPENCER

GEORGE OVEY as Jerry redeems himself in this one-reel comedy, for it certainly tops any of the foregoing. In escaping from the police Jerry seeks refuge in a hut and conceals himself in a trunk, where he overhears plans being made by a pair of crooks to "crack a joint" in the immediate neighborhood. He is discovered and at a pistol's point is compelled to accompany the marauders as an accomplice. But by clever maneuvering he manages to double-cross his erstwhile accomplices and imprisons one in the safe they are about to rob. When the police arrive Jerry springs his coup, which results in the arrest of the duo and the glorification of Jerry.

This is a picture which will undoubtedly be well received wherever shown.

Release date, Thursday, November 29.

"Nearly Married"

(Goldwyn—Six Reels)

REVIEWED BY R. E. PRITCHARD

MADGE KENNEDY, who scored a brilliant success in "Baby Mine," surpasses her initial effort in the second of her Goldwyn pictures, "Nearly Married." The story is more interesting and even funnier and the many changes in the settings relieve the monotony of the first Madge Kennedy picture. Added to this, Miss Kennedy is now much better known to the photoplay world and the box office value of this second production should be greater. It is probably unappreciated that many stage stars who are known to everyone here in New York are practically unknown in the smaller cities and villages of the country, but after such a picture as "Nearly Married" Miss Kennedy ought to leap into the front rank of screen popularity.

This Edgar Selwyn play is essentially a farce, but unlike the ordinary farce it is not dependent on one or two situations. There is literally "something doing" every minute. Chester Withey, the director, has fully grasped the spirit of the story and has developed all the finer points to a nicety. The settings are well chosen and often reach the magnificent. The photography is of the very best, the difficult night rain scenes being especially well done.

Miss Kennedy herself is an ideal actress for roles in farce comedy which require beauty and the naive innocence of young womanhood. She is a splendid portrayer of moods, and even the sorrowful expressions bring laughs. There was a perfect continuity of heart-humor shown by the big audience at its first public presentation.

There is a perfect cast in support, Richard Barthelmess contributing a splendid characterization as Betty's brother.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

It is Betty Giffon's (Madge Kennedy wedding day, or rather her wedding hour. Every one is on hand but the bride, and she is "all dressed up," but she refuses to allow the ceremony to be performed without the presence of her brother Dick (Richard Barthelmess), who has overlooked the hour of the ceremony in the excitement of his having won admission to the bar. Finally she agrees to allow the husband (Mark Smith) of her best friend, Gertrude Robinson (Alma Tell) to act in her brother's place, and the knot is tied. But in the meantime Dick has realized that he has overlooked the wedding hour and steals an automobile to get there on time. Then all sorts of exciting things happen, including Dick getting himself all bungled up and arrested. Betty hears of her brother's predicament and when her husband, Harry (Frank Thomas), seeks to get her to hurry to the train for the start of their wedding tour, she charges that he is heartless and refuses to leave her brother. The brother is brought home and finally Betty agrees to start on the tour provided that Dick accompany them. The husband refuses to permit this, and Dick, stimulated by the desire to try his first case and his hatred of Harry, encourages her to seek a divorce. Harry consults his lawyer friend, Tom, and together they engage Hattie King (Hedda Hopper), a professional co-respondent. The divorce is near, Betty having demanded a stipulation in the decree that Harry shall not be allowed to marry again—really because she still loves him—when she comes face to face with Harry and Hedda in a restaurant. There she cannot suppress her love—and jealousy. But Tom and Gertrude steer them together and the bridal pair decide to elope on their honeymoon. Just afterward Dick rushes in with the news of the decree being granted and finds that his sister, who is no longer married, has started on her honeymoon. So with Tom and Gertrude he starts in pursuit, and Hedda, who hasn't received the fee she has been promised for being the co-respondent, follows in another machine. .In the meantime the proprietor of a road house, in order to bring business, has planted broken bottles along the road and the machines one after another are wrecked and all of the passengers find haven in the road house. Then follow amazing mix-ups over rooms, etc. Finally Tom believes that the problem has been solved by getting a justice of the peace to remarry them, but Dick frustrates this with the clause in the decree preventing Harry remarrying in New York. The couple then decide to elope to Jersey, and the burning of the garage through the carelessness of Dick prevents pursuit, for all the cars except that in which the "co-respondent" rode were destroyed, and the couple make good their escape in that.

"Raffles, the Amateur Cracksman"

(Hiller and Wilk—Seven Reels)

REVIEWED BY JOSEPH L. KELLEY

JOHN BARRYMORE as Raffles in the screen version of E. W. Hornung's popular novel and stage play, introduces this character to his audience with such a genuine appreciation for this type that there can be no doubt of an equally genuine and hearty reception given this drama when it is presented in the motion picture theatre. It is intensely interesting from start to finish and can be recommended to any and all exhibitors as a sure bet. The title itself will attract. The cast is composed of recognized artists. The picture has been given an excellent production. The photograph is as good as the best.

As shown for review last week, the picture gave evidence of hasty assembling. One or two sub-titles were obviously out of place, due to improper assembling. A particular incidence of this is noticeable when Captain Bedford is introduced, a sub-title announcing his appearance. The next flash shows a close-up of Raffles and then a general view of those assembled is flashed and Bedford is included in the assemblage.

The picture could be improved by cutting. It runs to too great a length. Some of the scenes are far too long. They could be greatly improved by being cut to flashes. The action throughout is convincing and occurs with a snap of movement that holds the attention. The picture should be accepted by any audience as affording sure-fire entertainment. It will, in the opinion of the reviewer. The mistakes, as noted above, can be eliminated with the scissors.

Director George Irving has a good eye for detail and atmosphere. He has shown some elaborate settings. Mr. Irving has been painstaking in following the intent of the author. Anthony P. Kelly did the continuity and presented a carefully prepared script to Director Irving. "Raffles" presented a difficult theme to scenarioize. The plot had to be followed with care, given every movement made by the characters interpreting same. Mr. Kelly has shown by his work with this script that he appreciates the finer shades in properly done continuity.

Mr. Hornung's drama is known to the millions. When it was presented on the stage about ten years ago it ran to packed houses. The screen version should get the same results. John Barrymore is a fine type for the title-role. Even when Raffles is taking the law in his own hands and committing an act which we all know to be a crime, he has the sympathy of his audience. This phase of the screen version may not be overlooked by some of our censor boards. The author, Mr. Hornung; the scenarioist, Mr. Kelly; the director, Mr. Irving, and Mr. Barrymore have all tried to subordinate the criminal phase to the better qualities that are meant to predominate and they have all succeeded, in the opinion of the reviewer. There should be no occasion for the censors to eliminate any scene in this production.

Christine Mayo and Evelyn Brent in the principal feminine roles give performances that add much to the merits of this production. H. Cooper Cliffe is convincing. Frederick Perry gives a good account of the detective. Frank Morgan gives an average performance. Mike Donlin in a character role is good. Mathilda Brundage does her usual good work in a society matron's part. Nita Allen has a "bit." Harry B. Harris was at the samera.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

"Raffles," the amateur cracksman (John Barrymore) steals for the excitement of it. He delights in outwitting the police and in taking from the rich and giving to the poor. The story opens with Raffles in pursuit of an international swindler aboard a ship. He wishes to get a ruby which the swindler has. He discovers it in the heel of the swindler's boot, and jumps overboard to escape detection. He is seen by Mrs. Vidal (Christine Mayo), an English society woman. Raffles reaches shore, and returns to England, where he meets Mrs. Vidal, and she falls in love with him. They meet at Lord Amersteth's home in London. Lady Amersteth has a priceless necklace of jewels known as the Melrose jewels. There is discussion about the amateur cracksman who has robbed many of the rich of London. The jewels are shown in Raffles presence. Raffles is in love with Gwendolyn (Evelyn Brent). Mrs. Vidal threatens to expose him if he doesn't return her love. A detective is engaged to guard the jewels. Captain Bedford (Frederick Perry) is introduced to Raffles as the detective. He declares he will catch the amateur cracksman.

Crawshay (Mike Donlin) visits the Amersteth home, and arranges with the maid to gets the jewels. Raffles sees him enter at night and snatch the jewels from him. The detective is called and arrests Crawshay. The jewels are missing. Raffles leaves for the city. He promises Bunny Manners (Frank Morgan) that he will obtain sufficient money to allow him to pay a gambling debt.

Raffles bets Bedford that he will not obtain the jewels before midnight of the next day. Bedford follows Raffles to the city. Crawshay escapes prison and returns to Raffles's apartment for revenge. He enters, and Raffles sees him. Bedford is outside. Raffles allows Crawshay to escape. Bedford enters. Bunny has left with the jewels in a tobacco pouch. Later Raffles gets the jewels back, and returns them to Gwendolyn, saying that he is the amateur cracksman, and that he is through for good and all. He wins the bet, and Bunny gets the money to pay his gambling debt. He proves that he took the jewels to prevent Crawshay from stealing them.

"The Tenderfoot"

(Vitagraph—Five Reels)

REVIEWED BY JOSEPH L. KELLEY

"THE TENDERFOOT," featuring Lillian Duncan and Carol Halloway, is an adaptation from Alfred Henry Lewis's work of the same title and produced for Vitagraph under the direction of William Duncan. The picture is not up to the standard as established by other screen versions of this same author's works, for it does not present the same convincing theme or the same rapid action that was evident in Lewis's "Dead Shot Baker," for example. It does, however, present a picture that will be thoroughly enjoyed by the average patron, because Lewis has created in Jim a typical western figure and one that is sympathetic.

There are at no time moments in the presentation of this drama on this screen that can be referred to as really dramatic. The natural touch that is necessary to supply these moments is not evident. A good bit of the main theme is based upon the idea of the Indian's custom of accepting certain actions on the part of others as indicative of consent. The scene, for example, which shows the white man taking the horses which the Indian chief had led within a short distance of the white man's camp—this taking by the white man is supposed to mean that he is giving his daughter in marriage to the Indian chief. This was, no doubt, the custom of the Indians, but it will appeal to most audiences as little less than ridiculous and surely not natural or the usual course which events take.

The story, as presented on the screen, has been told without explaining away certain incidents that we are led to believe would occur. After Jim has killed the Indian chief an audience will naturally expect trouble from the tribe. There is none, nor has the author offered any explanation of this. The tenderfoot, too, seems to acquire the manners and customs of the west without any apparent preliminary training.

"The Tenderfoot" is not the best western picture that Vitagraph has produced, nor is as good as some others. William Duncan gives a good account of Jim. Carol Holloway gives a good performance. Florence Dye is not convincing in her part. Joe Ryan, Walter Rogers, Charles Wheelock, Hattie Buskirk and Fred Forrester have minor roles. Joe Ryan makes a good "heavy" type.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Jim (William Duncan), a tenderfoot, goes West to forget the girl whom he could not win. He has acquired the Western ways and has succeeded in forgetting the girl back East when she appears on the scene with her father. Ellen (Florence Dye) displays the same indifference towards Jim as she did back East until Jim saves her from the hands of the Indians. It is then that she becomes infatuated with him. Jim has met Cynthia (Carol Hollowoy) and Ellen becomes jealous of Jim's attention to her. "Smiling" Jack Douglas (Joe Ryan), a questionable character about Wolfville, meets Ellen. In order to arouse the jealousy of Jim, she arranges several meetings and on one occasion is attacked by him. Jim saves her from his treachery. Cynthia arranges a meeting with "Smiling" Jack for a purpose. She knows that he will kill Jim on sight. She gets his revolver and substitution blank cartridges for the ones that are in the chamber. Jim appears and there is a fight. He holds Jim at the point of his revolver and is told that it is not loaded. Cynthia has saved Jim's life. Cynthia tells Jim that she did it because she loved him. Ellen returns to the East and the two are left in happiness.

"The Seven Pearls"

(Pathe—Fourteenth Episode)

REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

IT develops in "The Tower of Death" that Ilma was not in the piano case after all when it went over the falls. With all of the seven pearls now in their possession Harry and Ilma rejoice but Perry and Stayne are still on the job. They steal one of the pearls and make for the railroad tracks. Ilma pursues, but on seeing herself cornered climbs a ladder and takes refuge in a water tank. The villainous Stayne opens the stop-cock and Ilma is momentarily in danger of drowning. Perry and Stayne start to quarrel and when a train approaches, the former throws his enemy into the wheels of the engine. He is thrown far off but not killed. Harry arrives and, hearing Ilma's cries climbs up the ladder to the top of the tank. Stayne, regaining consciousness, shoots at Perry but his aim is bad, and instead the bullet lodges in a dynamite storehouse. This explodes and upsets the water tank.

"The Scarlet Car"

REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

ADAPTED from Richard Harding Davis' story by William Parker and produced under the direction of Joseph De Grasse with Franklyn Farnum in the featured role, "The Scarlet Car" presents a melodrama of considerable interest. The various incidents which lead up to the accusation of Billy with the stealing of the bank funds present an unusual array of complications calculated to rouse the interest at the start and maintain it to an admirable degree throughout the five reels. The manner in which Billy clears himself is unusual and leads up to a climax of the true melodramatic type.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Billy Winthrop (Franklyn Farnum), son of the owner of a small town newspaper, after sowing a few wild oats in the local pool parlor settles down to make good. His father (Al Filson) is in debt to the extent of five hundred dollars to Peabody (Howard Crampton), president of the town bank. Peabody and his son (Sam De Grasse) have appropriated a large sum of the bank's money to cover a personal debt. Their old cashier, Paul Revere Forbes (Lon Chaney) discovers the shortage and demands an explanation. He is struck down by the younger Peabody and thought dead. Billy and Peabody are rivals for the hand of Forbes' daughter, Beatrice (Edith Johnson). When she is about to be forced into a marriage with the banker's son, Billy rescues her and the two escape. A storm breaks and for refuge they seek an old abandoned cabin, where they discover Forbes, who has lost his memory. In his demented state he believes he is living in the days of his distinguished ancestor, Paul Revere. They learn from his gibberish that he has an important paper in his possession. In the meantime the shortage at the bank has been discovered by the public, which results in a panic. To clear themselves the Peabodys declare that Billy stole the money. When the mob arrives at the cabin to tar and feather Billy he realizes that the paper possessed by Forbes will clear him and point to the real guilty man. Through a clever ruse Forbes is made to give up the paper. The Peabodys get the tar and feathers and Billy wins the girl.

"The Frozen Warning"

(Commonwealth—Six Reels)

REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

CHARLOTTE, the famous queen of the ice, who created something of a sensation when she headed the ice ballet in the New York Hippodrome a year ago, is the featured player in "The Frozen Warning," a six-reel number produced by the Commonwealth Pictures Corporation. There is approximately five hundred feet of ice skating scenes, for the most part with Charlotte holding the centre of the attention. She cuts fancy figures and pirouettes on the tip of one skate and twirling so fast without moving her position on the ice that she resembles a top more than anything else. She clearly demonstrated her right to be heralded as the most spectacular skater the world has discovered.

The story of "The Frozen Warning" concerns German spies and an American inventor and Charlotte is active in refuting the enemy band. It is a melodrama only fairly well designed. The action possesses little continuity but might with some of the unnecessary scenes eliminated and the picture compressed. The producers have appreciated the value of comedy relief. There is considerable of it introduced from time to time and it is good.

The six reels reveal some excellent photographic work, including a number of long shots of the water that deserve special praise. The double exposure effects are novel and well handled.

"The Frozen Warning" is a novelty inasmuch as it introduces Charlotte and her art to the picture screen. It seems to rest with the exhibitor to decide whether its novelty will compensate for any shortcomings in the way of scenario and interpretation.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Charlotte while out riding in the woods is thrown from her horse. She is rescued by an inventor (Jack Meredith) who is using an abandoned cabin in the woods as a workshop. It develops that he is perfecting an anti-submarine torpedo. German spies are constantly watching him. A friendship springs up between Charlotte and the inventor which shortly ripens into love. At a Red Cross benefit where Charlotte gives an exhibition of skating she sees the conspirators in one of the upper boxes and warns her lover of their presence by scratching the word "spies" on the ice. This leads to no immediate results, however. Later the spies steal the torpedo and are making away with it when Charlotte sees them. She warns the inventor and a triple pursuit occurs. Charlotte boards the yacht and disables the wireless apparatus, thus preventing communication with the German station on the shore. The inventor overtakes the spies and holds them until Charlotte arrives to assist him. The secret service men, who also have been notified, rush to the scene, arresting the criminals, while Charlotte and the inventor go into each other's arms.

"The Wolf and His Mate"

REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

"THE WOLF AND HIS MATE" has a pair of very interesting characters, the cave-man type of fellow and the girl he marries by force. But it never takes any great stretch of imagination to figure out the ending, even as the minister is pronouncing them man and wife. Of course the wolf develops the tactics of the lamb after a few shows of brutishness, and equally according to tradition the girl discovers she loves him. And so, after a villain, who hovers consistently in the offing throughout the entire five reels, is put to rout, the wolf and his mate embrace and that is the end.

It is a picture as interesting as its characters, but lacking in real sustaining interest and rather too slow for the audience's nerves in spots. There is a realistic fight in the first reel which starts things off with a wallop and then comes the marriage and the interplay between man and wife which often takes on snatches of humor.

within reach. In February a Motion Picture Exposition will be held in New York at which the manufacturers will spend many thousands in tinsel and glare. Let them appropriate a few of the thousands figured for the Exposition on an Emergency Fund. With this fund hire a hall and bring to it fifty of the representative exhibitors of the country—fifty men with real exhibiting interests, fifty of the men with real exhibitor followings, with the faith and belief of their sections.

There are such men, varied enough in interests to represent the thought of all classes of exhibitors. Men like Crandall of Washington, Eager of Nebraska, Black of Maine, Varner of North Carolina. Not exhibitor politicians, but men in whose business judgment the theatres of their sections are willing to trust.

Then let the manufacturers appropriate, for their Emergency Fund an unlimited amount of frankness—candidness. Let them take it with them into the hall where the exhibitors are waiting.

Lock the doors of the hall—and let the congress go to the mat like business men—to wrestle, tug and pull with the problem that faces the industry—to seek the solution of business men.

Meet the problem squarely—and count on the fifty exhibitors to be the apostles who will bring the message of that meeting to every section of the country.

The money can't be wasted. It can be used to work wonders in clearing the air. And it will bring into play the first step towards true industrial amalgamation—frankness.

WM. A. JOHNSTON.

The final capitulation of the wife is not fully accounted for in the picture, but it may be supposed that the transition occurs because of admiration and respect seasoned by a pinch of love.

Hart Hoxie is a good type for the first of the title roles and Louise Lovely makes a plucky figure of the second. Included in the supporting cast is a clever child and a clever dog. Julia Maier wrote the story, Doris Schroeder did the scenario and E. J. Le Saint directed.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Donald Bayne (Hart Hoxie) is deprived of his cabin in a backwoods court. Angered he fights his opponent with his fists and wins. Departing to look at his traps he warns the other to leave the cabin before he returns. He is away for quite a time and when he comes back discovers pretty Bess Nolan (Louise Lovely) and her niece in possession of the cabin, her uncle, Bayne's enemy, having died and left it to her. Bayne is still furious and to gain legal possession of the place forces Bess to marry him. He expects her to leave but, quite the contrary, she elects to stay and Bayne is forced to acknowledge himself outwitted. He finally realizes a love for Bess but though she is willing to be friends with him she rebels when he attempts to become any the more intimate. They are only brought together when "Snakey" Burns (Hector Dion), a crook who claims guardianship of Bess' niece, attempts to steal the child. Bayne interferes and vanquishes the villain and with this act Bess goes to him.

Betty Schade, George R. Odel and George French complete the cast.

Theatre Under-Management

WHEN we read of theatres closing because of added overhead expenses and added taxes we are constrained to wonder how many of these houses are shutting their doors because of under-management.

The public needs entertainment, they must have it, they demand it. They want cheap entertainment but good entertainment. England is an example of this. There we have a country which has undergone the stress of war for three years. Troubles had to be forgotten—Pictures solved the problem.

Today in England we find the exhibiting end of the industry in a most healthy condition even with the heavy taxes. The houses are well patronized and the people enthusiastic over the great democratic form of entertainment —Motion Pictures.

Here in the United States we would naturally expect to find these conditions developing to an even more pronounced degree, but instead we read of theatres in certain sections closing their doors and their patrons going elsewhere for entertainment. Is it all because of high rentals, taxes and increased salaries or is it because many of the managers have run their houses in an unbusiness-like manner—without knowing what real business methods mean and were therefore unable to cope with the present situation?

The successful house today is not the house which is merely open afternoons and evenings for the patrons to come and go as they please. The house which makes a name for itself is that house which forces the people inside and when they once get there they come again and again because they are atttracted by that something which spells good management.

Place next to either the Strand or Rialto here in New York another theatre equally as beautiful, under the average Motion Picture Theatre Management. Would it hurt the patronage of these two houses? No—they are managed to suit the public, as the public wishes and the public comes. The house next door is under-managed. In other words, in this average house the theatre force arrives five minutes before the doors open, the operator turns on his motor when the time comes and the show is on—no true showmanship to what the public desire.

There is no atmosphere. There is nothing homelike or cozy about the place—no silent invitation to come again. There is no attempt to study the patron and find out what he wants and then give it to him. In fact, the average Picture house is a hit or miss, under-managed place which makes money if it is sufficiently lucky, or loses it, just as the case may be.

WE do not mean that a house must have the size or the beauty of the Rialto or Strand to make a great big success. It may possibly have but four or five hundred seats but the man at the helm must be a student of conditions. He must know his patrons and give them what they want. Smaller houses of this size are among the leaders in the country.

No small part of the success of the prosperous theatres is due to the help rendered by one of the two Trade Papers, and particularly, the News. This is proven by the statements of the owners and managers who prove our claims by their own acknowledgments.

The making use of the newspapers as theatre advertising and publicity mediums is no small item in the theatre's success. The use of the billboards and other forms of advertising are discussed every week at length in the News with vital red blooded suggestions.

How pictures are booking in other localities means much to the theatre manager who knows his patrons and gives them what they will come to see. This service is given every week.

How the Projection room with its equipment should be handled is treated in its various phases each week in a way which will help all managers and operators if they will but take advantage of it. All subjects cannot be taken up all at once but must take their turn; however, particular information which a man wants will be treated at any time at his request.

Proper music with the picture is 40 per cent. of the success of the leading houses. It has actually made some of our leading houses what they are today. Yet how can the average theatre be expected to keep abreast of the times without an up to date department in a trade paper where the latest selections and their uses are enumerated, where cue sheets are given, and where timely suggestions are made each week. This is News Service.

These are only a few of the things which should be watched and read carefully by the manager if he is to survive the present conditions and come out with a profit. Ask questions, the more the better. We are here to co-operate. We want to help in every possible way for we are in a position to do so at any and all times. Don't, above all things, let your house drift along under-managed.

E. K. Gillett.

EQUIPMENT OPERATING PROJECTION QUESTIONS ANSWERED

Mazda C Lamps for Motion Picture Projection

By R. P. Burrows and J. T. Caldwell.

Engineering Department, National Lamp Works of General Electric Co., Cleveland, Ohio.

[Editor's Note—For additional information on this subject refer to "Light Projection with MAZDA C Lamps," by the same authors, which appeared in the MOTION PICTURE NEWS for December 1, 1917.]

THE Mazda C incandescent lamp has broadened the application of incandescent lamps into the fields previously dominated by the carbon arc. The carbon arc for street and industrial lighting, and for nearly every application with the exception of projection, has been replaced by the indandescent lamp. It has been stated that the incandescent lamp would never replace the arc in projection, with special reference to motion pictures, become of its inherent limitations. The principal limitation is the relatively low intrinsic brilliancy of the source. If only the common types of incandescent lamps and the usual optical systems are considered, then such a statement is true. However, new incandescent lamp design and a sympathetic design of the optical system has made it possible to accomplish the results desired. It is reasonable to expect that a few years will see incandescent lamps as widely used in this field as in others previously dominated by the carbon arc.

BETTER UTILIZATION OF LIGHT

The first thing that suggests itself in this application is that better light utilization can be obtained more readily with the incandescent lamp than with the carbon arc; for example, shorter rear focus condensing lenses can be used which gather in more of the light radiated from the filament. The source of heat, the lamp filament, is confined in a bulb, and consequently the danger of overheating and cracking the condensing lenses and the depositing of carbon dust on them is eliminated. Also, much of the light of the carbon arc is lost because it cannot be directed toward the condensing lens. With an incandescent lamp, mirrors can be employed to utilize a relatively large part of the light which does not strike the condenser directly. The second point which suggests itself is to so arrange the filament that the maximum amount of light radiated from the filament is subtended by the angles utilized by the mirror and condensing lens. Such regulation of the distribution of light can be more readily accomplished with the incandescent lamp than with previous illuminants.

The National Mazda lamp designed for motion picture projection includes the feature of proper light distribution with maximum light output. It takes 20 amperes at 28-30 volts. The bulb is 2½ inches in diameter, and, with the mogul base, is approximately 10 inches long. The light center length is 4¾ inches. The filament construction is peculiar to this type of lamp. The wire is coiled and mounted so that there are four parallel sections of filament of equal length, with a space between each section equal to about 0.6 of the diameter of the coil. This makes a grid form of filament as shown in Fig. 1. Distribution of light from this filament form is such that it can be most readily utilized by the condensing lens. The space between the sections is filled up with an image of the filaments, by means of the spherical mirror, which is of the type shown in Fig. 2. The mirror is 4½ inches in diameter, with a radius of outside curvature of 2¾ inches, and an approximate focal length of 1 13/32 inches. The filament of the lamp should be set at the radius of outside curvature of the mirror. The mirror is backed with a heat-resisting material to withstand temperature of 125 deg. to 150 deg. Centigrade. The spherical mirror performs two functions:

1. It approximates a solid band of light by filling in the space between the filament sections, and

2. It utilizes the light from that portion of the filament farthest from the condensing lens, projecting the light back to the source and increasing the light on the screen from 50 to 75 per cent, depending upon the mirror used and the spacing between filament sections.

In Fig. 3, the photograph A shows the filament coils without the mirror, and B, the filament image from the spherical mirror properly focused between the filament coils.

In order to utilize a maximum of the light generated by the incandescent lamp, it was necessary to obtain a short rear focus condensing lens. The difficulties with such condensing lenses are:

First—The increased absorption due to thick lenses, and

These difficulties were eliminated by the use of a prismatic lens of the Fresnel type. This condenser, shown in Fig. 4, utilizes a solid angle of 76 degrees, as compared to a solid angle of 45 degrees from the arc lamp condenser. The prisms are so arranged and designed as to make the condensing system as thin as possible and to so distribute the light on the film as to give a perfectly "flat picture." The lens is 3½ in. in diameter with 2 in.-5 in. foci. The lamp filament should operate 2 in. from the center of the condensing lens, and the center of the lens should be 5 in. from the aperture plate of the motion picture machine, with the corrugations of the condenser facing the aperture plate. The prismatic condenser is the most efficient condenser which can be used with the Mazda lamp at the present time and it should be a part of every installation.

Fig. 2. Spherical Mirror

The correct operating position of the lamp, mirror and condenser with respect to each other and the aperture plate, with the various dimensions is shown in Fig. 5.

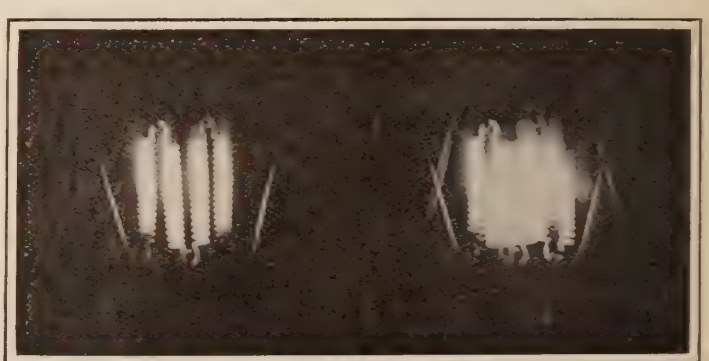

Fig. 3A Fig. 3B

Appearance of Incandescent Filament Without Mirror, and with Mirror Correctly Placed, Throwing Images of Coils Between the Coils.

ADJUSTMENT OF LAMP, MIRROR AND CONDENSER

The complete optical system of Mazda C lamp equipment for the projection of motion pictures is shown in the sketch, Fig. 6. A number of things must be done in order to place the lamp and mirror in the correct operating position. First, it is essential that the plane of the four parallel coils of the filament be perpendicular to the optical axis—which is an imaginary line drawn through the centers of the screen, the projection lens, the aperture plate, the condenser, the lamp filament, and the mirror. Then the lamp should be moved horizontally backward and forward, vertically and up and down, and horizontally sideways until the image of the coils of the filament can be seen very distinctly on a piece of white cardboard or paper held against the wing shutter in front of the projection lens. (See Fig. 3A.) Then the mirror should be inserted, making the proper adjustments so that the mirrored image of the coils appears on the card as brightly as possible in the spaces between the direct image of the coils, which is also on the card. (See Fig. 3B.) Extreme care should be taken not to focus the mirrored image over the direct image.

METHODS OF INCREASING SCREEN ILLUMINATION

There is some uncertainty at present in the minds of theatre managements as to how bright a motion picture should be shown. The tendency in the past has been toward brighter and brighter pictures, but to-day the trend appears to be toward pictures of moderate brightness. However, there is a possibility of increasing the screen illumination obtained with the Mazda lamp equipment, by the use of wide aperture projection lenses. The wider the aperture of the projection lens, that is, the larger the diameter of the opening of the lens, the more light there will be projected on the screen. The projection lens in use for different diameters of free opening depends upon the manufacturer. One manufacturer is marketing a 42-millimeter and a 61-millimeter projection lens, known as a No. 1 and a No. 2 lens respectively, whereas another manufacturer makes projection lenses having a diameter opening of 46 millimeters and 65 millimeters. The change from a projection lens of the 42 millimeter to 61 millimeter free opening of the same equivalent focus increases the amount of illumination on the screen by approximately 100 per cent. The use of a No. 2 lens, that is, the 61 or 65-millimeter diameter free opening, wherever it is possible to obtain the better lens in this size, will give a brighter picture, though not necessarily a better one.

Fig. 4—Corrugated Condenser

The illumination obtained with the Mazda lamp will also be increased by equipping the motion picture machine with a two-wing shutter with the shutter just wide enough to eliminate travel ghost. The width of these wings will depend upon the type of projection lens used, and with a little experimenting on the part of an operator who is familiar with the shutter the correct width can be easily determined.

Metallic and selective screens offer a picture brightness of from one to seven times that of white paint and muslin screens for projected beams of equal power. Therefore, whether in a wide or narrow theatre, when the proper metallic screen is used, it is possible to project a satisfactory picture of larger dimensions than could be secured with another screen at the same distance. Since it is not possible to project a picture in the neighborhood of 12 feet in width where a paint or muslin screen is used, it is therefore possible to project a picture 13½ to 14 feet in width when a good type of metallic screen is used.

CONTROL APPARATUS FOR MAZDA LAMP

The 20-ampere, 28-30 volt Mazda lamp, like incandescent lamps for regular lighting service, operates equally well on either direct or alternating current, with no difference in the light output.

It has been proved that, with the National Mazda C projector lamp, a satisfactory picture can be projected when operating this lamp on alternating current having a frequency as low as 25 cycles, hence installations are not confined to 60-cycle alternating current for satisfactory projection.

On direct current, a D. C. Compensarc, consisting of a motor-generator set, or rotary converter with proper control equip-

Douglass Natural Film score tremendous hit!

Read what they say:—

DOUGLASS NATURAL COLOR FILM CO., Ltd.,
San Rafael, Calif.

San Francisco, Calif., Nov. 5, 1917

Gentlemen: The generous applause of the thousands who saw your natural color pictures on the Imperial screen at the first public run in San Francisco last week proves the complete success of your invention. The people who pay are the ones that decide.

It was the unanimous opinion of the Public that your process will revolutionize the motion picture industry, and that it is the final requisite necessary to make motion pictures seem actually to live for the audience. We believe that it enlarges immeasurably the possibilities of the motion picture art.

IMPERIAL THEATRE,
J. A. Partington Mgr.

A FEW OF THE THOUSANDS OF PRESS NOTICES:

FROM SAN FRANCISCO EXAMINER:

The flaming red of the rose and the delicate pink that lies along the cheek of a woman have at last been caught by the movie camera. Leon F. Douglass demonstrated that colored photography, so long sought in vain, has finally been perfected. The demonstration was, in the opinion of many persons present, an epochal event at which a new wonder was given to the world. Artists, poets, judges, professional men and women and others were present.

x—x—x—x—x—x—x—x

FROM S. F. CALL AND POST:

The lens of the moving picture camera has been endowed with the ability to transfix in a flash of its shutter all the colors of nature with the minuteness of detail not possible for the limited technique of paints and brushes. Leon F. Douglass is ranked today among the foremost scientific geniuses of the age, in the opinion of the group of artists, lawyers, businessmen and newspaper men who sat before the screen. Douglass has discovered the secret of transferring to the film the most delicate graduation of color, faithful to the hues of the photographed object down to almost imperceptible shading of tints.

x—x—x—x—x—x—x—x

FROM ST. LOUIS STAR:

To show the power of detail possessed by the new color scheme, a picture of the Yosemite Valley was shown. Across the valley stretched a misty rainbow. The faithful reproduction of the color delicacy in the pictures caused much comment. The large audience, thoroughly familiar with the realism of moving pictures, was astonished by the ultrarealism of the colored pictures. Waterfalls seemed so lifelike as to cast their freshness over the heads of the watchers. Natural tones, whether bright or drab, were held by the screen in perfection never before attained in pictures.

Western newspapers called the pictures one of the wonders of the age.

FROM SAN FRANCISCO CHRONICLE:

The blush of the rose, the ruddy glow of the sunset sky and all the colors of nature in their infinite variety have been made to live again on the moving picture by Leon F. Douglass of San Rafael.

A marine scene, taken from the Marin shore, with all the countless shades of sea green caught with the motion of the waves, was another cause of astonishment.

x—x—x—x—x—x—x—x

FROM SAN FRANCISCO BULLETIN:

Apparently the inventor has discovered that colors leave a definite imprint on a photographic film and that by chemical treatment they can be brought out and reproduced perfectly. Repeatedly last night he displayed an ordinary black and white picture and then followed it with a colored film of the same scene, in which the natural hues were presented in a manner that defied the cunning of the painter to emulate.

x—x—x—x—x—x—x—x

FROM CHICAGO DAILY TRIBUNE:

The orchestra hall demonstration showed it is possible with the process to transfer delicate shades to the film. Yosemite Falls were shown bathed in rainbows. Faces were thrown on the screen in natural flesh tints. A yellow dog and a leopard with its coat of tan and black were objects of wonder. A bald headed eagle fluttered across the screen in front of a waving American flag, the banner showing in full color all of the markings of the eagle.

x—x—x—x—x—x—x—x

FROM MARIN JOURNAL:

This great throng paid for permission to enter, and therefore was privileged to accept or reject. With heads touching and in whispers, husbands and wives, mothers and daughters, fathers and sons, voiced their genuine approval of these pictures.

TO THE PRODUCER:

Other than for demonstration purposes, it is not the intention of this Company to engage in the business of making motion pictures, but our project is to arrange, for the use of the process, on a reasonable basis, with those now engaged in producing photoplays.

TO THE EXHIBITOR:

We are now ready to make dates for 5000 feet of natural color film. The pictures are made by a three-color process and no attachment is necessary on the projecting machine. The colors are in the films; making it a simple, practical commercial success.

The Distribution of Light Intensity in Photographic Images

IN a former article[1] we drew attention to the light losses by reflection at the glass-air surfaces of photographic lenses, and set forth the mathematical formulae whereby the extent of such losses may be ascertained, and whereby the existence of such losses is proved by established principles of physical optics.

These reflection and absorption losses are not the only inherent light losses of optical projection systems, however, for the limitation, by the lens mounting, of the light rays incident upon a lens, and the interception of some of the rays, is an additional cause of decrease in the illumination of the image, and in the case of lenses which produce images of considerable angular extension (as, for instance, photographic lenses) the illumination at the margins of the image is further decreased by the obliquity of incidence at the focal-plane of the light rays which are necessary to the formation of the marginal portions of wide-angled images.

Now in cinematography the (horizontal) angular field of view is only about 28°, when using a 2″ camera objective, and in cinematographic projection, assuming a throw and screen picture of average dimensions, the angular extent of the screen image is hardly more than half of that figure, so it might seem that the question of the light intensity at various parts of the image has no practical bearing upon the improvement in the quality of cinematographic results. In view, however, of the increased attention which has been given in recent years to the optics of cinematography, it appears that the subject matter of the present article has an important bearing on optical projection, and a thorough study of that which follows will reveal the manner in which increased efficiency may be secured in projector optical systems, while several hitherto unanswered questions are likewise embraced by the accompanying data.

At the International Congress of Photography, held at Brussels in 1912, a paper entitled "Factors Other Than Aperture in the Rapidity of Lenses" was read by Dr. W. Zschokke, mathematician and computer of the C. P. Goerz Optical Works, and as Dr. Zschokke's paper is a comprehensive treatment of the subject with which we propose to deal, we present in the following paragraphs a somewhat free translation from the published proceedings of the Brussels Congress.

Dr. Zschokke says:

"As is well known, the speed or intensity of photographic lenses is governed by the relative aperture—or, in other words, the ratio of the aperture to the focal length. This form of expression, however, only tells us that the diameter of the bundle of rays parallel to the axis is equal to a certain fraction of the focal length, and tells us nothing more than this. It does not tell us the proportion of the light incident upon the lens which reaches the surface of the photographic plate. The light losses by reflection and by absorption in the case of all lenses are not included in the expression of the f value, or working aperture; nor is the partial cutting off of rays by the lens mount (known as vignetting).

"The theoretical laws according to which the luminous intensity at points in the image away from the axis is less than that at the focus, with respect to the intensity of the incident light, are left entirely out of consideration when judging the rapidity of lenses solely by their aperture values, and, moreover, very little attention is paid to the degree of correction of the lens. If, in spite of all this, this method of defining the speed of a lens is commonly indulged in, even the most inexperienced novice knows that the time of exposure varies inversely as the square of the aperture, which in the case of lenses of quite similar construction supplies a useful basis of comparison.

"It will be no less interesting, however, to investigate the other factors which determine the intensity of the image on the focussing screen, and to investigate, also, the degree to which this intensity falls off toward the edges of the plate, and lastly, to ascertain the part played by the lens itself and to what extent it follows the theory of the path of the light rays.

"We have first to consider the question of the degree of correction of the lens. It is obvious that the luminosity per unit area of the plate depends upon the extent to which the required corrections have been carried out, and is greater according as the rays are more perfectly united at a given point (stigmatic focus), and, on the other hand, is less as the disc of confusion (or spreading of the theoretical image point) is greater. But, if even with lenses well corrected for spherical aberration—and we shall deal only with such—the diameter of the disc of confusion varies considerably, the resolving power of the lens (in the case of objectives of focal lengths less than 20 cm. at least) corresponds, at the center of the image, to a fineness of definition which the structure of the plate does not equal.

"So far, therefore, as the center of the image is concerned, the quality of the correction will not exert a very great influence on the speed or intensity of the lens. At the margins of the image, however, the dimensions of the small discs of confusion exhibit much greater differences, when considering lenses of different construction, so much so, in fact, that the rapidity may be affected to a very considerable extent. This will be most readily apparent in the case of subjects containing fine details which stand out prominently from the background. On the other hand, with subjects where there is a large amount of surface of even luminosity, the discs forming the images of different points will merge into one another, or blend together, with the result that the intensity of illumination per unit area will probably not be less than if the lens were well corrected.

"Reflection and absorption exercise quite different effects upon the light incident upon a lens, but the results of both can be determined by calculation. The extent of the light lost by reflection can be determined by the Fresnel formulae, employing the indices of refraction n_1 to n_8 and the angles of incidence w_1 to w_8. Absorption losses are determined by the formula:

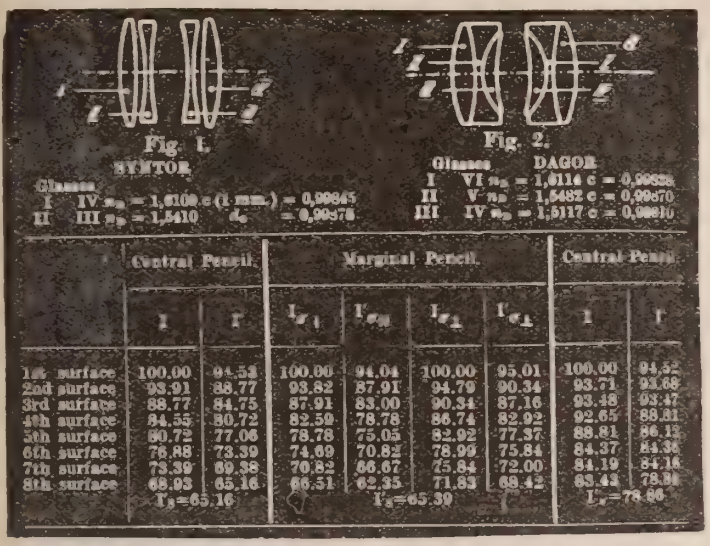
where I_2 represents the intensity of the light reaching the second surface; I_1' the value to which the incident intensity has been reduced in its passage through the first surface; and d is the thickness of the glass traversed. c is the absorption constant, the value of which is determined photometrically. (A photometric method of determining the absorption constant has been described by Cheshire—"Brit. Jl. of Phot.," 1912, pp. 597-599—and a brief account of his method was given in our former article, previously referred to. Ed. Camera Dept.)

"As the light losses by reflection and absorption vary considerably with change in refractive index, the question arises as to the color of the light which should be used, in calculating these losses. For computing reflection losses Dr. Zschokke chose sodium (yellow) light, whilst in determining the absorption constant (c) he employed an almost white light. Although the maximum sensitiveness of an ordinary photographic plate is to the blue end of the spectrum, one also attempts to correctly record colors and color values, as, for instance, in the practice of Autochrome photography, the three-color process, or orthochromatic photography by the use of a compensating light-filter. Under these circumstances Dr. Zschokke's choice of the colors of the light used in making his measurements is seen to be justified.

"Using white light for the determination of reflection losses, and yellow light for the determination of absorption losses, Dr. Zschokke has calculated the successive losses (by reflection at glass-air surfaces and by absorption due to glass thickness) in the case of two lenses of the same aperture, namely, the Goerz "Syntor" and "Dagor." (As Dr. Zschokke is connected with the Goerz Works, he has naturally selected as the subject of his tests the lenses made by his own firm. As is apparent from the illustration, the "Syntor" is an uncemented or "air-space" lens, while the "Dagor" is of the well known cemented type of construction. Ed. Camera Dept.).

[1] "Light Loss by Reflection and Absorption in Photographic Optical Systems." Camera Department, October 20, 1917, Pages 2798-2799.



"The measurements were first made for the axial, or central, pencil (perpendicular incidence). In this case the Fresnel formula for light loss by reflection is very simple. It gives as the reflected portion of the incident light, I,

$$E_1 = I_1 \frac{(n_1 - n)^2}{(n_1 + n)^2}$$

The amount of light transmitted is, therefore, represented by:

$$I_1' = I_1 - E_1$$

"The results of Dr. Zschokke's calculations are contained in the annexed table, in which will be found the refractive indices (^nD), for sodium light, and the absorption constants (c), placed below the diagrams (Fig. 1 and 2) representing the forms of the lenses. By reference to the figures it will be seen that the "Syntor" is formed of four separate lenses, while the "Dagor" is composed of six lenses arranged in two groups, each comprising three glasses cemented together. As the table shows, the intensity of the light incident upon the first surface of the "Syntor" objective is taken as 100. The intensity of the light which actually enters the objective (after reflection at the first surface) is reduced to $I_1 = 94.53$, the first surface having reflected 5.47 per cent. Absorption now comes into play and at the second surface the light intensity is further reduced to $I_2 = 93.91$, and at the farther side of the first lens to $I_2' = 88.77$. In the air-space which follows there is no absorption, this being designated by $I_3 = I_2'$. In this manner we can follow the reduction in intensity, step by step, and we finally note that after passing entirely through the lens the incident light has been reduced (by reflection and absorption) to the intensity $I_8' = 65.16$, or, in other words, the lens transmits 65.16 per cent of the incident light.

"A similar course of investigation was followed in order to ascertain the losses by reflection in the case of a marginal, or oblique, pencil of rays, this being done with the same lens. In the case of oblique incidence, however, the rays are no longer normal to the surface, as in the case of the central pencil, and thus the light is polarized at each reflection. As ether particles oscillating in different planes are not equally reflected it is necessary, in the case of oblique incidence, to trace the losses by reflection in the different planes of vibration. (For a thorough treatment of polarization phenomena some treatise on Physical Optics should be consulted. Ed.). In the case of ether particles oscillating in a manner parallel to the incident plane (designated by $\sigma \parallel$), and for those which oscillate perpendicularly (designated by $\sigma \perp$) the formulae to be applied are:

$$E\,\sigma\parallel = I_1 \frac{tan^2\,(w_1 - w_1')}{tan^2\,(w_1 + w_1')} \text{ and } E\,\sigma\perp = I_1 \frac{sin^2\,(w_1 - w_1')}{sin^2\,(w_1 + w_1')}$$

where w_1 is the angle of incidence and w_1' is the angle of reflection, related by the equation:

$$n \sin w_1 = n' \sin w_1'$$

As the table shows, the loss by reflection at the first surface is greater for $\sigma \parallel$ than in the case of the central pencil, while it is less than that of the central pencil for $\sigma\perp$, and the same relationship is maintained in the passage of the oblique rays through the entire lens.

"$I_8'\,\sigma \parallel$ is about 62.35 per cent and $I_8'\,\sigma\perp$ about 68.42 per cent, is told by your weekly program. If your program is a cheap looking affair it says to your patrons, "Here is a theatre of poor taste. The manager doesn't care whether or not you come. He tries to tell you as cheaply as possible that he is running such and such a picture this week. The chances are the services of the theatre and the pictures run there are exactly like this program—careless and cheap. Don't go." and the arithmetic mean of these two values gives the intensity at emergence of the whole oblique pencil, which is $I_6' = 65.39$. It is therefore seen that the oblique, or marginal, pencil possesses, on emergence at the far side of the lens, a greater intensity than the central pencil of rays, but the difference in intensity is so slight as to be negligible in practical photography.

The Story of your Theatre

"The last two columns of the table show the successive losses in intensity which the incident light undergoes in passing through the "Dagor" lens, and as we have seen that the losses in intensity (due to reflection) at the edges of the image differ only to a negligibly small extent for oblique incidence, as compared with perpendicular incidence, the intensity calculations for the marginal pencil have been omitted from the table in the case of the "Dagor." Referring, however, to the successive intensities of the central pencil in its passage through the "Dagor" lens, we see that here, as in the former case, the intensity of the incident light is taken as 100. After traversing the first surface the remaining intensity is practically the same as in the case of the "Syntor," the absorption by the first lens is, however, a little greater, so that only 93.71 per cent of the incident light reaches the second surface, as against 93.91 per cent in the 'Syntor." As the second surface of the "Dagor" is cemented to the third surface, and the difference in refractive indices between the first and second glasses is small, the loss of light at the cemented surfaces is negligible. Therefore, I_2' falls to only 93.68 per cent instead of to 88.77 as in the case of the "Syntor." The third surface is also common to two glasses, i. e., a cemented surface, and thus has little effect upon the intensity, but the fourth (a glass-air surface), owing to its separation, causes the intensity to fall to 88.81. In the second half of the lens the intensity is decreased in a similar ratio, with the result that the intensity of the central pencil after passing completely through the "Dagor" lens is 78.86 per cent, as compared with the 65.16 per cent of the incident light transmitted by the "Syntor." Expressed in practical terms this means that the exposure required with the "Syntor" lens is $1^1/_8$ times that required with the "Dagor" in order to secure the same result; or, to put it another way, the "Dagor" at f 7.5 has the same speed as the "Syntor" at full aperture, f 6.8.

"In the case of bundles of oblique rays, inclined to the axis, the light losses by reflection differ very little from those for parallel, or axial, pencils (so long, at least as the angles of incidence and refraction do not exceed 30°). The difference in light losses by reflection in the cases of perpendicular and oblique incidence is so slight as to be eliminated from practical consideration, as all investigators upon this subject agree."

Universal Motor Company Enlarges Plant

THE Universal Motor Co. of Oshkosh, Wis., has just completed a two-story addition to its plant, 40 x 180 feet, which is now being occupied. The addition is of concrete construction and has a Modern Testing Department built in with all facilities for testing the Marine Motors and Generating Sets. The Marine Motors are set at an angle averaging that occupied in a boat and are attached to a propellor wheel which operates in a tank of water, giving load and general conditions as near as possible to that of actual use in a boat. The Generating Sets are tested with electrical load varying from no load to full capacity. The Testing Department will handle fifteen motors per day.

The Machine Department has been largely extended, many new machine tools being added, some of special design, to handle the standard Universal parts.

The Assembling Department has been enlarged, with many improved handling devices and equipment for the handling of the motors in process.

In the layout of the new extensions arrangements have been made for the storage of raw materials, castings, etc., and a department for finished parts where each part is carried separately and in sufficient quantity to take care of the demand for purposes of repairs and for general manufacture. One of the Universal features is to hold the motor standard without changes which is of utmost benefit to the user and prospective customer.

The new plant has enlarged offices with a most complete sales department under the direction of Mr. C. J. Pope, sales manager of the company, where every inquiry will have personal attention and every customer is given his full measure of satisfaction and adequate returns for his money.

1—"Long Boy," by B. Walker. (A popular and timely musical hit in slow march tempo, with a patriotic flavor. (Published by Shapiro Bernstein Music Co., 224 W. 47th st., New York City.)

2—"Melody," by Charles Huerter. A number which will fit in well with any program. A sweet melody, a fine arrangement and a favorite which always takes—most appropriate for loves themes and scenes. (Published by the Boston Music Co.)

3—"Giddy Giddap, Go On, We're On Our Way to War," by Jack Frost. A real novelty, and catchy 6/8 composition. Already the rage in New York, and growing daily in popular favor. (Published by Frank K. Root & Co.)

4—"Oh, Babe," fox trot, by Klickman. You all know what a Klickman number is like and how they take with the public. Give them this fox trot and you'll make the hit of your life. (Frank K. Root edition.)

5—"Just As Your Mother Was," by Harry von Tilzer. Another famous masterpiece by this well-known composer. A melodious and most delightful composition. (Published by Harry von Tilzer, 222 W. 46th st., New York City.)

6—"When the Yanks Come Marching Home." One-step by Jerome and Furth. A worthy song to go with our great hit, "Over There." A wonderful over-night success. You never played a better dance for orchestra. (Published by Jerome Publishing Co., New York City.)

7—"Give Me the Right to Love You," by Abe Glatt. Considered by many and competent judges to be the finest composition of its kind—most appropriate for love themes and scenes. (Published by Harry von Tilzer.)

9—"Dramatic Recitative," by Sol. P. Levy. An exceptionally fine composition depicting scenes of intense danger and heavy dramatic situations. This number is obtainable from the Cinema Music Co., Columbia Theatre Building, 47th and 7th ave., New York City, at a special reduced price.

10—"Snowflakes Song" and "Christmas Chimes." Two exceptional songs of rare tonal beauty. Two songs which which in years to come will attain the same popularity as "Adeste Fidelis" or other famous Christmas songs. (Published by Vandersloot Music Co., Williamsport, Pa.)

11—"Longing for My Dixie Home," by Shannon. A 4/4 Andante Moderato movement—very melodious and very effective. (Published by the Vandersloot Music Co.)

14—"At the Yankee Military Ball," fox trot, by Harry Jentes. The most popular and most often requested fox trot—and exquisite dance number, which every music lover will appreciate. (Leo Feist edition.)

18—"I Wonder How the Old Folks Are at Home?" by F. W. Vandersloot. A genuine musical gem and a treat for both musicians and listeners. For orchestra this song hit it obtainable as a cornet or trombone solo, and also in a waltz arrangement. As a waltz it presents the most successful and best liked number for "dance purposes." As a song it is a charming melody of exceptional tonal beauty. (Vandersloot Music Co.)

"Over There" Selling Like Liberty Bonds

ON the 4th of November, when Leo Feist acquired "Over There," it was reported that the song had sold close on to half a million copies, extending over a period of several months, and at the rate that "Over There" is going now, Feist will have sold another half a million before the first of December, or something like 125,000 copies a week. The west is just becoming acquainted with the song, which is now almost a fixture on military musical programs.

"Over There" has had a great deal to do with arousing patriotic enthusiasm in this country; it is a big favorite with soldiers and sailors, and should be played by every picture house musician in the country that is not in love with Germany. Every time a young American with red blood in his veins hears the familiar strains of "Over There" he wants to start for the trenches, and it is the duty of musicians to keep him in that mood by playing "Over There" and all the other good march songs, regardless of the authors or publishers. If you can't fight, and you can't give freely to any of the funds, you can do your bit as a musician by getting copies of the best patriotic songs, be they sentimental, martial, or humorous, to play whenever the opportunity presents itself.

Good patriotic music has a lot to do with filling up the ranks in regiments. So it is up to you to see that you get the best there is.

Some musicians do not seem to care what they play while pictures are on—they are like the mortals in this world who care very little about what they wear, as long as they have a place to eat and sleep. The other night the writer sat in a combination vaudeville-picture house in Harlem and watched the chap at the piano trying to smile at two girls at his back and play for a picture at the same time. The picture was a good one, but when it was put on to close the show many left the place, and by the time it was half over the show house was half empty. All the while the fellow at the piano kept drumming away at something that interested no one in particular. He was running up and down, evidently improvising, but very badly.

In some houses the managers will not stand for this sort of loafing, and if a pianist has not a large enough repertoire to enable him to keep up with pictures he does not keep him on the payroll. And there is no logical reason for this inane thumping of a piano while a picture is being shown, not while we have so many live publishers doing business in this country. Just try to figure out how long an orchestra would last at a concert if it continued to improvise on scales that sounded like a violinist tuning up. Motion pictures are good in themselves, and a drawing card as well; music is equally as important, and the two are like the words and music of a song. The lyric of a song is valuable, and becomes doubly so when blended to the proper music by an expert; but no sane publisher would trust a first class lyric to some bungler who was not interested in the success of the two, and the same should apply to the music for pictures in the theatres. If a man is interested in his work he will see that he always carries music suitable for the line of work that comes to him, and this is not a hard task, but a great bother to the indifferent or lazy musician. So it is up to the managers to see that their musicians give their patrons music, not scales, and then there will be no cause to complain about poor business.

E. M. WICKES.

General Comments

LEO FEIST has just published another war song called "When We Wind Up the Watch on the Rhine." Other new snappy patriotic numbers issued by him are: "When There's Peace on Earth Again," "Throw No Stones in the Well that Gives you Water," "Homeward Bound," "We'll Knock the Heligo, into Heligo, out of Heligoland," and "Hail! Hail! the Gang's All Here." Lee Orean Smith is kept very busy with the band and orchestra department, and more so since Feist took "Over There."

Jos. W. Stern & Company have just started a big advertising and publicity campaign on their new war hit, "When the Moon is Shining Somewhere in France." Private Frederick Rath wrote the number and has made it very popular at Camp Upton. "Set Aside Your Tears," another Stern number, is going bigger than ever.

L. Wolfe Gilbert and Anatol Friedland have started their business career with a regular song, "Are You From Heaven," which has been endorsed by scores of leading vaudeville headliners. Friedland has written a very haunting melody for the song, and it is safe to say that it will be very popular with bands and orchestras.

Hamilton S. Gordon reports that every sale of his Motion Picture Collection brings a re-order. Gordon certainly has a wonderful collection of music especially adapted for motion pictures.

Fred Forster has just issued a new war song, entitled, "I Wish You All the Luck in the World." His very latest is "Faugh-A-Ballagh," a march ballad, which is to be featured by Blanche Ring in Chicago.

The war version that Fred Vandersloot had written for "I Wonder How the Old Folks Are Tonight" has helped to increase sales. Vandersloot may live in Williamsport, Pa., but he is a live wire.

"Over There" Is Not a World Production

IN the December 8 issue of MOTION PICTURE NEWS, in this department, the production of "Over There," which is being released through Select Pictures Corporation, was captioned as a World production by mistake.

The World production has a similar title, being called "Over Here," and was reviewed in MOTION PICTURE NEWS issue of December 1.

Projection with Mazda C Lamps

ment and ammeters, is used to supply the lower voltage required by the Mazda lamp. Of course, it is possible to use on direct-current circuits a resistance with a sensitive adjustment, and an ammeter, but this is not practical because of the energy lost in the resistance.

The General Electric Company has developed a compensarc for the use of the 20-ampere Mazda C lamp on 110-120-volt and 220-

This compensarc includes a variable resistance in the primary circuit to take care of the variations in line voltage—thus enabling the operator to maintain the normal current on the lamp. An ammeter is placed in the secondary circuit of the compensarc, and a four-point starting switch is included in the equipment. This switch eliminates the possibility of a rush of current through the cold lamp when the current is first applied, for the connections are such that the current is gradually increased as the switch is turned from the "off" to the full current position.

The General Electric Company has also designed a panel attachment for the present arc lamp compensarc. This panel includes a rheostat for regulation, an ammeter, a reactance coil, and the four-point starting switch. It can be adapted to any arc compensarc now in use in theatres.

At the present time there are on the market a number of transformers which are being used with the 20-ampere Mazda C projection lamp, but which are not recommended, although they are cheaper than the compensarc described above. They do not contain a variable resistance in the primary circuit to take care of fluctuation in the line voltage, nor do they include an ammeter. Thus the operator is not in a position to know whether his lamp is burning at above, or below, normal current. It is necessary, in any control apparatus which is used, that the primary or the secondary circuit contain a variable resistance or reactance in order to take care of voltage fluctuation in the line and the variation in the voltage of individual lamps. Furthermore, it is necessary to have an ammeter in the secondary circuit in order that the operator may know when the lamp is burning at normal current. It is very important that the Mazda C lamps be held at their rated current. In order to take advantage of all the light possible, the filament is operated at a temperature close to its melting point. Any marked increase in current delivered to the filament materially shortens the life of the lamp, and any decrease in current delivered to the lamp is followed by loss in light on the screen. The Engineering Department of the National Lamp Works of the General Electric Company is co-operating with a number of manufacturers in the design of suitable control apparatus for the Mazda C projection lamp. For satisfactory operation of the lamp it is essential that the control apparatus fill the requirements mentioned in this article.

FIELD FOR MAZDA LAMP PROJECTION

From the above discussion, it will be noted that the Mazda lamp for motion picture projection can be used to the best advantage only when installed in connection with recommended mirrors, condensing lenses, regulating equipment, and—if possible—projection lenses. In general, wherever alternating-current arcs are at present in use, the 20-ampere lamp will, when properly installed, project pictures equal to or better than the arc lamp with a considerable saving in operating cost; it will replace direct-current arcs of up to 35 amperes capacity. It may be used for either motion picture or stereopticon projection work. A satisfactory picture can be projected with the Mazda C lamp with a throw of from 75 to 90 feet. The permissible width of the picture to be projected will, of course, be affected by the character of the screen used in the theatre.

The simplicity of the Mazda lamp is an important feature of its use on motion picture machines; once it is placed in the machine, it requires no attention from the operator. The position of the filament is fixed and there is no travel of the light source. The high degree of uniformity of illumination on the screen, the entire absence of flicker, and the absence of deposits on the condensing lenses, are prominent features, all of which contribute to the satisfactory reproduction of motion pictures.

THEATRES WORTH WHILE

REPRESENTING an investment of $750,000 work has been started by Harding Brothers on the Liberty theatre, Kansas City, Mo., which promises to be one of the handsomest houses in Cthe whole Middle West. T. E. McInvain, the architect, has prepared particularly striking plans for the new theatre.

The building will occupy a plot, 50 by 132, at 1,104 and 1,106 Main street, in the heart of the business district. The building will be constructed of steel and concrete and will be fully fireproof. It is expected that it will be opened in February of next year. The front will be of ornamental terra cotta and, as may be seen from the architect's drawing, is unusually attractive. The general interior decorations will be attained by ornamental plastering effects, with the judicious use of tinting.

The house will seat 1,500, contracts having been made for the chairs with the American Seating Company. Two latest model Power machines will be used, the throw being 120 feet. The kind of screen to be used has not been determined. The projection room will also be equipped with a dissolving lantern and a spot light.

Mushroom ventilating system will be used. American District Steam Company's atmospheric system is called for in the heating plans. Indirect lighting system will be used in the interior and there will be a flood of light on the front of the building, together with an immense electric sign bearing the name of the theatre.

Music will be one of the specialties of the house. There will be a twelve-piece orchestra and an Austin pipe organ, together with echo organ. Goldwyn and other star features will be used, the bookings not having yet been completed. The bill will be changed each week. There will be new shows each day with prices fifteen and twenty-five cents for both matinee and evening. Newspapers and billboards will be used extensively in the advertising.

The lobby dimensions are 25 by 40 feet, the fixtures not having yet been arranged for, except that it is planned to have ornamental fixtures extremely well lighted.

Shaeffers Open Fine New House in Chicago

ON November 8 there opened on the northwest side of Chicago a splendid new 2,000-seat theatre, the Crystal. It is located on probably the busiest corner of that section of the city, at the corner of North avenue and Washtenaw street.

Schaeffer Brothers are the owners of this building, which includes a modern lodge hall with seating capacity for 400 and which may be used as a dance hall, six stores and twelve offices. The building is two stories in height and is finished in white terra cotta and red brick. Lighting is one of the features of the house, 3,000 lamps being used on the front and towers.

ARKANSAS

The Belmont Amusement Company, of Atkins, has filed articles of incorporation. The company will erect a building in which to operate a motion picture show and furnish other amusements for the soldiers at Camp Pike. The capital stock is $15,000.

CALIFORNIA

Charles, Rohrer has been granted a permit to operate a motion picture theatre at 420 K street, Sacramento. Commissioner Edward Haynes made a favorable recommendation to the City Commission following the report of Commissioner Thomas Coulter as to the condition of the premises and changes ordered in the projecting room.

Camp Kearny, Los Angeles, is to have a brand new theatre, one big enough and fine enough to accommodate the largest productions put out. This is to be put up by the Government at a cost of $50,000, and will have lighting facilities equal to the best in the country. The stage will be thoroughly equipped in every respect, with dressing rooms having all modern conveniences and all kinds of stage furnishings.

The new $115,000 Liberty theatre in the Van Ness Building, near Tulare street, Fresno, is about completed, and its opening is watched with feverish interest. Manager Keech declares that the new movie palace will have the largest seating capacity of any such place in California, providing for 2,000 people, equally divided between the balcony and lower floor. A nursery has been provided for the convenience of mothers of small children, as well as a hospital for any emergency. An extraordinary feature of the new Liberty is the tea room. Tea is to be served every afternoon from 3 to 5 to matinee patrons, free of charge. The tea room adjoins the lobby of the second floor. One of the largest cooling systems in the State has been installed, capable of exchanging 55,000 cubic feet of air a minute. This system makes it possible to maintain a temperature of about 70 degrees the entire year. The music for the theatre will be provided by a $30,000 pipe organ, which is one of the main attractions.

Architect O. P. Dennis, 619 Fay Building, Los Angeles, is preparing plans for a one-story store and theatre building to be erected in a suburban city. It will contain two store rooms, lobby, and theatre auditorium to seat 900 people. It will be of masonry construction, and will have concrete foundation, 68 by 160 feet, hollow tile walls, terra cotta or artificial stone front, plate glass windows, composition roofing, pine trim, ornamental plaster, opera chairs, plumbing, wiring, heating, etc.

Alameda will soon be able to boast of a theatre equal in equipment if not in size to any on the east side of the bay. This is according to a statement made recently by James Hamblen, of 3206 Sterling avenue, Alameda. The theatre will be built in Park street, near Encinal avenue, and will have a frontage of 60 feet and a depth of 145 feet. The seating capacity is to be between 1,500 and 1,600. The building will be completed by early spring. The theatre is to be equipped with an organ similar to the one in the new California theatre in San Francisco, but smaller in size. George F. King is the architect, and George W. Stewart is handling the contract. When the house is completed it will cost between $65,000 and $75,000.

Renovated and remodeled in an artistic manner, the Columbia theatre, Oakland, known as the "home of musical comedy," will again be thrown open to the public, according to an announcement made to the effect that the show house will resume operation in a musical comedy way on Sunday afternoon, November 25. The new shows will be headed by the irrepressible Irish comedian, James Post, who is a great favorite with Oakland lovers of musical comedy, and who has appeared here on numerous occasions at the head of his own company. Post will be surrounded by a brilliant cast of players and a big chorus. Special attention has been paid to the selection of the cast, and it is announced that the best possible talent has been secured for the season. The chorus comprises a number of former vaudeville players, who will appear to advantage in the weekly chorus girls' contests. Many of the old favorites will also appear with the aggregation.

Snyder and Snyder are busy remodeling the building of Mr. and Mrs. G. C. Zah, to be used by them at the Dreamland Picture theatre, at Mount Pulaski.

The Grand theatre, at Kewanee, was opened a week ago with high-class vaudeville and motion pictures. Chris Taylor is the manager.

Walter Kilmer and William Walsh have rented the Verona Hall, at Highland, for the purpose of installing a motion picture theatre.

Clark-Struve Hall, Beecher City, has been rented to local men who are installing a motion picture outfit to give shows every Thursday evening.

The Orpheum theatre, headquarters for vaudeville in Galesburg, has decided to abandon vaudeville until the war is over and confine itself to the presentation of the higher class motion picture productions. Paramount, Artcraft, Goldwyn and other high-grade pictures will be shown.

INDIANA

Gust Weggen will soon begin remodeling the building vacated by Thompson garage, at Hebron, and expects to have a moving picture theatre before very long.

The Wysor Grand theatre, at Muncie, is now completed, and Manager George S. Challis is proud of the transformation. The auditorium has been rebuilt, new fixtures and furnishings have been installed, and it is generally conceded that the Wysor Grand is now one of the most attractive theatres in the whole State.

Hosea J. Harris, an old resident of Patriot has bought and remodeled an old church building into a neat attractive amusement hall where he will run motion picture shows.

IOWA

A new moving picture theatre, to be called the Herrold theatre, will be opened about Thanksgiving at the north end of the cantonment, at Herrold Station near Des Moines. It will be run by the Cantonment Amusement Company, under the personal direction of Walter F. Davis, a well-known moving picture man. First-run motion pictures including comedy, drama and current news events will be shown. A feature will be the projection of the pictures in a plate glass mirror curtain, weighing 15,000 pounds, costing $1,000, giving the picture a natural and lifelike appearance. The new Stern projecting machines, the first to be used in Iowa, have been installed, and 1,500 20-inch opera chairs. The house will be open daily for matinee and evening performances.

"NEWMAN" BRASS FRAMES AND RAILS

Read What Josiah Pearce & Sons Say About Our Goods

Gentlemen:

Now that you have completed equipment in our new theatres here in New Orleans, and Houston, Texas, we want to take this means of expressing to you our appreciation of the manner in which we have done business with you, also as to the character of your goods. You have, without exception, filled our orders just as promptly as we could ever expect and probably quicker than we had anticipated, and the fact of your having supplied us with brass frames and various other equipment in our fifteen theatres is evidence that we are pleased with your goods, for they are the most attractive, durable and practical that we have as yet found.

We wish you good luck in the prosecution of your work.

Yours very truly,

Nicholas Power Company,
90 Gold Street,
New York, N. Y.

Dear Sirs:-

After giving two Powers Machine Heads seven successful years of continuous use thirteen hours daily at the above Theatre we are at last desirous of replacing them with new "Power 6A Heads".

Our business has been heavily solicited lately by several machine salesmen of other standard makes who knew we were contemplating the purchase of new machines. After giving the matter careful consideration from all angles we have decided that if we can duplicate our good fortune for the next seven years as we have experienced the past seven, we will be entirely satisfied. Our present machines have given us excellent satisfaction at a low cost of up-keep and we have always been prided that we were getting superior projection.

Kindly forward me catalogue and price lists together with other information covering the purchase of two new "Power 6A Machines" complete with all mechanism.

All information will be greatly appreciated by

Yours truly

Give them a real modern high society drama written by our best loved American author and famous war correspondent, the late Richard Harding Davis. Give them the thrilling story of a dashing New York clubman who is out to win a girl—who fights to save his sweetheart's father from the stigma of dishonesty, and has a devil of a time doing it. Does he win? Could Franklin Farnum's contagious grin ever do anything but win? Book it—better still, grab it. It's one of the real hits of the season.

LES MISÉRABLES
A WILLIAM FARNUM DE LUXE PRODUCTION
NOW TURNING THOUSANDS AWAY AT THE LYRIC THEATRE NEW YORK

READ THE MESSAGE OF THE CRITICS

"Les Miserables" is from the Fox Laboratory and it is quite the best picture that has been seen hereabout for a considerable period. The film is distinguished by noteworthy performance on the part of William Farnum, who depicts Valjean with skill and understanding.—New York Times.

Naturally such a classic as "Les Miserables" required skilful treatment, but Mr. Farnum has brought the play to a high degree of kinship with the story itself with its touching incidents and heroic endeavors of the principal actor.—N. Y. Globe.

The production of such pieces on the screen is worthy of every encouragement. Excellent music accompanied the play.—N. Y. Post.

William Farnum is more than a pleasant screen personality. He is a great actor. There are people who are continually crying for better pictures. To them we would say see "Les Miserables."—N. Y. Tribune.

It is Fox's crowning achievement in pictures. "Les Miserables" has a heart throb, a heart sigh, almost a sob—it is fine, deep, human. In short, this new Fox presentation of "Les Miserables" goes beneath the surface. It appeals straight to the heart.—N. Y. American.

The contrast of Jean—in his failing but brighter hours—the kindly, the benevolent, the transformed—was a delicious piece of character work. It was a triumph of art for Farnum.—Evening World.

At the Lyric Theatre yesterday, lovers of Victor Hugo's masterpiece, "Les Miserables," rejoiced to find that this great work has been transferred to the screen by Mr. William Fox, with all the power and vividness of the original story faithfully retained and adequately expressed. Moreover the film is of such popular character that it will hold the absorbed attention of the most avid movie fan.—Evening Telegram.

A blaze of film glory. As close an approach to literature as has been accomplished on the screen. Tensely vivid.—Herald.

Reflects the true spirit of Victor Hugo's humanity. An excellent example of what the movies can do for the classics of literature.—World.

A visualized work every bit as strong as the printed word. Mr. Farnum's acting an outstanding feature.—Morning Telegraph.

Scores a success, a triumph of art for William Farnum. A delicious piece of character work.—Evening World.

ANNOUNCING THE HODKINSON EXCHANGE PLAN

Of course I could have opened new exchange offices, and piled additional expense upon the already overburdened exhibitor, but in keeping with my policies of utilizing the elements already existing in the business, I have arranged to use the finely equipped offices of a great exchange organization as the means for bringing the products I handle to the door of the theatre, UNDER AN ARRANGEMENT WHICH GIVES US THE LOWEST DISTRIBUTION COST IN THE INDUSTRY, through the General Film Company's new policy of placing its exchange facilities at the disposal of other national distributors.

THIS IS THE FIRST STEP IN MY PLAN FOR SHARING THE DISTRIBUTION PROFITS, NOW HELD BY THE PRODUCER, WITH THE EXHIBITOR.

I am pleased to be able to announce that I am utilizing the exchange system of the oldest organization in the motion picture industry, the GENERAL FILM COMPANY, with its twenty-eight offices and six hundred employes, as the service offices of the distribution system of the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation.

Beginning at once, the PARALTA PLAYS and all other product handled by the W. W. No further word need be said in emphasis of this demonstration of the breadth and sincerity of my plans for co-operation and business efficiency.

In closing, I wish to repeat the statement which I have made to those who have discussed my plans with me: I have in the past, I am today, and I shall in the future, use every force that is available for the furtherance of the solid organization which I am building.

TO MOTION PICTURE EXHIBITORS, MANUFACTURERS AND DISTRIBUTORS:

Effective at once the General Film Company takes the initiative in a tremendous reform in the motion picture industry. In association with the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation which distributes Paralta Plays and other high class feature productions, GENERAL FILM COMPANY includes in its vast exchange system the merchandising of the Hodkinson productions. In this expansion the brilliant constructive genius of Mr. W. W. Hodkinson, originator of the most logical and consistently successful methods in the industry, indorses and reinforces GENERAL FILM COMPANY'S highly intensified organization for the conduct of advanced merchandising of motion picture films.

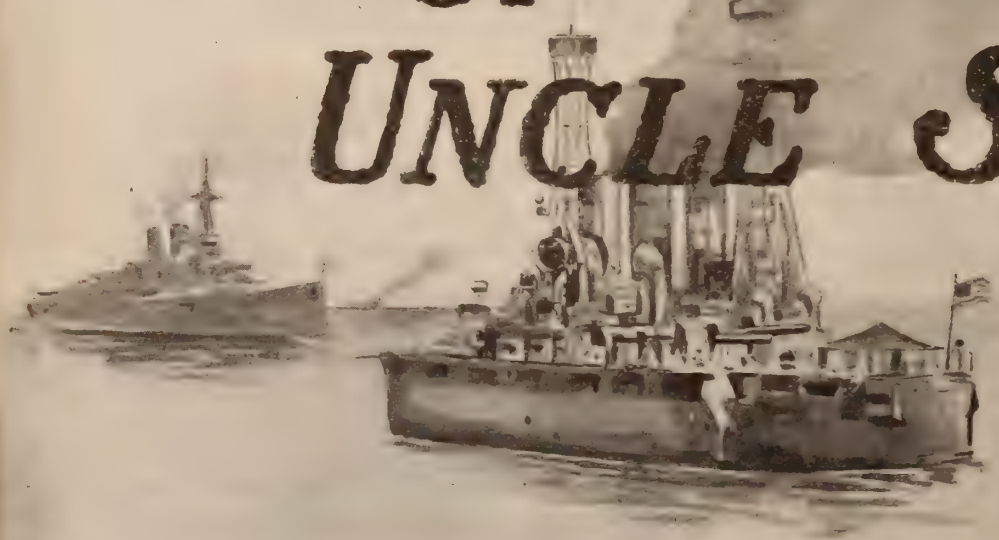
Mr. Hodkinson's decision to avail himself of this exchange service is thoroughly consistent with his well known principles. Living up to an axiom long championed by him, he chose the short cut to results by refraining from establishing another duplicate exchange machine with its added saddling of overhead expense upon the trade. He chose instead to send the Paralta and his other product, personally directed by his methods, through the already comprehensive and smoothly running GENERAL FILM COMPANY machinery without waste or needless new expense. This product comprises such gilt-edge feature releases as "A Man's Man" with J. Warren Kerrigan, "Madam Who?" with Bessie Barriscale, and other Paralta Plays featuring these stars as well as Henry B. Walthall. These two pictures are now ready for immediate bookings at all GENERAL FILM COMPANY Exchanges.

A colossal advance in the plans and scope of GENERAL FILM COMPANY is only now disclosed. It is a revival of its traditional leadership in a new direction. For the present announcement is the first shot that is to break up the stagnation in the industry that has long been baffling; it being in fact the shot that is to do away with the ruinous duplication of service and the wasteful overhead in distribution and all other practices that have been so opposed to real business principles. It is the beginning of progress and efficiency in motion picture merchandising, with distribution cost restricted to basic sales necessity and economy applied to the moving of product of all manufacturers.

GENERAL FILM COMPANY is destined to be the Union Station of the industry, providing plain, logical, sane and sound Union Station facilities to its clients, to the exhibitor, and to the public—becoming tne routing headquarters of the bulk of worth while motion picture films and operating as a high efficiency unit.

With one of Mr. Hodkinson's vision and inspiration approving GENERAL FILM COMPANY'S service as the logical nucleus of motion picture exchange service for working out his advanced ideas for the industry, the other progressive elements in the trade can easily see the importance of its position. And upon its part GENERAL FILM COMPANY for a year past has been studiously preparing its facilities to deserve such approval.

GENERAL FILM COMPANY has dedicated itself to the scientific and comprehensive merchandising demanded by the times as the inevitable salvation of the industry. It is ready.



Very truly,

"The picture that will double Mae Marsh's popularity in North America," says J. R. Muir, the big Vancouver-Victoria-Nanaimo theatre magnate.

"By all odds the greatest Mae Marsh production and George Loane Tucker's biggest picture," says Joseph Grossman, Standard Theatre, Cleveland.

Telegraphing from Los Angeles A. H. Woods, the successful theatrical magnate, says: "Just saw 'The Cinderella Man' at your branch. It is the latest word in pictures. There is no word in the English language powerful enough to describe this wonderful production."

The Biggest Box-Office Life-Saver Smashes All Records for a Year!

JUST AS GOLDWYN PREDICTED: Exhibitors everywhere are packing their theatres with "For the Freedom of the World." Marcus Loew booked it on sight for his entire chain of theatres. In Kansas City at doubled prices it played to capacity for two weeks at the Columbia Theatre. Everywhere it is proving itself to be the thrilling kind of attraction the public demands and approves. Since playing your timely and appealing patriotic feature "For the Freedom of the World" in two of our towns (Canton and Youngstown) it is my firm conviction that it is the biggest box-office life-saver of the hour. I cannot see how any live exhibitor can fail to get big returns with it anywhere.

In the face of strong competition and the prevailing general slump in picture receipts, this feature of yours has completely smashed all of our attendance records in these towns for the current calendar year.

"For the Freedom of the World," in my opinion, outclasses—in the various dramatic essentials that make for success—all of the other patriotic features that I have seen. It possesses a master scenario, tuned so true to the current vibration of an awakened American patriotism that it simply "gets" an audience, in spite of itself.

Its play upon the human emotions of a vast audience has proved a revelation to me and has proven the real powers of a photo-play to move crowds of people from all offices of life to the profoundest depths of feeling one moment and to the spontaneous outburst of applause in another. It is, indeed, a dramatic masterpiece in every sense of the word, and I am now seriously considering breaking over my ironclad rule against playing repeats, by arranging with you for return engagements in all of our towns.

General Manager.

Mutual Confidence

Sound business is built upon confidence.

The motion picture business is no exception to this rule.

The picture business, to be a success, must be founded on a relationship of confidence between the public and the exhibitor—likewise between the exhibitor and the distributor or producer.

The exhibitor who maintains a standard of quality in the pictures he shows, who provides a comfortable and attractive theatre for his patrons and whose advertising is a truthful statement of his coming attractions soon builds a reputation for his house which is a big factor toward success.

Triangle is endeavoring in every possible way to so conduct its business with exhibitors that mutual confidence will be the only possible result.

Here are some evidences of Triangle's policy.

Triangle is convinced that the program method of booking pictures offers exhibitors the best service at the least expense. It assures the exhibitor a regular supply of film at a uniform price, as well as saving his time and money in shopping and bidding for open market productions. We make this statement with full appreciation of the fact that the success of a program is largely dependent upon the maintenance of a high standard of quality. The past high standard of Triangle will not only be maintained but will be improved. You can feel absolutely assured of this.

Better pictures, better stories, better service to exhibitors, equitable prices—these are some of the goals towards which Triangle is working.

Another evidence of Triangle's desire to serve exhibitors is shown in the Hart and Fairbanks re-issues. Here are pictures of the highest quality, pictures that every exhibitor knows are box-office attractions. Triangle is offering these pictures to exhibitors at prices that enable any exhibitor to make money. Any Triangle exchange will quote you prices.

Are you taking advantage of the opportunities that Triangle is offering you of increasing your business and of making more money? Do you know that Triangle gives you a seven-reel production each month at no extra expense? Do you know that Triangle is not charging the war tax to exhibitors?

Every exhibitor not using Triangle service should get in touch with the Triangle exchange nearest him at once and get full information on Triangle service and Triangle prices.

THE distinguishable feature of the Shorty Hamilton series is that each picture is a complete story of human interest, interspersed with plot, love and adventure, situation, thrills, climaxes, abundant in clean and wholesome comedy and introducing one of the most original and unique personalities known to the screen. Because of the increasing demand for comedies and the decrease in the production of consistently funny photo plays the W. H. Clifford Photo Play Company announces at a most opportune moment a monthly release of a five reeler, each written along original lines and with a view to fitting the fun-provoking peculiarities of Shorty Hamilton, the comedian with the "pep."

THESE pictures will be artistically perfect as to direction, photography, development and printing, the staff now enrolled under the W. H. Clifford banner consisting of some of the most efficient men in the motion picture field. The Shorty Hamilton comedies will be marketed on a state right sale basis either for individual pictures or under a franchise for the entire series and on terms and conditions which will stamp them ONE BEST BUY.

A MOST effective advertising campaign has been arranged and with each release there will be available a full line of posters, heralds, cuts, stills and press matter.

THE first release is entitled "DENNY FROM IRELAND" and depicts the adventures of a "devil-may-care" Irish boy, first in the atmosphere of his native land, followed by a most strenuous existence in our own wild and woolly West.

ANNOUNCEMENT

TO INDEPENDENT PRODUCERS AND STATE RIGHT EXCHANGES:

I shall no longer confine my activities to a single producing concern.

I have opened offices and am now actively engaged in the exploitation and selling on a States Right basis, of independent productions of merit.

As the Pioneer State Right producer I pride myself in a reputation for thorough knowledge of pictures, box-office values, territorial worth and advertising and exploitation necessities, acquired through active connection with the industry as a producer, supervising director, advertising, publicity and State Right sales manager.

With my organization I mean to stabilize and standardize values and centralize the selling end of State Right productions. I am going to do what has not been done before.

What productions are worth, not what they cost, will be the basis of my sales and exploitation policy.

When I agree to exploit an attraction it will of itself be a hallmark of distinction.

I will actively and personally assist each buyer of a production to "put over" the attraction in his territory.

I will personally supervise the advertising and arrangement of advertising matter in connection with each attraction placed with me for distribution.

Mine is not merely a selling organization, it is a clearing house and service bureau.

I will do business with and for reputable concerns only and I know them all. Ask any of them.

TO INDEPENDENT PRODUCERS my message is I will procure in the United States and Canada the maximum worth of your productions within a reasonable time.

TO STATE RIGHT BUYERS my message is I will offer only those attractions that are of positive box office merit and at prices that will insure you at least a reasonable profit.

TO BOTH INDEPENDENT PRODUCER AND STATE RIGHT BUYER my message is a sale and exploitation policy that will build a permanency of business relations and permit of your continuing because both will be doing business on a reasonable and profitable return and no inflation of values and no "bunk."

The independent market demands an institution such as mine.

To Mr. William L. Sherrill, President Frohman Amusement Corp.

My Dear Mr. Sherrill:—

I take this occasion to publicly acknowledge that my organization is substantially carrying out the wonderful ideas which originated with you when you proposed the Producer's Protective Association, largely to establish a clearing house for State Right productions of merit and to eliminate waste in sales and exploitation by concentrating and stabilizing expenditures.

THE PLAN IS A GOOD ONE AND I AM GOING THROUGH WITH IT.

Mr. Live Wire Exhibitor,
Everywhere, U. S. A.

LOS ANGELES, CAL.
Nov. 30, 1917.

Did you ever run any local stuff?
How did it affect your business?
Increased it, didn't it?

Now you are going to say "Yes, but it's too expensive."
We are going to show you how you can use this every week, in fact, make your own weekly at regular service rates.

The K-B Motion Picture Camera will enable you or your operator to make local stuff at from 8 to 10 cents per foot--and take it and show it the same day.

Does that "listen" good to you?

With every complete outfit, we will furnish a free instruction book, containing all the necessary instructions and formulas for taking, developing, printing and titling, quick drying and all.

The present-day exhibitor is a "live" one, or he's not an exhibitor long--and we are talking to the "live" ones for they can see the possibilities.

The K-B Camera is not a toy; it's a real camera, almost fool-proof, and takes regular pictures --it has 200-foot magazines, side focus, adjustable shutter, film meter, is equipped with a Zeiss Tessar F3.5 M. P. lens, is light and compact, all parts easily accessable; in fact is a real machine.

The tripod has a panoram and tilting top and is as light as possible and still be rigid.

The Stineman developing tanks are marvels of efficiency consisting of 3 nested tanks and one rack--made in 50, 100 and 200 foot sizes. We suggest the 50-foot tank, which when nested is about the size of a 1000-foot film can.

In offering this outfit to you, Mr. Exhibitor, we feel that we are giving you the best "go-getter" you ever had and every item is backed by the House of Dependable Merchandise.

Going Ahead Full Steam

THIS issue of MOTION PICTURE NEWS carries a "Central States" Sub-edition—similar in scope and principle to the "West Coast" Sub-edition inaugurated in September.

These Sub-editions are maintained at considerable expense.

TO THE READER, they offer a new reading value—the biggest and best national journal plus a home news section of close editorial and advertising interest.

TO THE NATIONAL ADVERTISER, they are of interest as an important and progressive step in a practical plan to make the circulation of MOTION PICTURE NEWS 100 per cent. strong.

TO THE STATE RIGHTS BUYER, or any other dealer in films or equipment in the territory covered, they offer an intensive circulation at only a territorial advertising rate.

In circulation extension and in packing the NEWS solidly with the best editorial values obtainable we are stopping at no expense.

We believe in the future stability of this industry and this country.

And we are guided moreover by the equally firm belief that the exhibitor reads only one paper, that the industry wants only two, and that the producer who, regardless of these self-evident facts, throws away good money in wasted trade advertising is neither fair to himself nor to the exhibitor who rents his pictures.

The NEWS is the one paper.

The largest staff; the most costly features; the most expensively produced paper in the business

NEVER IN THE HISTORY OF MOVING PICTURES HAS THERE EVER BEEN SUCH A WONDERFUL SCENE AS THE ICE CARNIVAL showing seven thousand people on the ice in the Chicago Arena to THOSE WHO HAVE OR HAVE NOT witnessed the scenes of Charlotte's wonderful skating feats for which she is famed over two continents. These scenes alone are worth the price of admission.

CHARLOTTE WILL BE REMEMBERED IN HIP! HIP! HOORAH! as the famous queen of the ice who created a great sensation when she headed the ice ballet in the New York Hippodrome a year ago and in which she appeared in all the principal cities in the United States.

Save the Eighty Per Cent. Man

The Small Town House Is Going to the Wall—What Can Be Done?

SINCE the first tax-created flurry sufficient time has passed to crystallize from the confusion some definite lessons. The producers and all grades of theatres have been heard from; in the columns of MOTION PICTURE NEWS we have presented reports covering all classes.

From the chaos one lesson stands out; one immediate necessity calls for action.

The eighty per cent man—the small theatre owner—is facing extinction; and the industry cannot afford to let him die.

The large theatres report varying conditions of prosperity—most will weather the storm. The producers have problems of no mean proportions—however, they are in a position to help themselves.

But the eighty per centers—the neighborhood houses of the big cities but more particularly the small community theatres—have thrown up their hands in despair. Their cry is not, "We are suffering." Their plain resigned statement is "We are being killed. We cannot keep our doors open."

* * * * *

SOMETHING must be done to save the eighty per center. The industry cannot declare smugly, "We will be better off without these theatres. If they are too weak to stand the tax crisis they are only weakening to the industry at their best. Let it be the 'survival of the fittest.'"

The something that is done cannot consist simply in the admonition, "Raise your prices."

The something that is done cannot end with the urging to "Better the quality of your entertainment."

When theatres that are alone in their communities declare that they cannot go on, that the only way out leads out of the industry then it is clear that such suggestions will fall on deaf ears.

If the eighty per centers are to be saved action and not words must do it; if the eighty per centers are to be saved the best brains and the best will of the industry must turn to the task.

ALREADY some things are being done. The producers, we understand, have labored without letup in conferences for the past few weeks to work out modifications of the reel tax which will prove more equitable to the smaller houses. To still further meet the exhibitor viewpoint it is probable that their conclusions will be presented to the conference at Washington this week.

If the Washington conference, conceived without reason, meeting without object, and pregnant with danger to the industry, will let its labors rest with the consideration of these recommendations some good might come out of it.

This readjustment of the reel tax will aid the eighty per center.

But it is folly to assume that the reel tax alone is sending the eighty per center to the wall.

The draft has taken its share from his patronage; war fund appeals of all sorts are keeping dimes from his till; the patron tax is dampening the ardor of the economical.

But with it all the eighty per center's hands should not be thrown up in despair had the eighty per center's condition been healthy in peace times.

* * * *

IN so far as the eighty per center was concerned, we had been skating along on the thinnest of ice even before the war and its effects began to be felt. Producers were making little profit out of the eighty per centers; the eighty per centers were making less for themselves.

The eighty per center was being forgotten. Its success founded on the principle that "Circulation of prints, keeping them working, is the secret," the industry was narrowing its attention to the big fellow, the big rental, the quick and obvious money.

Mounting production costs and greater selling expenses were flanked by Service that aided the big fellow but only scratched the surface of the eighty per center's problem. Constructive effort to keep him a live and healthy factor in the game was wanting.

Speaking Editorially:

The Latest Mode

THIS picture business runs to fashions with all the capriciousness of Madame herself. Just now it is the Exhibitor Circuit which has the call. To be a la mode you must be in a circuit, doing business with a circuit, or about to start one.

Just where it will lead to is hard to say.

The states rights man is particularly worried. New productions reaching the market have to run so long a gauntlet of circuits that it would seem the cream has been skimmed before the independent with limited territory can begin to survey the market.

Producers are worrying little. Though it would seem that a further extension of circuiting would create some new problems for the program.

But perhaps by that time Dame Fashion will have changed her mind again.

A Suggestion for the Eighty Per Center

WE have called attention before to the value of our page, "The Reader Has His Say," in reflecting the thoughts and feelings of exhibitors of all classes in every section of the country. Their value is also apparent in promoting courses of action in dealing with the exhibitor.

One writer this week steps to the front with a suggestion meriting unusual consideration. It offers also a possible solution of the eighty per center's problem as discussed on the preceding page. To give deserved promise we quote the particular suggestion by Quinton Herman, of The Playhouse, Kutztown, Pa.

"The war tax on tickets will be a proof to all exchanges of the amount of business done by each exhibitor. Why not have exchanges charge film rental according to war tax paid. As an illustration—I paid for the month of November $48.07 war tax. Now I am willing to pay the exchange that serves me just double the war tax for service during the month of December. In January I would pay double my December war tax for film rental, etc. I have figured over this and find that this is the proportion that can be paid by any exhibitor and still keep him on the safe side. I have often wondered why some exchange had not offered its pictures on the percentage basis and whenever I asked an exchange about it I found that there were too many CROOKS in the business and that they could not trust them to make correct returns. Now with the war tax going the returns must be correct and I believe that the exchange who will offer the pictures according to business done will get the business in the future. I could write a whole lot more about this scheme but feel that this letter is getting too lengthy. I might mention that the above is figured on an eight-reel program, and in my case it means about 33 1/3 per cent of my receipts for film rental. This is all that any exhibitor can afford to pay. . . .

"If I pay the exchange 1/3 of my receipts and if all other exhibitors would do the same I feel that we all could make a comfortable living. On the other hand the pictures that draw would pay the biggest rental. This, I think, is the first thing that should be done. I am paying the same price for a rotten picture as I would pay for the best picture made. This is because exchanges are anxious for business and do not care how they get it. If the percentage basis could be put into operation the producer would soon realize that the best paying picture is the one that gets the money."

Percentage methods of booking have been frequently suggested for larger theatres, and we know of producers who have considered them as applied to the smaller houses' problems. But, as Mr. Herman says, it has remained for the war tax on admissions to make the plan practical.

Whether the percentages suggested by Mr. Herman for film rental are satisfactory or not, remains for discussion. We would like to hear from other exhibitor readers who will consider the plan as applied to them. We would like, also, to learn the producer's viewpoint.

The Man in the Sticks

A FEW weeks ago we said The Man in the Sticks wanted to know why a producer will engage high-salaried authors, a still costlier star and then waste thousands of feet of film on a story that would not do justice to a single reeler.

The Man in the Sticks has another question. This man is still deeper in the sticks where sixty-day service is a "special." He wants to know:

"Why, when inspection and patching are so cheap, do exchanges send us films with entire feet of sprocket holes missing, and stories distorted through lost parts and whole scenes.

"Even though we are in the sticks they work hard for our patronage, their salesmen talk like greased lightning, we advertise our heads off and then—the vaunted 'special' is a rainy, scratchy, mess."

We May Be Lucky

THE thought comes, as we consider the tax situation at Washington, that we of the picture industry may be lucky if we do not find the next Congress devising new ways of loading taxation on our shoulders.

In the language of the road, "They sure do need the money—and all they know about pictures is that Chaplin and Pickford get a million a year—so we look like juicy picking."

Perhaps we better be satisfied to take Congress into our confidence, tell them the facts about our business and then consider ourselves fortunate if we prevent further taxes. It's a thought worth considering.

But a slight weight was needed to crack the ice; war and its burdens have succeeded.

The eighty per center is tottering. If he falls then hundreds of the towns of the country will be without a picture theatre next year. Permanent, reliable business men will be succeeded by irresponsible, transient road shows.

The salvation of the eighty per center must take drastic shape, though constructive; it must have its birth in the minds of the men who make and sell the pictures. What will be done?

THE WEST COAST

"BEST KIND OF A BUY"

"On my recent trip through the West Coast States I found MOTION PICTURE NEWS to be the strongest trade paper. Exhibitors everywhere read it.

"They are delighted with the West Coast sub-edition, looking forward to it eagerly each week. Its advertising pages ought to be the best kind of a buy for the owner of territorial rights to pictures in these eleven Western States."

The above is the voluntary testimony of Frank Backer of the Mammouth Film Corporation, 729 Seventh Avenue, New York City.

Directors' Ball Proves Successful

THE third annual ball given Thanksgiving Night at the Rose Rooms of Hotel Alexandria, Los Angeles, by members of the Motion Picture Directors' Association, was a most successful event, attended by almost all the screen favorites, many executives, writers, and all directors of the west coast colony who are members.

Joseph deGrasse was chairman of the committee on arrangements, and was assisted by Wm. R. Daly, Allen Curtis, Phillips Smalley, Frank Beal, Thomas H. Heffron, and William Russell, as well as Director or President William D. Taylor, and Past-Director Otis Turner.

The reception committee had Charles Swickard as chairman, and other members were: Reginald Barker, John G. Blystone, Wallace Beery, William Beaudine, Bert Bracken, Frank Borzage, Al. E. Christie, Lloyd B. Carleton, Roy Clements, Jack Conway, Louis Wm. Chaudet, Donald W. Crisp, Colin Campbell, E. F. Cline, Horace G. Davey, J. F. Dillon, Harry Edwards, Walter Edwards, Charles K. French, Fred Fichbach, E. Mason Hopper, Harry Harvey, Victor Herman, Allen J. Holubar, Jacques Jaccard, Henry King, and Lois Weber.

Raymond B. West was chairman of the floor committee, and his co-workers were: Fred A. Kelsey, Frank Lloyd, Robert Leonard, Ed. J. Lesaint, Tom Mix, J. Farrell MacDonald, Norval MacGregor, Murdock J. MacQuarrie, Henry McRae, J. P. McGowan, Donald MacDonald, George Marshall, Marshall A. Neilan, Henry W. Otto, Francis J. Powers, Stuart Payton, Lynn F. Reynolds, Thomas Ricketts, H. Scott Sidney, Lloyd Geo. Sargent, Edward Sloman, George A. Siegmann, Ben Wilson, Harry Williams, William Wolbert, and James Young.

The music for the event was furnished by a twenty-two piece orchestra, and during the evening a number of special features were given, which added materially to the pleasure of the event. Prizes were awarded during the evening which were given by D. W. Griffith, the Misses Gish, Mary Pickford, Olive Thomas, and others. A buffet luncheon was served at midnight.

Gould Service Opens Los Angeles Office

AFTER three separate tours which took him to all portions of the United States for a thorough investigation of conditions which confront the theatre manager, independent exchange man, and film salesman, A. C. Gould has opened an office in the Hibernian Bank Building, Los Angeles, which is to be the home of A. C. Gould Service, which organization will devote its time and energy to the marketing and advertising of films.

In his travels to all parts of the country, Mr. Gould has become very intimate with the marketing and advertising of films, and the knowledge thus gained will be given to the clients patronizing this service bureau.

Prior to deciding to embark in the merchandizing and advertising of photoplays, Mr. Gould had a very thorough schooling in these lines through his close affiliation with one of the largest manufacturing concerns which reaches every part of the world-wide market for their product, which is intimately known to everyone.

John Glavey Forms New Company

JOHN GLAVEY, who was formerly affiliated with the William Fox studio, serving in the capacity of scenario department manager and casting director, has left the Fox organization following an engagement of more than a year. Mr. Glavey, in affiliation with a number of West Coast film colony men, is now busy with the work necessary to the forming of a new producing company, and it is expected announcement of their activities will shortly be made.

Federal Officials Grab "Spirit of '76"

FEDERAL officers on instruction of United States Judge Benjamin F. Bledsoe, confiscated negative and positive print of the multiple reel picture titled "The Spirit of '76" late last week, and placed Robert Goldstein, author and producer, under arrest until he gave $5,000 bond for his appearance on the day the trial was set for hearing. The film is the property of the Continental Film Corporation, and the action of the federal authorities followed the showing of the film at Clune's Auditorium, Los Angeles, where it was given its second premier this week. Six performances were given before the confiscation and arrest were made. The film was shown in Chicago last summer after a battle of two weeks with censors and others, who objected to its showing.

The objection to the film is that it shows soldiers of Great Britain, an ally of United States at the present time in the world war, in an unfavorable light. The court in causing the arrest of Robert Goldstein made a statement in which he said in part: "There is interspersed in this play those things which tend to appeal to the passions of our nature, which tend to arouse our revenge and to question the good faith of our ally, Great Britain, and tend to make us a little bit slack in our loyalty to Great Britain in this great catastrophe or emergency.

"In addition, this man (Goldstein), by his own admission, knew that these things were inhibited. He knows that objection was made to them."

Los Angeles to Fight Reel Tax

AT the weekly meeting of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners' Association this week, Frank M. McDonald, manager of the Portola theatre in Los Angeles, and president of the association, was selected as delegate to attend the motion picture theatre mens' gathering the middle of December.

At the same time members of the association made plans for combating the fifteen-cent-per-reel rental tax, and state that the committee appointed to take care of this work will make complete report at the next meeting to be held shortly. Just what measures will be recommended by the committee in charge, is a matter of conjecture, but it is reported the plan for using a great number of twenty-four sheet bill boards has been officially O. K.'d by a majority of the members. There is also some talk of having a mass meeting at one of the largest theatres to which business men will be invited and a general discussion conducted as to the justice of the tax being placed on the exhibitor.

Davis Brothers Make Bid for Business

DAVIS BROTHERS, who conduct an independent exchange in San Francisco are out with an offer to the exhibitor for films at prices particularly attractive at a time when the box-office receipts are not up to normal. This exchange is now handling a number of successes including "Purity," "Where Are My Children?" "House of Bondage," with Lottie Pickford; "On the Fighting Line" with Kean Gauntier; "Sapho," and a number of comedies including "His Dream" and "The Mix-Up" with Charlie Chaplin, and Fred Mace in "What Happened to Jones."

The Davis Brothers plan to shortly add a number of new subjects to their already big stock which will include a series adapted from Ella Wheeler Wilcox's writings.

Helen Holmes and J. P. McGowan Visit East

J. P. McGOWAN and Miss Helen Holmes, upon completion of the Mutual-Signal serial "The Lost Express," fulfilled their contract with the Signal Film Corporation, and left for the East where negotiations are pending for the making of a number of feature productions as well as additional serials in which Miss Holmes will be starred.

Activities in Portland and Denver

SOL BAUM, manager for Bluebird Photoplays in this territory, has returned for a Thanksgiving stay in Portland, after a trip over the Willamette Valley and Southern Oregon territory.

A RISE of admission prices in all of the principal cities of the Valley, to 20 cents is reported by Mr. Baum, with a corresponding tendency on the part of the exhibitors to concentrate more on feature productions for their programs.

THE Southern Oregon theatre men also raised to 20, and the theatre men in Marshfield and the principal cities about Coos Bay.

SAM MEYER of the Hippodrome theatre, Portland, was host to nearly 200 theatrical and press folk at the "Hip" for a midnight Thanksgiving party. Motion pictures, vaudeville, special orchestral music, a "Dutch" lunch and dancing held the crowd from 11 until 2.30.

"THE WOMAN GOD FORGOT," the Geraldine Farrar-DeMille-Artcraft spectacle, played to huge crowds at the Liberty theatre, Portland, for five days.

A SIX-PIECE orchestra was added to his theatre in Grants Pass by Joe Wolke, manager of the Joy, when he put the new war admission price into effect, and he also has developed a program of feature productions.

J. V. HOUSTON, controlling the two theatres in Klamath Falls, is looking forward to so successful a season that he has arranged to give additional shows in the opera house in Klamath Falls, in addition to his programs in the two other theatres.

W. L. PEEL, formerly of Pocatello, is opening a new theatre, the Princess, in Tillamook, December 6, with three shows a week.

S. LE ROUGE, of Battleground, Washington, has just finished enlarging his theatre for the third time. He began with seating capacity for 150 and now has accommodation for 275.

A. W. ESTES, of Willamette, has leased the Brooklyn theatre, of 672 Milwaukee street, Portland, from A. C. Roehn and will run a five-day-a-week program.

Denver News Notes

DENVER theatres have all enjoyed a good volume of business during the month of November, proving conclusively that the admission tax has not been a deterrent factor. A majority of the houses report that all attendance records were broken on Thanksgiving day. Curtis street houses will turn over to the government approximately $7,000, representing the aggregate admission tax collected from their patrons during November.

SEVERAL reports have been received from smaller towns in Denver territory, perhaps principally on the Western Slope, to the effect that exhibitors have cut down their runs from seven to four and five days a week. Among these theatres is the Isis at Aspen, Colo.

R. S. NELSON, local manager of the General Film Corporation, announces that the Denver force will have a new home about January 1 on Film Row.

THE Supreme Photoplay Corporation has acquired the rights for "The Whip" in Colorado, Utah, Wyoming and New Mexico as its latest road attraction. In addition to rights for Billie West Comedies in the above named territory, they have now taken over the states of Idaho and Montana.

W. W. TALLY will make his initial trip as a road salesman for Vitagraph in about two weeks. W. C. Wiethoff of the Vitagraph force has been promoted to the position of booking clerk.

MARGARET BROOKS DICKSON and Julia J. Mathey have reopened the York theatre, starting with Normal Talmadge as the main attraction at a Thanksgiving Day matinee. For the present they will probably run every night and a Sunday matinee. They report a full house at every performance since their opening. They are both Denver women and former patrons of the theatre.

BEN S. COHEN, vice president and general manager of the new Foursquare Pictures Corporation of Colorado, announces the release for Wyoming, Utah and New Mexico of Ince's production, "The Zeppelin's Last Raid."

H. B. HURST, president of the South Dakota Exhibitors' League and proprietor of the Deadwood theatre, reports a very satisfactory fall and preholiday business.

DAN F. M'COY of the World is covering Colorado and E. P. Briggs, also of the World office, is visiting New Mexico exhibitors this week.

L. H. LUND of New York City, auditor for Triangle, arrived recently from Seattle. He will probably remain in Denver two weeks. A. E. Fair, local manager for Triangle, is expected to return this week from a Salt Lake business trip.

TWO thousand poor children of Denver were the guests of S. L. Baxter at a special Thanksgiving morning. The free tickets were distributed through the co-operation of the Denver Post. It was a splendid sight to see the eager, smiling faces of these children as they filed into the auditorium to see Fox's "Aladdin and His Wonderful Lamp." Many of them actually walked several miles to witness the popular production simply because they didn't have car fare.

D. T. M'ELHINNEY, Fox road salesman, is covering Black Hills territory.

M. B. GRAVES opened the first motion picture theatre in Merino, Colo., on November 24. Seating capacity of the new house is 200.

THE first movie house in Dalton, Neb., was opened on December 1 by B. B. Isenminger. Dalton has a population of 1,500 and the new theatre seats 200.

Parsons Goes East In Interest of Picture

WILLIAM PARSONS, president of the National Film Corporation, was last week planning on leaving for the East to complete arrangements for the initial showing of the multiple reel subject, "Tarzan of the Apes," which is nearing completion in the editing department under the supervision of Scott Sidney.

"The picture comes up to my expectations in every respect," President Parsons said after viewing the revised print which is still in the process of editing, "and I feel positive it will be the film sensation of the year. The story is different from anything that has been seen on the screen, and with the added dramatic situations made necessary in the filming, it will prove even more attractive than did the novel as it appeared in book form or as a newspaper serial."

Frisco Film Men Attend Opening

A LARGE delegation of San Francisco film men attended the opening of James Beatty's new Liberty theatre at Fresno on Tuesday, November 27, making the trip in a special car which left San Francisco Monday night and returned Wednesday morning. The excursion was arranged and managed by M. J. Cohen, representing the United Motion Pictures Industry of Northern California. These were the members of the party:

William J. Citron, manager of the Fox Film Corporation; L. Reichert, the Metro manager; G. C. Parsons, manager for Goldwyn; Manager J. W. Allen, Paramount-Artcraft; M. H. Cohn, president of the Consolidated Film Corporation; E. C. Jensen, manager of the World Film Corporation; Edward B. Baron, sales manager of the American Photo Player Co.; Louis Hyman, manager All-Star Features; M. L. Markowitz, manager California Film Exchange; E. O. Child, manager Pathe Film Exchange; Newton Levi, Mutual manager; Ralph Quive, manager Greater Vitagraph; C. W. Midgeley, manager American theatre, Oakland, and the Alameda theatre; A. Davis, representing the General Film Company; Mike Zar, of the Fox Films; Ralph Smith, representing the Triangle; Henry Bredhoff, president of the Hawaii Film Co.; C. W. Voight and G. C. Blumenthal, of Metro; H. von Emmel, of Perfection Pictures; C. J. Goddard, manager of the Goddard theatre, Sacramento; M. J. Cohen, San Francisco, manager of the George Kleine System.

These were joined at Fresno by a Los Angeles delegation consisting of the following: E. H. Silcocks, branch manager of the George Kleine System; Arthur Brick, of Perfection Pictures; Harry Naugle, manager western division Greater Photoplay; H. H. Hicks, branch manager Select Films; D. Bershon, manager California Universal Co.; Irving Lesser, manager All-Star Features.

The party was entertained at breakfast in the Hotel Fresno, as guests of Mr. Beatty, who also owns the Liberty theatre, San Jose. After a drive about the city, lunch was served at the Sunnyside Club.

Horkheimers Entertain in Arbuckle's Honor

MESSRS. H. M. and E. D. HORKHEIMER entertained principals of the West Coast film colony numbering more than a thousand, Thanksgiving Evening, at a buffet dance at the new glass studio of the Balboa Company at Long Beach, the event being in honor of Roscoe Arbuckle, who has leased producing space at the Horkheimer Brothers studio for the making of Paramount comedies. The stage, approximately 125 x 250 feet, was very elaborately decorated. An attractive fountain, prettily lighted by spotlights, served as a centerpiece, and orchestras and a jazz band furnished music continuously for the dancers. Interior settings representing a palatial cafe, a western saloon and a mining camp commissary were built upon the open air stage adjoining where the dance was given, and the buffet lunch and refreshments were served there.

A beautiful silver loving cup, the gift from members of the producing company which filmed "Number One" at the Horkheimer studio, was presented to Kathleen Clifford. Roscoe Arbuckle acted as master of ceremonies, proving himself a comedian off the screen as well as on.

Ogden Theatres Unaffected by Tax

OGDEN, Utah.—If there has been any disposition on the part of motion picture patrons to complain against the war tax the complaint has not been shown in attendance or receipts, according to the managers of theatres in this city. Instead of resorting to the use of pennies, the managers reached an agreement to increase the price of admission on November 1 from ten to fifteen cents, a majority of the theatres here having never charged more than ten cents.

By adopting this plan the managers made no increase on the children's tickets, paying the required war tax out of the extra amount collected on the former ten-cent tickets. The plan of the Ogden theatre managers has been endorsed by S. D. Chase, division deputy internal collector, who has headquarters in Salt Lake City.

Here and There in Spokane

A. H. MacMILLAN, who has been placing the Alice Howell productions of the Long Acre Distributing Company of the Spokane branch, has severed his connection with the above concern and entered the employment of the Vita Graph Company of Seattle, covering the northwest territory.

PETER DES ROSIER of Browning, Montana, booked through Manager Potter of the Universal the Howell Comedies and the Red Ace Service. Says Des Rosier: "Marie Walcamp, the star in the Red Ace, always fills my theatre and my patrons ask for more pictures of this caliber.

"TWENTY THOUSAND LEAGUES UNDER THE SEA" is now being offered to the exhibitors of Spokane and adjacent territory on a percentage basis. It was shown at Ephrata, Odessa, Wilson Creek, Northport, Colville and Chewelah recently and a record-breaking business was the rule.

BERT R. LATZ, northwest representative for Jewell Productions, Inc., was in Spokane and vicinity recently placing these productions.

MANAGERS ALLENDER AND YORK made a special feature of a children's performance as an aid to history of "Heroic France," which proved a great success.

THE operators' union of Spokane recently celebrated the signing of a contract by the management of the Majestic theatre by serenading with a band of fifty pieces the following theatres who are employers of union help: The Hippodrome, Pantages, Auditorium, Liberty, Clemmer, Majestic and Lyric. Under the ordinance now in effect in Spokane a man does not have to have any experience to obtain a license to work as a moving picture operator. The moving picture operators' union maintains that the operation of a moving picture machine is a hazardous, if not dangerous, occupation for the theatre-going public, and a man should not be placed in charge of an apparatus in a theatre unless he passed a suitable examination and have had a reasonble amount of practical experience. A man must pass a practical examination and have at least six months' experience to be admitted to the operators' union. A strong fight is to be put up to have the ordinance changed along lines safeguarding the public welfare more.

Rogers, New Standard Boss, Has Made Rapid Rise

THE placing of Frank B. Rogers at the head of the Standard Film Corporation's Chicago office, succeeding Ralph O. Proctor, who resigned to go with the Pathe Company, marks a very rapid rise in windy city film circles. In 1916 Mr. Rogers made his first real start, although in a small capacity, with the General Film Company at Kansas City. By strange coincidence Mr. Proctor, whom he has succeeded at the Chicago Standard office, was then in charge of the Kansas City General Film Company's offices. Upon Mr. Proctor's leaving General to come to Chicago, Mr. Rogers accompanied him. In Chicago, however, their paths divided. Mr. Proctor went with the Standard Film Corporation here, and Mr. Rogers signed up with Essanay as the manager of the Chicago office, exploiting the Max Linder comedies. When Essanay was forced to cease production of the Linder comedies, due to the French comedian's illness, Mr. Rogers was then transferred as a special representative to the K.E.S.E. offices. Later, or to be exact, about six months ago, he once again joined effort with Mr. Proctor, working with him at the Standard offices. His work so impressed the members of the Standard Film Corporation that when Mr. Proctor announced his resignation, Mr. Rogers was immediately named to succeed him.

While new to the executive chair at the Standard offices, Mr. Rogers is keeping all the friends of the past and rapidly making new ones with the gentlemanly qualities and affable disposition, as well as his recognized ability in the film field.

MOTION picture theatres in the Arizona cities effected by strikes which began in June and which have recently been settled, have now been reopened and the managers report business is up to normal again. The Empire at Morenci, and the Princess at Clifton, owned and conducted by F. C. Martin, together with the Metcalfe theatre at Metcalfe, Arizona, owned and managed by W. J. Mason were affected by the strike conditions.

A NEW policy has been adopted by the Appollo theatre at Forty-eighth street and Vermont avenue, Los Angeles, by Manager B. L. Patterson, which provides that the theatre will be operated on four nights a week, with as many changes. The nights selected are Tuesday, Thursday, Saturday and Sunday. A decrease in patronage is given as a cause for the adoption of this policy. A number of other theatre managers are watching the results obtained by Mr. Patterson, and it is probable if business conditions for the theatre owners do not improve, that a number of others will follow the example. Patterson is a former secretary of Motion Picture Theatre Men's Association of California.

MANAGER FRANK R. ALEXANDER of the Iris theatre in Hollywood, is now planning on opening his new house about the middle of December. This theatre will be named Iris, as have the two previous theatres built by Alexander in Hollywood. The first contained 235 seats; his present theatre has 400, and the new edifice will have approximately 900.

MILLER'S THEATRE of Los Angeles is to adopt a new policy which provides for change of program on Saturday instead of Monday. Manager Fred Miller, who has the franchise for the first run of Fox Standard Pictures, believes this change will be beneficial, inasmuch as the house will be benefitted by the word of mouth advertising by the patron who attends on Saturday and Sunday. The new policy will be adopted with the showing of "The Rose of Blood," the Theda Bara picture which began a run on December 1.

What's New in San Francisco?

THE Alhambra theatre in San Francisco has changed hands, being now under the management of Al Nathan, who formerly managed the Strand and later the Superba in Los Angeles. He has made a big success of the latter house and expects to do as well with the Alhambra. Bluebird and Jewel productions are to be shown exclusively.

E. A. MILLER, manager of the Stockton T. & D. theatre, is taking a vacation on account of ill health and his place is temporarily occupied by Tom Smith, formerly of the Globe, at Portland.

A SECOND organ is being installed in the Tivoli theatre, San Francisco, and both instruments will be played simultaneously.

TURNER & DAHNKEN gave sacred concerts, free to the public, on Thanksgiving Day, in all their California theatres. The programs begin at 10 o'clock. At Stockton a fifty-piece symphony orchestra was heard, in addition to the organ and song program.

SACRAMENTO authorities prevented the showing of the Rev. Paul Smith morality play, "The Finger of Justice," and the owners of the production have threatened legal proceedings to put an end to the interference. The picture is of high moral character, though it deals with the San Francisco vice cleanup, and there is no reason why even Sacramento shouldn't see it.

THE Paul Smith Company has established new headquarters at 120 Golden Gate avenue, in Film Row.

ORCHESTRAL pipe organs have been installed in the New Fillmore and New Mission theatres of the Kahn & Greenfield circuit by the American Photo Player Company.

FRITZIE RIDGEWAY, a nineteen-year-old movie actress, has filed with the State Accident Commission of California a permanent compensation claim for injuries sustained six months ago while at work for the Universal Film Company. The Royal Indemnity Company is made a co-defendant in the suit. Miss Ridgeway alleges that she was injured when struck during a wild horseback ride down a steep and narrow trail.

WALDEMAR YOUNG'S new film production, "The Man Trap," attracted special attention during its week at the Strand theatre, San Francisco, as Mr. Young was until recently a member of the "Examiner" staff and president of the San Francisco Newspapermen's Club. The club members attended in a body and a telegram of congratulation was sent to Mr. Young by Mayor Rolph.

THE Royal theatre at Martinez, Cal., has been reopened by A. T. Case.

J. C. ADAMS of Salt Lake City arrived in San Francisco a few days ago with the intention of opening an exchange there.

MANAGER WILLIAMS of the Unique and Jewel theatres, Santa Cruz, was a visitor in San Francisco's Film Row last week.

Propaganda Films Leases Studio

THE Propaganda Films Association, a California corporation, has taken a lease on the old Majestic studio in Boyle Heights, Los Angeles, and will shortly begin the production of a multiple reel subject. Clarence G. Barr, formerly with the Fine Arts and other Los Angeles producing companies, has been engaged as director. The first film will be made from a story written by Anna H. Friedman and will deal with psychic phenomena.

In West Coast Exchanges

HARRY D. NAUGLE, general western representative of Greater Vitagraph Company, is on a trip to Salt Lake and Denver, following his recent return from a tour of all the exchanges in his territory, which is that part of the country west of the Mississippi River.

HERMAN WOBBER, general western representative of Paramount and Artcraft programs, whose headquarters is at San Francisco, is spending several days in the Los Angeles and southern California territory, working with Manager M. H. Lewis of the Los Angeles branch.

LOS ANGELES exchangemen who attended the opening of the new Liberty theatre at Fresno, Wednesday evening, November 28, were Dave Bershon, of California Film Exchange; H. H. Hicks, of Select Pictures; C. P. Silcocks, Perfection Pictures; Arthur Brick, Kleine Exchange; Harry D. Naugle, western representative of Greater Vitagraph Company, and Irving Lesser, Los Angeles manager of the All-Star Feature Distributors.

JAMES BATEY, owner and manager of the new Liberty theatre, who is also owner of the Liberty at San Jose, Cal., was also host of all the exchangemen from San Francisco, who went to Fresno in a special car. The Los Angeles exchangemen autoed to the Raisin District city. While in Fresno the film exchangemen were guests of the Chamber of Commerce, they being entertained at the Fresno Hotel for luncheon, spent the afternoon at the Sunnyside Country Club, and were guests at a dinner given in the evening by the Chamber of Commerce.

THE new Liberty theatre at Fresno is one of 2,200 seats, and is spoken of as very attractive in every detail. The opening program included the Fox Standard Picture, "When a Man Sees Red," together with the Sunshine comedy, "Roaring Lions and Wedding Bells." The policy of the new house provides for two changes of pictures weekly, and Mr. Batey has engaged an orchestra of ten pieces.

JAMES HUMMEL, formerly salesman for the Los Angeles General Film branch, who has been at the officers' training camp at San Francisco for the past several weeks, has been appointed lieutenant, and shortly expects to be ordered to report for actual army duty.

THROUGH the courtesy of Manager Guy Gunderson, of the Los Angeles Fox Exchange, more than 300 Jewish orphans who were entertained at Levy's Cafe, Los Angeles, were shown the Fox kiddo picture, "Aladdin and His Wonderful Lamp." Projection equipment was supplied by J. Slipper & Co., and the film was shown on the screen placed at one end of the big cafe. The popularity of previous Fox pictures with the children was emphatically brought out when Manager Gunderson asked all the children who had seen the Fox production of "Jack and the Beanstalk" to stand up. According to Manager Al Levy of the cafe, there was not an occupied seat in the dining room.

WILLIAM KNOTTS, who served as manager for the Los Angeles World Exchange for more than a year, and recently has been identified with the booking of Jewel Productions for the California Film Exchange, has tendered his resignation to accept the management of the Greater Vitagraph San Francisco branch exchange. Mr. Knotts left for the Bay City this week to take up his new work.

THE WAR TAX on motion picture admissions introduced the dime and nickel into Fairbanks, Alaska, according to F. W. Talbert, special representative of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company, who returned to Portland, Ore., last week after a trip of 3½ months through Alaska coast cities. He tells of the shipping of dimes and nickels from Cordova to R. L. Thorne, manager of the theatre at Fairbanks, just before Mr. Talbert left for the Rose City.

HEADQUARTERS—
in LOS ANGELES, CALIFORNIA

We are enjoying a large part of the motion picture business of this city.

WHY

First— Because we offer fourteen hours of excellent banking service, from eight in the morning until ten in the evening, which affords an unusual convenience for all depositors who are busily engaged during the usual banking hours.

Second—Because we appreciate the worth of, and try to promote the welfare of the motion picture business.

Third— Because our many satisfied depositors bring their friends to the bank, who, in turn, become satisfied depositors.

Fourth—Because all of the stock of this bank is owned by The Citizens National Bank, the total resources of both banks being over twenty-five million.

A Word of Introduction

MR. EXHIBITOR, Mr. Supply Dealer, Mr. Exchange Manager, Mr. State Rights Buyer and all the rest of the trade in Illinois, Indiana, Wisconsin, Iowa and Michigan meet the CENTRAL STATES EDITION! It is yours. We have promised you this second of territorial sub-editions. Here it is. We modestly offer it to you in this rich and active center of the great United States as a separate and exclusive medium.

THE CENTRAL STATES EDITION, to make a homely but nevertheless plain simile, is your own back fence in your own back yard over which you may chat or bargain in a manner never before offered you. Hereafter every issue of MOTION PICTURE NEWS you receive will contain this sub-edition of yours. Take advantage of it, use it in informing your neighbor what you are doing; make your complaints or place your praises here. Learn what your fellows in your rich, compact and well knitted territory are doing. Take advantage of this unique opportunity of receiving a big national weekly trade paper with your own little local newspaper bound within it.

OFFERING as it does to you of the Central States the first opportunity of having your news, views and information segregated within its pages, the CENTRAL STATES EDITION is bound to be constructive. Remember that, besides being geographically the center of the country, your territory is also well reputed within the film industry as being one of the most active and up-and-doing centers of the trade. To keep it so there must be contact, one with the other. Before the advent of the Central States this was only secured as one met the other in an exchange office, at the poster window, on the street, or lined up at the supply house counter. Most of the time when these chance associations offered, time and mood were absent to take advantage of them.

Now you can choose your time or your mood. Instead of you seeking the news and information it now seeks you, and regularly every week at that. In all the towns of any size in these five states, able correspondents have been engaged to furnish this news of you and others for the Central States. More will be added as time permits until practically every worth while part of the quintet of states is covered. Our Chicago office will be the headquarters.

TO the state rights man, to the territorial program distributor, to everybody with an appeal; for within this territory it offers unprecedented advertising opportunities and facilities. It causes to fade that old fear of waste circulation for the price paid. It offers intensive circulation with rates based thereon, but still with all the prestige of MOTION PICTURE NEWS that the national advertiser enjoys.

Let us know immediately what you think of it, readers! Tell us without hesitation what we may still do to make the CENTRAL STATES EDITION one hundred per cent. welcome and worthy to you of the trade in Illinois, Indiana, Wisconsin, Iowa and Michigan.

WM. J. MCGRATH.

Major "Funkie" Entertains Chicago's Aldermen

THE aldermen on the subcommittee of the Chicago City Council who have been investigating the censorship problem for the past few weeks and finding much of interest were still further entertained and initiated into the workings of the censorial shears last Tuesday when Major Funkhouser invited them to sit in with him at a performance of the Fox Film, "Cleopatra."

The aldermen primarily journeyed up to the tenth floor of the City Hall to see scenes which had been cut out of a miscellaneous lot of films during the past eight months. It was after these pictures had been shown that the major pulled his treat.

He ran off the ten-reel feature in which Theda Bara figures as the siren of the Nile and then turned to the aldermen for justification for making the forty slashes in the feature he deemed necessary. But there was a division of opinion among the aldermen. Some thought the picture should be cut and some felt that it shouldn't. Aldermen Steffen, Maypole and Woodhull were of the opinion that "Cleopatra" was all right as the producers made it, and that the forty cuts the major made were forty too many. Aldermen Kimball, Long, Norris and Johnson thought there were parts that should be cut, but wanted to see the expurgated edition before saying they agreed with Major Funkhouser's ideas of what should be cut and what should be left.

The picture men and exchange managers felt that it was unfair to look at just the cut-outs, and suggested that they bring in the pictures themselves so that the aldermen could get the true atmosphere of the pictures. The pictures were not on hand, however, when the aldermen went up to the tenth floor of the City Hall, so they looked at only the "obnoxious" parts.

Major Funkhouser got himself still deeper into the bad graces of the film men earlier in the week by clamping down the lid of secrecy on the censorship office and refusing to allow a representative of Attorney Herbert J. Friedman access to the book showing the cut-outs ordered by the censors. The film men wanted to get a list from this book so they could have the pictures ready in accordance wth the plan and wishes of the aldermen. Major Funkhouser refused Attorney Friedman's representative the desired permission to see the book, so the cut-outs were shown but the pictures were not.

Doll-Van Co., A Live State Rights Organization

AMONG the more prominent of the recently established distributing companies is the Doll-Van Film Corporation, which has established offices in Indianapolis and Chicago to cover the central west territory. The president, Henry Dollman, and the vice-president and general manager, D. M. Vandawalker, Jr., are both well known, Mr. Dollman being a prominent Indianapolis business man and Mr. Vandawalker an exchange man for many years.

Evidence of the character and resource of the new organization is given by the nature of the first three pictures released, "The Cold Deck," with William S. Hart; "Today," with Florence Reed, and "The Mad Lover," with Robert Warwick. These pictures have procured already very gratifying and, in some instances, record-breaking results for the most prominent theatres in Chicago and Indianapolis, and give promise of still more remarkable performances.

Mr. Vandawalker said: "The chief advantage the state rights end of the exchange business has over the program end is that the state rights operator is not forced to take a picture until it is proved a box-office winner. Therefore our patrons are assured not only of big productions, but tried and proved features with a definitely established box-office value."

Mr. Vandawalker also announces that the Doll-Van Film Corporation has secured the Illinois-Indiana franchise in the State Rights Distributors, Inc., the newly founded national organization of state rights buyers. World rights to pictures will be bought by this company, and many big features are now being considered.

River Town Exhibitors in Iowa Organizing

WITHIN sixty days every motion picture man in the majority of the cities in Iowa will have become a member of the Iowa branch of the National Exhibitors' League, Davenport being recorded as the first city in the state to take action, the Quad-City Exhibitors' League, Local No. 1, being formed here last month. Since then Fort Dodge has also secured a charter, being termed Local No. 3. Several other towns are included in this.

Des Moines is Local No. 4. Local No. 2 is slated for Waterloo, near-by towns to be included. However, definite action is yet to be taken in reference to which towns will be recorded under the Waterloo charter.

The southeastern section of the state will organize shortly.

The Quad-City League is composed of Rock Island, Ill; Moline, Ill.; East Moline, Ill., and Davenport, Ia. The officers are: Samuel Greenabaum, Davenport, president; George Dehiele, Moline, vice-president; Edward Kraus, Davenport, secretary; George Covel, East Moline, treasurer, and H. S. Earle, sergeant-at-arms.

The executive committee is composed of Albert Petersen, chairman; T. C. Defore, Henry Hoffman, John Koletis, W. F. Bartley, A. G. Vogel and H. S. Earle. Moving picture men in this section of the country looked upon the new organization most favorably. Davenport men are most active in stimulating interest, local heads having made several trips to surrounding towns for this purpose.

Meetings are held the first Thursday in every month. After the gathering there is a social session. Plans are now under way to give a movie ball in Davenport some time in April.

Local No. 3, headquarters at Fort Dodge, includes Webster City, Esterville, Spencer, Mason City, Charles City and Algona.

Waterloo plans to embrace the towns of Cedar Falls, Waverly, Iowa Falls, Oelwein, Cedar Rapids and Vinton.

Theatres Planned for North Shore Loom Up Big

WHETHER the two new picture palaces announced last week to soon throw up their monumental hulks on Chicago's north shore ever get out of the paper stage and reach the point of realization is still more or less a matter of conjecture owing to the difficulties the government is throwing in the way of building on an extensive scale which doesn't directdly aid in the prosecution of the war.

However, the plans are made—and made for two houses which for size and magnificence will eclipse anything in the Windy City to date. Barney and A. J. Balaban and Morris and Sam Katz, who recently erected the Central Park theatre on West Twelfth street and Central Park avenue, are now planning a structure costing $750,000 to be erected at Sheridan road and Lawrence avenue. The proposed building, which will be of fireproof construction, will be five stories high, and in addition to the theatre with a seating capacity of 3,500, will contain ten stores on the ground floor and a 100-room hotel on the upper floors.

Architects C. W. and George L. Rapp are working on the plans, and it is expected, if the weather conditions permit, to break ground early in the coming year. The theatre will be modeled after the beautiful Central Park theatre, only it will be much larger.

The other big theatre Chicago will have in the near future, fate and the war not interfering too much, is to be located in the Wilson avenue district on Sheridan road. It also is to be extremely large having a seating capacity of 3,000 people. Walter W. Ahlschlager, the architect who has the construction in charge, has just completed negotiations for the purchase of three parcels of land which are to form the site of the proposed theatre. Altogether they comprise a frontage of 200 feet on Sheridan road, with a depth of 150 feet, for which Mr. Ahlschlager is said to have paid $260,000.

"The Pantheon," which is to be the name of this new house, is expected to cost another $325,000, so that this project also will run well over the half-million mark. In addition to the theatre, there will be ten stores fronting on Sheridan road and negotiations are already pending, it is stated, with a leading theatrical manager for a fifteen year lease.

"They Say in Chicago That—"

MANAGER BAYLEY of Vitagraph is working day and night on the new serial "Vengeance and the Woman." He spends his days in the office and at night travels around with the various salesmen, talking with the exhibitors and helping his men sign them up for the serial.

DECEMBER 26 will see the release of twelve one-reel comedies by James Montgomery Flagg under the Edison trade mark. The series is to be entitled "Girls You Have Met" and exhibitors will have to sign up for the twelve if they want them for there is to be no break in the bookings. It's a case of take all or none.

CAHILL-IGOE has come to bat with another help for exhibitors. This time it is in the form of a booking book and it is free for the asking. It's a blank book in which the exhibitor can keep track of his weekly bookings of features, specials and short features. And another thing in its favor is that it fits the pocket.

THE first episodes of "Vengeance and the Woman," the new Vitagraph serial that is to be released December 24, were shown last week in the projection room of the local Vitagraph exchange. The first day over one hundred exhibitors saw it.

ED DE BERRI has received his commission as First Lieutenant and will report shortly to the U. S. Signal Corps for his assignment. Mr. De Berri has been connected with the De Berri Scenic Company, makers of the well known DaLite projection screen.

JULIUS WIETANKA, collector of internal revenue, is now considering plans to have the Government print theatre tickets and attached coupons, in order to stop attempts of exhibitors to defraud the Government in the collection of the tax.

NAT WOLF, Goldwyn representative, enlisted last week in the Quartermaster's Department of the service. Sidney J. Goldman, formerly with Central Film Company, has been added to the Goldwyn sales force by Manager Brockell.

C. W. ECKHARDT, Fox exchange manager declared that he had an extremely hearty response in the shape of favorable testimonials on "Cleopatra," the multi-reel feature starring Theda Bara, which was recently given a special showing at Orchestra Hall. This, however, did not save the film from "Major" Funkhouser's omniverous shears.

FRIENDS of Philip S. Seelig, former exhibitor and manager of the Lucille theatre, on Erie street near Chicago avenue, were surprised to see him last week clad in khaki and looking as healthy as a north wind. He is now with Company C, 341st Infantry, headquarters Rockford, Ill., and he says the worries of the army are much easier to bear than the worries of the exhibitor.

MR. SKENK, of Skenk & Williams, architects, of Dayton, Ohio, was in Chicago a few days back looking over equipment for a new theatre he is building in his home town.

HARRY DAVIS, of the Harry Davis Enterprises Company, Pittsburgh, Pa., visited a number of Chicago theatres last week getting ideas for his big, new, 2,200 seat Grand theatre, which he is preparing to open soon for Pittsburgh movie fans. Among other things Mr. Davis purchased the largest size Bartola organ while in the city.

MANAGER BRANDON of the Interocean Film Company reports that his concern has just received some nice orders from Spain.

JACK HAIG, former manager of the Bandbox theatre, on Madison street, is back in the exhibiting end of the business again. He is the proprietor now of the La Salle theatre, on Division street. This house was taken over last week by Paul Sittner, who also owns the Criterion.

THE Marshall Square theatre, another new Marx and Goodman house, will soon open up on Twenty-second street and Marshall Boulevard.

John Emerson and Anita Loos were in the city last week taking scenes for Doug's next picture, along Michigan avenue. The Rothacker Company furnished the cameraman, J. Wesley Smith, and the actors needed for the Michigan avenue shooting. The picture incidentally has to do with the way people are affected by the gas in the city. As the actors fell down along the boulevard, feigning to be overcome and choking, the public itself gathered around and without knowing it figured in the picture.

ABE TEITEL has in the past month used his special cleaning process on a goodly number of pictures, among them being "The Ne'er Do Well," "Mask of Life" and "On Trial," for the Central Film Company; "Parentage," "Babbling Tongues" and "Whose Your Neighbor?" for Unity, and "Efficiency Edgar's Courtship" and "Filling His Own Shoes" for K. E. S. E.

J. J. RUBENS, manager of the Fox theatre, Aurora, struck while the iron was hot recently in showing the picture featuring Dolly Ledgerwood Matters in "Mother Love and the Law." Mrs. Matters eloped to Crown Point and married Edward Fertner just as Mr. Rubens was about to show the Matters picture. With the publicity that this marriage brought forth, coupled with having Mrs. Matters' appearance at the theatre, Mr. Rubens simply stood 'em out of his 1,800 seat house.

Michigan Odds and Ends

THE Orpheum theatre, Lansing, operated by Manager Jarvis, is introducing a novel feature. Twice a week is "family night." The pictures shown are the Edison films. "It seems to me that the after dinner family fireside must be moved to our theatre," says Manager Jarvis. "We show a drama, a travel picture, instructive films and no blood and thunder."

THE old stunt of coming in late to a vaudeville show in order to escape a cheap film is not necessary at the Bijou, Lansing. Al Walle, manager of the Bijou theatre, first class vaudeville house, Butterfield circuit, is running the Mutual World series and people are arriving on time in order not to miss any part of the travelogue.

AMONG the other current attractions at Saginaw, Mich., theatres during the past week were "Who Leads the National Army?" at the Bijou November 27 and 28; Valeska Surratt in "A Rich Man's Plaything," at the New Wolverine, November 26, and "Retreat of the Germans at the Battle of Arras" and William Russell in "The Masked Heart" on Thanksgiving Day; "A Mormon Maid" at the Franklin on November 30 and December 1, and Marguerite Clark in "Bab's Burglar" at the Mecca-Palace for four days, starting November 25. The latter is showing Paramount, Artcraft and Metro pictures.

THE presence of the Livingston Film Company, under the management of Maurice H. Livingston, established here scarcely a year ago, has added to the motion picture interests of Peoria. Motion picture machines, supplies and films are all to be procured at this establishment, which has been adding some valuable devices to the science of motion pictures.

FRANK ANDERSON, proprietor of the Star theatre at Cadillac, says the patrons of his house seem rather to like the idea of paying the war tax. "Not one have I heard grumble," says Frank, "over the fact that the 10 per cent. addition has been tacked on. They push their pennies over the window with a grin and usually remark, 'there's m' war tax.'"

Livingston Film Company Launch New Light Invention

M. H. LIVINGSTON, manager of the Livingston Film Company of Peoria, has invented an electrical appliance for motion picture machines which promises to be of great benefit not only to exhibitors, but patrons of theatres as well.

The Nu-Movie Lite is the trade name given the appliance. It was given a demonstration recently before prominent business men of Peoria and neighboring cities. The invention eliminates practically every trouble and annoyance in the past that patrons have been subjected to because of eye strain. It eliminates entirely the flicker from the screen which has always shown such bad effects on the eyes of the motion picture fans.

The appliance becomes advantageous to the theatre owner and operator, because by installing it in any standard machine the operators's work in projecting a picture is reduced to about 75%. One of the features of its use and make up is the fact that in placing it all that is necessary is the removal of the old lamp from the projecting machine and the placing of the new appliance in its stead. Unlike others of this type of light, this change is made without the taking away or adding of parts to the projection machine. The seven controls are handled by a single one in this attachment, and there is consequently no big line up of control handles to watch in securing a uniform light from the carbon. While giving the patrons a powerful projecting light, secured from a direct current of electricity, the operation, it is said, is also cutting expenses of projection to one quarter the usual amount in the expenditure of carbons.

Mr. Livingston has already started the distribution of his invention throughout the country. State rights have been granted to M. H. Koch of Harrison, Neb., who takes the rights for Wyoming and Nebraska. W. L. Augustine of Decatur has been given the rights for distribution in Indiana and Kentucky. Just last week G. F. D. Zimmerman of the big law firm of McRoberts, Morgan & Livingston of Peoria signed up articles with Mr. Livingston to the amount of $10,000 for the placing of machines in Pennsylvania and Ohio. Several of the machines are already in use in Peoria—one at the Gem theatre on South Adams street, the other at the St. Boniface School. Felix Greenburg, manager of the Orpheum theatre, has also expressed himself as favorably impressed with the invention, and has declared that he will install the system in his theatre.

General Central West Notes

IT is doubtful if there is a town of its size in the State of Wisconsin where the people are more critical or more appreciative of picture offerings than Waupun. The people ask about the attractions in advance and criticize them afterward, and the criticism takes on the constructive type. The managers of the two theatres—the Davison and the Scenic—have been quick to appreciate the value of this situation and have catered to it, with the result that Waupun has wholesome as well as attractive programs offered and they are well patronized.

GROUP No. 3, Daughters of the American Revolution, sponsored the presentation of Mary Pickford in "Her Little Pal" at Waupun, Wisconsin, November 28, for the benefit of the Waupun Chapter of the Red Cross. As a result the treasury of that organization was enriched by $128.

AT least one Wisconsin town has lost its movie house as a result of the war tax. That town is Green Lake, famous as a summer resort. The large summer population makes for a liberal patronage during that season but business invariably suffers a depression in the winter, a situation which was made worse by the war tax this year. As a result the Green Lake people are motoring to Ripon, six miles away, for their movies.

E. R. HICKEY, who has managed the Auditorium theatre, Ripon, Wisconsin, for the past year, retired December 1 and left for his home in Vermont where he will enjoy a short vacation. Later he will be connected with the Griffith film productions. He will be succeeded at Ripon by A. W. Stewart of that place. Mr. Stewart is a son of City Clerk C. W. Stewart of Ripon and has had considerable experience in theatre management.

"WOMANHOOD" was produced at the Auditorium theatre, Ripon, November 26 and 27, under the auspices of the League of Woman's Service of that city. The several women's organizations sold tickets and a large attendance resulted.

"THE WHIP," produced by Maurice Tourneur, a Paragon film, drew packed houses recently at the Gladmer theatre, Lansing. Manager Fred Williams states that he had orders for seats for the picture from ten towns in the near vicinity of Lansing and that he never witnessed a more enthusiastic reception of any film.

Gossipy Bits from Peoria

EXHIBITORS of Peoria have so far been unable to estimate the aggregate sum which will be raised monthly through war taxes because they have received no definite information as to whether motion picture houses will fall within the scope of the war tax act.

That the extra penny on 10 cent tickets is much annoyance to the public is the opinion expressed by H. J. Wisbruck, manager of the Hippodrome motion picture and vaudeville house. It has been found almost impossible to keep a supply of pennies for change and he has been compelled to offer a silver dollar and one children's admission ticket for each 100 pennies brought to the theatre. This has served to alleviate the penny shortage.

Dee Robinson, manager of the Apollo, one of the most popular picture houses of the city, says he was fortunate enough to have a supply of pennies on hand and so far has avoided any great inconvenience.

ANNOUNCEMENT has been made in Peoria of a new motion picture house costing $15,000 which will be erected early in the spring. Property at Main and Madison streets, recognized as one of the most valuable lots in the city for a theatre site, was recently purchased by John W. McDowell, as agent, at a cost of $150,000.

At the time of the purchase Mr. McDowell, who is a leader of finance in Peoria, stated he was informed that a large motion picture house would be erected there. Theatrical men have so far refused to give any further information, saying that plans for the erection of the building and its exact nature are not yet completed.

Peoria is now the home of nine motion picture houses and several others combined with vaudeville. While several are of a character which would be a credit to much larger towns, the one planned will exceed any of them.

Peoria is coming to the front as a motion picture producing city. Not only home talent plays but those featuring prominent actors have found in the central Illinois city many beautiful homes, picturesque drives and daring cliffs, suitable for the staging of the film dramas.

The play, "Mother Love and the Law," which featured Dollie Ledgewood Matters, was produced in Peoria, with the leading homes here used as the setting for many scenes and the court house rooms for the place of the sensational trial. Producers of the play expressed themselves favorably impressed with the opportunities afforded for their productions and no doubt this will become one of the centers of the Middle West.

Brief Bits from Springfield

SPRINGFIELD is paying the amusement war tax without a murmur. The Gaiety, Vaudette, Lyric and Princess theatres, the four largest theatres downtown, are charging the war tax extra and having no trouble. Business does not show any noticeable falling off since the tax went into effect.

THE CHATTERTON, long the home of "legitimate" attractions in Springfield, has gone over to vaudeville. Hearst-Pathe Weekly is used. The change is merely an experiment. The Chatterton is paying the tax.

THE MAJESTIC is showing "The Retreat of the Germans at the Battle of Arras" in addition to their regular show. Universal Weekly is also used at the Majestic.

The American theatre, Eleventh and Cook streets, which was recently destroyed by fire, has not yet started rebuilding. Manager Forsythe was, at last report, not yet settled with the insurance company.

The Gaiety and Vaudette theatres are showing Paramount, Artcraft and Triangle pictures, with special features for fillers-in.

"The Spy," William Fox's picture with Dustin Farnum, has been booked by the Lyric theatre.

THE VAUDETTE has undergone considerable change in the past two months. The boxes have been removed and the space utilized for main floor seats. This makes for a larger seating capacity. The Royal has recently installed a balcony, which also adds many more seats to the Sixth street playhouse. Manager Kerasotes has booked the Paramount service, the pictures which have lately been put on the market, and is doing a nice business.

THE Superb Film Company, with studios at Jacksonville, Fla., have opened offices in Springfield. Harry A. Kelly, who put on "Fighting the Flames" at the Fireman's Emergency Fund Benefit for W. R. Hearst at Los Angeles several years ago, is the manager. This company intends producing "Lincoln, from Cradle to Grave," a ten-reel super-feature, which it is planned will be the feature extraordinary at the Illinois Centennial in 1918. Henry Belmar, formerly with Thomas H. Ince and an author and actor of long standing, has prepared the script.

Many of the scenes will be taken in Springfield, as this was long the home of Abraham Lincoln. Petersburg, Salem and other historical places will also figure in the production. One hundred prints of "Lincoln, from Cradle to Grave" will be released simultaneously, in one hundred cities in Illinois in 1918. Manager Kelly is now at Jacksonville, Fla., getting things in shape.

MANAGER ED KUNZ of the Princess has been showing some big pictures lately. "Within the Law" and "The Bar Sinister" will be followed by "Womanhood, the Glory of the Nation." Alice Joyce and Harry Morey are big favorites ever since the days of the old General Film Company's pre-eminence.

THE CAPITOL shows Triangle two days a week and has contracted for the Hart and Fairbanks re-issues. Billy West, Keystone and Arbuckle comedies are shown each week.

Wisconsin and Michigan News

Wisconsin to Send Sherwood to Washington Conference

AT a special meeting of the Wisconsin Exhibitors' Association, Friday, November 30, at Milwaukee, J. E. Sherwood of Madison, Wis., was delegated by the exhibitors of the state of Wisconsin to attend the exhibitors' conference of Washington to aid in the effort to get some adjustment of the admission taxation. The exhibitors of Milwaukee and the State of Wisconsin feel that they have done so much in aiding the Government in Liberty Loan, Red Cross and all the other campaigns that they should be relieved of the burden of the admission tax at least, as they are now paying two taxes, one on their films and one on the admission. Either this or let the Government collect this tax from the five-cent house as well as the ten-cent house, is their spirit.

The war tax has left Milwaukee and state exhibitors very much up in the air. Though the exhibitors have been collecting it regularly up to date they have had no blanks to make any reports on and do not know to whom the tax is payable. At present they are banking it in a separate account, but do not know whether they would be entitled to the interest that accrues on this money while it is waiting for the Government to take it over or whether the Government is entitled to the interest.

Another puzzling situation has occurred which is giving some exhibitors worry. Many of the houses in Milwaukee have five and ten-cent nights. According to the exhibitors understanding when the war tax went into effect all houses that at any time charge ten cents were to be considered as ten-cent houses and would have to collect a tax on all admissions. With this understanding the exhibitors went ahead and collected the war tax on the five-cent nights only to learn recently that the Government will not require tax on the five-cent admissions. Now the question arises, what are they to do with the money they have collected for taxes? The Government won't take it. They have no way of knowing who it was of their patrons that paid the tax on these nights.

Film Tax Not Ticket Tax Worries La Crosse Exhibitors

WHILE cinema theatres throughout central and western Wisconsin and southeastern Minnesota, as well as all of the thriving Mississippi river cities from Minneapolis south to La Crosse, Wis., and for fifty miles below this point, have failed to report any marked falling off in attendance from the war tax on admissions, having "educated" the patrons to pay their one, two and three cents with a cheer, the managers are wrangling with theatre managers the country over about the reel tax.

With hardly any two localities having the same plan for collection and payment of the admittance tax, the photoplay fan pays a varying rate. Some houses are failing to charge more than the old admission price, while others retain their past scale but force the patron to add the tax. The balance of the managements are increasing their prices by five cents and allowing this to care for the government levy. But the fact remains that the public, uncomplaining, is standing for whichever plan the management assumes.

But the story of the reel tax on the upper Mississippi valley trail of the movie is a different story altogether. F. L. Koppelberger, manager of two of the largest theatres in La Crosse, Wis., and theatres in Rochester, Minn., is not paying the tax to any of the exchanges from whom he purchases service. He contends that he does not have to do this for the reason that none of his contracts call for the payment of any extra sums of money, and in this decision he is backed up by the law fraternity. Some large theatre men are paying the tax.

Only a very small percentage of the "little men" are holding out, and practically all of their checks to film exchanges include the tax.

Lansing Legit House Playing Pictures

MOVIES have scored another triumph in Lansing, Mich., usurping the policy of the largest opera house in the city, the Gladmer theatre. Manager Fred Williams of the Gladmer theatre co-operated with Manager Claude Cady of the Colonial theatre, Lansing's largest movie house, and leased the Gladmer theatre to Manager Cady on all open dates.

The plan has been in operation for four weeks. Considering the crowds in regular attendance, the music and the high-grade films, the system promises to become a Lansing fixture. The seating capacity of the Gladmer theatre is 1,500 and of the Colonial 800.

F. B. Hathaway, well-known Chicago violinist, is leader of the nine-piece orchestra. In accordance with larger city motion picture houses, Lansing is making an effort to suit the music motifs to the films.

Mere Mentions from Milwaukee

JACK GRAUMAN, head of the Milwaukee Metro exchange, sold his last two picture houses last week, the Murray and the Miramir. James Boden, owner of the Star theatre in Racine, bought the Miramir, while A. Loewenstein purchased the Murray. These are two of Milwaukee's best known outskirt houses and it is expected that under the directions of their new owners their business will increase.

THE Super-Attractions Film Company, Toy Building, B. K. Fisher, manager, has purchased a number of new features recently, among them being "The Awakening of Bess Morton." Mr. Fisher reports that business among the smaller houses of the State has been very good despite the war tax. In fact he says that the war tax is not hurting the business of the Super-Attractions Company in any way.

THE Walter A. Baier Film Company is meeting with wonderful success in this city with "A Modern Mother Goose." The production is proving a find as a drawing attraction and is playing to big business all over the State. Mr. Baier has also purchased a number of other features and is negotiating for one or two big ones, the names of which he expects to be ready to announce in a few weeks.

THE New Crystal Terrace Garden, Milwaukee's only cabaret, has been recently opened. Strange as it may seem all of the electrical fixtures and lighting system were installed upon motion picture basis by a motion picture supply house, the Wisconsin Theatre Supply Company. The lighting fixtures, which have much to do with the success of the performance, are entirely controlled from the front of the house, no stage hands or electricians being required. The lighting is attracting much attention from Milwaukee theatre men as it is a splendid installation.

THE motion picture is being used more and more for educational purposes. Hardly a day passes but what announcements are received of another school putting in a picture machine for educational purposes. The latest school in this vicinity to realize the value of the motion picture for teaching military as well as scholastic studies is St. John's Military Academy, at Delafield. They have just had installed by the Wisconsin Theatre Supply Company a booth, Motiograph, etc., complete in their gymnasium. This school has just been recognized by the United States Government as a military training school and it is said that a large portion of the military theory will be taught by means of motion pictures.

The Milwaukee Public Library has also installed a motion picture machine in their lecture room and will use it at the many interesting lectures which are given there weekly on varied subjects.

THE proprietors of the Fond du Lac picture theatres have been giving splendid co-operation to all of the various war service movements. A place has been made on their programs for four-minute speeches on Liberty Loan, Red Cross and other campaigns, while patriotic mass meetings have been advertised on their screens without cost.

The war tax has not perceptibly affected the attendance at Fond du Lac theatres nor has it called forth a protest from a single patron. The managers of the four theatres—the Henry Boyle, the Ideal, the Bijou and the Orpheum—held a meeting shortly before the new law became effective and entered into an agreement that they would not increase the price of admission and that they would merely add the amount of the war tax. Large display was used in the local papers explaining this policy, with the result that the public was fully advised and entirely satisfied.

THE theatre business through the State of Wisconsin does not seem to have suffered very much by the war tax or war times. New theatres are opening in various parts of the State almost daily and the smaller the town the more apt it is to have a theatre bill. William Wagner, of Richland Center, Wisconsin, opened the new Rex theatre there December 1. This house, which is modern in every respect, has been equipped by the Wisconsin Theatre Supply Company, Toy Building, with a 1917 Motiograph and the latest equipment. The Strand theatre, at Schlesingerville, was also opened the first of the month by C. A. Stearles. It was also equipped with a 1917 Motiograph by the Wisconsin Theatre Supply Company.

The Jackson theatre, in Milwaukee, which has been closed for some time was opened on Thanksgiving Day with G. S. Bleatman as its new owner. The house, which is one of the prettiest in Milwaukee, had had a varied career. However, all indications point to the fact that Mr. Bleatman has reopened the house at a rather auspicious time in this immediate neighborhood.

Live Notes of Michigan and Wisconsin

Live Items from La Crosse

THAT an "up-town" theatre can be made a big success in a city of thirty-five thousand is being demonstrated by the Strand theatre in La Crosse.

In the face of "foolish," and "you can never make a go of it," the Strand was erected in a part of the city fifteen blocks from the business section. The Strand fails to resemble in any way the converted store-theatre, and is, in fact, a model show place.

La Crosse has three large photoplay theatres down town, two slightly smaller than these, and two more in another business section of the city, but the Strand "pulls" big houses at nearly every performance. And the peculiar part of this is that it has not hurt down town showshops, but is believed to have actually helped them, for it has been an "educator" to scores of people who, strange to say, seldom went to a picture, principally on account of the car-fare.

HARRY H. BURFORD, manager of the Bijou theatre, La Crosse, who is associated with his brother, William Burford, in the Burford string of theatres in Aurora, Ill., is making a decided hit at the La Crosse house with Perfection Pictures. He varies these with World-Brady, Mutual, and other productions. Mr. Burford recently did a big business with Hart's "The Cold Deck," and with Geraldine Farrar in "Joan the Woman."

W. D. BURFORD, manager of the extensive string of photoplay theatres in Aurora, Illinois, and brother of H. H. Burford, of the Bijou theatre, La Crosse, Wis., will represent the La Crosse house at the Washington exhibitors' convention. Thus far no one else from La Crosse has made known his intention of going, and it is probable now that this locality will be lightly represented.

LA CROSSE came into possession of its first woman photoplay theatre manager last week. Mrs. A. R. White, formerly connected with the Armory Music Bureau of Detroit, Michigan, has taken charge of the Dome theatre, a medium sized house. The theatre is being thoroughly redecorated and remodeled to some extent. The front of the house is being changed extensively.

"THE ITALIAN BATTLE FRONT" has been booked by the La Crosse theatre, La Crosse. The management assumed a "show me" attitude when approached by the booking agent. The latter brought the picture to La Crosse for a private showing. Before the films had all been shown McCoy, representing the Supreme Feature Film Company of Minneapolis, had a contract in his pocket. Part of the proceeds of the exhibition here will go to the Boy Scouts of the city and they will purchase Christmas presents for La Crosse boys now in France or at American cantonment camps.

FROM the box office angle "A Trip to Norway," the Scandinavian government-directed film, was a huge success in La Crosse, but this was because the film showed here but one night. It could never repeat. The pictures are badly photographed and the real beauty spots of Norway seem to have been the only places not visited by the cameramen.

AS far as La Crosse is concerned, Goldwyn productions are welcome. There cannot be too many of them if they are all like Mae Marsh's "Polly," Madge Kennedy's "Baby Mine," and Jane Cowl's "The Spreading Dawn." This is being said altogether upon splendid reports of the box office man at the La Crosse theatre, where they are being shown.

THE luckiest stroke of business ever done by the management of a La Crosse theatre was that in the case of the La Crosse, when that house left off vaudeville (with the exception of one day in the week) and stock, for the straight and narrow trail of the movies. It required only a few weeks of education during the latter part of last season to start the fee: toward the home of the legitimate, and now they flock there. The house is featuring all of Artcraft's productions, the better Paramounts, better Selznick and the Goldwyn productions.

Exhibitor Doings in Bay City

THE Government seating tax, so far as the public of Bay City is concerned, has caused no objection, for the reason that the Bay City Managers' association had foresight enough to organize far enough in advance to be able to take care of the tax situation when it was first announced. The managers banded their advertising under one head and gave the city a thorough newspaper advertising campaign that did not leave the public in doubt as to who should pay the tax, and in some instances the patrons offered to pay even before November 1.

Only one theatre in the city absorbed the tax, but this theatre also raised the admission price. All others are charging the former prices plus the tax. There has been no appreciable falling off in business since the enforcing of the tax law that could be laid to that cause.

ON December 5, the Bijou theatre at Bay City, one of a string of houses in Michigan, Indiana and Iowa, operated by Col. W. S. Butterfield, instituted a new policy of running vaudeville on Sundays only and pictures the other six days of the week, proving that the silent drama is gradually replacing the spoken drama in the favor of the theatregoing puglic Col. Butterfield has always operated the Bijou as a purely vaudeville house, with the exception of last spring, when the week's programs were split between vaudeville and pictures.

Whether or not the new policy will prove a success remains to be seen, but the public is promised some big films.

RICHARD P. LEAHY, owner-manager of the Washington Strand theatre in Bay City has put to rout the theory that the speaking drama and the silent drama cannot be mixed in one house. Manager Leahy has brought some of the best shows on the road to Bay City this season and is keeping his house crowded on other days when pictures are shown. Manager Leahy attributes his success to the fact that he has selected his motion picture productions in keeping with the size of his speaking productions.

THE Bay City Managers' Association, recently organized by the theatre managers of the city for the purpose of assisting each other in matters that come up pertaining to the business, has been invited to Saginaw to assist in organizing a similar organization in that city. The officers of the local organization are: President, George McBride, Majestic; vice-president, Fred B. Williams, Regent; secretary, Lloyd Simpson, Woodside; treasurer, Bernard Shanley, Wenonah. Besides these officers the directorate includes R. P. Leahy, Washington Strand; W. S. Butterfield, Bijou; William Parkinson, Avenue; William T. Favorite, Grotto, and W. D. LaTour, Family.

PROCEEDS from one afternoon's matinee at the Star theatre during the week in which Elgin raised $38,000 for the Y. M. C. A. army fund, were given it by Manager Ralph Crocker of the Star theatre.

TWO sons of Manager Frank Vanston of the Temple theatre, Lemont and Wellington Vanston, are subject to call in the next draft. The former is assistant manager of the theatre, the latter drummer there. Both have joined the Elgin Home Guards.

Horace Berga, an electrician at the Temple, is also subject to call.

PLANS for remodeling the Grand theatre to extend its capacity as popular patronage is urging, have been postponed on account of war conditions. Rumor that the Thielen circuit, which controls the Grand bill now, will build a $75,000 playhouse, is denied by its heads.

Elgin Items of Interest

THE Pathe Weekly is shown in conjunction with pictures shown the first three days of the week at the Grand. Picture feature dates and their stars to lead the holiday month bill there are:

December 3, 4 and 5—Billie Burke in "Arms and the Girl"; 6 and 7—Fannie Ward in "On the Level"; 8—Mae Marsh and Robert Harron in "Sunshine Alley"; 10 and 11—Charles Ray in "Son of His Father"; 15—Rex Beach's "The Auction Block"; 17, 18 and 19—Marguerite Clark in "Bab's Burglar"; 20 and 21—Ann Pennington in "The Antics of Ann"; 22—Sessue Hayakawa in "The Call of the East"; 24, 25 and 26—Dorothy Dalton in "The Price Mark"; 27 and 28—Alice Joyce in "Within the Law"; 29—Madge Kennedy in "Nearly Married."

NEGOTIATIONS between Chicago theatrical syndicates and Elgin, Ill., property owners, reported intermittently for the past several months, culminated recently in the report of the acquiring of the Mrs. Dee Miller property on Grove avenue for a theatre site.

The rumor persisted that Chicago men would build a playhouse with a capacity of 1,400 for the accommodation of road shows, vaudeville and high class moving pictures, to be managed by Charles Smith, former manager of the Globe, Lyric and Star theatres. Smith refuses to talk and local movie men expressed little faith in the rumor. Later report was made of abandonment of negotiations on account of the war situation.

The Miller property is located in Grove avenue and, in common with the Plummer property, of the sale of which for theatre purposes, there has been frequent negotiation, is near the Star.

The Aschers, Lubliner and Trinz, Jones, Linnick and Schaefer syndicates were mentioned as possible purchases. Local architects were asked some weeks ago to figure on the building.

Chicago syndicates started negotiations not long ago for the Clark property in Spring street and for the Orpheum theatre.

News Notes from Madison

A BUILDING permit has been issued to Dr. W. G. Beecroft for the erection of a new theatre building which will include part of the Strand at Madison, Wisconsin. Three dwelling houses have been razed for a site. The theatre proper will occupy the back part of the lots, the old Strand being used for a foyer, sixty feet long. The seating capacity will be over 1,200 and a long lease has been taken on it by the Heilman Amusement Co., who run the Fuller and the Orpheum, the latter a vaudeville house. The building company is incorporated at $100,000.

THE Varsity theatre on State street, Madison, will close the last of the month when the lease expires and the building will be converted into a store. Harry Chappelle, the lessee, is in Oshkosh, and the theatre has been run by a local manager.

The Varsity is giving continuous shows on Sundays from 1.30 to 11 p. m. and the Grand has just started the plan of running continuously from 2 until 11 p. m.

MADISON theatres all took part in the special benefit performance Friday afternoon, Dec. 7. The gross receipts were contributed to the Red Cross. The Fuller raised its price for the picture from 15 to 25 cents for the purpose of getting as large a fund as possible for the most worthy cause. Special effort was made by the local Red Cross to get people out for the matinee in one or more of the theatres so that Madison may go "over the top" as it usually does in any patriotic or charitable enterprise.

THE newest moving picture house in Madison is the Bandbox, owned and operated by M. J. Flom at 207 East Main street, which opened Oct. 20. It uses the new incandescent lighting and has a Cremona for furnishing the music. Its prices are fixed at 5 and 10 cents and it pays the war tax out of that. O. Henry stories have been featured on Sundays and have drawn a good business. The theatre is using General, Mutual and Perfection service. The seating capacity is about 400.

Views of a Small Theatre Man on the War Tax

MOTION PICTURE NEWS,
New York City.

Gentlemen:

I am taking the liberty of giving my experience and views on the much discussed fifteen-reel tax. My theatre is one of the small theatres seating 386, located in working class residential district.

The following are my experiences:

In trying to raise prices, my regular prices are adults, 10 cents; children, 5 cents. Some months ago I tried to charge adults, 15 cents and children 10 cents for the extra big attractions about one in two weeks. The result was absolute failure. Since November 1 I added the 1 cent Government tax charging adults 11 cents and children 6 cents. The receipts for three weeks after November 1 averaged $15.00 per week less than three weeks before November 1. The weather for the three weeks after November 1 was ideal so I cannot blame it to the weather. To attempt to increase prices above 11 and 6 cents will surely prove ruinous, so it is impossible for a theatre like mine to pass the additional 15 cent reel tax along to my patrons as the producers request me to do. There must be a great number of theatres situated like mine and the producers claim that they cannot pay the tax and stay in business. The question arises, can the small exhibitor who is unable to increase prices pay that tax and stay in business? Just as sure as two and two are four the additional $7.00 a week that the 15c. per reel will cost most exhibitors would drive a great number of the smaller exhibitors to bankruptcy. It would seem to me that in the case of a small exhibitor who is unable to pass that tax on to their patrons that the producers ought to share the burden of that tax with the exhibitor, each paying half of the tax. I for my part would be willing to pay half of the present 15 cents reel tax feeling reconciled to the loss in the knowledge that the producers are sharing the loss with me, and I feel certain that the majority of exhibitors would willingly agree to share the burden of that tax equally with the producers.

Yours very truly,
(Signed) J. E. STOCKER.
Myrtle Theatre, Detroit, Mich.

Never Writes Letters—But Here's a Crackerjack

Gentlemen:

I read with interest the comments that are made by the different people in the PICTURE NEWS, both by the producer and the exhibitor, and especially the producer trying to explain why the exhibitor should pay the reel tax.

I do not jump at conclusions, but think if Congress intended for the exhibitor to pay a 11 cent tax they would not have been backward in saying so, but the big fellow always finds a way out, so the producer is not ashamed to ask the exhibitor to pay for him.

If the producers did not lose their heads over some of the stars and pay them such fabulous salaries, the exhibitor could get his service reasonably, and the producer would have money left to pay his tax.

We have had one month of the war tax, I have been collecting it off the patrons, and my business for last November, 1916, was $1,950.00 at 5 and 10 cents. This November, $1,050.00 at 10 and 15 cents. Still the Nabos will sit in their offices furnished up to the last minute (by the exhibitor) and tell you to raise the price. A pity some of the wise heads are not in the exhibitors place when his bills come due. Some few houses may raise the price and get away with it, but I have been traveling some and find in seven out of ten cases where the price has been raised they lost more than the raise amounted to, but the picture game has advanced so fast that the small town exhibitor is left behind. And when you overlook the smaller houses you are overlooking the people that made motion pictures what they are today, and if they are crowded out the motion picture has lost its best friend.

For an example I will give you what one of my patrons told me, and he represents 90 per cent of my patrons. The average wage paid the laboring man is $3.00 per day. He pays $20.00 a month rent, $6.50 for ton of coal, that is $26.50 or a little over $1.00 a day, counting 26 days a month of his wages gone before he begins to live. It will take one ton of coal to heat an ordinary house a month. Then he wants to go to a picture show, he has two children, twelve and fourteen years old, making four in the family. He goes up to the window, lays down 15 cents a piece or 60 cents in all—he is told to come across with 8 cents more, making 68 cents in all; there is $1.68 worth of his day's wages gone before he starts to buy groceries, meat, clothes, shows, or pay doctor's bills, and a hundred other things that are really needed in a home. Do you wonder that patronage is falling off? It is not so long ago that he could take the family to the show for 20 cents. If the people that are telling you to raise the price were working under these circumstances, how many nights a week would they attend the show? And that is the circumstances of 75 per cent of the picture patrons.

I know that MOTION PICTURE NEWS has been avancing the argument to advance prices, but there are lots of conditions they are not familiar with. They say do not go down to Washington with a poor story. I think Washington should be shown the true condition, and if the producers still insist on paying such fabulous sums to the stars—let them pay the tax. The producer is taking no chances. He knows how many prints can be sold before he makes them, and gets his money. The exchange wants a deposit, and if they do not receive the check in advance the film comes C. O. D., so he is taking no chance. The exhibitor pays out his money before he gets the goods. If the public does not respond to the amount of the day's expense, who pays the bill? That has been my experience several days in the month of November. No man dare say to me, I am not patriotic, but if there are laws passed to tax me out of business, I cannot do anything but quit, and I have several thousand dollars invested too. But, when the smoke clears away and the smaller town houses are gone, the producer will not have to work so hard to furnish enough productions, and I think that will be a benefit to the business—when there are not so many fine offices and so many high salaried officials, and stars. Then the exhibitor can make a living out of his business.

I did not intend to write so much, but when I see the space that is given to the producer to air his side of the matter I do not know when to stop.

I have a lot more I would like to say but will wait and see if this is printed first. I have been in the game for ten years and this is the first time I have tried to say anything through the press.

Suggests Percentage System of Film Rentals

Dear Sir:

In the first place I want to say that your editorials are always very interesting and I have felt like answering them on several occasions but always thought you were better informed, and therefore felt that my letter might be only a personal opinion.

Well, this letter is a personal opinion, and I am writing it because your editorial in the last issue of the NEWS has made me feel that you are a bit pessimistic. I cannot agree with you that the picture business may go to smash. I agree that there will be great changes and am looking forward to the time when they will come. In the coming year I believe that the men who will be able to stay in the business wil lbe the ones who know something about the business. One of the biggest jokes in this respect has been the salesman for the exchanges. I have to meet the first salesman who knows what he is selling. Whenever one calls on me to use the service of the exchange that he represents I ask him whether he has seen a certain picture that has been extensively advertised as a wonderful production by his exchainge. Invariably the answer is NO, I have not

Educational and Peter Pan Not Connected

Former Makes Announcement Concerning Relations, and States Films of the Latter Are Distributed Separately

THE Educational Films Corporation of America last week made the following announcement: "Neither Educational nor any of its officers or stockholders have ever had any interest whatsoever in the Peter Pan Film Corporation. Neither has the Peter Pan Film Corporation nor any of its officers or stockholders any interest whatsoever in the Educational Films Corporation of America.

"Due to the fact that Mr. Allen, about a year ago, was connected with the Educational Films Corporation of America for three months, this announcement is made to anticipate any erroneous idea from that fact, and the fact that the Educational Films Corporation of America distributed the Motoy comedies in the State of New York for them.

"The Pater Pan Film Corporation, upon deciding to discontinue business, has turned all their pictures over to the Educational Films Corporation of America to place in the unsold territories.

"All together the Peter Pan Company made eighteen Motoy comedies, which are about five hundred feet each, and show animated dolls acting some interesting stories. These comedies are particularly adapted for children's matinees, and also appeal to the grown-ups as well.

"'The Honeymooners,' taken in the Hawaiian Islands, as well as the two-reel picture showing the Plattsburg Training Camp, will be distributed by the Educational Films Corporation.

"None of these pictures produced by the Peter Pan Company will be released on the regular Educational program. They will be placed on the market through exchanges other than those of the Educational Films Corporation."

Overland Makes Announcement to the Trade

Overland Film Company, in an announcement last week over the signature of S. Krellberg, said in part:

"The Overland Film Company has no connection of any kind, nature or description with Harry Berg or the Berg Productions and has never had. Harry Berg nor the Berg Productions have no interest in the Overland Film Company, and no one is authorized to sign any contracts nor incur any obligations on behalf of Overland except the owners and officials of the same."

Second Series of Italian Film Released Shortly

It was announced from the offices of the Fort Pitt Theatre Company, of Pittsburgh, in the Times Building, last week, that the second series of the official Italian war films, which are said to show the terrific fighting between the Italians and Austrians on the Adige Plateau and the Piave River, which will reach America some time this week, will be released for the United States between January and February 1. The first series of official Italian war films, known as "The Italian Battlefront," caused much interest in New York, Philadelphia, Boston, Chicago, San Francisco, and other cities.

William Moore Patch, president of the Fort Pitt Theatre Company, arrived in New York last week after an absence of a fortnight, during which time he visited the West and Middle West. Mr. Patch stated that the demand for "The Italian Battlefront," west of the Mississippi, was extraordinary, and that people who thought the West was apathetic toward the war, or lukewarm in their enthusiasm for America's Allies, had another guess coming.

The one feature that is said to stamp the official Italian war films with individuality is that they are a combination of scenic beauty and constant action. Mr. Patch says this is especially true of the second series which show the brave sons of Italy performing prodigious feats of valor over almost unsurpassable barriers.

Aaron J. Jones, president of the Chicago firm of Jones, Linick & Schaefer, is incensed over the continued announcements by the exploiters of a film called "The Birth of a Race," that they are to show that picture at the Colonial theatre.

"I have written these parties and warned them upon several occasions that they must not use the name of the Colonial theatre to sell stock in their company," says Mr. Jones. "It is by holding the Colonial theatre engagement as a bait before the eyes of prospective buyers that they are able to continue their stock jobbing campaign. I wish to state that the Colonial theatre is now devoted to the spoken drama playing the highest class of theatrical attractions, and there is no thought of changing the Colonial policy whatever. 'The Birth of a Race' will not be shown at this time or at any future time in the Colonial theatre, and I wish to take this means of correcting a false impression which has been created by the continued assertions of the promoters of this film."

Marion Arrives in Spain

According to a cablegram received at the Kalem offices last week from the American Vice-Consul at Barcelona, Spain, Francis E. Marion has safely arrived in that port.

Mr. Marion, a member of the Foreign Cinema Commission, of which George Creel, through the Committee on Public Information, is the head, left for Cuba, and thence to Spain about two weeks ago.

He took with him a large supply of motion picture film, dealing with the work and play of the American people. These pictures are to be projected before Spanish and Italian audiences, with the view of acquainting these people with the ideals of America in hopes that a friendlier relation can be established and maintained with these nations.

It is believed that Mr. Marion will spend some time at first, becoming acquainted with Spanish conditions. After a visit in the important cities of Spain he will embark for Italy.

Brooklyn Exhibitors Answer Distributor's Complaint

The exhibitors of Brooklyn and Long Island were Monday of this week aroused to a full realization of the possible embarrassment and uneasiness likely to ensue as a result of a complaint last week by the Distributors' Branch of the National Association to Hon. Melville J. France, United States Attorney, concerning the alleged boycott said to be impending in Brooklyn, and which would cut the products of eleven distributors off from that city. To forestall the probably injurious effects caused by the publicity of the affair, the Brooklyn exhibitors issued on Monday an announcement of which the following is a part:

"The Associated Motion Picture Exhibitors of Brooklyn and Long Island is being charged by the combined and concerted action of the Distributors' Branch of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry with a criminal offense. Evidently the felony charged is of such serious character as requires the employment of the most eminent counsel to represent them. Notwithstanding the usual method of first presenting the case to the authorities, it simultaneously gave such complaint the widest publicity in the public press.

"The exhibitors of Brooklyn and Long Island do not intend to try the issues in the public press, and therefore will welcome an investigation by the proper authorities provided that the complainants will be put under oath, to ascertain the real true facts, and the exhibitors will welcome at the proper time an opportunity to present their side.

"Ex-Senator Harvey Hinman, of New York, who was counsel for the New York Legislative Investigation of the Motion Picture Industry, will probably present the exhibitors' side of this issue."

General Enterprises Denies Government Takes Building

General Enterprises, Inc., of New York, in a letter last week to MOTION PICTURE NEWS, intimates that the recent report from Washington that the Government has requisitioned the Mather Building, now being constructed in the Capital City for various film exchanges, is premature.

The report concerning the taking over of the building for Government purposes, temporarily, came from a Washington correspondent, and was published in MOTION PICTURE NEWS.

The letter from General Enterprises said, in part: "Under the caption of 'Washington Worries Over Lack of Film Building,' in your last week's issue there was a paragraph which stated that 'a prospective film building on G street, near Ninth, in which several of the exchanges had subscribed as renters' has been taken by Uncle Sam for executive or army and navy purposes.

"The only building of that description is the Mather Building, which is now under process of construction and which is being built for the film exchanges in Washington. This company promoted this building and is handling the rentals for same, and has already, as you state, leased space to some of the exchanges.

Eastman Warns Producers of Impending Film Shortage

Government Advises Raw Film Manufacturers That Nitric Acid Is Needed for High Explosives—Broulatour and Eastman Instruct Producers to Return Scrap Positive and Negative After Feb. 1

ANOTHER bomb was dropped into motion picture circles last week when the news leaked into New York from Rochester that the Eastman Kodak Company had been informed by the United States Government that a definite shortage of nitric acid existed and that the manufacture of motion picture film might have to be curtailed.

Needed for T. N. T.

Nitric acid is one of the chief ingredients used in making film; and it is also one of the basic chemicals employed in the production of Tri Nitro Toluol and other high explosive powders of warfare in many of which cellulose derivatives are also required.

That cellulose bases are also limited is further intimated.

The rumor which was first traced through Chicago by a MOTION PICTURE NEWS representative indicated that the Government's long requisitioning arm might pluck away the nitric acid and cellulose bases from the eastern sources. This caused a temporary flurry which was quieted by the reassurances of Eastman's New York representative, J. E. Broulatour.

Broulatour said that the situation was "serious but not fatal"; that a nitric acid shortage did exist, but that prompt measures of economy on the part of producers would forestall radical methods by the Government requisitioners.

The following circular letter was sent out last week by J. E. Broulatour and the Eastman home office to all producers:

Immediate Shortage Likely

"As there is likely to be an immediate shortage of ingredients entering into the manufacture of motion picture film, the Kodak Company is forced to take steps to safeguard the industry against this possible shortage.

"One important step which the Kodak Company will immediately take will be the recalling of all old, unusable Positive and Negative Film and wornout prints which is usually disposed of as scrap. This material can be handled by the company in such a manner as to make it available for the base of motion picture Positive Film. Therefore, the Company has advised me by letter that on and after February 1, 1918, it will probably be necessary for all my customers to return to the Kodak Company all the old Positive and Negative scrap film that they have on hand and can accumulate before that date. The Kodak Company is very anxious to have its customers understand that this is a very vital matter and that unless the fullest co-operation is extended it may mean in the future the curtailing of manufacture of motion picture film and the reduction of shipments to customers.

New Film for Old

"The customers who send in the largest quantity of old film in proportion to their purchases will be the ones to get the largest quantity of new film in case of shortage.

"I trust you will appreciate the gravity of the situation and will make every effort to meet it by giving specific and positive instructions that no more old film is to be sold—notwithstanding prices that may be offered to you. Specific shipping and packing directions will follow in due course."

Mollie King Helps Red Cross in Brooklyn Benefits

Mollie King was given a hard task the past week when she was placed in charge and made personally responsible for the seven benefit performances for the Red Cross in seven Marcus Loew theatres in Brooklyn last Friday morning, Red Cross Day. The fact that every theatre was filled for the performance, and that every ticket was sold in each theatre, is due largely, no doubt, to the untiring work of Miss King to make the benefits a financial success.

Artcraft Gets Decision in Wm. S. Hart Case

Justice Goff Denies Application of New York Motion Picture Company for Injunction on "The Narrow Trail" Feature

JUSTICE GOFF, in a recent decision denied the application of the New York Motion Picture Company for an injunction pendente lite restraining Artcraft Pictures Corporation from distributing the first William S. Hart production entitled "The Narrow Trail," and vacated the temporary stay granted pending the argument of the injunction.

Judge Goff in his opinion said: "Upon an examination of all the papers submitted upon this motion, and the extensive briefs and arguments of counsel for both sides, I am of the opinion that there is not such certainty or even probability of the plaintiff succeeding upon the trial of this action as would warrant the granting of the relief sought herein. Nor is there even any such preponderance of creditable evidence as would justify the plaintiff's assertion of ownership of the scenario of the picture "The Narrow Trail," or even its assertion that its rival producing corporation induced the employes of plaintiff to leave its employment. The defendant served in this action, Artcraft Pictures Corporation, is not reasonably chargeable with any act of the William S. Hart Production, Inc., so far as appears by the evidence before me to justify the restraint sought for before the determination of the issues in the action. The claim of ownership by the plaintiff is sufficiently refuted, and upon this claim alone there appears to be no reasonable ground for granting the relief sought herein. The unique and extraordinary services alleged by the plaintiff are, as I have heretofore indicated, not such as would justify the granting of a restraining order. Upon these considerations I am constrained to deny the motion for an injunction pendente lite and to order the temporary stay granted in the order to show cause, vacated."

Joe Brandt Again on the Job

After an illness that came dangerously near ending has career, Joe Brandt returned to his desk Monday morning, of this week, looking better than he has at any time during the past year. Four weeks ago the general manager of Universal overdosed himself with calomel and mercury poisoning resulted.

Ten days ago he had recovered sufficiently to be removed to a rest cure in New Jersey, and there he completely recuperated. The fact that Mr. Brandt had returned to work was noised around Monday, and his principal occupation, since then, has been receiving a stream of visitors, who have been congratulating him upon his narrow escape from death.

You are not going to war. The men who are need all the comforts you can give them. Help them get cigarettes. That is your patriotic duty. If you aren't helping in the "smokes" campaign, get busy—now. Don't be a slacker!

Hodkinson Uses General Film for Distribution

Former Will Have Own Salesmen in Twenty-eight Exchanges of the Latter—Does Away with Opening Up New Offices

IT was announced last week by W. W. Hodkinson and the General Film Company that the former organization, recently formed and news of which has been published by MOTION PICTURE NEWS, will use the exchange organization of the latter as the service end of its distributing plans.

Under the arrangements made, the Hodkinson Corporation will have its own salesmen in the twenty-eight General exchanges, where the actual shipping, inspection and other services will be handled. The Hodkinson Corporation saves the cost of opening and operating offices, while the General, with its already equipped organization, is thrown at once into the field of feature program distribution.

The first product to be handled by the new channel will be the Paralta Plays, two of which, "A Man's Man," with J. Warren Kerrigan, and "Madam Who?" with Bessie Barriscale, are ready for immediate bookings through General Film exchanges.

In addition to the announcement of United States distribution, the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation also announced this week that the world rights, exclusive of Canada, for all its product, including the new "Motion Picture Plus," have been arranged with the Inter-Ocean Film Company. Announcement is also made that the Canadian rights to all the Paralta Plays have been sold to Globe Films, Ltd., of Toronto.

There has been much talk of the advantages of exchange consolidation, but not until the news of the Hodkinson move was announced Friday, did the industry have any visible sign of a tendency in this direction. The Hodkinson-General arrangement, it is pointed out, is the first step in elimination of waste and the plan to return a share of the distribution profits to the exhibitor which Mr. Hodkinson announced last week.

The General Film Company announces, in co-operation with the Hodkinson Plan, that it is prepared to offer its exchange facilities to other national distributors, on a basis similar to that which it has now arranged with Mr. Hodkinson. As indicated in the announcement of General Film Company, a broad extension of the Hodkinson plan of co-operation of such elements as already exist in the business is involved, an idea which has been Mr. Hodkinson's motive for innumerable moves in the past.

Associated Theatres Call Meeting Next Week

Stockholders Will Gather in Minneapolis on December 17 to Elect Directors and Look After Other Business on Hand

THE first big meeting of stockholders of the Associated Theatres, Inc., has been called for Minneapolis on December 17, at the West Hotel, according to an announcement last week from Secretary T. H. Hamlin, of Minneapolis.

The purpose is to elect a board of five directors and adopt the franchise and information blanks after discussion, and also make any corrections decided upon.

This is the organization of exhibitors which incorporated October 16 for $100,000 under Minnesota laws to operate booking offices and film exchanges in Minneapolis, Duluth, Milwaukee, La Crosse, Sioux Falls, Aberdeen, Fargo and Minot.

Six hundred theatres was the goal to be reached before starting actual operations and according to General Manager Hamlin in a statement issued December 1, the five hundred mark has been passed.

The present officers are: President, H. L. Hartman, Mandan, N. D.; vice-president, W. S. Smith, Menomonie, Wis.; chairman, C. W. Gates, Aberdeen, S. D.; treasurer, H. P. Greene, Minneapolis; secretary and general manager, T. H. Hamlin, Minneapolis.

"Although our plan is a radical departure from the present expensive methods of marketing and distributing film, supplies and equipment, we do not expect to revolutionize the motion picture industry in a single day," declared Mr. Hamlin.

"At the start we will not be able to serve all our members all of the time, but we can start serving part of our members all the time and all of our members part of the time.

"In the meantime they will continue dealing with the individual exchanges direct as under the present system. When we have the film that each member desires for every day in the week at a price which he feels he can individually afford to pay, then and only then will we be able to serve the entire membership every show.

"While this evolution is going on the members have no dues or assessments to pay so there can be no dissatisfaction.

"It is just eleven hundred miles across our zone from Sheboygan, Wisconsin, to Beach, North Dakota, and it is a losing territory for the producers and distributors.

"We will either play film on a percentage or buy exclusive rights and pay for our own prints. Associated Theatres, Inc., is not in the business to make a cent of profit from anybody. It is here to give the best service to its members at the very lowest cost.

"If there is very little film handled at the start our overhead expenses will be correspondingly low as they can be made very slight," concluded Mr. Hamlin.

seen the picture but it is great. I have been in business for the past twenty years and I have learned that to sell goods I must first know what I have to sell. This should be applied to the motion picture business as well as to any other business.

I am not writing this letter, however, to find fault with existing conditions but to offer suggestions. I agree with you that amalgamation of picture interests is not the thing that will overcome the present crisis. Here is a plan that will overcome all difficulties and will mean money for all concerned in the business. The war tax on tickets will be a proof to all exchanges of the amount of business done by each exhibitor. Why not have exchanges charge film rental according to war tax paid? As an illustration: I paid for the month of November $48.07 war tax. Now I am willing to pay the exchange that serves me just double the war tax for service during the month of December. In January I would pay double my December war tax for film rental, etc. I have figured over this and find that this is the proportion that can be paid by any exhibitor and still keep him on the safe side. I have often wondered why some exchange had not offered its picture on the percentage basis and whenever I asked an exchange about it I found that there were too many CROOKS in the business and that they could not trust them to make correct returns. Now with the war tax going the returns must be correct, and I believe that the exchange who will offer the pictures according to business done will get the business in the future. I could write a whole lot more about this scheme but feel that this letter is getting too lengthy. I might mention that the above is figured on an eight-reel program, and in my case it means about 33⅓ per cent of my receipts for film rental. This is all that any exhibitor can afford to pay. This scheme may not appeal to you but I feel that it is the best that can be offered. If you want me to elaborate on it write and I will do so. You need not answer this letter, however, as I am simply writing to offer a suggestion. Not because I think I know it all but because I know that if I want to stay in business under the present conditions the exchanges and producers must get their share of the money as well as I.

If I pay the exchange one-third of my receipts, and if all other exhibitors would do the same, I feel that we all could make a comfortable living. On the other hand, the pictures that draw would pay the biggest rental. This, I think, is the first thing that should be done. I am paying the same price for a rotten picture as I would pay for the best picture made. This is because exchanges are anxious for business and do not care how they get it. If the percentage basis could be put into operation the producer would soon realize that the best paying picture is the one that gets the money.

I offered a suggestion to Mr. Hebrew, of the Vitagraph Exchange of Philadelphia the other day, and I hope he will take it up with his company. It was this. Why not make good serial pictures of eight and not more than ten episodes in length? I am sure that the exchange that will get out the first serial of the length will be able to rent it to all the theatres, provided, of course, that the action is sustained in the ten episodes. I find that my patrons tire of serials as soon as they have seen the tenth episode, and I think the best plan would be to have ten episodes of one serial and then start another. Think this over,

Texas Amusement Managers' Association Meets in Dallas

Promises to Put Entire Resources into an Organization That Will Combine Exhibitors' League and Exhibitors' Association—Names Men to Go to Washington Convention

IF the M. P. E. L. of A. and the A. E. A. will amalgamate, eliminate dissension and fight shoulder to shoulder for the common good in this critical period of the motion picture, Texas, the largest State in the Union, will throw its entire motion picture influence into this combined body.

A resolution to this effect, with unanimous sentiment favoring the A. E. A. and its policies, and a denouncement of Lee Ochs, president of the M. P. E. L., who was declared in open meeting to have been "influenced by the manufacturers rather than the exhibitors," featured the semi-annual convention of the Texas Amusement Managers' Association, held in Dallas, December 3 and 4.

Two Washington Delegates

The appointment of two representatives to go to Washington to help in the tax fight, a discussion of ways and means of tiding the small theatres over in this crisis, and the resignation of President E. H. Hulsey were other important features of the convention.

P. C. Levy, of Fort Worth, and Hirschel

P. C. Levy

Stuart, a Hulsey manager, were the delegates selected.

San Antonio will be the next place of meeting, and the dates will be either April 15-16 or 22-23 of next year.

A resolution to join an amalgamated body composed of the A. E. A. and the M. P. E. L., and to stay independent as heretofore in case such a thing could never happen, was suggested by President Hulsey. This brought E. L. Engelbrecht, of Temple, Tex., to his feet.

"There isn't a chance on earth for these two bodies to get together," Mr. Englebrecht exclaimed.

"They will at Washington," replied President Hulsey. "Like competitive exhibitors in a small town, facing ruin because of taxes and high film rentals, eventually they will be brought together. The mere fact that Texas will join this body if they go together, ought to have a little influence."

A motion providing that the secretary write the heads of both organizations that Texas is willing to come into a combined body brought J. T. Hatch, of the Wonderland theatre, Kaufman, Tex., to his feet. "I will not favor having anything to do with Lee Ochs' organization," fairly shouted Mr. Hatch, "because I believe Ochs has been influenced by the manufacturers rather than by the exhibitors." Several exhibitors shouted that they would resign from an organization which Ochs would head. The motion passed, and reel and admission tax talk followed.

Reel Tax Discussed

A number of exhibitors believed that the fifteen cents a reel tax was equitable. No two, however, had exactly the same ideas about the admission tax. Some contended that the tax should be figured ten per cent on gross business, without the worry of pennies, but this idea was knocked in the head when it was explained that the latter method was the only way of collecting it from the public, who the Government intended should pay.

Endeavoring to explain the whys and wherefores of the manufacturers' tax of fifteen cents, and that the exchanges figured fifty bookings to a reel, President Hulsey was interrupted by Henry Meyer, of Tyler, Tex., who created the first hearty laugh of the convention when he said, "some I get have been run 150 times." Another exhibitor wanted to know whether or not "the exchanges added five or six cents for bookkeeping." Another Texas showman brought up the point that most reels he received were only about 850 or 900 feet in length, and this further complicated matters.

The consensus of opinion was that the fifteen-cent tax was fair and equitable. At any rate, the opinion was sufficiently divided to render a vote on the proposition well nigh impossible, according to President Hulsey, who ruled that a vote not favoring the tax would be used to too much advantage by the companies now absorbing the manufacturers' tax.

Mr. Hulsey, who owns a number of theatres in Texas, said he favored a ten per cent gross admission tax, all tickets included, but, on the other hand, Mr. Hulsey said, this scheme had its disadvantageous points, inasmuch as on a fifteen cent ticket, for example, raised from ten cents, the exhibitor paid a tax figuring about thirteen and one-third per cent.

Opinion Divided

Opinion was divided as to the five cent shows, one exhibitor contending that they should not have escaped the tax, while another said additional taxation on theatres of this variety would mean closing of doors. A Texas showman claimed that his patrons paid the war tax with a smile, and that he had installed a Red Cross box next to the cashier's window which was always well filled with pennies. On motion of one pictureman, a vote was taken on those who had raised the price of admission five cents and were paying the admission tax, and on those who were collecting the pennies. It was ascertained that exhibitors who had raised admission prices and absorbed the tax predominated by a ratio of ten to four.

Treasurer Levy read the report for the last quarter, and it showed the organization to be in a healthy financial condition. President Hulsey then announced that two months ago he had mailed his resignation to the executive committee. No action was taken on this, however, and Mr. Hulsey will remain president until the San Antonio meeting. This action was taken by Mr. Hulsey because of pressing business cares.

Selection of dates and city for the annual meeting in July was laid over until the San Antonio meeting in April. It is planned to have the San Antonio meeting occur during the week that city has on its Flower Fiesta, an annual event bringing thousands of visitors. A resolution was passed requiring every member to attend the annual meeting or have his representative there, the penalty being a fine of $7.50.

Business Over Quickly

The convention practically finished its business the first day, and the second-day affair was in the nature of a social session. Discussion developed that there was a need in Texas of a school in which to train moving picture operators. This idea is being worked out by President Hulsey.

The usual "after convention" sessions were held. On the first night the General Film Company and its manager, Frank E. Garner, played host to a number of Texas showmen at its spacious building in Commerce street, Ned Depinet, manager of the Consolidated Film and Supply Company, packed exhibitors in his car for a ride around the city. All exchanges report that the exhibitors were in a buying mood.

Secrets of the Movies

No. 2

DO you remember the amazement that you experienced the first time you ever went to the "movies"?

Maybe you saw that old epoch-making picture, "The Great Train Robbery."

Wasn't it simply marvelous?

Or was it?

Really, didn't you grow a little more critical as time went on? Didn't you begin demanding better pictures, better settings, better actors?

A couple of years ago—not much longer—a "film magnate" recruited his Wild West company by buttonholing the first half-dozen or so men he met outside his office door on Broadway. He took them across the river to the wilds of New Jersey and—"shot the piece." But you soon saw through that subterfuge—that thin imitation. You demanded realism, real scenery, real cowboys, and real actors.

The film magnate scratched his head, obeyed your royal demands and bought ranches, mobilized cowboys by the hundreds, and hired Broadway's best talent right under the nose of protesting theatrical managers.

Prices? They simply had to go up

And then along came the war. Up went the prices a few more notches.

Chemicals used in films are also used in war. That item alone meant an enormous increase. And actors have to eat! Eggs and meat and bread and butter cost them more now, just as they cost you more.

It costs over 200 per cent more to put the pictures on the screen in this theatre than it did three years—two years ago. And every point of the picture industry is bearing a heavy tax.

We are fighting hard, and we feel that you are standing with us. We simply want you to realize that—and if you find anything in it that you agree with put it up to some of the producers.

Admission Tax Makes Big Cut in His Receipts

Editor, MOTION PICTURE NEWS.

DEAR SIR: I am a small town theatre man, in a village that has almost three hundred plus a few children. It is a poor town and can only show once a week, that being Saturday night. My admission is ten and twenty-five cents, which I must get (and which I did get cheerfully) to make a fair profit

The first night the admission tax went into effect my business dropped an even twelve dollars. They were aware of the tax, and the price was twenty-eight cents, and the majority stayed away rather than pay the extra three cents.

And it has been that way ever since. I ran the "Honor System" and I didn't have the nerve to charge thirty-nine cents, but charged them thirty-five cents and the Government got my personal check instead of the public's.

It makes me laugh to read the advice to all exhibitors to raise their prices. The public won't stand for it. A nearby exhibitor raised his prices five cents, including the tax, and you should have heard the howl that went up.

The whole trouble is that the exchanges and leading mucky-mucks have an idea that the country house is in the class with the city house. We can't run from twelve to eleven as they do and oh, boy, if it storms that Saturday night we are lucky to take in enough to pay the janitor.

Let the United States tax the country house five per cent. like the state tax is cut fifty per cent. in towns of five thousand or less.

Yours very truly,

ROBERT E. JENNINGS.

Eleven Distributors File Complaint in Alleged Boycott

Difficulty in Brooklyn Was Caused, It Is Said, by War Revenue Act Which Imposes Footage Tax on All Film—Fox and Vitagraph Were to Be the First Distributors Affected

COMPLAINT has been filed with Hon. Melville J. France, U. S. Attorney for the Eastern District, it became known last week, by eleven motion picture distributors through their attorneys, Cadwalader, Wickersham & Taft, regarding a boycott which the Associated Motion Picture Exhibitors of Brooklyn are alleged to have threatened.

It is claimed in an announcement from the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry that the Brooklyn association proposed to put into immediate effect a boycott against the Fox Film Corporation and Vitagraph, and later to follow it up against Artcraft, Goldwyn, International, Paramount, Pathe, Select, Universal, World and Metro.

The complaint is said to set forth that the Sherman Act is being violated.

Footage Tax Is the Cause

Concerning the nature of the misunderstanding, the announcement of the National Association reads: "The matter has been precipitated by the War Revenue Act of Congress of Oct. 4, 1917, in which a tax of ¾ of a cent per linear foot is imposed on films. To meet this heavy tax, certain distributors determined to add to the rental charge of the reel (which rental charge ranges from $1 to $100 per day), a charge of fifteen cents per day per reel. The Associated Motion Picture Exhibitors of Brooklyn take exception to this, and although the patrons of theatres pay the ticket war tax the members of this association object to pay any of the film footage tax, thereby attempting to divide the war tax between the distributor and the public—the exhibitor paying no share of it at all."

The complaint filed with Hon. Melville J. France by the attorneys, says, in part: "We are directed by certain distributors of motion picture films to complain to you in regard to a boycott which the members of an organization known as the Associated Motion Picture Exhibitors of Brooklyn are threatening to put into immediate effect against two of the distributors with the purpose of subsequently using a similar boycott against the other distributors, in order that by concerted action and the unlawful means of a boycott they may coerce the distributors to their ends.

Delves Into Tax

"The two distributors against whom the boycott it about to be instituted are: Fox Film Corporaion and Vitagraph Company of America.

"In this letter we shall give you the salient facts, and we shall be pleased to amplify this statement in a personal interview at your convenience.

"The concerns above named are engaged in interstate commerce in distributing motion picture films throughout the United States, the total business aggregating many millions of dollars annually. That this is an interstate business within the Sherman Act has been held by the Court in United States vs. Motion Picture Patents Company (225 Fed. 800).

"By the War Revenue Act of October 4, 1917, Congress imposed three taxes affecting the motion picture business, namely, (1) a tax of one-quarter of a cent per linear foot on film which has not been exposed; (2) a tax of one-half a cent per linear foot on film containing a picture, and (3) a tax on admissions to theatres.

"The tax upon admissions, as the exhibitors have arranged, is paid by the patron of the theatre when he purchases his ticket.

"In order to determine how to apportion the tax of three-quarters of a cent per linear foot on films, an exhaustive examination of the subject was made by Price, Waterhouse & Company at the request of some of the distributors. As a result of their examination, certain of the distributors determined to add to the rental character for a reel (which charge ranges from $1 to $100 per day, according to the character of the subject and the reputation of the actor), a charge of fifteen cents a day per reel (each reel comprising approximately 1,000 feet) on the assumption that the average life of a reel is fifty days. In this manner something less than the amount of the tax will be collected by the distributors.

Vitagraph Canceled

"On November 19, William Brandt, president of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of Brooklyn, called on the telephone one of the principal officers of the Vitagraph Company and requested a conference, stating that the exhibitors of Brooklyn had selected the Vitagraph Company for their cancellations, and that cancellations from exhibitors all over Brooklyn had been placed in the hands of the Committee of Fifteen, to be served on the Vitagraph Company, and that such cancellations meant that the Vitagraph Company would be shut out of Brooklyn. Similarly the officers of the said Brooklyn exhibitors association and the Committee of Fifteen have waited upon the officers of the Fox Film Corporation and have stated to them that they have obtained signatures from practically all, if not all, of the customers in Brooklyn of the Fox Film Corporation, consenting to and authorizing cancellations to be made by the Committee of Fifteen of their contracts with the Fox Film Corporation, which cancellations, if effected, would destroy the business of the Fox Film Corporation in Brooklyn.

"These announcements have been made in the form of threats and with the declaration of an intent to bring about concerted action on the part of all the exhibitors and customers of the Vitagraph Company and the Fox Film Corporation, in order by their united action to destroy the business in Brooklyn of those corporations.

"We have advised our clients that such concerted action is in violation of law and is a conspiracy in restraint of interstate trade, and accordingly our clients have considered it their duty to direct us to present the matter to you for your consideration, with a request that you inquire into the matter, by grand jury proceedings or otherwise as may seem to you advisable.

"It has been stated by the officers of the Brooklyn Exhibitors Association and by the members of the Committee of Fifteen, at the conference above referred to, that the singling out of the two corporations named is but one step in a plan which is directed against all of the distributors. For the reason that they are all equally affected by the scope of this combination and boycott, all of them join in this complaint."

Government Again Thanks Industry for Good Work

The Government again has officially thanked the motion picture industry for the work done through the National Association in connection with the war.

J. A. Berst, vice-president and general manager of Pathe, who was appointed by the National Association as chairman of the Motion Picture Aircraft Division, has received the following letter: "Your prompt and complete reply in regard to the directors and cameramen is greatly appreciated. Also please accept the thanks of this office for the splendid cooperation and work in connection with the recruiting Moving Picture Weekly showing.

Rowland Asserts Distribution Needs a Change

Favors Centralized System with Quartet of Releasing Concerns Circulating the Prints—Would Reduce the Overhead

THE chief trouble of the motion picture business at the present time, according to Richard A. Rowland, president of the Metro Pictures Corporation, is the system of distribution. While being distinctly opposed to any amalgamation, monopoly or trust, Mr. Rowland favors a centralization of distribution with four or five big releasing concerns each independent of the other through which all manufacturers shall distribute their pictures. Mr. Rowland believes that a monopoly in the picture business is an impossibility, as well as being undesirable, but that the tremendous overhead—now the bane of the industry—can be materially reduced if five big clearing house organizations or less are put into operation.

"There is room, all kinds of room, for improvement of distribution in the motion picture industry," said Mr. Rowland. "We do not want an amalgamation, a monopoly or a trust, because such a thing as well as being undesirable, could not survive in the motion picture industry. What we do want is a sale system through clearing houses, and it makes no difference whether the number be three, or four or five so long as they are a few, whereby each manufacturer shall retain his identity and place his goods through these clearing houses to the exhibitor. The manufacturer, in the last analysis, must be content to depend upon the merit of his attractions for his profits.

"Under the present system, the overhead charges on distribution are such that it is necessary for a concern to make at least one feature picture a week. As a result, there is a production without reference to real show value, and it would be better if fewer pictures were made in order that time and care could be given, so that each production would be a box office attraction. This lower production rate would only be possible by clearing house or centralized system of distribution. Each manufacturer could have a man in the office of the clearing house through which his product is distributed, to look after his interests and to see that his product was given proper attention."

Liberty Film Incorporates With Exhibitors

Independent Exchange Intends to Try Out Plan of Buying and Renting Film in Collaboration with Mid-West Managers

THE Liberty Film Renting Company, an independent exchange of Pittsburgh, of which Mayer Silverman is manager, last week announced its intention of launching a plan to incorporate its holdings with the exhibitors of western Pennsylvania and West Virginia for the purpose of buying and selling film.

In a letter to exhibitors, Mr. Silverman said: "Time has shown that the selling cost of film service which is wasteful must be eliminated, with sixty to seventy exhibitors directly interested in their own product and a reasonable advance for selling cost. Productions that are out of reach of the exchange and the exhibitors can be purchased and to the exhibitor at a much lower figure than if the exchange is compelled to send representatives on the road: Instead of one copy of a subject being secured we will purchase two copies. One copy can be used among other theatres, not members.

"This company has a contract for single reels, owns a fifty per cent. interest in 'The Submarine Eye,' two copies; owns the Lillian Walker in 'Gold or Lust of the Ages,' thirty-three Art Dramas, owns a number of new state rights subjects; 'The Mutt and Jeff' cartoon comedies, now buying two prints; the Christie Comedies in its thirty-seventh week and a large stock of new and run state rights subjects, and has received three and has contracted for sixteen two-reel William S. Hart reissues. Contracts are now pending for additional subjects.

"We propose to incorporate for $70,000, Mayer Silverman retaining $10,000 worth of stock. Deposit $15,000 in the treasury to purchase subjects that become available. With about sixty exhibitors we can purchase for our company any subject made.

"The western Pennsylvania and West Virginia exhibitors' circuit will be followed by new circuits in all parts of the United States. We will affiliate with them. We will purchase and pay cash for bookings for our exhibitors. The central office will distribute this service."

Pathe Distributes Bonus to Number of Sales Force

Pathe, it became known last week, has distributed another bonus to a large number of the sales force. This, it is understood, is for the September-October period.

Among those who earned the extra coin are L. E. Kennedy, A. M. Holah, W. W. Kofeldt, R. Junet, C. W. Perry, G. W. Fuller, L. A. Sheridan, R. V. Anderson, G. L. Hanes, B. H. Bogart, C. D. Hammer, D. C. Stearns, E. A. Helouis, L. A. Samuelson, G. Laundra, J. B. Dumestre, J. Sievers, J. Fontaine, M. Come, L. Adler, W. J. Busch, T. F. Holden, E. E. Heller, J. F. Toner.

Universal Takes More Steps to Help Government

The Universal Film Manufacturing Company, through its world-wide organization, will enter largely into the purchase and distribution of War Savings Certificates and Thrift Stamps that have been put into circulation during the past week to raise $2,000,000,000 through the savings of the people. Universal took a quarter of a million in the first Liberty Loan and sold the bonds on weekly payment plan to its employes. In its move to promote the War Savings Certificates, every employe will be invited to participate, and Universal's Accounting Department will propose that every bill it pays for merchandise, supplies and other business obligations shall be partially accounted for in Thrift Stamps or Certificates.

New Corporations

A LIST of new motion picture corporations in the States of New Jersey, Virginia and New York for the week ending December 8 as furnished from the records of the Corporation Trust Company, 15 Exchange Place, Jersey City, N. J., is as follows:

NEW JERSEY

METROPOLITAN AMUSEMENT CO.—Amusement enterprises, incorporated for $100,000, at Camden. Francis J. Smith, William S. C. Roray and Charles A. Cogan, of 509 Federal street, Camden, N. J., are the incorporators.

NEW YORK

MOVETTE, INCORPORATED.—To manage moving picture cameras and projectors; incorporated for $1,250,000, at Rochester. Asher P. Whipple, William F. Strang and Cornelius R. Wright, all of Rochester, are the incorporators.

STERLING PICTURES CORPORATION.—To manufacture motion pictures; incorporated for $100,000, at Manhattan. H. R. Ebenstein, New York, Ada Beck, 135 West Thirty-seventh street, New York City, and A. F. Beck, New York, are the incorporators.

VIRGINIA

THE CATHOLIC ART ASSOCIATION, INCORPORATED.—For the purpose of taking and producing motion pictures, photographs, or other pictures of public or private events and occurrences, and of scenes, acts, plays, etc.; incorporated for $1,000,000, at Richmond. Arthur W. Britton, George C. Reilly and Samuel B. Howard, all of New York, are the incorporators.

"Johnnie" Waters Leaves Yorke to Join the Colors

Yorke Metro this week contributed another of its forces to the service of Uncle Sam when "Johnnie" Waters, assistant director in Harold Lockwood's company, left the organization at its location in New Hampshire, where the exterior scenes of Mr. Lockwood's forthcoming Metro wonder play, "The Avenging Trail," are being made under the direction of Francis Ford, to return to New York, where he was ordered to report for military service on December 7.

Members of the company gathered a little fund for their departing co-worker and presented it to him as a smoke contribution before he left.

Mr. Waters is the tenth member of the Yorke-Metro company to be called to the colors since the beginning of the war.

Raymond Cavanagh and Burton Rice Open Offices

Raymond Cavanagh and Burton Rice, it was announced last week, have opened offices at 2005 Times Building, New York, for the purpose of carrying on a representative advertising business, in all its branches. It is understood the new concern will be one of the most complete and thorough, from every viewpoint, in the industry.

Mr. Cavanagh was connected with the advertising management of Universal for three years, and his experience in this line covers a period, prior to that, of several years.

Burton Rice is best remembered for his Bluebird inserts which have been admitted throughout the trade to be among the best in the way of artistic designing and printing.

In addition to the two heads of the concern, a staff of artists will be maintained under the direction of Rice.

Maryland Exhibitors Plan Fight on Censorship

Maryland exhibitors are preparing for a rigid fight against state censorship of motion pictures and every effort will be made to repeal the act providing for a state board of censors in the next Maryland Legislature, which convenes at Annapolis in January.

The fight, in fact, has already begun. A series of slides telling the public of the disadvantages of censorship under state control are now being thrown on the screens of the various motion picture theatres. This is being done with a view to educating the public and arousing sentiment against the present method of governing the kind of pictures to be shown in Maryland. All of the Maryland newspapers will be asked to support the move of the exhibitors in this fight, and from present indications the press is heartily in favor of the movement.

At Last Someone Explains Regarding the Footage Tax

The Cleveland correspondent of Motion Picture News this week contributes what is probably the first explanation offered regarding the footage tax, insofar as the distributors are concerned.

The motion picture exhibitor has been quite prolific as well as vehement lately, in stating his reasons for objecting to the footage tax. His chief objection is based on the ground that the manufacturer is making money on this tax. So far, the exchanges have said little in the way of explanation or retaliation. When Mr. Berst was in Cleveland he said he thought it was a mistake on the part of the manufacturers, not to have explained the methods by which they had arrived at 15 cents as a just tax, but he did not explain it. However, a local exchange man did state his side of the case recently, in an interview, and his explanation might bring to light some facts that the average exhibitor either doesn't know, or knowing, doesn't take into consideration.

"The exhibitor's pet argument," he said, "is that a picture has one hundred, or one hundred and fifty runs, and makes all the way from $15 to $30 for the exchanges, in excess of the tax imposed upon him (the exhibitor). He is fully informed about the pictures that have long runs, but he doesn't take into consideration that some films run five days, and are ruined by abuse at the hands of an operator; or some films run ten times, and are so scratched that we have to send them back to the junk heap. He forgets that the manufacturer uses thousands of feet of film in making a picture, that are not included in the picture when it is put on the market. The manufacturer pays a tax on all these films, no matter how few times they are run. The average exhibitor fails to realize that this brings our runs down to an average of fifty times as a maximum. Now fifty is a long way from 100 or 150. And it is upon the actual amount of film used, whether profitably to the manufacturer, or not, that the 15 cent per reel tax was based."

Harold Edel Takes Stand in Favor of the Tax

Managing Director of Strand Endorses Increase in Admission Prices, with Better Entertainment Provided for General Public

CONTRARY to the usual cry of the exhibitor throughout the country, Harold Edel, managing director of the Strand theatre, New York, last week stated that it is up to the exhibitor to pay the extra war tax, or rather, it is up to the exhibitor to collect it for Uncle Sam.

"The trouble is," said Mr. Edel, "that most exhibitors have been in the habit of trying to give too much for a very small admission price. Since the tax went into effect, the Strand theatre has not shown any decrease in returns at the box office. The mere announcement that admission prices will be raised, commencing with a certain date on account of the war, will not be sufficient to many patrons who are accustomed to a certain show for a certain price. An improvement in the entertainment offered, however, will justify an advance in admission prices in the mind of the patron. Such an improvement does not necessarily mean the extra expenditure of money, but it does mean extra effort on the part of the manager in the presentation of his show. Such things as a rearrangement of the orchestra, new ideas in lighting, little novelty bits and new ideas in the manner of presenting a show and many other things which will not appear on the weekly expense sheet will add materially toward maintaining the weekly receipts.

"In other words, with the increase in prices, the exhibitor must show something for it and must more than ever depend upon his showmanship in order to make money. The business of eliminating all unnecessary expense and using his weekly appropriation in the channels which will do him the most good is now more important than ever. Now is the time to study his theatre and its every feature. Each week he must give his audiences something new, something different, and he must give it to them in a new and different way. The exhibitor who realizes that the success of his theatre means more than merely throwing a film on the screen, no matter how good it is; the manager who appreciates the value of good advertising and exploitation, who knows his organization and his public and who has the proper amount of initiative, will find that his weekly receipts will not be less on account of an increase in admission prices.

"As in the case of every other article, it is up to the public to ultimately pay the tax on films. It is usually up to the retailer to collect the tax. The exhibitor in the film industry is the retailer and, therefore, he is the agent who should collect the tax for the Government. A proper explanation of the exhibitor's position in the matter, to the public, to gether with an improvement in the merit of his entertainment, without exceeding the usual monetary expenditures, as mentioned above, will solve the problem, as evidenced in the case of the Strand."

SMOKE NIGHT

A Hint From New Orleans

E. V. RICHARDS, JR., Manager of the New Orleans branch of the First National Exhibitors' Circuit, has written us the following letter through his manager, C. J. Briant.

"At Mr. Richards's request we have written to all important exhibitors throughout this territory requesting them to put on a 'SMOKE NIGHT' for the 'Our Boys in France Tobacco Fund.'"

This suggestion was inspired by the recent Thanksgiving week drive for the smoke fund.

Cleveland Exhibitors Decide to Keep Up Fight

Committee Is Appointed to Attend Washington Convention in Hopes of Touching Congress—Find Encouragement in Defeat

THE motion picture exhibitors of Cleveland are going to fight. They are going to fight everybody and everything that stands in the way of their making a livelihood.

At the Exhibitors' League meeting last Tuesday, they definitely decided to continue their efforts to restrain the exchanges from charging them a fifteen-cent war tax for every film used. They also appointed a committee to attend the convention to be held in Washington on 11, 12 and 13 of this month, for the purpose of influencing Congress to repeal the war tax on films.

While the dismissal of the injunction suit against the exchanges by Judge Phillips week before last was a decision apparently in favor of the exchanges, the exhibitors received sufficient encouragement from the judge to continue the fight, but along other lines. Just what procedure will be taken is left to the discretion and judgment of the counsellors who are defending the exhibitors.

In the meantime, the convention in Washington is called for the purpose of influencing Congress in favor of the motion picture industry. In order that the problem now confronting the exhibitor be properly placed before the committee in charge of such legislation, the organization appointed Sam Bullock and W. J. Slimm to attend the convention as representatives of the league. The feeling exists that, without the exhibitors to make known their side of the question, the manufacturers will have no incentive for pushing a repeal of the tax and matters would remain just as they are now.

"Exhibitors Optimistic" Reports Exchange Men

Branch Managers of Hoffman-Foursquare Exchanges Write That Exhibitors Are Optimistic Concerning Outlook

REPORTS received by M. H. Hoffman, Inc., from branch managers throughout the country, indicate that exhibitors are entertaining an optimistic viewpoint concerning the business. Among the representatives of the Hoffman-Foursquare Exchanges, who have expressed the sentiment of the exhibitors in their respective territories are Hy Gainsborg, manager of the New York exchange, who writes Pierre Key of the Hoffman organization as follows:

Hy Gainsborg, manager New York Foursquare exchange: "Our contracts would appear to be the best evidence that exhibitors will always book good pictures when they can be had at right prices. I am sure that our contracts for the next six months will materially surpass those of the past half year."

Samuel Rubenstein, manager Boston exchange: "New England exhibitors are not pessimistic. They are having splendid patronage and do not hesitate to book any picture they feel supplies the demand of their patrons."

A. G. Buck, manger Philadelphia exchange: "Philadelphia will do its full share, and the industry need have no apprehensions concerning bookings of pictures that have merit."

T. C. Bronstetter, manager Pittsburgh exchange: "I am so enthusiastic over the progress of our product that I haven't noticed that exhibitors were not optimistic over the future."

Harry Marsey, manager Buffalo Foursquare exchange: "The industry will experience the greatest era of prosperity in its history."

G. W. Erdmann, manager Cleveland Foursquare exchange: "There is a strong undertone which is most encouraging."

Paul E. Krieger, manager Cincinnati Foursquare exchange: "Personally I can only say that our own business shows a steady increase. As for prospects, they are bright. An optimistic attitude is beginning to show among exhibitors in this part of the country."

George Weeks, manager Detroit Foursquare exchange: "Hoffman-Foursquare pictures are progressing so nicely that perhaps I haven't noticed any feeling among exhibitors that hasn't been optimistic."

Frank J. Flaherty, manager Chicago Foursquare exchange: "Business improving every day."

Sidney J. Baker, manager St. Louis and Kansas City: "Continue giving us as fine pictures as you have and nothing but fine prospects, as well as present business, will prevail."

J. J. Unger, Toronto, head Metro Film Service and Foursquare exchange: "Our business is exceptional in every respect."

M. C. Hughes, manager Montreal exchange: "Business is great."

Charles W. Harden, manager Atlanta Foursquare exchange: "Exhibitors down here are doing well and expect to continue to do so."

Blackton Shows "Judgment House" to Friends

Producer Expresses Himself as Highly Pleased with Comments Referring to His Paramount Picture—No Release Plan Stated

"THE JUDGMENT HOUSE," J. Stuart Blackton's first Paramount feature, was shown privately on Monday evening, December 3, to an invited audience composed of the producer's friends at the Hotel Des Artistes, 1 West Sixty-seventh street, New York. Mr. Blackton received hearty endorsement of his efforts from all sides and expressed himself as being more than pleased with the comments referring to his work.

Following the showing of "The Judgment House," a five-part subject of a patriotic nature which Mrs. Blackton supervised was projected. Just how this will be put within reach of the exhibitor has not yet been decided by Mr. Blackton. It is a timely feature and closely resembles in treatment and material the Country Life series which the Blacktons produced not so long ago.

Mr. Blackton's guest list included a number of persons prominent in society, municipal circles of the city and the theatre.

Among those present were, Mr. and Mrs. E. H. Sothern, Wilfred North, William P. S. Earle, Harry Morey, Stanley Olmstead, Alice Joyce, Martin Justice, Mr. and Mrs. Alan R. Hawley, Mr. and Mrs. Eugene V. Brewster, Count and Countess Tamborini, Howard Chandler Christy, Mr. and Mrs. Penryn Stanlaws, Florence Turner, Mr. and Mrs. Walter Russell, James L. Breese, Mr. and Mrs. Howard Bridge, Mme. Nazimova, Mr. and Mrs. Charles Richman, Antonio Moreno, Admiral Charles Sigsbee, Mr. and Mrs. Oliver Harriman, Hamlin Garland, Paul Doucet, David Bispham, Frank Daniels, Robert Edeson, Count Pompeo Parri, Emma Frohman, Rachel Crothers, Mr. and Mrs. Hudson Maxim, Mr. and Mrs. William C. Storey, Mr. and Mrs. Robert Adamson, Cleveland Moffett, Mrs. James Speyor, James K. Hackett, Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Drew, Frank De Mund, Pauline Frederick, Ellis Parker Butler, Mr. and Mrs. W. H. Barnard, Paul West, Mrs. L. B. Woodruf, Arthur Train.

Representatives of General Film Report Business Good

President T. A. Hubley and General Manager J. F. Clancey of the General Film Company, Limited, of Montreal, were New York visitors at the home office of General Film Company last week. They reported that the film business in Canada is in a very interesting condition. The O. Henry pictures, in particular, are said to be proving great favorites with exhibitors throughout Canada.

Cleveland Manager Cites Another Flaw in Tax

Joseph Grossman, manager of the Standard theatre, Cleveland, brought up an interesting point in regard to the war tax which the Government collects from the motion picture exhibitor on the first of each month. "My house is a 15-cent house," said Mr. Grossman, "consequently I have to charge 2 cents war tax on each ticket. However, the ruling says that the tax shall be 1 cent for children under twelve years of age. Now what is there to prevent a person going to the box-office and buying one adult admission and one child's admission? The girl in the cage can't inspect everyone who accompanies the person buying the tickets. Naturally in her accounts, she places the taxable admissions in the columns corresponding to the taxes she collected. The next day, say, a government inspector looks over the books, sees the number of children listed and says that he was on watch the preceding day and that he saw no children enter the theatre. What happens? I have to pay the difference. I can't see any way to correct the evil. Can anybody else suggest a remedy?"

Government Approves William Fox Feature with Bara

It was announced last week from the William Fox offices that the United States Government, through the Committee on Public Information, of which George Creel is chairman, has stamped its approval on "The Rose of Blood," the William Fox Standard Picture which depicts the efforts of revolutionists to overthrow the government of the Czar.

This approval has been given in the face of the statement of Major C. L. M. Funkhouser, Chicago film censor, that he had refused a permit for showing the production in Chicago because the Committee on Public Information, which exercises much the same sort of supervision over motion pictures that it does over newspapers, had requested such action.

As a matter of fact, according to Mr. Creel, Major Funkhouser was responsible for calling the attention of the Government to the film. He wired the Department of Justice requesting assistance in preventing the production from being shown, his telegram being referred to Mr. Creel, who turned it over to Director L. M. Rubel of the Division of Pictures.

Chicago Exhibitors Attend Washington Convention

Several prominent members of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of Chicago, hearkening to the call recently spread broadcast by Lee A. Ochs, left Sunday for Washington to attend the convention called to meet the war-tax crisis and consider remedial legislation. William Heaney, Joseph Hopp and Ludwig Schindler were appointed by the Chicago local of the league to represent them at the Washington meeting. In addition to this trio William Sweeney, national secretary of the league; Maurice Ruben of Joliet and Peter J. Schaefer of Jones, Linick and Schaefer were among the party.

What Kind of a Fellow Is—Powers?

Being a Glance at the Real Human Side of the Big Men of the Picture Game—Caught in Action!

By William A. Johnston

"GOOD morning, P. A."

"Good morning."

"Mr. Powers, you're a man of mystery and we don't want to pry; but what is your full name?"

Mr. Powers affected surprise.

"Patrick," said he.

"Ah, yes, but the second name."

"Well, it's Anthony," said Mr. Powers reluctantly. "And kindly put it down that way. Some funny fellow—like you, you know—printed it 'Aloysius.' What's the idea? Did he want to make me seem Irish?"

"Patrick Anthony Powers, then."

"That's the ticket."

"But you are Irish, Mr. Powers."

P. A. grinned the infectious grin that foes and friends know equally well; it's the same for all. "Say," said he, "you didn't have me down as one of the Bolsheviki, did you?"

"Well now, Mr. Powers, they say you have a keen sense of humor,—"

"What's that?" asked Mr. Powers, quickly.

"I don't know either; but anyway, people will expect a funny interview. Now, what can we talk about?"

"The film business," suggested Mr. Powers. "It's funny enough."

"It strikes you as funny?"

"If it didn't," said Mr. Powers, "I'd go crazy."

"Well then, the film business."

"The film business," said Mr. Powers, seriously, "reminds me of Russia."

"Of Russia? Why not of Ireland?"

"Because Ireland's a peaceful country — comparatively. They're friendly people. Sure, they crack a few heads now and then, but in a playful way. It's a merry pastime—at fairs and the like. That's why they wear plug hats. And it's only personal, understand me?"

"Whereas in the film business—"

"In the film business," continued Mr. Powers, "it's fundamental. They fight in groups and you wouldn't call it friendly. We have the Bolsheviki, and the Cossacks and the I. W. W. and the Finns and the Sinn Feiners and the Siberians and—"

"Will they ever get together?"

"Do the Russians get together? For a week maybe."

"Well, you see, Russia is a young democracy and we have a young industry—"

"It's old enough to know better."

"Perhaps we need a Czar."

"And what happened to the Czar?" asked Mr. Powers.

"Then the situation is hopeless?"

"I wouldn't say hopeless. You might call it somewhat brainless."

"Is the industry settling down, do you think?"

"Like a Seidlitz powder," said Mr. Powers.

"But that stops gassing after a while."

"That's what we ought to do—work without gassing."

"But, of course, you still believe in the future of the industry?"

"I've got to," said Mr. Powers. "And, frankly, I do. It will work out all right."

"Do you think we'll have a trust?"

"I'd rather have it C. O. D."

"Excuse me," said Mr. Powers, suddenly, "I've got to go to Washington. Is there anything more I can do for you?"

"No, thank you."

"You're welcome. Don't forget the middle name — it's Anthony."

OTHERS SAY:

"Everyone likes him, even his enemies."

"He goes like a flash, to the root of things."

"P. A. has the brightest mind in the industry."

"His wit is alway refreshingly sensible."

"He has dignity."

"He enjoys kidding. People who assume to, but don't know the film business as he does, prefer to pass him on the other side of the street."

"A magnetic personality."

"He never tells a story to illustrate a point. He gets enough apt fun out of the immediate situation."

Disabled Canadian Soldiers Appreciate Film

Joseph F. Lee Receives Letter of Thanks from Canadian Soldiers to Whom He Sent Pictures—Others Wanted

JOSEPH F. LEE is in receipt of a letter from Captain J. A. Couillard, M. O., in charge of Lake Edward Sanatorium, Lake Edward, P. Q., Canada, in which he thanks Mr. Lee for his contribution of film to be shown for the amusement of the disabled and crippled soldiers who are confined at this place. Captain Couillard's letter follows and explains how Mr. Lee's contribution was received and how much real benefit is derived by these disabled soldiers from the pictures:

"DEAR MR. LEE:

"I intended writing to you many weeks ago, in connection with your generous offer of films for our patients, and I was waiting merely until the trouble we are having with the free entry of these films be settled, to tell you how grateful we are.

"I am inclosing herewith a letter received some time ago from the Commissioner of Customs, Ottawa, in connection with the free entry of these films. I hope it will help matters along.

"All the boys and staff have been looking forward to the coming of those New York films, as the first shipment was the best we had seen. I regret that these films only reached you last week. I do not know how to account for this delay, because they left here a long time ago.

"I can assure you, Mr. Lee, that no offering would be more heartily appreciated by every one here than those films. The boys under treatment here are all returned men who suffer from lung trouble. It is always difficult to find any entertainment for these boys, as it would be harmful to engage in any kinds of games. We were presented with a moving picture machine and it sure was a 'God-send.' The few shows we had proved a success, and I am looking forward to the day that I will be able to have an evening of moving pictures, at least once a week.

"If you can possibly arrange to send us films from time to time, I assure you we would be very grateful, and you will contribute materially in helping these poor returned soldiers to while away the time in a most pleasant and entertaining way.

"I beg to remain,

"Yours most gratefully,

"J. A. COUILLARD, Capt.,

"M. O. i/c Troops Lake Edward Sanatorium, Lake Edward, P. Q., Canada."

Mr. Lee states that anyone desiring to send prints for this cause can do so, through David A. Harvey, 1426 Broadway, or through Mr. Lee himself. Mr. Lee or Mr. Harvey will see that the film donated for this purpose reaches the soldiers. Mr. Lee's address is 729 Seventh avenue, New York, Room 705.

Frank Hall Discusses Conditions in Industry

President of United States Exhibitors Booking Corporation Says, Better Productions Are Needed—Special Feature Production of the Future

FRANK HALL, president of U. S. Exhibitors Booking Corporation has the following to say on the conditions in the independent field.

"With America engaged in the greatest undertaking of its history," declared Mr. Hall, "this is the time for all of us in the film industry to pull together for the general welfare of the trade. The calamity howler should be muffled. The moving picture business is not suffering any more from war conditions than other industries.

"Representatives of my company have made a careful survey of the domestic field and reports which have been submitted to me indicate that conditions are not nearly so distressing as some would lead us to believe. The main fault appears to be the lack of good productions, pictures upon which the exhibitor can depend for a reasonable profit.

"On all hands we hear reports that the nation has been so absorbed in the war since the soldiers of America entered the trenches in Northern France that interest in moving pictures is waning. Shortage of money also has been advanced as another reason for business depression.

"From what I have been able to learn, however, the mediocrity of photoplays has been more responsible than war conditions for the falling off of business.

"The remedy for such conditions as have impelled certain gentlemen to fear for the future of the industry is mainly in better pictures.

"The 'special feature' is the production of the future. The sooner the manufacturers cease grinding out their grist of mediocre features the sooner the tide of business will swing in their favor.

"The U. S. Exhibitors Booking Corporation was organized for the express purpose of distributing special productions. We have found a tremendous demand among exhibitors the country over for the special production based upon a successful play or popular book, or possessing exceptional advertising qualities.

"We selected 'The Zeppelin's Last Raid' and 'Those Who Pay,' both Ince specials, and 'The Belgian,' the Sidney Olcott subjects because they conformed with our ideas of what a 'special' production should be. Each of the foregoing pictures possesses exploitation qualities far above the average. Given such productions at a fair rental cost, the exhibitor is reasonably certain to derive a profit."

Lesser Returns to Coast After Stay in New York

Sol Lesser, of San Francisco, left New York last week for the Coast. Mr. Lesser stopped off in Cleveland for a few hours, to confer with Leon Netter, with whom he is associated in the Masterpiece Film Attractions, of Cleveland. Mr. Lesser was in New York attending a meeting of the State Rights Distributors' Association.

Pyramid Gives Trade Showing of New Comedies

A special trade showing of the four completed Pyramid comedies will be given this week by the Pyramid Company, according to announcement.

Palmer, Werner and Abrams, controlling factors in the new comedy company, in order to gauge the possibilities of their completed products, last week gave a private performance of four pictures to a number of exhibitors controlling fifty-seven theatres. The consensus of opinion was that the pictures came at a particularly happy moment. A well-known Brooklyn exhibitor, who stated that there was a dearth of consistently good comedies on the market, said that his clientele is constantly demanding a lighter program, and because of the depressed state of mind of the people the market was in a particularly susceptible mood to absorb new and good comedies.

The four completed comedies of the Pyramid concern were directed by William A. Seider, with Ray Hughes featured in all of them. The four productions are said to be novel in point of construction and are to be known under the titles of "In and Out," "Love and Lunch," "Beach Birds," "Beauties and Bombs," and will be released semi-monthly in the above order. The concern will produce twenty-four comedies a year, releasing twice a month.

Clune and Shallenberger Combine to Sell Features

W. E. Shallenberger, president of the Arrow Film Corporation, has completed a deal with W. H. Clune of the Clunne Productions, Los Angeles, for the marketing of "The Eyes of the World" and "Ramona" for all unsold territory.

Robert W. Priest, who is associated with Mr. Shallenberger in the state rights business, is laying out the sales and advertising campaign.

Mr. Shallenberger is said to be pleased on account of his success in securing these two features, and has announced that already he has received bids for territorial rights that bespeak great interest among buyers. It seems that the history made by J. L. Adams in exploiting "The Eyes of the World" in the Western States has spread throughout the industry and wherever pictures for the state rights market are discussed some one mentions the fact that Mr. Adams took $131,000 with "The Eyes of the World" as a road show out of the Western States and that he is even now reaping a harvest with it in the picture theatres.

Baltimore Exhibitors Give Show for the Soldiers

A big benefit for the boys of the machine gun company attached to the Three Hundred and Thirteenth Infantry at Camp Meade was held at the New theatre in Baltimore recently.

Louis A. DeHoff and Frank Hornig, both well known motion picture men of Baltimore, had charge of the affair. There was a very attractive motion picture program together with several additional features.

Greene Asserts Critical Public Comes with War

"The conditions now existing in the motion picture business, on account of war, will eventually result in the betterment of the entire industry," said Walter E. Greene, president of Artcraft, last week.

"We have been a profligate nation, and much of the nation's wealth has gone to waste in the past. The big publicity propaganda launched by the Government to conserve the nation's resources has shed considerable light on loopholes of extravagance, which are being closed up.

"In war times, more than any other time, the public must have the relaxation of amusement to lighten the tensity of the great conflict in which our own troops are now taking part. The public has become discriminating, and following the resolutions they have adopted they are demanding their money's worth in amusements as well as in commodities and food. The exhibitor who in the past has been able to operate successfully with inferior pictures is now face to face with a serious problem.

Jewel Coaxes World to Smile and Win the War

Jewel Productions, Inc., is stamping all its printed matter with the motto, "Smiles Help Win the War."

It is apparently a good one to follow. There is enough suffering around us without "funeral faces," according to Jewel.

Exhibitors of British Columbia Strike at Tax

The chief reason the Moving Picture Exhibitors' Association of British Columbia is opposing the amusement tax in that province, according to reports from Vancouver, is that the tax is proving to be confiscatory as it works at present. When the subject of taxing the theatres was brought up by the Government, the exhibitors to a man volunteered their support and co-operation. They thought of course, that the amount of the tax would be the same as applied in the other Provinces of Canada but were astounded when the Government proposed a bill which called for an impossible amount which was finally modified to the present act which calls for two cents on fifteen-cent admission and three cents on twenty-five-cent admission. The act also says that in order to purchase a tax ticket you must at the same time buy an admission ticket. This makes the matter of giving the change in cents compulsory whereas in the other provinces where the tax amounts to one cent per admission ticket the tax tickets are sold in rolls of five and ten and change is given in tickets instead of cents. The patron by buying five cents' worth of tax tickets can use them in any theatre for purposes of paying the tax. In short they are as convenient as street car tickets or postage stamps. Copper cents are not used extensively in this province and the supply is limited. One theatre which tried making change when the tax started could not get enough cents from the banks and had to use postage stamps to make change with.

Kansas Town Kicks Up Row Over Sunday Shows

Army Official at Camp Funston Asked Theatres of Manhattan to Give Soldiers Entertainment, But Blue Laws Spoil the Plan

THE little town of Manhattan, Kas., near which is located Camp Funston, was last week in the midst of a heated battle concerning Sunday shows, and at latest reports the bombardment was going on with unabated fierceness, with honors about evenly divided.

The Sunday-show squabble, which has been the first Manhattan ever went through, centers about the request of army officials for Sunday shows to which the soldiers in camp could go, as there was no other form of entertainment and recreation available. J. J. Marshall, proprietor of the Marshall theatre, a combination motion picture and vaudeville house, being patriotic and anxious to do his little bit in any way possible, opened his theatre on the Sabbath, following which he was reminded that Manhattan has always been a closed town on Sundays and that the Blue Laws which have been reposing peacefully in the pigeonhole for all these years, with the cobwebs becoming ever thicker and the dust dustier, forbid anything in Manhattan that resembles "open" or any of its various meanings. As a result, it is said Exhibitor Marshall was told by the judge to contribute $15 to the city, the cash deposit being in the nature of a fine for opening his show on Sunday. In retaliation Mr. Marshall secured warrants for the proprietors of every kind of business operating on Sunday in Manhattan, and it looks as though the Kansas town is in for a winter siege, unless an armistice is arranged.

Following receipt of the army official's letter, asking for Sunday shows, it appears that a meeting was held by the business men of both Manhattan and Junction City, another town near Camp Funston. The Manhattan theatres agreed to keep open, but the sentiment in Junction City was too strong for the theatre men there. So the following Sunday both Manhattan theatres remained open, charged no admission, but passed the hat for a free-will offering. The city commissioners immediately got busy and enacted the old Kansas State "Blue Laws," passed about 1868, into a city ordinance, forbidding any and all kinds of work Sunday. The following day, Sunday, Marshall kept his theatre open and his arrest resulted. Marshall was open again Sunday and probably will be arrested again, it is said.

Backer, Impelling Force Behind Hoffman, Inc.

George Backer, President of M. H. Hoffman, Inc., Prominent in Commercial Life—Responsible in Large Measure for Rapid Growth of Company

GEORGE BACKER, president of M. H. Hoffman, Inc., in the short time in which he has been active in the motion picture industry has accomplished noteworthy work in the upbuilding of this institution. Mr. Backer is a prominent figure in the commercial life of New York city. He is prominently identified with the building and construction business and is recognized as a man of keen business faculty.

M. H. Hoffman, general manager of M. H. Hoffman, Inc., has the following to say on the rapid progress made by this organization and the part that Mr. Backer has played in this work:

"Not quite six months old, M. H. Hoffman, Inc., occupies a position among distributing organizations which could scarcely have been gained without wisest planning and administration. Its pre-eminent place among independent concerns reflects the application of business procedure as yet too little practiced in the motion picture field.

"From the beginning, this young concern has proceeded to get only the best pictures, to distribute them at the lowest prices consistent and to co-operate with the exhibitor, after each picture was booked, in securing the greatest number of patrons possible to see them. Throughout, M. H. Hoffman, Inc., has done business on big business lines, and all along its traveled course it has left nothing save what was constructive and based upon fair dealing.

"George Backer, our president, acquired his fortune through his own unaided efforts. His holdings are perhaps the best tribute to his industry, his capacity, his integrity. When I decided to engage in the marketing of pictures, which I did because I foresaw possibilities through a rightly administered organization, my first step was to invite as his chief associate and executive officer a man who had the confidence of the industry.

"This man recognized in Mr. Backer, the one capable of accomplishing those things awaiting the attention of an exceptional individual.

"What George Backer has done in the building industry it is more than likely he will do in motion pictures.

"The George Backer studio, now nearing completion in West Thirty-eighth street, near Broadway, is an example of the Backer foresight for what is needed; the last word in motion picture studios and in which will be made the few big features which the George Backer Film Corporation (of which Mr. Backer is head) is to produce each year."

Mary Pickford Starts American Red Cross Fund

In addition to her many war duties, Mary Pickford has started a unique fund for the benefit of the American Red Cross, it was announced last week.

The Artcraft star received a letter from Harry Green, Pasadena, inclosing four dollars, which he wished to donate to the Red Cross through Miss Pickford, as he desired a receipt signed personally by her. She realized the value of the idea and deposited the money in the Hollywood bank, as the nucleus of a new fund. More contributions have begun to arrive and Miss Pickford is devoting a part of each day to answering the communications from contributors.

Paramount Presents New Series With Chapin

Includes Ten Two-Reel Features Under General Title of "The Son of Democracy"—Pictures Five Years in the Making

PARAMOUNT PICTURES CORPORATION announced last week that it has completed preliminary plans for releasing, at a date yet to be selected, a series of ten two-reel features with Benjamin Chapin in the chief roles, under the general title of "The Son of Democracy." Each episode is said to be complete in itself, each telling a chapter in the life of Abraham Lincoln.

Benjamin Chapin, as is generally known, has given much of his time to the portrayal of Lincoln on the lecture platform, stage and screen, the most recent of his efforts in the latter field being "The Lincoln Cycle." It is said by Paramount that five years were required in making "The Son of Democracy," which is now to be available to exhibitors for the first time.

In the new features Mr. Chapin, it is said, portrays the martyred President, his father and the first Abraham Lincoln, grandfather of the President, to perfection.

Mr. Chapin's talent in directing children is said to be shown in charming stories of the boy Lincoln and his playmates. They were real boys and girls, Mr. Chapin shows. Throughout, he establishes the fact that Abraham Lincoln was, above all, a human being.

A part of Mr. Chapin's Lincoln pictures was shown at the Strand theatre in New York and later at the Globe. Hundreds of discerning men and women saw these pictures and wrote Mr. Chapin, congratulating him, it is said.

Back of "The Son of Democracy," a Paramount Pictures Corporation will place a huge advertising campaign, supplemented by circularization and special campaigns that should create a demand for this series. Details of this campaign and the release date are expected to be announced later.

A. Jules Benedic Goes with General Film in Texas

A change of companies and territory was announced this week for A. Jules Benedic, who last week left Pathe in the New Orleans territory to go with the General Film Company in Texas, under Frank E. Garner, Dallas manager.

Mr. Benedic is widely known in the New Orleans territory, which he traveled successively as salesman for Consolidated Film, later as manager of the New Orleans Bluebird office, and recently as feature representative for Pathe in Louisiana, Mississippi and Alabama.

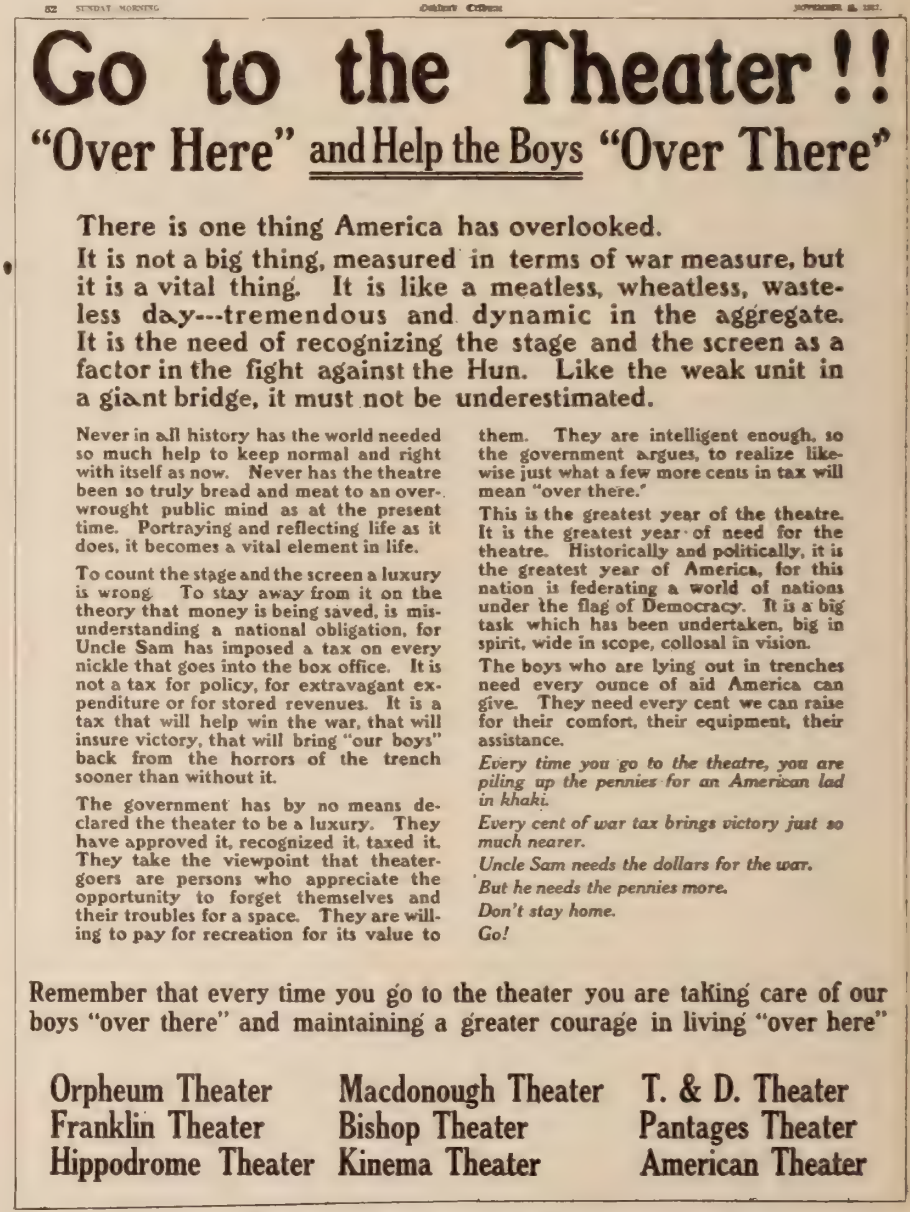
Mr. Benedic's new position comes in line with General's recent purchase of new features, including that of "Seven Deadly Sins" from Triangle and the new Bernarr Macfadden "Physical Culture Films," and shortly he will visit exhibitors throughout all of Texas—south, east and west of Dallas—with this line-up.

Specialty Film in Vancouver Fetes Ruth Roland

During her engagement at Pantages theatre, Vancouver, B. C., Ruth Roland was tendered a banquet by the members of the Specialty Film Import, Limited, at which thirty-five of their members were present. The men attended the theatre in a body, occupying the boxes, and presented Miss Roland with an enormous bouquet. After the performance, they escorted the young star to the banquet room where a sumptuous repast had been prepared. The affair was planned as a surprise to Miss Roland and was carried out without a flaw.

Jacobs Acquires an Interest in Keystone Press

Arthur D. Jacobs, formerly president and general manager of the Exhibitors' Advertising and Specialty Company, has acquired a half interest in the Keystone Press, Inc., motion picture printers, 727 Seventh avenue, it was announced this week. He is now vice-president and treasurer of the latter company.



Fairbanks Organization Holds Executive Meeting

Douglas Fairbanks celebrated the opening of his new bungalow dressing-room on the West Coast with an executive meeting, at which time Directors Allan Dwan and John Emerson discussed the types of scenarios they thought would be advisable to purchase for production during the next year.

Scenario Editor Ruth Allen brought to the attention of those present the names of young writers who were starting to show great promise.

Letters were read from exhibitors commenting on the various recent Fairbanks' releases, in addition to a telegram from S. L. Rothapfel to the effect that "Reaching for the Moon" played to $21,000 during its run of one week at the New York Rialto.

In addition to those already mentioned, the executive meeting was attended by Anita Loos, Keene Thompson, John Fairbanks, Hugh McClung, Harry Thorpe, Art Rosson, Joseph Henaberry, James Hogan and Bennie Zeidman.

Go to the Theater!!

"Over Here" and Help the Boys "Over There"

There is one thing America has overlooked. It is not a big thing, measured in terms of war measure, but it is a vital thing. It is like a meatless, wheatless, wasteless day---tremendous and dynamic in the aggregate. It is the need of recognizing the stage and the screen as a factor in the fight against the Hun. Like the weak unit in a giant bridge, it must not be underestimated.

Never in all history has the world needed so much help to keep normal and right with itself as now. Never has the theatre been so truly bread and meat to an overwrought public mind as at the present time. Portraying and reflecting life as it does, it becomes a vital element in life.

To count the stage and the screen a luxury is wrong. To stay away from it on the theory that money is being saved, is misunderstanding a national obligation, for Uncle Sam has imposed a tax on every nickle that goes into the box office. It is not a tax for policy, for extravagant expenditure or for stored revenues. It is a tax that will help win the war, that will insure victory, that will bring "our boys" back from the horrors of the trench sooner than without it.

The government has by no means declared the theater to be a luxury. They have approved it, recognized it, taxed it. They take the viewpoint that theatergoers are persons who appreciate the opportunity to forget themselves and their troubles for a space. They are willing to pay for recreation for its value to them. They are intelligent enough, so the government argues, to realize likewise just what a few more cents in tax will mean "over there."

This is the greatest year of the theatre. It is the greatest year of need for the theatre. Historically and politically, it is the greatest year of America, for this nation is federating a world of nations under the flag of Democracy. It is a big task which has been undertaken, big in spirit, wide in scope, collosal in vision.

The boys who are lying out in trenches need every ounce of aid America can give. They need every cent we can raise for their comfort, their equipment, their assistance.

Every time you go to the theatre, you are piling up the pennies for an American lad in khaki.

Every cent of war tax brings victory just so much nearer.

Uncle Sam needs the dollars for the war.

But he needs the pennies more.

Don't stay home.

Go!

Remember that every time you go to the theater you are taking care of our boys "over there" and maintaining a greater courage in living "over here"

Long Arm of Mars Sweeps All Branches of the Industry

No Corporation Nor Organization Has Been Overlooked by Call to Arms, and Service Flags Add Star After Star—Universal, Fox and Metro Ranks Among the Latest to Contribute Men

THE mailed fist of Mars is beginning to make itself felt in the motion picture industry more than was ever imagined when the United States first declared a stand beside democracy and freedom.

Already the pages of MOTION PICTURE NEWS have bulged with the names of patriots from the industry who have joined the colors in one branch or another of the service. No phase of the motion picture business has been overlooked by the call to arms, and the ranks of Uncle Sam are still being swelled with additional recruits from the picture field. These embryo soldiers, as yet unaccustomed to army routine, are, in the majority, showing a decided eagerness to join their brothers of the industry who have preceded them across the seas, and when the cause of victory is summed up there is little doubt the motion picture industry can point to its men with pride as having been a deciding factor.

Gettinger Gets In

Some of the farewell receptions given motion picture men when they start on the first leg of the journey to Berlin will no doubt accompany them to the very gates of the German capital and beyond. Among the most recent of these memorable leave-takings was the one given in honor of "Big" Bill Gettinger, one of the most popular among the aggregation of cowboy players at Universal City, when he left Los Angeles to do his bit under the Stars and Stripes. Gettinger departed from the California city with other drafted men for Camp Lewis at American Lake, Wash.

For the past four years Gettinger has been employed at Universal City and he has appeared in numerous plays of the West and in many jungle and railroad pictures. When he received his orders to report for service he obtained permission to visit his mother in San Antonio and made a flying trip to the Texas city to bid her goodbye. More than half a hundred of Universal City's cowboys, with whom he has been associated for the past few years, were present at the railroad station when the train pulled out for the north and gave Gettinger a sendoff he will remember for the rest of his life.

Joseph Waddell, for several years cameraman at Universal City, is already with the Allies' aviation corps in Italy. Fred LeRoy Granville, of the Universal camera force has received a letter from Waddell, informing him that he is at Foggie, at the Venice front. Waddell was one of a dozen Pacific Coast men who were sent to Italy for war training under the Italian aviators.

The former cameraman writes that the fighting air men of Italy are masters of the aviation game and that he and the other Americans who now are at the front have been learning quickly under their expert instructions.

Publicity Men Called

Five members of the general publicity bureau of the Fox Film Corporation now are serving the United States Government, either in the army or the navy.

Arthur B. McGinley, formerly editor of the Exhibitors' Bulletin, one of William Fox's publications, is a private in a machine gun battery, being stationed at Camp Devens, Ayer, Mass.

Jay Vóorhies, who until his enlistment covered the Fox Eastern Studios for the publicity department, is a chief yeoman in the navy, at present being attached to the cable censor's office in New York City.

Robert Houghton, who was connected with the publicity bureau's photographic division, is now at Camp Upton, Yaphank, N. Y., as a private in the heavy artillery.

Two other members of the publicity staff have departed within the last week. A. B. Bernd, engaged in special work, and Gerald B. Spiero, who prepared the mimeograph and clipping sheet service, have enlisted in the Quartermaster's Corps of the army and will be stationed within a short time at Jacksonville, Fla.

Dwight Begeman, cameraman, is the latest Metro employee to enter the service. He has left for his home in St. Louis, to enlist in the navy, and he hopes to be assigned to the work of taking motion pictures for the Government. Jack Lamond, another of Metro's photographic force, is already engaged in taking pictures of naval manoeuvres. Mr. Begeman has been attached to the force of most of the Metro stars, among them Mme. Nazimova, Francis X. Bushman and Beverly Bayne, Emmy Wehlen and Ethel Barrymore.

Irving Flisser, formerly a member of Metro's electrical force, under the supervision of Frank Detering, is in the navy. Metro's men continue to answer the call to the colors, without waiting for the operation of the selective draft.

Smith Gets Letter from Front

Albert E. Smith, president of Greater Vitagraph, received a letter last week from his nephew, Vincent Smith, stating that he is now in a hospital in France recovering from wounds received during recent fighting on the Somme and also carrying the information that he has just been promoted to a full-fledged corporal. "Just to celebrate the occasion," the young man wrote, "I received a 'packet,' but my wounds are not of a very serious nature and I expect soon to be back at the Huns."

Corporal Smith, a son of George Smith, European manager for Greater Vitagraph, is only one of six blood relatives of the Vitagraph chief now fighting the Germans or training for the work of doing so.

Lieutenant A. V. (Victor) Smith, formerly studio manager in Brooklyn, a brother of Albert E. Smith, received a commission at Plattsburg in the first class of officers to take the training course, and now is an instructor at one of the National Army camps.

Sergeant G. H. Smith, another nephew who has just returned to London after a long period of service on the Ypres front, has been selected on the field for promotion to a second lieutenancy in the British army and soon will go into training for his commission. He was chosen for his valorous work during the late fighting at Ypres.

Jack Smith, a private in the British army, also a nephew of Mr. Smith, is on service at Salonica, and Corporal J. Smith, another nephew, is "somewhere in France."

Frank L. Smith, nephew, is a member of Battery A, California Field Artillery, and, so far as his uncle knows, may even now be in France.

In addition to the actual representation of his family in the armies of the United States and Britain, Mr. Smith and his brothers in the Vitagraph organization have shown their loyalty by liberal subscriptions to the war loans here and abroad, and also have lent substantial aid to the Red Cross and other charities.

Travers on His Way

No longer will "Dashing Dick" Travers cause thousands of feminine hearts to flutter as he romances across the screen in Essanay dramas. Instead Captain R. C. Travers soon will be "over the top" at the head of a band of square jawed American fighting men. Captain Dick was awarded a commission recently at the conclusion of the second officers' camp at Fort Sheridan, Chicago.

Another Essanay man awarded a commission at the Fort Sheridan camp is L. J. Scott. He has been made a first lieutenant of artillery and already is on his way to France where he will receive further instructions in field artillery work.

Essanay's contribution to the Illinois Home Guard, a complete company of men employed at the studios, recently was completely equipped with uniforms and expects to be sworn into the state service before the first of the year. The company drills each week in one of the Essanay Studios and has reached a high point of efficiency.

"Struggle Everlasting" Is Shown to Trade

Harry Rapf's latest production, "The Struggle Everlasting," a morality picture based on Edwin Milton Royle's play, was shown privately to members of the film and theatrical world, the press, city officials and heads of social organizations, last Sunday evening at the 44th Street theatre, New York.

Florence Reed stars in this picture, which Mr. Rapf considers the most pretentious of his efforts, and supporting her appear Milton Sills, Irving Cummings, Wellington Playter and others. James Kirkwood handled the production details. A review of "The Struggle Everlasting" will be found in next week's issue of MOTION PICTURE NEWS.

Where "Economy" is Waste

Bad Advertising Doesn't Pay—Its Just as Easy to Have the Good

THIS article closes, for the present, so far as the larger cities are concerned, the talks on advertising. Requests come from all sections of the country for discussion of displays in the smaller dailies and in the weeklies, for hints on how to get the best results where opportunities are limited. Discussion of these problems will be started next week.

But from all of these discussions the small theatre can get many excellent suggestions, which can be followed even if on a smaller scale. So let us sum up the conclusions that we have reached from the study of specimens of advertising in cities in which the theatres have full facilities and where they have the means to carry out proper exploitation.

And to illustrate this, we are showing you today the best and the worst in motion picture displays. On the opposite page there are reproduced from the Seattle (Wash.) Times three photoplay pages. They represent the best. The other page is taken from the Cincinnati Enquirer, and although it represents the exploitation of theatres in a city almost twice the size of Portland it represents the worst aggregate display with which we are familiar.

Before you read further, give one glance to the page. You will readily grasp the rights and wrongs of the advertising at a glance, even though you may not be an advertising expert. And remember that advertising is not written to appeal to experts. It is prepared to appeal to the greatest number of the readers of the newspaper. The advertisement that attracts the attention of every reader is the hundred per cent achievement. In one case the display has a punch; in the other, it is a mere mass of type.

It has remained for the west to establish the best in motion picture advertising. What is true of Portland is also true of the Portland, Ore., theatres, the American theatre, Butte, Mont., and a number of other theatres far from New York—and its supposedly influences. Cleveland, O., is another city that stands out for the work of all of its theatres and there are many other individual instances that will be cited from time to time. A study of good advertising is well worth while, especially the study of advertising that is so obviously good and the reasons for which are so obvious.

There is no excuse for bad advertising where the facilities are at hand. The greatest cause of it is that the theatre manager buys a certain amount of space in a newspaper and then seeks to put into that space as much as possible. He can see no reason why he should even double the space and put in less reading matter—the smallest possible amount. And yet that same manager, when it comes to the selection of his paper would probably use a twenty-four sheet every time in place of a one sheet, because he knows the larger would attract the attention.

Now, let us take the material which the ordinary exhibitor should have at his command for his advertising:

First, he should be well grounded in the character of his production from careful reading of the MOTION PICTURE NEWS. That is really a big asset, a necessary thing before he turns to the use of any material.

Second, he has the cuts of the players furnished by nearly all of the exchanges and in many cases cuts or mats of suggested displays supplied by the producers. Some of these are good; many of them very bad.

Third, he has the photograph of the stars themselves. At least, the exhibitor should keep for himself, in his file photographs of all the stars who regularly appear at his theatre, and the wise manager will constantly add to this collection and restore the ones that he destroys in the preparation of his advertisement.

Fourth, he has the "stills" which he can get with each production. These are extremely valuable for "cut outs" for use in the advertising, and striking effects can be secured with their use. Pictures with few figures and large ones, pictures where the players are easily recognized and the meaning of the action simple should always be used.

Fifth, as we advised in an article some weeks ago, he should have a distinctive "name plate" or design for his theatre, in different sizes, according to the display that he uses. There is nothing that attracts such immediate attention to the advertising. The reader does not have to hunt to find which is your theatre. He recognizes it almost unconsciously. If, in addition, he can have distinctive borders which are not used by other theatres or other advertisers, so much the better. We have already told you how to get these.

Sixth, the advertiser should confine himself to a few kinds of type. All of the larger newspapers issue "type books" which show the various faces that are in that newspaper office. Unless you are an expert, beware of trying to use a number of different sorts of types in your display. One has to be a real artist to do this and achieve a decent effect. If your paper does not issue a type book, pick out the sort of face that you want from some other advertisement, consult with your foreman and learn its name and its "count" to the column. (We are going to take up under the head of small town advertising some discussion of type faces with illustrated specimens and explain to you sizes, points, etc.)

Now you have all the material you need. You simply have to add to this good, common sense.

Let us take up the case of the Cincinnati and the Seattle showmen whose advertisements are illustrated on the opposite page. Certainly, they should have had equal material at hand. If anything, the Cincinnati men should have had superior facilities because they are closer to the source of supply and get material from the New York and Chicago headquarters earlier.

These three pages in the Seattle paper represent the display that the motion picture houses get in that paper. In this case the section is four pages, but it often runs six and sometimes eight pages. The last page in the section is given over to legitimate attractions and vaudeville. One will see at once the impression that is made on the public—that motion pictures are the overwhelmingly appealing thing. We have referred to the psychology of advertising before. Here it is well illustrated. The theatres of Seattle, by common consent have realized that they should use big space to attract attention and they have "gone to it."

Now there is a big mechanical result from using large space. It is apparent that you cannot jam two four column advertisements into a seven column paper. One result is more space and better position for all of the advertising. Another result is that there is more space devoted to reading matter about motion pictures. Every newspaper has rules of proportion of reading matter to the advertising on the page, though these vary.

Now turn to the Cincinnati page and see the difference. The theatres use very small space and the result is that the newspaper has jammed them together and no one gets any display that is distinctive or attracts attention. It is, as we have said, merely a confusing mass. Some one has come to the conclusion that the narrow strip across the page is an excellent advertisement. We cannot imagine anything very much worse except for the fellow who gets the top position. In the first place, there are few newspapers in the country who would grant such a position, because it sacrifices the whole page to advertising instead of giving it a clean, reading matter make-up. We can imagine everyone who is not absolutely hunting for the attractions at a particular picture theatre hastily turning over this page as unworthy of attention.

What is bad about each one of these individual advertisements?

Here is the excellent manner in which the Columbia theatre, Phoenix, Ariz., was able to get a "double truck," of two page advertisements, in the Arizona Gazette at the time of the showing of "Pants," an Essanay feature. By securing the co-operation of the newspaper over half of the space was sold to local merchants and in reality the theatre got value from the full space.

Theatres of Two Cities Show Best and Worst In Newspaper Advertising

You know for yourself that the eye does not read across the full page, when it is small type and a lot of matter. One gets the big streamer line on the front pages or the more sensational pages because big type and few words are used. And they are used for the purpose of making a person buy the paper to see what it is all about. But the motion picture display is meant to appeal to the person who has already bought the paper.

If the same space that is used in these "strips" has been employed in space two columns wide the exhibitors would have had some chance to use cuts, distinctive borders and plain type or designs and would have gotten some real effect. But every man who had advertised here leaves the impression that he felt that he had to advertise—not with any particular purpose, but just because it was the fashion —and he proceeded to do it by taking a small space and then filling up said space with type—regardless.

Here is to large extent waste advertising. If the theatres can afford to spend the amount that they are spending on this sort of advertising they can afford to spend three times as much on real advertising that will pull business.

Of course, you know that advertising rates are based on the circulation of the newspaper. Your advertising appropriation should be based on the number of people that you can reach with your advertising AND the number of people that you will reach. In the case of Cincinnati, or any other city, there are a certain number of readers of the newspaper. It is your possible field. But you in your turn have to design the advertising that will make them read it. According to the theory that these theatres evidently follow, a half inch of display, if it got as much free reading space, would be worth as much as a page. And we would hate to see the amount of type that one of these theatres, if it followed the same policy as in these specimens, would undertake to put into a page of space.

In reply to these criticisms we are told that Cincinnati is not as good a motion picture city as Portland. We believe that, if we are to judge by the advertising. Take any city where the greater portion of the theatres advertise intelligently and get newspaper co-operation and you will find good patronage. It's mighty seldom that you find this where they are poor advertisers. Certainly they are not getting maximum results. If they are doing well in restricted use of newspaper space they could do probably twice as well with increased, progressive, intelligent display.

Now let's glance for a moment at the Seattle pages, and bear in mind that there are three of these pages BECAUSE the advertising justifies the granting of this space—gives motion pictures a section of their own—makes them DOMINATE the city's amusements.

The two largest advertisements are those of the Coliseum and the Liberty. Both of these have "name plates" and both of them play these strong, generally at the top of the display. Both use cuts and in case of this issue both have used big heads of the stars and a scene from the production. Coliseum has used the very minimum in reading matter. It was not necessary, for the public is familiar with Fairbanks and the Fairbanks type of picture. The Liberty has used more reading matter and it has done a daring thing by not mentioning the name of the star, although it does use the picture effect. Elaine Hammerstein is not so well known in Seattle as Fairbanks. But the smash is put on the picture itself and the character of the production is recalled to the patrons by the references to "On Trial" and "Hell Morgan's Girl."

Both of these are hundred per cent displays.

This same spirit has spread to the Mission, the Strand, and in fact to all of the other theatres. These announcements are a splendid example of what can be done when the exhibitors of a city, as a whole, wake up to the value of newspaper advertising and learn the proper sort of advertising to do.

And there is not a single avertisement of the three Seattle pages that was expensive to produce. The cuts were all made from photographs of the stars and scenes from the pictures.

Note the splendid cut work, and then look at the Cincinnati page again. The Walnut Theatre, which is the only one of the Cincinnati theatres that has prepared a really good display, is also the only one that has used a cut. And it was playing the same picture that was advertised by the Coliseum.

We have taken these contrasting pages with a purpose. We know that it would be folly to expect every theatre in the country, or even every big city theatre, to advertise to the extent of the Coliseum or the Liberty, but you can gather here the good and bad things in advertising.

But you can cut the waste out of your displays, no matter where you are. And, as we said just a moment ago, if you can afford to spend the amount that the Cincinnati theatres are spending in BAD advertising, you can easily afford to spend three times as much for GOOD advertising of the Seattle sort, and have a considerable amount more in your pocket as net profit at the end of the week.

Don't waste your money. Spend it for a purpose, and then it will work for you.

BEGINNING with the next issue the MOTION PICTURE NEWS will be able to accord you a service such as you have never dreamed of before—answers to your own questions on exhibiting problems by admittedly the great leader in motion picture presentation, Samuel L. Rothapfel, of the Rialto and Rivoli.

There are two conditions to this service. All questions must come through the NEWS and none must refer to the merits of pictures or film services. The questions will go to Mr. Rothapfel, his answers will be dictated and they will appear in these columns each week.

Watch for them, read them and then present any problem that you have had in exhibiting pictures, and you will have the aid of the greatest consulting expert in the industry.

Knitting Ushers at Liberty Theatre, Portland, Ore.

"Knitting Ushers" Prove Real Novelty; Another One of the Myrick Ideas

KNITTING ushers is the latest timely publicity stunt of E. J. Myrick, manager of the Liberty theatre, Portland, Ore., the largest photo playhouse in that far Western state.

E. J. Myrick, Manager Liberty Theatre, Portland, Ore.

Myrick surprised his patrons a week or two ago by ushering them into the Liberty via Colonial costumed maids deftly plying knitting needles. The innovation made a decided hit with the theatregoers, while the activity of the girl ushers—fifteen of them—means more mufflers, wristlets, sweaters and sox for the boys "over there."

The latest Myrick novelty was preceded by a course of knitting instruction for his ushers. Then he placed the brunettes, blonds and auburn-tressed lassies in the hands of an expert costumer and the result is a squad of lovely Dresden dolls, with cretonne knitting bags and flashing needles.

Cretonne and satin are mingled in brilliant and effective color combinations in these fetching costumes. The smartest of basque and nifty cretonne bustle effects are distinctive features. White organdy fichus soften the neck line, while quaint poke bonnets round the face. Black pumps with huge gilt buckles and white stockings give the final touches to the costumes. And then there are those fascinating cretonne knitting bags that are the envy of the army of Portland femininity "doing their bit," and their name is legion, for at every function and in every vehicle they may be seen.

Myrick is the man who introduced the afternoon tea as a feature of motion picture exhibition in the United States, startled Portlanders with his seasonal style shows with living models, introduced special usher costuming in keeping with photoplays, unusual lobby displays, and more recently Sunday organ recitals at the Liberty.

Exhibitor Lowers Price When Feature Is Below Standard

HERE is one manager who believes in playing fair with the public and who is making a hit doing so. He is Harry Newman, manager of the Victoria theatre, Ossining, N. Y. The policy of the theatre has been a 10-cent admission, but some of the larger features proved more expensive, and in order to get these Mr. Newman determined to have one 15-cent night each week, on Wednesdays.

His patrons were perfectly satisfied, because they realized that the Victoria was striving to give its patrons the best. But at the same time the manager determined that the productions should hold up to the high standard. One of them, in his opinion, failed to do so, and—well, let a statement that he placed in the newspapers tell the story:

"Playing fair is the only honest way—don't you think so?—the respect of our mental development demands that we get the best when raising our admission—our prices have always been based on our cost of film, which on these special feature days are from 100 per cent. to 200 per cent. more than on other days, but this does not always exactly fit the situation was proved last night, but we fulfilled a promise—that of keeping faith with our patrons—for after viewing the special attraction feature in the afternoon, we found the picture did not live up to all that was promised—we therefore discarded our 15-cent admission sign for the night and put the picture at the usual 10 cents admission price—however, the picture was very pleasing and well received by all who witnessed it and brought a round of applause. So we stand the freight—you can always depend on getting what you pay for at the Victoria."

Newspapers Co-operate with Ohio Theatre

Mutual Film Corporation points out the growing co-operation of newspapers with theatres, especially in small cities and cities the instance of the lifford theatre, Urbana, Ohio. Manager E. H. Hullinger had booked the Helen Holmes serial, "The Lost Express" and then went to the newspapers and laid out his advertising campaign. He told the newspaper managers frankly that the success of his advertising experiment depended on the co-operation that he secured, and he got it.

Mr. Hullinger took space in both of the local dailies. He began with small copy of the "teaser" type, as suggested in the Mutual plan book, and then broke out into big space a week before the showing of the first episode. At the same time he posted a number of twenty-four sheets on the first chapter. Both of the newspapers gave him more space than most feature pictures secured and the result was the theatre broke box office records. Mr. Hullinger is delighted with the result, and the newspapers pleased because they proved the value of advertising.

Your Idea—and Ours

IT requires real advertising ability to write into the spirit of a production, but this has been done by the Alhambra theatre, Indianapolis, in its announcement of Vivian Martin in "Molly Entangled." Using only a cut of the star and distinctive lettering, the theatre calls attention prominently to the main things to be featured and then the rest of the reading matter is devoted to telling something of the picture. We have warned repeatedly against trying to say too much in displays. The reason for this is that too many writers of advertisement seem to write merely to fill space. It is different when you really have something to say and know how to say it. Note that every expression is in keeping with the Irish character of the production and anyone who reads the advertisement will at once be convinced that this is a charming production.

Write into the spirit of your productions, but first you must know about them. You must know about the picture and feel the charm of it yourself before you can do this. The genuine strikes home, but the artificial in such attempts are always so apparent that the object is lost.

Have you put your theatre "OVER—THERE?"

THERE isn't the least doubt that window displays are mighty good things—if you can get them. But the trouble is that practically every press book that is sent out on a production, advises you to get window displays, and if these suggestions were followed in their entirety we doubt whether the merchants would ever have a chance to display their own wares—or rather the things that they wish to display. Once in a while where a store is selling the book you may be able to induce it to consent to the display and give your theatre some free advertising at the same time, but don't try to work this too often. Not only will the merchants turn you down, but even if he didn't, the effectiveness of the appeal would be lost.

Here is an excellent display accorded the Jewel production, "The Man Without a Country," by Donaldsons, one of the largest department stores in Minneapolis. Note the simplicity of the arrangement, with only a few copies of the book and some scenes from the production. This is the sort of a thing that is worth trying for.

It takes more than merely a good old name to get "over the top."

WEEK after week we have printed pictures of stage displays by Harold B. Franklin, manager of Shea's Hippodrome, Buffalo. Here is another one, which was used Thanksgiving week. These displays are not expensive. Now if you noted the one last week you will see that the same background is used for the turkey effect. All that was necessary was to have an artist paint a large picture of the great American bird and superimpose it over the background.

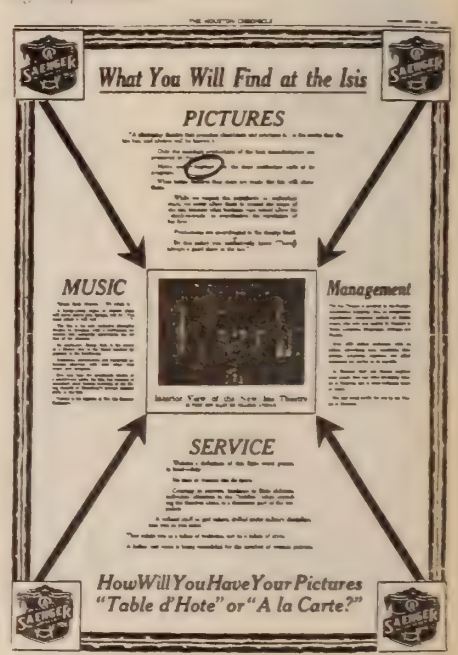
Here's something else. Along about Thanksgiving time you are seeing turkey displays everywhere, in front of stores and in newspaper advertising and even in the candy shops. But they were expected there and they didn't attract unusual attention. But you never saw it in a theatre before, and it was a novelty and that's one reason why it went over big.



No war was ever won by relying on the RELICS of the last one. And the same is true of the motion picture theatre.

TALKING about simplicity in advertising, the specimen from the Standard theatre, Cleveland, easily takes the lead. Here is a case where a picture and its arrangement tells the whole story. Here is a case of a smashing advertisement without the name of any star and without reference to what the picture is about. It is the sort of display that will lead people to the theatre out of curiosity. Note the only explanation is that the picture is made from "Rex Beach's greatest story."

The photograph is one that has been used by Goldwyn in advertising in the NEWS. The Standard has used the same picture and below that has placed a block with the announcement of the title. The Standard, more than nearly any other theatre in the country, seems to watch the advertising in the trade papers and to adapt all possible to its own use. It is a case of taking the best advantage of the hundreds of dollars spent by the producers in designing their own advertising.

Christmas is a good time to take Enterprise under the mistletoe and leave a lasting impression

What Live Wires Are Doing

THROUGH Vitagraph we receive a copy of a page announcement used by the Isis theatre, Houston, Texas, in impressing SERVICE on the public. It is distinctly an appeal for the theatre itself. With the exception of references to the fact that Metro and Vitagraph pictures are used there is little space devoted to films, but the entire display is given over telling the public why the Isis theatre is worthy of patronage. Music, management and service are three of the points dwelt upon.

If you ever rEst on your exhibition problems, you'll find that the E's gone and you'll rUst.

AN inquiry from a patron says: "I own three theatres in the same city. Would you advise me to advertise them together or separately?"

There can be but one answer in our opinion—and that is SEPARATELY, and to make each one as distinctive as possible. We are taking from the Atlanta papers an example of four theatres under the same ownership that advertise together. These displays are excellently written, but the grave flaw appears to us to be that by following the same style in the typing of all, that the owner of the houses is deliberately inviting the patron to choose WHICH of the pictures he will see. That should not be the policy. Every advertisement should be written and displayed to make the patron come to that theatre. And again, every theatre ought to have an individuality, a particular appeal. It doesn't matter whether the four theatres are unanimously admitted to be the four best in the city, this sort of display is not calculated to get the most business for each theatre. Distinctive name heads and distinctive displays for each of the theatres would be much more apt to induce a patron to go to two shows instead of merely to one.

If you read this for instruction, why not let your own good ideas help other exhibitors?

HERE is one of the most artistic announcements of the opening of a new theatre that has come to our attention recently. It was sent out by the New Princess, Rensselaer, Ind. It is at the same time inexpensive and dignified. It is printed on white stock 8½ by 14 and folds twice, being about the size of an official envelope in its mailing state.

the first bill and the announcement for the following two days, together with a brief statement of the policy of the house and a list of the stars that will be seen there. This sort of an announcement is obliged to be a whole lot more convincing than a detailed, much adjectived lot of claims.

Here is a house that seats 350, but it is making the sort of appeal that is bound to get the very cream of the patronage.

Thought is a coin of the realm.

YOU could not beat this advertisement in a million years. The Eckel theatre, Syracuse, has used a half tone for its display on Theda Bara in Camille and with the lettering white has achieved a striking effect. Many theatre managers when once they employ an artist to design their advertisement, think that they have got "to get their money's worth" by having a lot of ornamentations. This display occupied a space three columns wide by fourteen inches deep and there is the smallest possible amount of reading matter. The picture of the star carries the appeal, and the name of the theatre, the name of the star and the title of the production are all that are needed. How many other managers who are running a picture for only three days would use an equal amount of space and go to the expense of having the advertisement especially designed?

DISPLAYS on "Polly of the Circus" are getting to be rather old stories now, but those that have been printed have been largely confined to theatres in big cities. All the enterprise is not in the great centers as is shown by the display made by C. Everitt Wagner, manager of the Dreamland theatre, Chester, S. C. Mr. Wagner converted the whole front of the house into an imitation of a circut tent. Practically his whole expense was the canvas, the painting of the sign and the two "rings," which will be barely noted, in the front of the lobby as the photo is indistinct. He borrowed a number of toy animals from one of the local stores and then added a couple of realistic touches by having a tub of red lemonade and a boy selling peanuts.

What Are You Doing for Holiday Business

NEARLY every exhibitor tries to do something unusual along about holiday time in order to speed up business. What are you doing or going to do?

Let us have accounts of unique lobby and stage displays that you use, specimens of out-of-the-ordinary programs and folders that you send out, specimens of interesting advertising and the like.

We would like to be able to reproduce here the very cream of the thought of the exhibitors of the country as shown during these holidays. It would make a collection of ideas such as has never been made before. Why not do your bit?

And these ideas that are printed here will be worth saving for next year and worth trying in your house.

For that matter, never pass over a good idea. File them away under the proper subject. There'll probably come a time that you'll be mighty glad you did it.

Theatres and Newspaper Aid X-mas Fund

Two theatres in Harrisburg, Pa., by gaining the co-operation of the Evening News, which is conducting a campaign to raise funds for Christmas gifts for the Pennsylvania soldiers encamped in this country and abroad, have been helping a patriotic cause and incidentally increasing their receipts and gaining much valuable publicity.

The plan consists of an agreement with the newspaper to give benefit performances of some strong attraction, for a three-day period, giving 20 per cent. of the net proceeds to the soldiers' fund.

The Victoria theatre, James George, manager, put on "The Tanks" for a three-day run. The newspaper gave half page advertisements free during the entire period, together with first page news stories daily and even editorial comment.

It was thus made possible for the theatre to fill every seat at practically every performance, notwithstanding the price of admission was raised from 15 to 25 cents. The net results were that about $350 in cash was turned over to the newspaper's soldier fund and the house still had left receipts which constituted hundreds of dollars more than it ordinarily would have received in the same period.

The same plan was put into effect by the Regent theatre, Peter Magaro, manager, the attraction being Geraldine Farrar in "The Woman God Forgot."

Victoria theatre has now arranged with the newspaper to give a three-day run of "The Honor System" here next week, on the same basis.

Is This Your Theatre?

In this column the Exhibitors' Service Bureau will print comment from week to week on theatres actually visited, pointing out faults found and commendable features. The name of the theatre will not be mentioned, but if it applies to you and you want improvement, write to this department.

THIS is the story of a theatre that deliberately "turned itself around." Theatre M., when we first visited it two years ago, was typical of its class. It was located in a town of some 8,000 people and about sixty miles away from one of the fifteen biggest cities of the country.

When we first visited the town there were three theatres there, all apparently doing barely enough business to get along, although Theatre M. was the best of the lot and getting the most generous patronage—if any of them could be called well patronized. It was a clean, new theatre, well lighted, with fairly good projection and showing the best pictures of any house in the town. But the very apparent thing was that a very large proportion of the population was not attending any picture theatre.

Advertising of the three houses was largely devoted to the displays in front of the theatres and each house tried to outdo its rivals in this respect, though again the manager of Theatre M. showed his better judgment by trying to center the display on his current attraction rather than sticking up every one and three sheet that the exchanges sent him. But one thing that was noted. Every house was advertising itself on its banners as "the best show in town" and the same spirit was shown in their handbills. One of these shows was particularly miserable. The house was uncomfortable, the films shown were about the poorest on the market and they were worn and torn by the time they were received at this theatre. It had been the pioneer theatre in the town and many people had seen their first motion picture at that house. Many other newcomers to the town had seen their first one there and they concluded that all were in the same class. And after visiting this worst of the three houses we don't blame any one from staying away from pictures altogether. The house was a distinct knock at the better house, but still it was earning the owner ten or fifteen dollars a week, more than he could make at anything else and he wouldn't sell at any reasonable price.

When we visited the same city this year, it had grown by a couple of thousand, but there was only one theatre and it was M. It had been enlarged until it held twice as many people as before and it was easy to see that it was doing a prosperous business.

It is interesting to note how this was accomplished. After trying various changes in service and various forms of advertising that were available the manager decided that he would have to resort to some desperate efforts to get the greater portion of his public interested in motion pictures. The big idea came to him when a solicitor for one of the big city papers came to solicit his subscription. One of the arguments that this solicitor put up to him was that this paper was one of the best motion picture organs in the country—and it was. The manager took a mental note and the next Sunday he bought copies of all the Sunday papers published in his nearest big city and which circulated largely in his town. He found that what the solicitor had told him was true. Then he laid his plans and bought a ticket to the big city.

There he called on the circulation manager of the paper that he had selected, and presented his proposition. He offered to aid the solicitors in getting subscriptions in his town in every way. He would go around with the canvassers himself to every person he knew—and he had a large acquaintance—and urge them to take this paper rather than any other. In addition he offered to run a slide at every performance reading "All the movie news in the ————." He frankly told the circulation man that he wanted to get all the people of his town interested in the movies and for that reason he was interested in getting everyone who bought a big city daily paper to buy the one that presented the most and the best of this news. All he asked in return was that he be allowed to slip into the section that carried the motion picture news a folder or herald of his own, which he would furnish the local news agent.

It worked like a charm. As the result of his personal work this paper literally "cleaned up" the town and in a short time had nearly a thousand subscribers in this place and the immediate section. He had based his plan on his own experience—that people in the smaller cities and towns read practically every line of the big city paper. He figured that a great share of them, who had never been interested in motion pictures would read this section of the paper as well. And the folder which he put into the copies in addition to giving the program for the week at his theatre also bore the message: "All the best pictures told about in the motion picture pages of the ———— will be seen later at Theatre M."

It was the start of the idea, and he decided to carry it still further. He watched for the patrons who came to his theatre and then for some reason or other stopped coming. He immediately sent them free passes and a letter inviting them to return and to let him know of any criticism they had of his house. He was not content with using all the pulling power of the big city paper to his own advantage, but he watched his new business and determined to keep it. These things he did in addition to his former exploitation.

Patronage grew with a jump. He soon could afford more advertising, better screen and other improvements, and he didn't hesitate to make them. He literally held him-

How to Get Rothapfel's Advice

World's Greatest Exhibitor to Answer Questions on Showmanship Through the News

¶ Half studied picture exhibitions are the green persimmons of the film business.

You know how delightful is a full ripe persimmon—after the frost has come and mellowed it.

And you know how unfortunate is the fellow who gets hold of a green one. It puckers up the mouth, gives him a dark brown taste, and makes him look upon the world with anything but a joyful eye.

Are you looking upon your patrons with the green persimmon expression on your face? Are you viewing your own business with a dark brown taste in your mouth? If you are, no wonder you cannot see the bright side of the motion picture industry.

The sun of real PROGRESS in this industry is just beginning to rise. It is trying to spread its rays into the dark places, but if you hide behind the gray walls where the sun of progress cannot reach you. At least get out in the open and give the sun a chance.

¶ The greatest thing in the motion picture industry today so far as the exhibitor is concerned is SERVICE.

Service does not mean that you can take just any old pictures, put so-called service behind them and make money out of them. Service presupposes first that you have the goods to deliver, and then shows you how to deliver them. No system or plan can hide under the robes of Service that outlines ways for you to boost productions that will disappoint your patrons and in the end mean your financial ruin.

The real service is the sort that will build up your house for not only the day, but for the days to come.

The exhibitor has looked with a certain amount of suspicion on the service suggestions of manufacturers because they have believed that there was something behind all this, no matter how sincere the producers and distributors have been—and there are some of them doing excellent work for you.

¶ But to relieve any suspicion, to give you the digest of the best brains in the picture industry, the MOTION PICTURE NEWS some months ago launched the Exhibitors' Service Bureau. It is intended purely for the benefit of the exhibitor. No manufacturer or exchange man finds his matter printed here unless this department believes the suggestions are for the good of the exhibitor.

One of the sub-departments which was added to this bureau was "Seeing the Rialto with Rothapfel." These articles, which are to be continued, review the presentation each week at the Rialto and tell you what Rothapfel is doing and how he does it.

You all know who Rothapfel is. You all know the story of his rise from a boy exhibitor using the room back of a saloon to the unquestioned leadership of today. You know what he has done for theatre after theatre. You all know the wonderful strides ahead that he has taken with the Rialto. And in a very short time you are going to see the Rivoli presenting to the world radical and wonderful developments in the exhibition of the motion picture.

¶ Mr. Rothapfel is an exhibitor pure and simple. He has won his own way in the cinema world. He has blazed the way for others to follow. He is today the most independent exhibitor in the world. He can dictate, if need be.

And with all his big undertakings commanding his time, there is no exhibitor more interested in his fellow showmen than he. It is purely out of that unselfish interest he has agreed to answer questions for the exhibitors of the country on the problems of presenting their pictures.

You can have the benefit of his amazing experiences, his wonderful skill and his brilliant ideas without a cent of cost to you.

It would be impossible for you to set out and buy this expert advice. You could not get Mr. Rothapfel to stop his work and give you the benefit of his experience with your problems in any other way.

¶ There are two conditions to this offer.

First, no question will be considered which does not come through the MOTION PICTURE NEWS. Mr. Rothapfel will ignore the questions that are sent directly to him.

These letters will be delivered to Mr. Rothapfel and his reply printed in this department.

Second, Mr. Rothapfel will not answer any questions which call for his estimates of pictures or film service.

Make your questions as brief as possible.

Don't ask foolish questions, but submit any real problem of exhibition that confronts you.

Address all your inquiries:

Seeing the Rialto with Rothapfel

WITH this week's program at the Rialto, Mr. Rothapfel has opened up another gold mine for the exhibitors who want to do something different and attract the greatest attention to it. It represents perfection in combining voices and music in a motion picture theatre.

In the first place, let us say that the Rialto quartet is back from a most successful tour of the country and it makes its first reappearance this week. After the great orchestra has brilliantly rendered selections from "Aida" and following the Animated Magazine, the quartet makes its first appearance. It sang Hadley's "The Musical Trust" and Morse's "Aunt Skinner's Chicken Dinner" so delightfully that the applause could scarcely be stopped.

But the real novelty came just after the feature when the orchestra began a medly of Southern melodies, which to all indications of the program was purely an orchestral number. It included a large number of famous selections. But after the orchestra had played the first, the quartet, which was seated in with the orchestra began to sing the second of the selections, "My Old Kentucky Home" and after this it sang the alternate numbers. One could not tell which members of the orchestra, for such it appeared, were doing the singing, so cleverly had been the members of the quartet placed. The selection ended with a few bars of "Dixie" and it literally brought down the house.

One can see what a wonderful field that this opens up, reviews of all sorts of music, the songs of all nations and the like. Here is a chance for any exhibitor who has an orchestra. Quartets can be found in any city and this is a fine opportunity to show enterprise.

We told you once before how Rothapfel "puts a show on its feet." This is another case of it. There is not a single laugh in the feature, Lina Cavalieri in "The Eternal Temptress" and the story ends with the suicide of Cordelia. But these appealing southern melodies, with the humanness of the voice added, put the thrills back in the audience, made them forget the tragedy in the joys of wonderful music.

Unquestionably the greatest war pictures that have been shown in this country are included in the Rialto Animated Magazine this week. And because they are so wonderfully striking, Mr. Rothapfel has kept the other war material down to the minimum to make them stand out. We have called your attention to some cases when practically everything in this weekly bore on the war. This week it is almost the opposite, but so striking are these scenes of the battle of the Aisne that it still stands out when the weekly is finished. And such was the purpose of the arrangement.

The Animated opens with soldiers drilling at the Stanford football game shown to the Rialto march. The marching fighters brought the greatest applause. The same music was continued throughout pictures of University of California aviators and the arrival of Lieut. Flachaire, French aviator in this country. Then came scenes in training New York firemen followed by Queen Wilhelmina going in state procession to the opening of the Dutch parliament. This was shown with the accompaniment of the Dutch National Anthem. The huge audience sat in silence through this picture. It entered so wholly into the Rialto presentations and was so fully governed by the feeling that the position of Holland in the world war is uncertain that there was not even a ripple of applause. With "A Bugle Call Rag" and two lively gallops, there followed an extremely funny Happy Hooligan cartoon "Bullets and Bull." A Chinese episode by Tchaikowski was played with some pictures of Chinese babies. Then there followed an especially fine picture, that of duck shooting in California. Shown with the music of Bocaloussi's "Hunt" it called forth repeated applause.

Then came the big feature, "The Battle of the Aisne." It was a vivid reproduction of actual fighting. It showed the Frenchmen going "over the top" and the artillery fire. There was a splendid effect attained by flashes of red around the screen and over the prosenium arch, and together with the roar of the cannon one felt that one was looking upon the battle itself. And the audience got the spirit of it and went wild with applause, and then broke into cheering with the appearance of the "tanks." Arrival of long lines of German prisoners behind the lines and the return of the French troops from the fight was the signal for more applause. "Robespierre" with a counterpoint from the "Marseillaise" added greatly to the effect. This was followed by an illustrated editorial urging everyone to join the Red Cross. The audience many times showed that it felt full co-operation. The music was "Onward Christian Soldiers." The topical ended with a cartoon showing the Kaiser and Crown Prince hiding from the rainbow made by the Rainbow Division of American troops which have reached France.

Now here is the triumph in welding two pictures together, with the instrumental and vocal music, the stage settings and the lights—one complete harmony in all the wonderful effects that the Rialto possesses.

On the screen came the title of the scenic "Venice the Beautiful," a Beacon Film. This was brought right down to the moment by the sub-title which declared that this was the city that the Italians were fighting so desperately to save. It is a beautiful picture and as it was thrown on the screen the orchestra played Nevin's "A Day in Venice" and selections from "Tales of Hoffman." After the lighting, toward the ending of the qquartet numbers, had been a brilliant red, fading into the white, the whole effect of the house now became a deep blue. At the end of the scenic the curtain before the panels on either side of the screen parted, showing on one side the Rialto bridge, which is used in all the theatre advertising, and on the other the church of Santa Maria de Salute. At the same time a voice from behind the stage began to sing "O Sole Mio," a Neopolitan folk song. The audience sat quiet expecting the singer to make his appearance—as they always do—but in this case no such thing happened and the audience sat through the song without ever knowing who was singing. Just one of the novelties that make things different.

Now note. The exhibition panels remained visible as the feature started. The first scenes in the picture are laid in Venice and for several minutes the displays on the side continued, until the picture was well started, when the curtains closed almost unnoticed by the audience. You see at once the way that the scenic was made to lead up to the feature, how the music and the lights and all were brought into perfect harmony.

That is getting into the soul of exhibition. It's worth trying, to link things up and give the audience the very atmosphere—as in this case, of Venice. It made every spectator feel that he was at home in the Venetian scenes of the feature.

AT THE STRAND WEEK OF DEC. 9

STRAND Theater did one of the biggest Sunday's business in its history as the result of offering the Donald C. Thompson pictures "Blood Stained Russia." On account of the crowds the program was cut down for the showing Sunday and during the three hours that the writer sat in the theatre the Strand Topical was not shown and some of the musical numbers were cut down, attention being given practically entirely to the Russian pictures and the feature, Billie Burke in "The Land of Promise."

The Russian pictures were taken by Mr. Thompson at different times during his long stay in that country and have been assembled together with the aid of well written dramatic titles to form a whole preachment against German propaganda work by showing exactly what happened in Russia and why. There are some stirring battle scenes included, but there seemed to be a desire to show as many dead bodies as possible and some of these were intensely gruesome. There were many scenes in Petrograd. The titles which declared that all the pro-Germans in this country should be locked up brought great applause as did the pictures of President Wilson, as did others of a patriotic nature.

"Bobby Bump's Christmas Shopping," a Paramount-Brady, amused the audience a great deal. The overture was excerpts from "La Gioconda." The musical numbers were Rosa Lind, soprano, in two Flemish folk songs, and Herbert Watrous, basso, in "Brown October Ale" and "Rocked in the Cradle of the Deep."

Recently we printed a reproduction of a postcard from Mr. Fukutaro Horibe, manager of the "moving picture theatre," Yokahama, Japan, which referred to the fact that he had been reading "Seeing the Rialto with Rothapfel," and in which he requested a full program of the Rialto. Mr. Horibe now sends the NEWS one of the posters that he used on "Womanhood." He appeals to both the English and Japanese patrons. One will note the Japanese touch that the artist has given the drawing of Miss Joyce.

Salt Lake Exhibitor Shows How to Meet Situation When Picture Fails to Arrive

Here is another one of the series of articles being written by W. A. Bach, who is on a tour of the country for Universal Film Company, establishing service bureaus in the various exchange centers. This refers to Salt Lake City conditions. Mr. Bach is now in Portland, Ore.

NO doubt, there is hardly an exhibitor in United States or Canada who has not been up against the proposition of making a success of his show in spite of a delayed film.

In the big houses which have done extensive advertising on a film its non-delivery at the right time is a tremendous handicap and may even prove a disastrous matter unless it is properly handled.

An instance of the way a matter of this sort was handled very neatly and cleverly was given by Mr. George Mayne, manager of the American theatre in Salt Lake City the other week.

The American theatre, which is without doubt one of the best houses in the United States, seats 3,000 people and with its wonderful organ and accomplished organist, Professor McClellan of the Mormon Tabernacle, the American enjoys a huge patronage and one that does not like to be disappointed, especially when a program has been extensively advertised.

Mr. Mayne had Charlie Chaplin's "The Adventurer" booked and covered the town with advertising but through some train delay the picture did not arrive, and Mr. Mayne was notified of the fact that it would be impossible to get the picture to him in time for showing.

He immediately rushed to the morning papers a large cut of the head and shoulders of Chaplin, with a notice below it in the shape of an open letter addressed to the people of Salt Lake City, in which Chaplin was made to say that he was sorry that he had been delayed but would be unable to be in Salt Lake City until the following day.

However, at that time he was going to make them laugh and enjoy themselves in the latest picture, "The Adventurer."

The result was that with the matter explained to them the people realized that it was no fault of the American theatre, that the picture had not arrived. And the house was jammed on the following day when the reel was received and shown.

Salt Lake City, for its size, has some very excellent theatres, but nothing stands out prominently in their methods of display or operation. Except, of course, it may be the American has secured for itself the reputation of having the best music in town. Most of the theatres err in the matter of showing a long and motley collection of slides advertising their coming pictures for the next week or so. The effect of this is just what I said about trailers in a preceding article—a confused mass from which there is no distinct memory of any one picture that is to be shown.

However, in one of the theatres an excellent idea for display was noted. The best photograph from the original set of the picture was tacked to a large piece of cardboard, two or three times the size of the photograph itself, and an attractive design painted about it in wash colors.

This certainly helped to bring out the effectiveness of the photograph and drew the attention of the people much better than paper and was much more suitable to the character of the house that was using it.

How a Real Idea Built a Theatre

self up by his own trousers. He made the word motion picture synonymous with his house. The devotees that he won didn't think about trying to see a picture anywhere else. He grew while the others stood still. The word-of-mouth advertising helped and patron after patron came from the other houses. Now they are gone.

This was a rather peculiar situation with Theatre M., but any house similarly situated can do the same thing.

The big thing is that this manager saw what was the matter and thought a way to cure it. And you can make your theatre as successful as Theatre M. by seeing and thinking.

You are not going to war. The men who are need all the comforts you can give them. Help them get cigarettes. That is your patriotic duty. If you aren't helping in the "smokes" campaign, get busy—now. Don't be a slacker!

"The Volunteer," Showing Unconventional Studio Scenes—Little Madge Evans Featured

(World Five Reel Production)

"The Volunteer," featuring Madge Evans, the screen's most talented child actress, and Henry Hull, a World star, is an unusual production because it takes you into the motion picture studio and shows to you the actual working of the men behind the scenes, before the scenes and those who are seldom if ever seen in the picture but without whom, the picture entertainment would be impossible. Some of the scenes you will see are: the World studio in the height of activity, Carlyle Blackwell, the popular World actor and director, directing a picture in which he will appear soon; Kitty Gordon "making-up" for the "movies"; Ethel Clayton and her director discussing certain scenes to be taken in her next World production; Evelyn Greeley waiting for the property men to shift the scenery for the next scene in which she is to appear; Montague Love resting while a court scene is being "shot"; Madge Evans taking leave of her director, Harley Knoles and William A. Brady, who is the "man behind the gun" in the production of World pictures. In short, you will see all the unconventional studio scenes which add a human touch to the picture and present your favorite screen actresses and actors in life behind the scenes. There is a strong, gripping drama enacted in connection with these flashes of unconventional studio scenes—in short there is everything that goes to make for an hour of intensely interesting entertainment on the screen.

"The Volunteer" will be shown on the screen of the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week. You will see some of World's most popular stars assisting Little Madge Evans in her work.

June Elvidge and a Cast of Brady Stars in "The Tenth Case"—Fascinating Drama

(World Five Reel Production)

"The Tenth Case," presented by a cast of William Brady's most capable screen stars, will be shown at the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week. Heading the list is June Elvidge. In support are John Bowers, George Macquarrie, Gladden James, Eric Mayne, Eloise Clement and Charles Dungan. Judge Wallace (Charles Dungan) had heard nine cases in the usual prefunctory manner but when the tenth case is called he is given the surprise of his life. It is a case of circumstantial evidence and one of the strangest that has come before the courts. Miss Elvidge presents the role of Claudia Payton, who becomes Claudia Landis on her marriage. Within a year after her marriage she gets into serious trouble, brought on, not through any fault of hers, but because of her willingness to help others regardless of the consequences. Up to this time she has been a most loving wife and true. Circumstantial evidence points to her guilt and on these grounds her husband divorces her. In the solution of this case, there is woven one of the most fascinating dramas ever enacted on the screen. It will be proven that although circumstantial evidence establishes the guilt of nine persons convicted of crime, the tenth case may involve an innocent person. It is so in this World production, "The Tenth Case." The picture holds from the introduction to the final flash and is presented by screen artists.

Come to the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week and see the surprises that await you in the trial of Claudia Payton. It is fascinating and contains a new interest in every foot of the thousand feet of film that is shown.

George Walsh in "The Pride of New York," a Thrill in Every Scene—Daring Stunts

(Fox Five Reel Production)

"The Pride of New York" is the next George Walsh feature to be shown at the ——— theatre. Smiling George presents a part in this picture which calls for all the agility of a Fairbanks and the nerve of a steeplejack. He enacts the role of a contractors son who wishes to learn the business from the bottom up and who willingly takes the risks assumed by the laborer, the ironworker and the mason in order that he may acquire knowledge concerning the ins and outs of the business. Contrasted with the manly, courageous young man whom Mr. Walsh impersonates is the role of the Fop, presented by William Bailey. Both are called when the national army is drafted and both are in love with the same girl. The girl is presented by Regina Quinn. She meets the Fop first and shortly thereafter she sees the contractor's son swinging high in the air, on an iron girder to be placed on the twentieth floor of a new building. She is attracted by his daring. Then the two men leave for France and she follows as a Red Cross nurse. George continues to improve in her estimation while she gradually loses all interest in the Fop. When the Fop sees that his idleness and indigent ways are the cause of his failure to hold the respect of the girl he loves, he takes the life of George as an example and his disposition undergoes a decided change.

The strong points in this picture and the ones which you all will enjoy thoroughly are the daring stunts enacted by Mr. Walsh. There is action every minute and "The Pride of New York" presents a typical Walsh subject.

At the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week, George Walsh in "The Pride of New York.

Charles Kent, Mildred Manning and Wallace MacDonald in "The Marriage Speculaton"

(Vitagraph Five Reel Production)

Charles Kent, Mildred Manning and Wallace MacDonald are the featured players in the five part Vitagraph production entitled "The Marriage Speculation," written by Cyrus Townsend Brady and produced under the direction of Ashley Miller. In this late Vitagraph Blue Ribbon feature, patrons of the ——— theatre will be presented with a theme that, if not unusual is the usual developed in a most fascinating way by the author. Little human touches that are evident throughout the run of this feature, are the bright spots. Particular reference is made to the scenes depicting business as carried on in a small town grocery store. Wallace MacDonald, who presents the part of Billie Perkins, an indigent grocery clerk, gives one of the best characterizations of this class of persons that has been seen on the screen for some time. Sharply contrasted with these scenes are those taken at a fashionable summer resort. "The Marriage Speculation" tells of the adventure of Clara Wilton, an ambitious little clerk in a candy store, who meets an old gentleman, who conceives the idea of speculating in marriages. He sees in Clara the opportunity and suggests to her that she place herself under his guidance. He has saved a few thousand dollars and spends it all in educating Clara in the hope that she will marry a millionaire who will provide for him when he is too old to work. How events shape themselves and the very agreeable surprise given Clara, her benefactor, and the grocery clerk, whom she eventually marries, is told in a most fascinating and romantic manner in this late production of Vitagraph. It will be seen on the screen of the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week.

Mabel Taliaferro in "Draft 258," Cabanne's Sequel to "The Slacker"—Seven Parts

(Metro Seven Reel Special Production)

William Christy Cabanne, whom you remember as the author and director of "The Slacker," featuring Emily Stevens, has produced another special feature for the Metro program titled "Draft 258." It presents a theme that holds an interest for all—old and young. The title suggests the theme. It is not any better, but it is just as good as Mr. Cabanne's production of "The Slacker" which was highly commended by critics and public alike. Mabel Taliaferro, the accomplished little actress who has furnished entertainment for the millions on the speaking stage and who has been seen on the screen in some of Metro's best productions, is in the featured role. Walter Miller, who played opposite Miss Stevens as "the slacker" in the picture of the same title, has the principal male role opposite Miss Taliaferro in "Draft 258." Others in the supporting cast are: Earle Brunswick, Eugene Borden, Sue Balfour, William H. Tooker, Camilla Dalberg, Baby Ivy Ward, Sidney D'Albrook, Robert Anderson and Edwin Boring. Miss Taliaferro presents the role of Mary Alden who lives with her mother and two brothers.. She, one of her brothers, and her sweetheart, John Graham, are employed in a department store. Mary is a true patriot. Matthew, her brother, is a "soap-box" orator, and in his speeches he argues against the Government's action in declaring war. He is discharged from the store. He is urged to enlist but scoffs at the idea. When the draft numbers are announced, George Alden, Mary's other brother, holds the first number "258" and fails to report for examination. Mary goes herself and tries to enlist in his place.

What happens to her two brothers and how they are made the best of patriots by Mary is told in this most interesting war drama. At the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week.

Mark Twain's Immortal Story, "Tom Sawyer," with Jack Pickford Featured

(Paramount Five-Reel Production)

Mark Twain's immortal story, "Tom Sawyer," has been adapted to the screen by Paramount and produced under the direction of William D. Taylor. Julia Crawford Ivers wrote the scenario. Jack Pickford is the featured player. In the supporting cast are: George Hackathorne, Alice Marvin, Edythe Chapman, Clara Horton, Helen Gilmore, Robert Gordon and Antrom Short. The character of Tom Sawyer is presented by Jack Pickford. The scenes of the story are laid in a small Missouri town. Tom is the mischievous member of the family group. A typical boy, he dislikes church and delights in running around with dirty hands, face and collar. Tom is in love with Becky Thatcher, the new girl in the neighborhood. He has won her respect and admiration by turning handsprings in front of her house. This is Tom's idea of serenading. He exchanges trinkets for tickets which were given out in the Sunday School for excellence in class deportment and lessons. When the Bible is given out, it is announced that it goes to Tom Sawyer, because he has the most tickets. Tom is then called upon by the superintendent to relate certain facts contained in the Bible and he is stuck. But you all know Mark Twain's version of Tom Sawyer. It is as old as the hills and one of the few stories that have been read by all. Paramount has given a faithful interpretation of the author's work, and Jack Pickford immortalizes the character of Tom Sawyer on the screen.

"Because of a Woman," with Strong Cast Including Belle Bennett, Jack Livingston

(Triangle Five-Reel Production)

Jack Livingston and Belle Bennett are the leading characters in "Because of a Woman," a late Triangle release to be shown on the screen of the ——— theatre ——— week. Mr. Livingston has the role of Noel Clavering whose desire to shield the woman he loves leads him to give up a promising business career, his friends and all that she might be protected. He goes West and adopts the life of a telegraph operator in a lonely town of the desert. Later he receives information that a stranger is coming to look over some mining property. The stranger proves to be Barrett, the man responsible for his sacrifice. Clavering wrings a confession from him. Noel prepares to return to the girl he had given up but when Barrett tells him that he had married her before leaving, he gives up all hope. Later he receives word from the girl's father that she is to be married to Barrett. He hurries back and finds that the girl is supremely happy and decides that he will keep the secret. Her husband soon tires of her and turns to another woman. Noel threatens the woman unless she give up Barrett, but his threats fail. Finally he decides to win the love of the woman. He wins her from Barrett and falls in love with her. Barrett returns to the girl Noel once loved.

"Because of a Woman" will be shown on the screen of the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week. Jack Livingston, Belle Bennett, George Chesebro, Louella Maxam, Lillian Langdon, Josef Swickard and George Pierce.

William Duncan and Carol Holloway in "The Tenderfoot"—Western Drama

(Vitagraph Five-Reel Production)

"The Tenderfoot" is an adaptation from Alfred Henry Lewis's most famous Western story. It was produced for Vitagraph under the direction of William Duncan. William Duncan and Carol Holloway are the featured players. In the supporting cast are: Florence Dye, Joe Ryan, Walter L. Rodgers, Charles Wheelock, Hattie Bushkirk and Fred Forrester. Mr. Duncan has the role of Jim, an Easterner who goes West to forget the girl whom he loves but whose love is not returned. When he has adapted himself to life on the Western plains, the girl and her father arrive. Jim has become an expert cowpuncher. He saves the girl's life and she learns to love him. But Jim has met and loves a Western girl. The girl from the East, in order to arouse the jealousy of Jim, arranges a meeting with "Smiling" Jack Douglas, the bully of the town. The Western girl, knowing that Douglas has planned to shoot Jim on sight, picks up a flirtation with him and while they are drinking, the Western girl empties the chamber of his revolver. Jim enters and Douglas covers him with his gun. He discovers that it contains no bullets. Jim and he fight and Jim conquers. The Eastern girl returns to her home and Jim and the Western girl are married.

"The Tenderfoot,' adapted from Alfred Henry Lewis's book of the same name, and produced by Vitagraph, will be seen on the screen of the ———— theatre on ———— of ———— week.

Lina Cavalieri, Most Beautiful Woman, in "The Eternal Temptress"—Strong Cast

(Paramount Five-Reel Production)

Lina Cavalieri, known throughout the world as the most beautiful woman, makes her debut before the motion picture going public, in a Paramount production, "The Eternal Temptress," written by Mme. Fred DeGresac and scenarioized by Eve Unsell. It was produced under the direction of Emile Chautard. The story was written especially for Mme. Cavalieri by M. deGresac, the noted French author. Elliott Dexter, who was seen to such good advantage in Elsie Ferguson's successful production, "The Rise of Jennie Cushing," leads. Many of the scenes are laid in Rome and Venice. In the supporting cast are such well known stars as Mildred Counselman, Allen Hale, Edward Fielding, Hallen Mostyn, James Laffey, Pierre De Matteis and Pater Barbier. Mme. Cavalieri presents the role of Princess Cordelia Sanzio, an Italian widow, living in Venice. She is of a coquettish nature and when she meets Harry Althrop, the son of Commodore Althrop, an American diplomat, the young man falls deeply in love with her and displays a jealous mood when she is seen speaking to other men. An Austrian Count decides to oppose Harry in winning the affections of the Princess. The object is to arouse the young man's jealousy and then to use this as a means of extorting from him certain valuable papers which his father is known to possess. Harry is lead into difficulty by the Princess and he is detected in certain criminal adventures. How events turn and the penalty which the Princess pays for her part in ruining the boy's career, are told in this most entertaining drama.

Lina Cavalieri, the most beautiful woman in the world, seen in "The Eternal Temptress." Elliott Dexter in principal male role.

"The Maternal Spark," with Rowland Lee, Irene Hunt—Powerful Drama—Strong Cast

(Triangle Five-Reel Production)

"The Maternal Spark" presented by a cast of Triangle stars will be seen at the ———— theatre on ———— of ———— week. The story was written by R. Cecil Smith and adapted to the screen by George Proctor and produced under the direction of G. P. Hamilton. In the cast are Irene Hunt, Rowland Lee, Joey Jacobs, Edwin Jobson, Josie Sedgwick, Frank Newburgh, and Frank McQuarrie. Rowland Lee presents the part of Howard Helms, who with his young wife and child is taken to the city from the little town of Pepperell, by John Mills, a wealthy broker. Mills has taken an interest in the young Helms and it is not many months before he has risen to prominence in the financial world. The lure of the city, however, is too strong for his nature to overcome and he is taken from his wife and child by "the other woman." Mills, who is a frequent visitor at the Helms home, notices that the young wife is unhappy and learns that her husband is neglecting her. He plans to force Helms to return to his wife. To do this he plays the market in such a way as to break Helms. Mrs. Helms then plans to win back the love that is rightfully hers. She goes to the other woman and persuades her to give up her husband. She does so and the young couple are reunited and return to the little town of Pepperell and to happiness.

"The Marriage Speculation," with Charles Kent, Mildred Manning—Different

(Vitagraph Five-Reel Production)

"The Marriage Speculation," by Cyrus Townsend Brady, who has written many of the big successful photoplays produced by Vitagraph, is the late Vitagraph feature to be shown at the ———— theatre. Charles Kent, Mildred Manning and Wallace MacDonald are the principal players. The production was made under the direction of Ashley Miller. Charles Kent is seen on the screen for the first time in many months. In this picture Mr. Kent presents a part that calls for unusual dramatic talent. He has the role of Mr. Cliday, an elderly gentleman who has worked for thirty years in the same institution and who decides that he will take the money he has saved and speculate in marriages. He has met Clara Wilton, the pretty little clerk in a candy store and he suggests to her that she accept his offer of sending her to a boarding school where she can fit herself for the world of society. He does this on the condition that she marry a rich man and provide for him the rest of his life. She consents. Billie Perkins, a careless, lazy, grocery-store clerk is in love with Clara but she gives up all hope of ever seeing him rise above a mere clerk. She leaves for boarding school and when she has finished, her benefactor buys her beautiful clothes and they both leave for a fashionable summer resort to pick a husband. Clara meets a Count and decides to marry him to please the old man. Just as preparations are being made for the marriage ceremony, Billie appears in the disguise of a Count and exposes the bogus Count who is about to marry Clara. Billie has become a half-owner in the store and is prosperous and Clara decides that she will marry him. It develops that he is heir to the millions left by an English nobleman.

"Bucking Broadway," with Harry Carey Featured—Cowboys Invade Broadway

(Universal Five-Reel Production)

Harry Carey with Molly Malone in chief support is the featured player in Universal's production of "Bucking Broadway," a typical Western picture with a typical Western character man, Harry Carey, in the role of Cheyenne Harry. The spectacular predominates in this production and those of you who like action, and plenty of it, in a feature picture will enjoy every minute of the time "Bucking Broadway" is being shown on the screen of the ———— theatre. Molly Malone, who has the principal feminine role, opposite Mr. Carey, in this picture, is one of the best known artists of universal stock. Others in the cast are L. M. Wells, Vesta Pegg and William Gettinger. A sensational leap from the back of a horse to the rear of a fast moving train, is one of the many thrills in this production. Cheyenne Harry is in pursuit of his sweetheart who has left for the city, having been lured there by a man of disreputable character. He receives her message asking for help. Arriving in the city Harry learns that the man he is after is dining at a fashionable restaurant. A band of cowboys have arrived with a trainload of cattle and they are pals of Harry's. He rounds them up and they proceed to turn Broadway into a cattle ranch and incidentally they wreck the restaurant. This is a picture with not only one punch, but many. There is excitement and there are thrills aplenty.

Harry Carey, in a typical Western character role, will be seen on the screen of the ———— theatre on ———— of ———— week in "Bucking Broadway," with Harry Carey and a strong cast.

"Her Sister," with Olive Tell Featured, Story of a Sister's Sacrifice

(Mutual Five-Reel Production)

"Her Sister," produced under the direction of John B. O'Brien for the Empire All Star Corporation, releasing on the Mutual program, is a five-reel photodrama featuring Olive Tell. In the supporting cast are, David Powell, Eileen Dennes, Anita Rothe, Mrs. Clarat-Bracy, Harriet Thompson, Martha Dean, Eileen Errol, Madeline Meredith, Charles Edwards, Sidney Blair, Herbert Evans and Eleanor Seybolt. Miss Tell presents the role of Eleanor Alderson who with her sister Jane because Eleanor refuses to allow her sister Jane to accept the invitations of buyers. Eleanor accepts a position with Iris, a believer in mysticism and she and her sister are established in fashionable quarters. Jane is placed in a compromising position by a married man, whose wife seeks evidence for a divorce. Eleanor arrives in time to save Jane from the husband but the divorce proceedings are brought and Jane is named as co-respondent. Eleanor leaves the city and meets George Saunders, whom she loves. Eleanor is regarded as the third woman in the divorce proceedings and in order to protect her sister, acknowledges that she is the one. Saunders refuses to believe Eleanor's confession. He learns that she has a sister and by a clever scheme discloses that Jane is the one to blame. Jane is cleared of all guilt and both sisters wed happily.

"The Wolf and His Mate," Univeral Feature, with Hart Hoxie and Capable Cast

(Universal Five-Reel Production)

Hart Hoxie, George R. O'Dell, Louise Lovely, Betty Schade, George French and Hector Dion, are the screen artists who interpret the principal roles in this Universal feature titled, "The Wolf and His Mate," which will be shown on the screen of the ———— theatre on ———— of ———— week. Mr. Hoxie, noted for his characterization of Western characters, in this production presents the character of Donald Bayne, who is deprived of his cabin in the backwoods by court order and in revenge he seeks out the man who had been the cause of his trouble and takes the law in his own hands. He leaves that vicinity for several months and on his return discovers there Bess Nolan (Louise Lovely), her uncle having left it to her. Her niece lives with her. Bayne, still furious because he had been evicted, forces Bess to marry him. He expects her to leave but she remains and the tables are turned for the second time on him. He realizes that he loves her after the lapse of weeks, but Bess rebels when he attempts to grow intimate. Bess's little niece is stolen and Bayne recovers the child for her. After this, he is an idol in the eyes of the girl he had learned to love. "The Wolf and His Mate" is full of action and human touches. It is sure-fire drama and enacted by a cast of capable players.

"The Wolf and His Mate," a Universal feature," will be seen on the screen of tne ———— theatre on ———— of ———— week.

"The Flight of the Fury," Late Chapter of "Who Is Number One"—Thrills Aplenty

(Paramount Serial, Two Reels)

"The Flight of the Fury" is the title of the Sixth episode of Paramount's baffling mystery story, "Who Is Number One?" Like its predecessors, this chapter is full of action and thrills. The question, still unanswered, leaves Number One in obscurity but the activities of this mysterious one, are evident in every flash on the screen. Hugo Wald, tutor to Aimee Villon (Kathleen Clifford) loves her and is jealous of Tommy Hale. The best detectives from Scotland Yard and the United States Secret Service join hands to reveal the identity of Number One. Aimee is freed from the hands of the T-T-T—the question remains unanswered.

The late chapter of Paramount's Serial, "Who Is Number One?" will be seen on the screen of the ———— theatre on ———— of ———— week.

Members of the First National Exhibitors' Circuit were surprised to receive this week a unique "scene album" covering the initial Petrova Picture company release, "Daughter of Destiny." It is bound in morocco and stamped on the cover is the name of the recipient. The fly leaf is an autographed portrait of Mme. Petrova done in colors, while the rest of the book is devoted to various scenes from the production. It is the first time that such a volume has been issued.

LIVE NEWS FROM THE PRODUCERS

Douglas Fairbanks Took His Beatific Countenance, Company and Winsome Marjorie Daw to the Grand Canyon of the Arizona for Material With Which to Build "A Modern Musketeer" for Artcraft

"A Modern Musketeer" Opens Rivoli Theatre

The Fairbanks Smile in New Artcraft Production Scheduled to Welcome Broadwayites to the Newest Temple of Picture Art

IT became known last week, through an announcement from the offices of Artcraft Pictures Corporation, that Douglas Fairbanks's next picture to be released by Artcraft, "A Modern Musketeer," has been selected by S. L. Rothapfel to mark the opening of the new Rivoli theatre at Broadway and Forty-ninth street, very shortly. Probably the most significant thing about this is the fact that it is the third time a Fairbanks picture has been chosen by Mr. Rothapfel as the opening attraction of a new theatre.

The Fairbanks company has returned from the Grand Canyon of Arizona, where the major part of "A Modern Musketeer" was staged, and will produce the balance of the film at the Hollywood studio.

Mary Pickford's newest Atrcraft picture, "Stella Maris," adapted from William J. Locke's book, will be released the end of January, it is announced. Staged under the direction of Marshall Neilan, this photoplay is expected to prove Miss Pickford's greatest achievement in the cinema world. Everyone who has already seen this picture, including Adolph Zukor, president of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, declares it to be her crowning accomplishment.

William S. Hart and company are in the Santa Cruz country filming some "big tree" scenery for the actor's next Artcraft release. With Hart are E. H. Allen, his business manager; Gertrude Claire, Maude George, Robert Gordon, and thirty other players of the Thomas H. Ince Studios.

Hart is giving to this, his fourth picture for Artcraft, all the direction, photography and dramatic interest of his other releases, it is said, plus a story which has more exciting moments and human appeal than any he has every offered to the screen. Seldom it is that the Ince star will discuss a drama in the making; it must be finished and meet with his critical approval before he will comment on its merits. But Hart has made an exception of the picture he is now filming in the Santa Cruz country. He is so sure that it will meet the exacting demands of Artcraft patrons that he is willing to tell something about it.

"The character of the star role is different from the peculiar type with which my name has been associated so conspicuously," said Hart. "Instead of a rugged Westerner I am going to play the part of 'Blue Blazes' Rawden, a lumberjack. The story, which is laid in the Great Woods, is replete with thrills and emotional episodes."

Edith Storey Feature Claims Great Russian Detail

"The Legion of Death," starring Edith Storey, which is announced by Metro Pictures Corporation as nearing completion at the West Coast studios of Metro, under the direction of Tod Browning, is said to be an unusually massive production and very elaborate in detail. The story is based by June Mathias on the historic fact that women have long been potent factors in Russian history.

Great care was exercised, it is said, in casting the characters, each being engaged after a careful study of the strong types needed for the parts. Director Browning asked to be supplied with real Russian men and women for the street and battle scenes.

"The Legion of Death" is described as a romance, with the revolution and other events as a background for the story.

"Within the Law" Catches on in Chicago Houses

"Within the Law," the Greater Vitagraph special blue ribbon feature which is now showing in many Chicago theatres, has received the same degree of praise from the critics of the Chicago press as it did from those in New York and other cities where it has been shown, according to late reports from Vitagraph.

"Within the Law," it will be recalled, was denied a permit in Chicago for more than five months and was only released after the Vitagraph company, in a legal battle directed by Albert E. Smith, president, and Walter W. Irwin, general manager of the distributing branch of the company, had twice defeated Major Funkhouser and the police department of Chicago in the courts.

Universal "Rainbow" Pictures Help Lodge Meeting

Carl Laemmle, president of Universal, has received from Supreme Court Justice Victor J. Dowling, in his capacity as president of the Friendly Sons of St. Patrick, a lengthy letter of appreciation on the motion pictures which Universal made showing the training and life of the Rainbow Division at Camp Mills, Mineola, L. I.

"Through the courtesy of Robert Burns," the letter remarked, "the pictures were presented at the quarterly meeting of the Friendly Sons of St. Patrick at the Hotel Astor. We had the largest meeting in the history of the society, which, in itself, was an indication of the interest taken by members in the announced display. I think it would be a good thing for the country and for every community if these pictures were given the widest possible publicity, as they will tend to increase the appreciation of what our soldiers are doing to fit themselves for the ordeal, and at the same time inspire the public to additional sacrifices on their behalf."

William Fox Companies Require Whole Country as Studio

Both Coasts and Territory Between Have Been Requisitioned, and Hollywood Studio Still Proves Too Small—During Year Sixty-six Features Were Made in West and Thirty-nine in East

William Farnum as Jean Valjean in Fox's "Les Miserables" Steals a Loaf of Bread and Goes to Prison

THE William Fox property at Sunset boulevard and Western avenue, Hollywood, is cited, in a summary of the year's work in Fox Studios, as material evidence that it takes a whole lot to make motion pictures.

This particular lot now contains twenty acres, having been enlarged within the last year from a fifteen-acre tract. But it is apparently not yet big enough to hold the Fox activities. The whole country round, as far north as Portland, is utilized for work on locations, and, in addition, the corporation has five studios in New Jersey, another in Kingston, Jamaica, and its companies, at times crowded out even from these broad-ranging grounds, rove extensively along the Atlantic coast from Maine to Florida.

Subjects Pass Century Mark

Fox made 105 pictures during 1917—thirty-nine on the East and sixty-six in the West. The sixty-six included all of the comedies, most of the Standard Pictures and some of the special features. The whole twenty acres at Hollywood was utilized for these, which means six stages were kept busy and the grounds generally dotted with the 500 to 1,000 persons regularly employed there. Of the six stages, three are of the open-air type.

Big things are done at Hollywood, but even the best equipped studios are not without limitations. Frank Lloyd realized this when he took William Farnum's company to the San Francisco water front and then to Catalina Island for scenes in "When a Man Sees Red." J. Gordon Edwards realized it when he invaded northern Mexico to photograph atmosphere and Theda Bara in several Bara super-pictures. Henry Lehrman realized it when he temporarily left Hollywood, as he frequently did, to give his theatrical cut-ups opportunity to absorb sunshine on the beaches at Venice, Santa Monica, Ocean Park and Redondo, at Mt. Hollywood and along the Californian palisades. C. M. and S. A. Franklin realized it when they elected big sets on Palisades road, along the shore, for Francis Carpenter and Virginia Lee Corbin in "Treasure Island."

Hollywood Changes Much

But some of the big things of the last year also have been done on the Hollywood lot. Parisian streets have been built three times—for "A Tale of Two Cities," for "The Scarlet Pimpernel" and for "Du Barry." Director Edwards built the street of a Russian city there for "The Rose of Blood," Lehrman built a New York street for the comedies and there have been Japanese streets, Arabian streets and streets of Nashville constructed and demolished since 1917 dawned on the Golden West. And there also was built the imposing Roman forum which furnished the background for historic and thrilling scenes in the Edwards-directed "Cleopatra."

In this environment have Theda Bara and William Farnum worked during part of the year. Here also have been the Carpenter-Corbin company and the one headed by Georgie Stone and Gertrude Messinger. Gladys Brockwell has spent the year on the lot making Fox special features and four comedy companies have worked here almost continuously. Latterly, two of the new stars in drama, Tom Mix and Jewel Carmen, also have ridden and walked and achieved on the Fox reservation.

Jersey Studios Crowded

The thirty-nine productions made in the East have kept the Fox New Jersey studios crowded to capacity and running over. In fact, many times during the year, it has been necessary for a company to do all of its work on locations before beginning work indoors merely because there was no studio immediately available. One company—that headed by Annette Kellermann, making "Queen of the Sea"—spent all summer and part of the fall out-of-doors at Bar Harbor, Me.

Nearly all of the companies working in the East have been away from New York for varying periods. Buzzard's Bay, Delaware Water Gap, the Adirondacks, Long Island, Trenton, Florida, numerous military camps in New York, New Jersey and Pennsylvania, and other localities offering special attractions to motion picture directors have been visited by William Fox companies. William Farnum utilized his own Long Island farm for some of the scenes in "The Heart of a Lion," and George Walsh has done enough visiting at military camps to have learned most of the routine between reveille and taps. Sonia Markova has journeyed both to the Water Gap and Cape Cod, and several of the companies have made trips to the mountains and elsewhere along the Eastern seaboard.

Metro Starts "Revenge" at Hollywood Studio

Production has been begun at Metro's West Coast Studio, in Hollywood, on "Revenge," the next starring vehicle of Edith Storey. "Revenge" is a picturization of the novel, "Hearts Steadfast," by Edward Moffatt, which has been adapted for Miss Storey's use by H. P. Keeler.

Tod Browning will direct Miss Storey in "Revenge," which will be a five-act Metro wonder play presented by B. A. Rolfe, Metro's Western representative. It is a story Western in thought and locale, bringing the star back to the sort of picture which first endeared her to the pubilc.

A strong cast is being selected by Mr. Rolfe and Mr. Browning to support Miss Storey. Heading the list of those already engaged is Wheeler Oakman. Another well known player who will appear in Miss Storey's support is Ralph Lewis.

Bushman—Bayne Start New Comedy-Melodrama

"The Woolworth Diamonds" Is Being Directed by William S. Davis from Adaptation by Le Vino—James J. Dunne Assists

Francis X. Bushman and Beverly Bayne Have Completed "Red, White and Blue Blood" for Metro

FRANCIS X. BUSHMAN and Beverly Bayne, Metro's co-stars, have begun work at the Metro Studio on a comedy-melodrama called "The Woolworth Diamonds." The story is from the pen of Hugh Weir, and has been adapted for the use of Mr. Bushman and Miss Bayne by Albert Shelby Le Vino

Mr. Bushman's part is that of a young multi-millionaire, Gerry Simpson, and Miss Bayne plays Virginia Blake, a girl reporter. Some of the comedy arises from the fact that the girl reporter has a perfect horror of the idle rich, and then is thrown much against her will into the society of young Simpson, to whom money is absolutely no object. But the melodrama is provided by entirely different means. That is where "The Woolworth Diamonds" come in. New York life in all its phases will be mirrored in "The Woolworth Diamonds." There will be society scenes, charity bazaar scenes, scenes among tenement dwellers, and other varicolored pictures of the life of the metropolis.

William S. Davis will direct the new Bushman-Bayne feature, having completed his work with Emily Stevens in the Metro picture, "Alias Mrs. Jessop," which will have an early release. James J. Dunne will assist Mr. Davis in directing. Mr. Dunne was formerly assistant to Frank Reicher, working with him in the preparation of Ethel Barrymore's forthcoming Metro feature, "An American Widow," but as Mr. Reicher will for the present be engaged in the cutting of this picture and in choosing his next vehicle from a large number of manuscripts, "Jimmy" Dunne is released for the time being to Mr. Davis. Rudolph J. Bergquist is the cameraman who will photograph "The Woolworth Diamonds."

Hugh Jeffrey has been engaged to play the part of Rogers, the valet.

Loew Books Goldwyn-Distributed Production

"For the Freedom of the World" Said to Be Meeting with Much Favor Throughout Country—Some Houses Rebook Feature

EXHIBITORS in all parts of North America are said to be showing enthusiasm over the success of the Goldwyn distributed patriotic production, "For the Freedom of the World," which in scores of towns and cities, it is claimed, has overcome wartime depression and crowded houses to capacity.

Marcus Loew booked the production on sight during the past week for his entire chain of theatres, and the Loew aides, who previously had seen the picture and reported enthusiastically on it, have arranged to present the attraction backed by a special advertising appropriation of their own.

In Youngstown and Canton, O., Feiber and Shea have played the attraction, it is reported, to house capacity in each city and were so pleased with the drawing power and appeal of the picture that they had arranged for rebookings for all of their houses. From the day of its first presentation in the Victoria theatre, Philadelphia, "For the Freedom of the World" proved itself to be the kind of attraction that the public wants.

In a letter to Goldwyn Distributing Corporation, Feiber & Shea said: "Capt. Edwin Bower Hesser's 'For the Freedom of the World' is the biggest box-office life saver of the hour. In the face of strong competition and the prevailing general slump in picture receipts, this feature of yours has completely smashed all of our attendance records in Youngstown and Canton for the current calendar year. I have seriously considered breaking our ironclad rule against playing repeats and arranging for return engagements in all of our towns."

Even before this letter reached Goldwyn, Feiber and Shea had rebooked this production.

Christie Company Stars Bobby Vernon in Comedies

It was announced from the West Coast last week that Bobby Vernon, star of many light comedies, is now under contract with the Christie Film Company, and has already finished a number of scenes of his first picture, in which he is assisted by Ethel Lynne.

Vernon's latest activities before the camera prior to joining Christie were with Triangle-Keystone, for whom he appeared in "Nick of Time Baby" and other laugh-makers.

Atlanta Manager Plays Jewel Feature to Success

So successful was a recent engagement of the Jewel feature, "Come Through," at the Criterion theatre in Atlanta, Ga., that the manager of the theatre wrote a letter, praising the production, to the Jewel branch in Atlanta, and the document has been made public by Jewel news service.

The letter said, in part:

"We have just completed a three days' engagement of the Jewel production 'Come Through.' This picture was positively one of the best 'dark horses' we have ever played and we regret very much that you were unable to let us have the feature for a week's engagement, as it would undoubtedly have given us splendid results.

"Contracts for your other Jewel productions, 'The Co-Respondent,' 'Sirens of the Sea' and 'The Man Without a Country' have been mailed you properly signed. The writer has looked at the above pictures and they bear the earmarks of money getters. Any time that you have a production that stacks up with 'Come Through' and 'The Co-Respondent' we will greatly appreciate it if you will arrange a screening of same and give the writer a chance to bid for the first showing in Atlanta.

(Signed) "W. C. PATTERSON."

Scardon Directs "Other Man" for Vitagraph Release

It was announced last week by C. J. Giegerich that Paul Scardon has started the production of "The Other Man" at the Eastern studios of the Vitagraph Company. It is said the subject demands the utmost in directorial versatility, as the action runs from wealthy homes to tenement hovels and calls for a character study of civilized polish under a coating of poverty's crudities.

According to the Giegerich announcement, "The Other Man" should give Mr. Scardon an opportunity to display, from the directorial angle, his fund of knowledge of the art of make-up that gained admiration while he played character roles before the camera.

It is said that make-up will play an important part in the success of "The Other Man" for the other man is really the same man who wins the love of a woman in two decidedly different spheres of life without her knowledge that it is the same person that has attracted her both times.

Holmes Visits Arizona for Exteriors of "Ruggles"

Taylor Holmes, it was announced this week by Essanay, is in Arizona with his "Ruggles of Red Gap" company, shooting the outdoor scenes of this George K. Spoor special.

"Ruggles of Red Gap" is said to afford Holmes an unusual opportunity to assume a characterization he is naturally adapted for, that of an impressionable English valet in the United States Western country. With Mr. Holmes are such supporting characters as Lawrance D'Orsay and Frederick Burton, both of whom appeared in the original stage presentation; Lillian Drew and Virginia Valli, Essanay stars.

Tucker Devises Moonlight Effects in Marsh Feature

The night effects secured in Goldwyn pictures by a photographic novelty devised and introduced by George Loane Tucker are said to be varied in Mae Marsh's forthcoming subject, "The Cinderella Man." The scene is on the water in the bay at Naples, Italy, at night. It is just a short, atmospheric note in the action, but it is said to afford a thrill in giving the effect of the moon passing from under a cloud.

The scene does not show the moon. Mr. Tucker contends that there is much more to be gained by suggestion than by representation, so all that is seen is just the light of the moon, bathing everything in the picture. First the scene is deep blue with the moon under the cloud, and then suddenly, as the moon comes out, everything is illumined by a bright light.

Hayakawa Company Starts Home from Hawaiian Islands

A cablegram received at the Lasky studio in Hollywood a few days ago from George Melford, director of "Hidden Pearls," starring Sessue Hayakawa, indicated that the company had left the Hawaiian Islands and was on its way back to the States.

Mr. Melford stated, also, that besides filming all the exterior scenes of "Hidden Pearls," they had secured about 10,000 feet of film on the funeral ceremonies of the late Queen Liliuokalani of Hawaii.

The fact that 10,000 feet of celluloid have been exposed, is considered evidence that no detail of the strange native rites, accompanying the funeral, was omitted, and the result will undoubtedly be a film of genuine historic value as well as great general interest.

Brenon Adds Hickman to Forbes-Robertson Cast

Alfred Hickman has been added to the cast of "The Passing of the Third Floor Back," with Sir Johnston Forbes-Robertson, it was announced last week by the Herbert Brenon department of exploitation. Coincidental with this bit of news it was announced that the production is progressing rapidly at the Brenon studio on Hudson Heights.

Mr. Hickman is cast in the role of the slavey's father, a part which, it is said, has been developed in the screen adaptation of Jerome K. Jerome's play. In "The Fall of the Romanoffs" Hickman created favorable comments through his characterization of the deposed Czar.

Pearl White Sends Message of Cheer to Soldiers

Pearl White, the serial star of Pathe, who recently finished her work in "The Fatal Ring," has been selected by a practically unanimous vote of the personnel of the Marine Corps of Uncle Sam's fighting men to send them a message of Christmas cheer. This message will go to the men of the Marine Corps in the training camps in America, in the coast forts and to the boys, who were the first to carry the United States flag to France when we declared war against Germany.

Jack Pickford, in "Tom Sawyer," a Paramount Feature, Is Said to Be Just the Sort of Boy Mark Twain Had in Mind When He Wrote the Story

Paramount Helps to Perpetuate 1917 Spirit

Produces Feature Written by Judge Willis Brown, Called "Spirit of '17" and Starring Jack Pickford—Taylor Directs

ACCORDING to an announcement this week from the Famous Players-Lasky offices, Paramount, is considering that in years hence the populace will recall the spirit of 1917, has come to the conclusion that it is no more than right and natural, that the 1917 spirit should be reflected in the literature and drama and upon the screen today.

For this purpose Paramount plans to release shortly a photoplay by Judge Willis Brown, under the title of "The Spirit of '17," bearing a double meaning—the spirit of youth and the spirit of the year.

By what is said to be a masterly conception of the author of this forthcoming Paramount picture, the spirit of '61 is also recalled, when the veterans of the Civil War, inmates of a soldiers' home, gray bearded, with trembling limbs but hearts of oak, again rally to the call, voiced by a youth imbued with that same spirit, renewed in the present year.

Jack Pickford will play the role of the young hero who saves from rioters a copper mining town, using the veterans, from whose shoulders, momentarily the blight of age has fallen, to hold the fort till the real troops arrive.

The picture was scenarioized by Julia Crawford Ivers and is directed by William D. Taylor.

Pending the release of this production Jack Pickford is appearing in the Paramount screen version of Mark Twain's immortal "Tom Sawyer." This picture, released December 10, was also put into shape for the screen by Julia Crawford Ivers, who declared that it was a labor of love. William D. Taylor also directed "Tom Sawyer." The second film, "Huck and Tom," or "The Further Adventures of Tom Sawyer" will be released in the new year after "The Spirit of '17."

Pathe Engages Ernest Warde to Direct Frank Keenan

IT was announced last week from the office of Pathe Exchange, Inc., that Ernest C. Warde, son of the English actor, Frederick Warde, and who is a producer with many successes to his credit, has been engaged by J. A. Berst, vice president and general manager of Pathe, as director for Frank Keenan, who recently joined Pathe.

Mr. Warde, it is said, has made final arrangements for the production of "Simeon's Shadow," from the novel by Elizabeth Lee, the scenario for which was written by Gilson Willets. This picture affords Frank Keenan, it is claimed, one of the most dominant parts he has ever had, that of the head of a great railroad system reminiscent of such men as Hill and Harriman.

The method which Mr. Warde and Mr. Willets are pursuing in the preparation of this picture is said to be a splendid example of the kind of practical co-operation between director and scenario writer that makes for a closely knit, well developed picture. The two men have worked together from the beginning, Mr. Warde suggesting methods of development which he thought would be effective, and Mr. Willets incorporating these suggestions in what is looked upon by Pathe as an almost perfect script.

Big things are expected of this combination. Ernest Warde is a man of long experience in the motion pcture business and Keenan is also well known to the stage.

Frank Crane Joins Madame Petrova as Director

Comes Direct from Goldwyn Following Completion of Mary Garden Feature—Begins Immediately on "The Life Mask"

ANNOUNCEMENT was made this week by Frederick L. Collins, president of the Petrova Pictures Company, that arrangements were consummated on Saturday whereby Frank Crane will direct the third starring vehicle of Madame Olga Petrova.

The selection of the well-known producer, who will commence work this week on the third production of the Petrova Picture Company, was made only after a series of lengthy consultations between Madame Petrova and the officials of her organization. This was due to the desire on the part of the star to insure the high standard of excellence which has been set in the making of her first two subjects, which were produced by George Irving and Larry Trimble, respectively.

In choosing Mr. Crane for this task, Madame Petrova and Frederick L. Collins feel that they have assured the exhibitors of the country the production of a feature which should be a worthy running-mate to "Daughter of Destiny," scheduled for release on December 23.

Mr. Crane will start work on "The Life Mask," which is the title of the vehicle chosen for the third picture, immediately. His services were secured following his completion of the Goldwyn production of "Thais," starring Mary Garden.

Mr. Crane has been associated with the Vitagraph, Universal and other film organizations. He is responsible for the World Film version of "Old Dutch," which scored a success, and more latterly produced the first Paramount serial entitled, "Who Is Number One?" starring Kathleen Clifford and many others of note.

"Seven Swans" Promises Unusual Fairy Tale

Is Expected by Paramount to Be One of Most Timely and Interesting Holiday Features—Marguerite Clark Starred

IT has remained for the motion picture to afford the medium best suited to the elfin drama—one of the finest examples ever offered, according to Paramount, will be "The Seven Swans," in which Marguerite Clark, one of the daintiest of players, will star for Paramount during the present month.

Not alone children, but men and women of every age, will no doubt delight in this picture, because it is said to possess enough human interest and charm, aside from its fairy qualities, to render it enthralling; and, besides, what grown-up does not enjoy a fairy story now and then, just for relaxation?

It will be notable, according to Paramount, for its beauty of investiture, costume and ensemble effects; it will be exceptional because J. Searle Dawley has constructed a charming story—adapted it, rather—and directed it with consummate skill. It will be photographically perfect, because of the lighting facilities and the skilful work of Lyman Broening.

Above all, it should be delightful because it has as its central figure Marguerite Clark.

Work on "The Seven Swans" is drawing to a conclusion. The company has been in the South, getting "summer" scenes. Great indoor sets have been prepared; king's palaces and gardens have arisen, hundreds of gayly clad people of a land that never was, have taken part in the spectacle.

Miss Clark is satisfied that it will be a wonderful picture; she is said to be charmed at the opportunity of giving to the world a real bit of fantasy at Christmas tide. So there seems little doubt that "The Seven Swans" will constitute one of the most delightful offerings ever emanating from Paramount.

Nearly Lost Print Causes Triangle Considerable Worry

"PICTURE lost in transit" was the news received by Director Wyndham Gittens from the New York offices of the Triangle Film Corporation, a week after the shipment of his spectacular sea drama, "The Ship of Doom," from the Culver City studios. The announcement came as a climax to weeks of hard work with ships and small boats in midocean, amid difficulties which sorely tried the patience of the entire company; and the thought that all this labor had been in vain cast a pall of gloom over all concerned.

There were days of frantic telegraphing and anxiety in every express office from Los Angeles to New York. The missing negative and sample print had been specially forwarded owing to unavoidable delays which made the picture late for release; but in spite of the unusual precautions all trace of the express box had been lost. A peculiar circumstance was that another Triangle picture, expressed at the same time as "The Ship of Doom," arrived safely at the home office.

Just as all hope had been abandoned the missing package was located in Chicago and rushed to the Triangle factory so that the prints might be delivered to exchanges on schedule time, and everybody breathed freely once more.

Billie Burke Begins "Eve's Daughter" for Screen

Billie Burke, it was announced last week by Famous Players-Lasky, has commenced work on "Eve's Daughter" for the screen, as a Paramount release. The subject was recently presented on the legitimate stage with Grace George in the star role. James Kirkwood is the director.

In Miss Burke's production of "The Land of Promise," released by Paramount on December 10, Tom Meighan has the lead opposite the star.

Lyons and Moran Begin New Comedies on West Coast

Eddie Lyons and Lee Moran have returned to Universal City from their extended visit to New York and are expected to begin at once the production of one-reel parlor comedies embodying refinement with their inspirations to laughter. Capt. Leslie T. Peacock, widely known as a scenarioist, has been engaged to write especially for "the boys" and will provide them with a line of gloom-killers designed for high class laughs. The Lyons-Moran comedies will be released under a special brand, the title of which is still to be selected.

The vacation trip of Universal's brace of comedians, included a trip to their home town, after their visit in New York where they consulted with Carl Laemmle, president of Universal, and decided upon the plan for comedies that will be carried out in the immediate future. It is expected that "the boys" will take a new hold upon the popularity they have gained during their long service as Universal comedians.

Constance Talmadge Ignores Cold to Finish Feature

In order to hasten the date of her departure for California, Constance Talmadge, Select star, has been working steadily through zero temperature in the lightest of summer apparel, according to reports this week. Her next picture, "The Studio Girl," calls for settings along the bleak Gloucester coast, and with time pressing fast on their heels, Miss Talmadge and her director, Charles Giblyn, have rushed production ahead without waiting for warmer days.

"The Studio Girl" has been adapted for the screen by Paul West from the comedy, "The Runaway," by Pierre Veber and Henri de Gorsse, and will be distributed through Select exchanges.

Pathe Plans to Surpass Old Successes During New Year

Under Guidance of J. A. Berst, Record of Fading Year Is But Stepping Stone to Greater Heights, and New Standard Is Aimed At—Serials Prove Their Worth as Put Over on the Pathe Plan

Bessie Love, Winsome Star of Pathe Plays

AS the year draws to a close, Pathe points with pride to its long list of achievements in the motion picture world for 1917, and with these to spur them on the management of this leading company has set even higher marks for 1918. Under the plans of J. A. Berst, vice-president and general manager, the record of the past twelve months is merely the stepping stone to greater heights.

The greatest addition to the Pathe productions for the year were probably the Pathe Plays, which will come, it is expected, to their full fruition during 1918.

Serials Cut Wide Swath

Serials played an important part in the Pathe program of 1917 and the successes achieved during the year in this line were: "Pearl of the Army," featuring Pearl White; "Patria," with Mrs. Irene Castle; "Mystery of the Double Cross," with Mollie King; "The Neglected Wife," with Ruth Roland; "The Fatal Ring," with Pearl White; "The Seven Pearls," with Mollie King, and "The Hidden Hand," the Four Star serial, having in its cast Doris Kenyon, Sheldon Lewis, Arline Pretty and Mahlon Hamilton. Early next year these will be followed, it is announced, with "The House of Hate," by the authors of "The Hidden Hand," in which Pearl White will again be starred. Following that will be a mystery serial founded on Guy de Taramond's novel, "The Mystery of Lucien Delorme." Pathe's scenario department has three other serials in work.

In line with Pathe's policy of picturizing classics, the management of this concern released during the year "The Vicar of Wakefield," the English classic by Oliver Goldsmith; "Crime and Punishment," by Dostoyefsky, the Russian novelist; "The Woman in White," by Wilkie Collins, and the re-issue of "Les Miserables," Victor Hugo's immortal masterpiece. Plans for the 1819 program along this line contain the story of India by Rudyard Kipling, "The Naulahka." Antonio Moreno, Warner Oland, Doraldino, the dancer, Marie Alden and Helene Chadwick are among the stars in "The Naulahka" cast.

Russian Pictures Introduced

An achievement was the introduction to the American public of the Russian pictures by Pathe. These pictures are considered masterpieces from every angle. They were made under the supervision of the Russian Government, have in their casts stars of the Russian theatre and have for their subjects stories of Russian writers. Beginning with "The Painted Doll," released in October, 1917, there followed "The Queen of Spades" and "Her Sister's Rival." These in turn will be followed during the coming year by at least one of these Russian pictures every month.

On the entry of the United States into the war, the interest of Americans centered on what was being done by the Allies, and to satisfy this interest Pathe made arrangements with the British and French Governments to release the official war pictures, which were taken by cameramen acting under the direction of army officers, and which are being taken to get a pictorial history of this war. When the tanks made their seemingly miraculous appearance on the battlefield and achieved their successes, the interest and curiosity of the American public was in this queer fighting machine. This curiosity was satisfied by Pathe when it released the Official Government pictures of the tanks. "The Retreat of the Germans at the Battle of the Somme, Ancre and Arras," were all thrown on the screen to show Americans what war really is.

Strong Program Planned

On the 1918 program of the Pathe Plays, in addition to Mrs. Castle, are Frank Keenan, Fannie Ward, Bryant Washburn and Bessie Love. Among the pictures Fannie Ward will appear in are: "For Sale," from a play by Fred Jackson; "Innocent" and "The Yellow Ticket," by Michael Morton. Fred Jackson, author of "For Sale," also wrote "A Full House" and "A Pair of Sixes" and "Losing Eloise."

Bryant Washburn will appear in "Kidder and Ko," story by John W. Grey and scenario by Charles Sarver, and "Twenty-one," by George Randolph Chester, scenario by Charles Sarver.

Frank Keenan will be seen in "Simeon's Shadow," by Elizabeth Lee, and "Loaded Dice," by Hillary A. Clark. The scenario for "Loaded Dice" is by Gilson Willets. "Simeon's Shadow" will be directed by Ernest Warde, producer of "The Vicar of Wakefield"; "Hinton's Double" and other hits of the past year, who has been signed by Pathe.

Henry Kitchell Webster's "The Painted Scene," will be a vehicle for Bessie Love. It is being produced under the working title "Spring of the Year."

Cyrus Townsend Brady's "The Cliff Dweller's Pot" and Sir William Young's "A Japanese Nightingale," have also been bought and will be made into pictures. Three A. H. Woods plays, in addition to "Innocent" and "The Yellow Ticket," which will be presented by Pathe in 1918, are "Wanted—Jim Bennett," "The Power of Money" and "The Other Woman."

Comedies Also Prosper

The Lonesome Luke and the Harold Lloyd comedies have been drawing cards, and during 1918 the Harold Lloyd comedies will continue to furnish laughter for America. Toto, the Hippodrome clown, came under the Pathe banner this Fall, and his comedies will be one of the features of Pathe's well rounded 1918 program.

In the news field Pathe, with the Hearst-Pathe News, is among the leaders.

Animated cartoons are considered a source of joy to thousands, and among the best of the animated cartoons are those made by the International by artists whose names are a household word in practically every home in the country.

"We let the year 1917 speak for itself," said Mr. Berst in talking over Pathe achievements for the twelve months, "but the only thing we can promise the exhibitor and the public is that 1918 will eclipse 1917 from every standpoint."

Vera Colodna Has the Title Role in Pathe's Russian Art Film, "Her Sister's Rival"

Petrova Chooses "Life Mask" as Third Feature

Is Adapted from Novel of Same Name, and Is Said to Give New Twist to the Eternal Triangle Theme—Name of Author Unknown

Mme. Olga Petrova's First Feature, "A Daughter of Destiny," Is Slated for a Showing at the Rialto

IN accordance with the custom which she inaugurated at the formation of the Petrova Picture Company, Madame Olga Petrova has personally chosen the story for the third starring vehicle in which she will appear during the forthcoming year. The story selected is an adaptation of "The Life Mask," a novel of which the name of the author is enshrouded in mystery, inasmuch as "The Life Mask" was written and published without divulging the name of the man or woman responsible for it.

Madame Petrova has chosen Mrs. L. Case Russell, the well known photoplaywright, to adapt and scenarioize "The Life Mask." Mrs. Russell is responsible for the screen version of the second Petrova vehicle, which has recently been completed under the direction of Larry Trimble.

The latest work of the anonymous writer of "To M. L. G." offers Petrova, it is said, wide scope for the display of her peculiar talents and an entirely original treatment has been given "the eternal triangle" theme which forms a prominent part of the play.

Petrova assumes the role of the beautiful daughter of a prominent judge whose wife's extravagances force the girl into a marriage abhorrent and distasteful. Through a series of events and dramatic climaxes the story climbs to a denouement of a great social evil, in which the unfortunate girl is freed of the misalliance which fate had forced upon her and finds happiness in the love of her former affianced suitor.

In "The Life Mask" Madame Petrova will essay a role said to be entirely away from any of her former characteristics.

The "Naulahka" Claims Carefully Chosen Cast

Doraldina, the Dancer, Makes Debut in Pictures as Vampire, and Antonio Moreno Is the Hero—Warner Oland Is the Villain

THE announcement by Pathe of Rudyard Kipling's widely read novel of romance and adventure, "The Naulahka," reveals a very big and most carefully chosen cast.

Doraldina, whose film debut it marks, gained publicity when she first appeared in Hawaiian dances. With eukelele accompaniment and all that goes with it, she appeared in several Broadway shows at the same time.

Antonio Moreno, who has the male lead, was formerly with Vitagraph, and appeared in several pictures for that company that were widely popular. Prior to that he was on the legitimate stage.

Warner Oland, who plays the East Indian Prince opposite Doraldina, is considered one of the best "heavies" on the screen. He played Baron Huroki in "Patria" and Carslake in "The Fatal Ring." Mr. Oland comes of Viking and Russian stock, having been born in Sweden, it is said. His first dramatic appearance was in "The Christian," by Hall Caine.

Helene Chadwick recently signed a new contract, and her first part under it is in this all star cast of what is considered George Fitzmaurice's masterpiece. Her first picture was an Astra-Pathe Gold Rooster Play, and she made a hit in Fitzmaurice's "Blind Man's Luck."

J. H. Gilmour, who as president of a great American railroad completes the list of principals in this picture, is an actor who aside from his success on the screen has a reputation in the American theatre, having played with such stars as Adelaide Neilson, Lester Wallack, E. M. Holland, Maurice Barrymore and Mrs. Patrick Campbell. He was stage director at the Castle Square theatre, Boston.

Mary Alden, who plays the first wife of the prince, has earned, according to Pathe, the title "The best character actress on the screen." Her work as the mulatto wife of the stoneman in "The Birth of a Nation," and in other Griffith productions, has earned praise on all sides.

De Mille-Artcraft Feature Gets Locale on River

Artcraft Pictures Corporation announced last week that the first of the Cecil B. De Mille series of Artcraft super-productions will be staged around the Mississippi River and the entire producing organization will leave California for that territory shortly. Jeanie MacPherson is working on the script of the production, which is to be an adaptation of P. P. Sheehan's, "The Whispering Chorus," a story of the Middle West.

While the De Mille company is away the interior sets for the production will be erected at the Lasky Studio in Hollywood. The technical department has already commenced work on these sets which will be completed by the time the company returns from the Mississippi location. Mr. De Mille and all who have read "The Whispering Chorus" claim that it is the most gripping and unusual story yet produced at the Lasky Studio.

Vivian Martin Romps Through Western Paramount

Vivian Martin, always most at home in a picture that enables her to display the natural vivacity which is claimed as one of her chief charms, is said to have a character that might have been written expressly for her in "The Fair Barbarian," adapted by Edith M. Kennedy.

Robert Thornby is directing Miss Martin in this production and has surrounded her with a cast said to be of superior quality. The fact that Miss Martin plays the part of an American girl from the Far West, gives an idea of the sort of work she will be called upon to do and also suggests the many situations which develop as a result of her advent in the staid little English village of Slowbridge. Of course, Octavia (Miss Martin) upsets the equanimity of the village as well as of her Aunt Belinda, played by Jane Wolfe, and among other exploits, throws a brick through the memorial window in the local church. A quaint love romance develops and while for a time it seems that she is to capture an aristocratic British captain, her breeziness finally proves too much for him and a former sweetheart, with whom she has quarreled, gains the prize.

Ashton Dearholt Appears in Carmel Myers Feature

Following an engagement of more than two years with the American Film Company, Ashton Dearholt recently joined the Bluebird forces and is playing a leading role opposite Carmel Myers in "The Green Seal," which is being produced as a program feature under the direction of Stuart Paton. While with the American he was featured in a number of productions and played juvenile leads in several of William Russell's pictures. He appeared opposite Mary Miles Minter in "Charity Castle" and Juliette Day in "The Calendar Girl." More recentiy he played one of the principal roles with Jack Pickford in "The Spirit of 1917" for the Morosco company.

Mr. Dearbolt is an all-round athlete and before entering the photoplay field was a racing driver. His athletic training is being put to good use in "The Green Seal" for he is called upon to do some fight scenes and other strenuous stunts.

Studio Repast Serves Double Purpose in Feature

George Ridgwell, director of the O. Henry holiday story, "Whistling Dick's Christmas Stocking," for release by General Film, recently gave a concrete example of his resourcefulness when it was noted that a principal scene of the picture is a dinner party.

Inasmuch as the picture requires no snow because of its Southern setting, the burden of providing the Christmas atmosphere rests upon the dinner scene. When it came time for the cameraman to shoot, Director Ridgewell announced that luncheon engagements were off for the day, and the filming of the actual dinner scene was delayed until noon time, when the group of players was told that the Christmas dinner was to be both work and their luncheon.

Charleston Draws Companies South for Exterior Scenes

According to announcements this week from the motion picture secretary of the Chamber of Commerce of Charleston, S. C., that city is proving a powerful magnet for producing companies. A World-Brady company under the direction of Harley Knowles and with Madge Evans as the star, made a flying trip to Charleston recently for some scenes in Magnolia Gardens.

The American Feature Film Corporation, Inc., is also expected to visit the South Carolina city for a period of about ten weeks, on historical locations for "The Rise and Fall of the Confederacy." The question of extras for several battle scenes has been solved by the fact that there are two military schools at Charleston, with over a thousand students well trained.

Paramount Selects Well-Known Story for New Feature

For the new Paramount feature in which Ann Pennington will be starred, and which is expected to be put into production immediately, a well known story, by an author whose works have been widely read, has been selected. Paramount insists that few women authors have achieved greater prominence that Alice Hegan Rice, who wrote "Mrs. Wiggs of the Cabbage Patch" and "Calvary Alley," the latter of which is the one chosen for Ann Pennington.

The character portrayed by Miss Pennington in the story is one calling for, it is said, no little dramatic skill and the star's versatility and talents having been demonstrated in her several Paramount pictures, the latest of which is "The Antics of Ann," it is believed she will prove admirable in the role.

Douglas Fairbanks Plans Trip to South America

Bennie Zeidman, from his Selma avenue domicile in Hollywood, last week, issued an announcement in behalf of Douglas Fairbanks in which it was stated the latter is planning a trip to South America, where he hopes to film three new picture plays. He will be accompanied by his two directors, Allan Dwan and John Emerson; the photographic staff and a supporting cast.

According to the announcement the Fairbanks company expects to leave California the early part of the new year, going directly to Buenos Aires, where it is expected headquarters will be established. The trip is said to be the outcome of Fairbanks's desire to invade country which thus far has avoided the sharp eye of the camera.

In order that the stories will be strictly in keeping with the territory involved, the Fairbanks scenario department has issued a call for South American themes, it is said. Ruth Allen is scenario editor, and, under instructions, is specializing in the encouragement of young writers.

Jean De Ward and Peggy Betts in a Tense Moment in Herbert Brenon's Production of "Empty Pockets," from Rupert Hughes' Novel

Herbert Brenon New Feature Nears Completion

Producer Describes "Passing of Third Floor Back" as Feature Carrying Message of Hope and Optimism to People of America

"THE PASSING OF THE THIRD FLOOR BACK," in which Herbert Brenon is to present Sir Johnston Forbes-Robertson, is rapidly nearing completion, according to an announcement from the Brenon offices last week. It is said Sir Johnston will sail for England next week, and the production will be offered to the public shortly after the new year.

Mr. Brenon never had greater enthusiasm or confidence in a production. "It carries a message of hope and optimism which Americans—indeed people of every land—are seeking in these dark and troubled days. To me the message of loving kindness is the greatest message that can be borne to the world today, and that is the message of 'The Passing of the Third Floor Back.' I love the subject; it is full of sunshine, beauty and comedy, as well as drama of the finest order. I am firmly convinced that not only will it be the most artistic achievement of my career, but the most popular. It fulfills to the highest extent one of the greatest functions ever expected of the screen—to spread the message of hope to the masses.

"You may ask why I present a star production when I have so often expressed myself as against the star. I have no faith in the star system, I reiterate. But Sir Johnston is a vital part of 'The Passing of the Third Floor Back.' He has created and developed the role until he is part of the character. As well produce 'The Music Master' without David Warfield, as Jerome K. Jerome's drama without Sir Johnston.

"'The Passing of the Third Floor Back' paints the story of the rehabitation of the occupants of a shabby London boarding house through the coming of a mysterious Stranger, whose kindly smile and understanding words bring out the best in each and every one of them. I want it to be clearly understood that the kindly spirit which emanates from him and pierces the cold hearts of those with whom he comes in contact, is that same spirit which is in the hearts or souls of nine out of ten of every human being."

Goldwyn Names Mabel Normand's New Production

"Dodging a Million" Claims Exceptional Cast, with Tom Moore Opposite the Star—Hubert Druce and Armand Cortes Also Cast

FOLLOWING the injunction which in the Bible reads: "A good name is rather to be chosen than great riches," the Goldwyn Pictures Corporation had Mabel Normand's newest picture in course of production for fully a week before definitely deciding upon its title. Now, however, the matter has been settled, and Director George Loane Tucker has officiated at the christening of "Dodging a Million."

A singularly distinguished cast, according to announcement, has been assembled in support of Mabel Normand. Heading it is Tom Moore. His work with Mae Marsh in "The Cinderella Man," shortly to be released, gave such satisfaction to George Loane Tucker, who directed "The Cinderella Man," and to the Goldwyn executives, that Mr. Moore was promptly engaged for the masculine lead in the newest Mabel Normand production.

Another very well known figure in "Dodging a Million" will be Hubert Druce, long familiar to theatrical audiences, before whom he appeared in support of John Drew and others.

Others in the cast include Armand Cortes, J. Herbert Frank, Edwards Davis, Franklyn Hanna, Bernard Thorton, Joseph Smiley and Florence Ashbrooke.

Children Cast in Big Roles of "Blue Bird"

Tula Bella and Robin McDougall, Supported by Edwin E. Reed, Emma Lowry, William J. Gross, Florence Anderson and Others

Maurice Tourneur, Director, and Kiddies in Leading Roles of "The Blue Bird," An Artcraft Spectacle

ARTCRAFT announced this week that in its photo-production of Maurice Maeterlinck's "The Blue Bird," two children will portray the chief characters of Tytyl and Mytyl. These parts have been entrusted to little Robin McDougall and Tula Belle, two talented children whose experience before the motion picture camera is said to fit them well for this important work.

Supporting these two kiddies is a cast including Edwin E. Reed, Emma Lowry, William J. Gross, Florence Anderson, Edward Elkas, Katherine Bianchi, Lillian Cook, Gertrude McCoy, Lyn Donelson, Charles Ascot, Tom Corless, S. E. Potapovitch, Mary Kenedy, Eleanor Masters, Charles Craig and Sam Blum.

Under the direction of Maurice Tourneur, the French producer, work on the cinema adaptation of Maeterlinck's play is said to be rapidly progressing at Famous Players-Lasky Studio in Fort Lee, N. J. The largest set ever staged on the big stage of this plant has been completed, representing the graveyard which turns into a beautiful flower garden before the eyes of the audience. In order to produce this scene various novel mechanical devices have been installed at the studio under Mr. Tourneur's personal supervision. This entire set itself becomes a scene of great animation and plays an important part in the story. This set alone occupies practically the entire floor space of the studio. It is confidently expected by Artcraft that this scene will afford one of the greatest of the many surprises promised in the new Artcraft production.

On the speaking stage in this country and abroad, "The Blue Bird" was proclaimed a stupendous undertaking. With its screen presentation the various technical restrictions of the stage have been removed and it is thought that a more effective interpretation of Maeterlinck's subject will be possible.

Clifford Company Produces Five-Reel Subjects

Shorty Hamilton and Galaxy of Film Players Undertake Stories Combining Humor and Heart Interest—Released on State Rights Plan

THE success attending the private runs of the first two pictures produced by the W. H. Clifford Photo Play Company has induced Victor Kremer, the general manager, to contract for the production of one five-reel feature a month, it is announced. These features will be exploited on the state rights plan and a franchise for the entire twelve stories to be released on the first day of each month during 1918, will be open to negotiation.

These franchises are said to be available to the most progressive buyers in the various states who may either purchase outright or make arrangements upon a cooperative basis. These releases will no doubt prove of unusual value to all buyers and exhibitors because they introduce Shorty Hamilton, and by virtue of the five-part stories in which he will now appear it is expected he will add to his established clientele the additional patronage of all high-class picture houses.

Shorty Hamilton's first release is entitled "Denny from Ireland." The contrast between the pathos and ready wit of the lad in Ireland and his humorous escapades in the cattle country, are said to form a theme that for mingling of laughter and tears has seldom been surpassed upon the screen.

Six of the subjects to follow have already been decided upon and half of them already produced. They will be known as Shorty Hamilton in "The Snail," Shorty Hamilton in "A Prisoner of War," Shorty Hamilton in "In Society," "Shorty Hamilton in "A Texas Ranger," and Shorty Hamilton in "On Wall Street."

Through the state rights buyers and exhibitors, the motion picture public will be asked to vote its choice of other humorous stories which will be presented for solution through the medium of the press.

After thoroughly investigating market conditions for a period of two weeks, the W. H. Clifford Company came to the conclusion that Ernest Shipman was qualified to handle the exploitation of this series, both in the United States and abroad and a contract was accordingly entered into, whereby all business in connection with this series of pictures will emanate from Mr. Shipman's offices, 17 West Forty-fourth street.

Treasury Publicity Man Writes Marguerite Clark

Oscar A. Price, director of publicity of the Liberty Loan of 1917, for the Treasury Department of the United States, has written a letter of thanks to Marguerite Clark, star in Paramount pictures, who was instrumental in raising a large sum for the Second Liberty Loan at Cincinnati, Ohio, recently.

Tucker's Artistry Again Shows in McClure's "Mother"

The blending of comedy and pathos which George Loane Tucker has so skillfully intermingled in the making of the McClure picture, "Mother," has proven to be one of the strongest points in favor of the production, according to the various state right buyers who have witnessed a screening of the film. The story is said to be absolutely devoid of the usual sensationalism and artificial situations which are encountered in many of the present day feature pictures, and "Mother" relies solely upon its appeal to the heart and the humanness of the incidents which constitute the plot.

American Engages Will Ritchey as Scenario Manager

Will M. Ritchey, the scenario writer and editor, has been engaged by President S. S. Hutchinson to take charge of the American Film Company's scenario department, it was announced this week.

Mr. Ritchey's acquisition by the American Film Company promises increased activity in this department of the studio. "High class stories is the American's slogan," stated Mr. Hutchinson, "and I believe with Mr. Ritchie in charge, with orders not to consider the cost in choosing suitable vehicles for our stars, that the American stories in the future will be even better than in the past.

"Despite existing war conditions we are turning out five-reel productions, the kind which has been proven the public likes, and in order to maintain and even surpass our present high standard we must pay a great deal of attention to the story, for that is becoming more important each day."

Ralph Navarro Enlists in Navy

Ralph Navarro, for some time in the Pathe general offices and later assistant to Louis J. Gasnier, president of Astra, has enlisted in the navy, and is now stationed in Brooklyn.

Harry Carey and Molly Malone Breathing the Pure Ozone of the West in a Series of Universal Pictures Directed by Jack Ford

Metro Stars Viola Dana in Myrtle Reed Story

"A Weaver of Dreams," by Myrtle Reed, has been acquired by Metro Pictures Corporation for the use of Viola Dana, it is announced. Work on the production has already been commenced at the firm's West Coast studio.

"A Weaver of Dreams" is said to be a story of the heart, and Miss Dana is best in stories of this description.

The only player so far announced is Clifford Bruce, who will play opposite the star in the part of Carter Keith. Mr. Bruce is also Miss Dana's leading man in the forthcoming Metro wonderplay, "The Winding Trail," written by Katherine Kavanaugh and June Mathis, and he has an important part in the production of "Blue Jeans."

John H. Collins, who is directing "A Weaver of Dreams," has also directed "The Winding Trail," "Blue Jeans," and practically all Miss Dana's Metro productions.

Fairbanks Feature Discloses New Producing Unit

Douglas Fairbanks's next picture for Artcraft, "A Modern Musketeer," will disclose the initial efforts of a new producing unit for this star, consisting of Allan Dwan, director; Art Rosson, assistant director; Hugh McLung, head cameraman, and Keene Thompson, scenario writer. Under the plan of production recently inaugurated at the Fairbanks Studio, this unit will do every other picture, alternating with the John Emerson-Anita Loos staff.

Allan Dwan's direction of former Fairbanks successes speaks well for the merit of the forthcoming picture, Hugh McClung succeeds Victor Fleming as head cameraman. Fleming is now in the United States service, having recently been conscripted.

Essanay-Ade Fables Score with Various Exhibitors

The Essanay-George Ade fables in slang continue to score in the various theatres where shown, according to an announcement by General Film following the receipt of reports from all sections of the country.

An example of the place the two-reel features hold in the esteem of exhibitors is cited by General in the fact that Manager H. N. Azine, of the Thomas Furniss Rex theatre in Duluth, Minn., books them as regular features instead of "fill ins."

It is announced that exhibitors in all parts of the country continue to book the entire series of twelve "Fables in Slang" for extended engagements each week.

Ralph Kellard Quits the Screen Temporarily

Ralph Kellard, former Pathe star, who appeared in "The Shielding Shadow," "Pearl of the Army" and "The Precious Packet," announced last week that he did not expect to return to the screen until after the close of the legitimate season. He has been appearing in "Eyes of Youth" since August 22, at the Maxine Elliott theatre, in New York.

Ann Murdock, Who Appears in the Star Role of "The Impostor," an Empire All-Star Production Released Through Mutual

Empire All-Star Moves from Long Island to New York

THE Empire All-Star Corporation, it was announced this week, has moved its offices from the Mirror studios at Glendale, L. I., to the Empire Theatre Building, in New York, where it is now doing business without any traces of interruption.

One of the first official acts of the publicity bureau after the move was completed, was the announcement that "Her Sister," the Ethel Barrymore dramatic subject on the legitimate stage, is to be the next release, with Olive Tell in the star role which Miss Barrymore created on the dramatic stage. As in her other pictures made for Empire All-Star, Miss Tell is supported in "Her Sister" by David Powell, who has a role that is said to be particularly well suited to him.

Eileen Dennes, who contributed some graceful dancing in "The Unforeseen," Miss Tell's first picture, is cast as the younger sister in "Her Sister," while other members of the cast are Anita Rothe, Martha Dean, Charles Edwards and Sidney Blair.

The picture to follow "Her Sister," it was announced this week, will be "The Impostor," with Ann Murdock in the star role. David Powell, the tried and true leading man of the Empire All-Star forces, is again called upon to assume the part opposite the star. The cast also includes Lionel Adams, Charlotte Granville, Richie Ling and Eleanor Seyboldt.

John B. O'Brien directed Miss Tell in both "The Unforeseen" and "Her Sister," while Dell Henderson was in charge of "The Impostor."

Leopold D. Wharton Returns from Rest in Michigan

Leopold D. Wharton arrived in New York last week from the Battle Creek Sanitarium, where he had been for three weeks, resting up, at the advice of his physicians. He came East at this time in order that he might assist his brother Theodore, in the direction of the first episode of "The Eagle's Eye," the Whartons' new serial, written by William J. Flynn, chief of the United States Secret Service.

Mr. Wharton was met in New York by his brother, who has been in charge of the preliminary New York scenes, and with the principal characters in the production, they left for the Wharton Studios at Ithaca.

Triangle Directors Claim Excellent Results

Three New Pictures Started, Four Completed and Three Other Stories Under Way—Keeps Scenario Department on the Jump

Jack Livingston and Belle Bennett in the Triangle Play "Because of a Woman"

WITH three new pictures just started, four pictures completed, three other stories in various stages of completion and five directors waiting for new stories, the Triangle Culver City Studio is said to be keeping well up on the exceptional production schedule set by Vice-President and General Manager H. O. Davis. The scenario department is working overtime turning out the continuity for several well-known magazine stories, and several original stories are practically completed.

Director Gilbert P. Hamilton has started work on "Captain of His Soul." Working with Hamilton is an all-star cast, including William Desmond, Charles Gunn and Jack Richardson. Others who will appear in the picture are Mitzi Gould, a recent addition to the Triangle playing forces, Gene Burr, W. A. Jeffries and Walt Whitman.

"Three Godsons of Jeanette Gontreau," a screen adaptation from Francis W. Sullivan's story by the same name which recently appeared in the Ladies' Home Journal, has also been started with Director Raymond Wells handling the megaphone. Included in the cast are Allan Sears, Margery Wilson, Wilbur Higby, William V. Mong, Aaron Edwards and Anna Dodge.

The other new picture about to be started at the Triangle Studio is the screen adaptation of Randall Parrish's novel, "Keith of the Border," made by Alvin J. Neitz. Director Cliff Smith will direct this and Roy Stewart will be seen in the leading role. In it Stewart will appear as a Government scout on the frontier during the time of the Indian uprisings. There is said to be a gripping love theme that sharpens the interest.

Director Jack Dillon is now well under way on Olive Thomas' latest vehicle, a screen adaptation of Ida M. Evans' Red Book magazine story, "Limousine Life," which bears the same working title. In this picture some exceptionally beautiful costumes, prepared in the Triangle wardrobe in charge of Designer Peggy Hamilton, will be shown in the fashion shop, around which the action of the picture centers. Those who are supporting Olive Thomas include Joseph Bennett, Lee Phelps, Lillian West, Mary Warren, Virginia Foltz and Mildred Delfino.

Director Frank Borzage is making exceptional progress on a Western story, "The Gun Woman," in which Texas Guinan, has the title role.

The pictures completed within the past week and waiting shipment include "Framing Framers," a newspaper story featuring Charles Gunn, directed by H. D'Elba; "The Gown of Destiny," an adaptation from Earl Derr Bigger's Saturday Evening Post story; "Man Above the Law," featuring Jack Richardson, supported by Claire McDowell and Josie Sedgwick, and "Evidence," directed by Walter Edwards.

Essanay Completes New Series in Slap-Stick

Starts Work on Fifth Number of One-Reel Subjects Under Direction of Arthur Hotaling—Late Pictures Prove Popular

Little Mary McAlister Is An Apt Pugilist in "Sadie Goes to Heaven," An Essanay Perfection Release

ESSANAY announced this week that work has been completed on the fourth series of slap-stick comedies being produced by Director Arthur Hotaling, and that work has started on the fifth. Each picture is timed for a fifteen-minute run, and carries a farce theme along with the fun and action, it is said.

Amedee Rastrelli, French comedian, and Arthur Higson, a well-known English contortionist-comedian, are being featured in the productions along with a beauty squad, a number of whom worked with Max Linder in his Essanay productions.

For release December 15 is "Make Your Eyes Behave" and for December 22 is "Lunch." Previous pictures were: "Hard Luck," released November 24; "The General," released December 1, and "A Depot Romeo," released December 8. One of the series is being released each week through General Film.

Essanay's latest pictures are reported as proving popular with both exhibitors and patrons, and have been especially well treated by critics in newspapers and trade journals. Little Mary McAllister again has lived up to her box-office drawing power in "The Kill-Joy" and continues a stellar attraction in "Young Mother Hubbard" and "Pants."

Taylor Holmes' latest picture, a comedy drama, "The Small Town Guy," in which he portrays the role of a rube, has been received with favor by patrons, it is said, and the comedian is gaining new friends with each picture. Demands also are numerous for Mr. Holmes' earlier releases, "Efficiency Edgar's Courtship," "Fools for Luck" and "Two-Bit Seats."

"Gift o' Gab," a comedy-drama of college life, featuring Jack Gardner and Helen Ferguson is said to have proved an instant success.

Paralta Visitors Gain Good Impression at Studios

Those who have visited the Paralta Studios in Los Angeles are said to be astonished at the completeness of the equipment and the largeness of the various technical staffs. It would appear to the casual visitor that the studios are equipped in every way far more heavily than is the average studio for the production of motion picture drama in multiple reel. As a matter of fact they are, according to Paralta. But this heavy equipment is made necessary because of the strict requirements of those responsible for the artistic destinies of Paralta Plays. The chief executive of the organization and those in charge of the actual producing demand that the greatest attention be given to the reality of a scene. If the scene is to be filmed in an interior, no mere patchwork or flimsy structure will answer. The set must be heavy enough to give an air of extreme reality. It must be so constructed and dressed that it cannot be taken for anything except the real thing.

Hickman's Versatility Apparent in Paralta Plays

Among the players who appear at the Paralta Studios in Los Angeles in support of the stars, J. Warren Kerrigan, Bessie Barriscale and Henry B. Walthall is Howard Hickman, who is noted among the players and with the general public for the completeness of the illusions he creates and also their great number. Mr. Hickman may be seen in one picture as a most accomplished agent of evil, and in another as a young man whose appeal is primarily goodness of heart.

Mr. Hickman attributes his success to the fact that when he first adopted the stage as his profession he did so through the medium of the stock company. Mr. Hickman made his first stage appearance with the Alcazar Stock Company in San Francisco where he speedily built up a decided following. He also played with the Belasco Stock Company in Los Angeles. Then followed a series of engagements in support of leading stars in Broadway productions.

Mae Murray is Expected to Prove a Veritable Whirlwind of Success in "The Eternal Columbine," a Bluebird Production in Which she Injects Her Original Artistic Endeavors—Dancing. Kenneth Harlan is the Male Lead

General Film Plans New Serial for January Release

ANNOUNCEMENT was made this week by General Film Company of the forthcoming release of what is claimed to be one of the most appealing screen serials produced in many months, to be known as "A Daughter of Uncle Sam," and which is now being completed at the studios of the Jaxon Film Corporation in Providence, R. I.

This is said to be a tremendously gripping patriotic serial, to run in twelve numbers of one reel each, beginning about January 5. Jane Vance, on the legitimate stage for a number of years, is the star, and Will Sorelle, also a screen actor of well known ability, is the leading man in the new production.

Beginning with the very first number, "A Daughter of Uncle Sam" is said to launch into a series of thrilling adventures and encounters on sea and land which promise to make it one of the greatest martial kaleidoscopes ever produced. Patriotism, adventure, romance, the unmasking of intrigues and spy plots, stirring battle scenes on land and sea and red-blooded encounters in the north woods, in city streets and on the western prairies, have been woven together into what is said to be a constant procession of thrills which the producers predict will make the patrons clamor for more.

According to the General announcement, there are no disagreeable war scenes to harrow and depress the country's motion picture fans, but "A Daughter of Uncle Sam" possesses many thrilling features, such as the exposure of spy plots and enemy intrigues, to make it among the most timely patriotic serials of the day, which should add tremendously to the box-office value of the production. An extensive advertising program will be conducted in connection with the distribution of this feature by General Film, which is announced as "A Patriotic Serial That Is Different and Better Than Anything Yet Filmed."

Mae Murray Breaks Record in Getting Theatre Scenes

DIRECTOR ROBERT LEONARD claims that Mae Murray, star of Bluebird photoplays, recently hung up a new record for continuous rehearsal and filming in producing theatre scenes for "The Eternal Columbine," the feature in which she will largely engage in displaying her talents as a dancer. To make these scenes a Los Angeles theatre was secured, and there was but one week open in which to rehearse and film the requisite scenes.

Miss Murray and her company had gone into their work against time believing that there would be a day or so to spare, but rehearsals of a large ballet consumed more time and patience than Director Leonard had figured on. There were unforeseen delays, retakes and more rehearsals until Friday, when it was seen that calculations do not always work out on schedule.

Saturday ended Bluebird's temporary possession of the theatre and stage. A road attraction was due to arrive for Sunday matinee on an early morning train. On the last day at his disposal Director Leonard started activities at seven in the morning with the intention of finishing all the theatre scenes before they called a halt. They made slower progress than they had counted on, and straight through the day they worked without intermission, except a few minutes' pause for the meals which were brought in to them. They worked right on through the night and until seven o'clock Sunday morning.

Samuel S. Hutchinson Insists "Story Is the Thing"

PRESIDENT SAMUEL S. HUTCHINSON, of the American Film Company, Inc., who recently returned to Chicago from one of his inspection trips to the Santa Barbara studios, is greatly elated over the prospect for pictures in 1918, it was made known in an announcement last week, in which it was stated that Mr. Hutchinson is on a still hunt for the best stories in the market and that he believes the story is becoming more and more important as a film factor.

"I am convinced of this from our careful selection of proper vehicles for our stars during this past season," said President Hutchinson. "We exercised great care in selecting stories and have had a larger staff in the scenario department than ever before. I am satisfied, from the popular reception of such stories as 'The Mate of the Sally Ann,' a Minter feature; 'New York Luck,' a Russell feature; 'Betty and the Buccaneers,' a Juliette Day production, and 'Miss Jackie of the Army' and 'Molly Go Get 'Em," both of the latter Margarita Fischer features, that we have struck the right gait in stories. All the above have met with such marked success, having such writers as Charles T. Dazey, Henry Albert Phillips, James Edward Hungerford and Beatrice Van, that we have been on a still hunt for the best stories in the market. We think we have even better stories than these for the 1918 pictures.

"Another thing on which we are laying stress is the development of our technical department. A picture must have a well rounded development to be a success and every contributing cause to an American film production must be of the finest quality, in our estimation.

"We are looking forward to the coming year with much confidence in the film future."

Edison Assembles Japanese Settings for Feature

Under the supervision of Cedric Gibbins, art director, the Edison studios are assembling a series of Japanese settings in preparation for the production of "The Weaver of Dreams," from the story of the same title by Henry Albert Phillips.

Shirley Mason will enact the leading role as Oki Adachi.

The picture will probably be released the latter part of December.

Paralta Aims to Present the Best in Pictures

Has Given Careful Study to Conditions Before Beginning the Features in Which Kerrigan and Others Are Starred Through Hodkinson

PARALTA PLAYS, INC., in an announcement last week, declared that it is the aim of Paralta Plays, Inc., to present to the amusement world photoplays especially designed to meet the requirements of an entire evening's entertainment, offering stars who have endeared themselves in the hearts of American audiences. In connection with this aim of the new force in the motion picture world it may be stated that the kind of photoplay in which Paralta offers its stars to the exhibiting world is determined by a careful study of conditions in the theatres and the demands of the public taste at any given period.

Once these conditions have been determined, Paralta acquires from the best writing brains in America literary material suitable for its stars in accord with existing taste. Into carefully plotted stellar vehicles are placed such stars as J. Warren Kerrigan, Bessie Barriscale, Henry B. Walthall, Rhea Mitchell and Clara Williams.

The productions are carefully and lavishly staged, under the general direction of Robert Brunton, manager of productions at the Paralta West Coast studios, and the specific direction of many noted directors.

The scenario material must be strongly dramatic in order to lend itself to multiple reel production, and so only the best writing brains have produced it. For instance, "A Man's Man," in which J. Warren Kerrigan is to be presented to the photoplay audiences of the country, is by the noted writer, Peter B. Kyne, while the first Walthall picture, "His Robe of Honor," is from the pen of Ethel and James Dorrance.

While these are the big aims of the Paralta organization for the exhibitor there are a number of other ways in which the new corporation plans to serve the exhibitor. For instance, the special service department of Paralta will always be glad to help any exhibitor with any problem of exploitation or presentation.

Pathe's Russian Features Appeal to Cultured Classes

AN entirely new angle on Pathe's Russian Art Films is revealed in the statement from an official who has investigated conditions throughout the country in the course of a nation-wide trip, that these pictures are proving especially successful in the best class houses. When they were first announced it was thought they were "sure fire" in the Jewish neighborhood houses, but that they would prove but fairly successful in the theatres catering to "high brow" audiences.

"The opinions of the expert trade paper critics and of big newspaper reviewers, backed by actual proof that the films appeal especially to the cultured and educated, are responsible for the reception of the pictures in many territories as a particularly strong bet for the high class house," said a Pathe official.

The Pathe sales force stands ready, it is said, to co-operate at all times with the company's customers, and a number of interesting points of exploitation were brought out by F. C. Quimby, the newly appointed sales manager of Pathe.

War Sends European Artiste to American Shores

"IT'S an ill wind that blows nobody good" is a phrase that, tried and true, always appears when the least cause for its use arises.

But the term is one of the most apt available when applied to the recent invasion of America—particularly New York—of Mlle. Eleanora L'Jules, whose name is well known in several countries as belonging to one of the most talented and popular European artistes of the legitimate and vaudeville stages.

Remote as it may seem that any good can come of the war, it is predicted that Mlle. L'Jules, who has been in New York but a few weeks, being forced to abandon all plans for European contracts on account of the conflict, will become one of the leading figures of the American screen. It cannot be denied, and, in fact it has been attested by several who have extended offers of engagements to her, that Mlle. L'Jules has all the attributes and assets of a coming screen star, provided the proper development is given her art in this branch of the industry, to which she is yet new. Immediately upon her arrival here, the brunette artiste was selected by the Metro producing company for a part in "Red, White and Blue Blood," a forthcoming feature starring Bushman and Bayne, and it is expected that when this production is released the work of Mlle. L'Jules will prove a revelation to both the trade and public. Director Charles J. Brabin, who produced "Red, White and Blue Blood," was said to be favorably impressed with her screen beauty and capabilities, and lost not a moment in enlisting her services for his play.

It is understood that Mlle. L'Jules has as yet made no arrangements for future appearances in pictures, but that she is considering various offers. Announcements of a contract are expected shortly.

Cooper's Activities for Whartons Recalls His Career

IN choosing Courtney Ryley Cooper to prepare the scenario of "The Eagle's Eye," Chief Flynn's secret service serial, exposing the activities of German agents in America, the Whartons are said to be congratulating themselves upon securing his services.

Born in Kansas City, Mo., in 1886, Cooper has spent most of his life in the West, his career embracing many varied chapters as "character juvenile" in a barnstorming repertoire company; clown in the old Harris Nickleplate circus; reporter and member of the editorial staff of the Kansas City Star; press agent for the late Col. W. F. Cody during his affiliation with the Sells-Floto circus; business manager of the same organization; and incidentally, during the past seven years contributor of over three hundred short stories to the leading magazines of this country. Throughout the year just closing, Cooper's name has appeared on the table of contents of Collier's, The Ladies' Home Journal, The Popular Magazine, Everybody's, Short Stories, Hearst's, The Pictorial Review, The Woman's Magazine and Ainslee's. His series of circus stories, published under the general title of "Shoestring Charley" were advertised as belonging to the most popular group of adventure tales printed in the Red Book.

General Film Exposes Spy in a January Release

The inside story of the manner in which countless German spy plots and intrigues have been baffled by the United States Secret Service within the last three years is shown, it is said, in "A Daughter of Uncle Sam," the patriotic serial to be released through General Film Company beginning January 12. The twelve episodes of this serial, which is produced by the Jaxon Film Corporation, reflect the campaign of the government against the destruction inaugurated in the United States by German agents.

Brady Sees Only Prosperity for World Film

Declares Corporation Is in Better Shape Than Ever Before and That It Shows All Signs of Continuing to Maintain Pace

WILLIAM A. BRADY, director-general of the World Film Corporation, last week made made an announcement concerning the present condition of the picture industry, in which he included some sidelights on his own organization that are highly interesting and significant:

"The World Film Corporation," said Brady, "approaches the end of the year in a most enviable state of prosperity. At a time when the doctors are vehemently disagreeing as to what ails the motion picture industry and how the malady shall be banished, we find ourselves at a higher point of earnings and in possession of a greater quantity of perfectly sound, tangible, negotiable assets than at any moment in our career.

"This is not said in any spirit of boastfulness, nor is it in the nature of crowing over those who are unable at this time to render a similar report. Conditions such as those which occasion the general complaints flaunted before the public recently are indeed regrettable, whatever their cause, and are to be viewed with the deepest concern.

"Thus, without uttering any reflections upon the prevailing situation and the matters which have brought it about, we may revert at this time to the policies and principles which have resulted in the existing happy condition of World Pictures—policies and principles which I have described on various occasions only to call out vigorous criticism.

"In the first place, we have observed sanity in our productions. We never have yielded to the temptation to compete for the services of stars already immensely overpaid. On the other hand, when our own stars, acquiring great popularity under World development, have been approached with largely increased offers from other companies, we have not made the slightest effort to meet those offers.

"From this it is not to be charged that our corporation is niggardly in its expenditures for salary account or in any other direction. We insist only upon keeping our outlay within limitations which permit us to sell a completed picture to the exhibitor at a price he can afford to pay and still have a worthy picture.

Marjorie Rambeau on Stage Boosts Pictures

Mutual Announces Since Star's Return to Legitimate Her Pictures Have Been More Popular—Produced by Frank Powell Company

IN an announcement last week, Mutual declared that the action of screen popularity on the box office value of a stage star and the reaction at the ticket window of the motion picture theatre has been demonstrated by Marjorie Rambeau, who returned to the stage after the production of a series of six pictures for the Frank Powell Producing Corporation for release through the Mutual Film Corporation.

The success of "The Eyes of Youth," Miss Rambeau's stage piece, has been reflected in new bookings and rebookings of the Rambeau star productions at Mutual Exchanges, it is said, and an apparent increase in the box office value of the star's name in motion picture theatres in all sections of the land.

Miss Rambeau's series of pictures include "The Greater Woman," "Motherhood," "The Debt," "The Mirror," "The Dazzling Miss Davison" and "Mary Moreland," each produced and directed by Frank Powell, head of the corporation.

Immediately that the success of her stage production was noised across the country, exhibitors began receiving requests from patrons who wanted to see Miss Rambeau in pictures, it is said. The result has been a revival in all parts of the United States of the Mutual-Powell productions starring Miss Rambeau.

Grover C. George, of the Palm theatre, San Francisco, Cal., said: "'The Dazzling Miss Davison,' with Marjorie Rambeau, is a very good picture. Business was very good." M. H. Whitham, of the Allendale theatre, Buffalo, N. Y., said: "My audience was well pleased with the Powell-Mutual picture, 'The Greater Woman,' with Marjorie Rambeau. The plot was well carried out. It did a good business. Harry Everhart, of the National theatre, Greenville, Ohio, said: "Everyone was pleased with Marjorie Rambeau in "The Greater Woman."

Metro Raises the Bushel from Tod Browning's Light

ARTHUR JAMES, director of publicity of Metro Pictures Corporation, apparently inspired by the excellent work of Tod Browning, director extraordinary, last week turned the calcium light on various of the latter's personal and official affairs and achievements.

Among other things, it was cited that the director of the massive Metro production, "The Legion of Death," starring Edith Storey, has studied and mastered many branches of motion picture production. He is an experienced actor, and an expert cameraman, in addition to being a director of the first rank.

Much of his success as a director is without doubt due to his "love for the game," and his tactfulness. Browning believes that tact is a great asset to a director in obtaining the best results in acting. As he has been a player himself, he knows that players appreciate courtesy and consideration, and can do their best work under such favorable conditions. He was on the speaking stage for fourteen years, playing in stock, in musical comedy with Anna Held in "Mlle. Napoleon," and in vaudeville. On the variety stage, he says that he has played all the way from eleven to two shows a day.

Triangle Urges Exhibitor to Feature Producer

Asserts That Name of Maker Should Be Played Up in All Advertisements Concerning Picture—Public Looks for Trade Mark

IN an announcement issued by the Triangle Distributing Corporation last week, exhibitors are urged to play up the name of the producer when advertising pictures, as the public is becoming more discriminating in regard to pictures.

"It has been noticeable of late," said the statement, "that exhibitors in announcing programs, are failing to include the name of the producing company in their advertising. This is a short-sighted policy and one that is likely to harm the exhibitor's business in the long run, rather than improve it.

"The average photoplay patron of today is conversant with many details regarding the moving picture industry, through knowledge gained from magazines and from attendance at the theatre. The continual growth in popularity of the moving picture has resulted in the movie follower learning a great deal about picture stars and producing companies. Consequently, in reading the exhibitor's advertisements he looks for the name of the company responsible for the production. Failing to find it, he may lose interest in the picture.

"A 'movie fan' as a rule, is a most ardent follower of the profession and in many cases more ardent than the regular playgoer. From patrons leaving a photoplay house you will often hear the remark, 'That was a good Cloverleaf Picture shown tonight!' And the next day these same people will tell friends of the feature. For instance, Mrs. Jones will say to her neighbor, 'I saw Evelyn Gross in a Fouraces feature last night, called "The Living Soul," and it was wonderful. The Fouraces Pictures are always good.' For that is the manner in which news of pictures travel. Having been impressed by the uniformity and high quality of pictures of a certain company, Mrs. Jones and her neighbor in reading the local papers will always look for the company's name.

"Therefore," in the opinion of Triangle, "it always pays exhibitors to include the name of the producing company in all advertising or publicity. The large New York houses, on the order of the Rialto and the Strand, always announce in their advertising copy that 'such and such a company presents Anne Morie in the,' etc.

"And as the tendency of late, on the part of the average exhibitor, has been to neglect the insertion of this important element, Triangle believes it is again time to call it to the attention of exhibitors. The announcement of the company's name will distinctly aid the picture, help the attendance and build up the reputation of the theatre," concludes the statement.

Edison Calls New War Feature "The Unbeliever"

Is in Seven Reels and Promises to Show U. S. Marine Corps Officers in Congenial Roles—Realism Keynote of Production

IT was announced last week that the forthcoming Edison seven-part pictures based on the story, "The Three Things," by Mary Shipman Andrews, will be released under the title of "The Unbeliever," and that the production will disclose much realism in connection with the war scenes, of which there are many.

It is announced by Edison that several U. S. Marine Corps officers have cooperated with the producers by taking actual parts in various of the war scenes. Major Ross E. Rowell appears in charge of the artillery operations. Major Thomas Holcomb commands the Marine infantry and orders them "over the top." Captain Thomas G. Sterrett is seen in command of a dug-out and in one instance calls for six volunteers to go on sapping duty and report on enemy mining activities. Lieutenant James F. Rorke plays the part of Lieutenant O'Shaunnesy, who dies on the battlefield in the arms of a Jewish rabbi, who helps him find his crucifix as he breathes his last.

In order to inject unusual realism into the battle scenes, Alan Crosland, the director, obtained permission to photograph real bursting shrapnel at the Indian Head, Md., proving grounds.

At a given signal four heavy guns were to shell an improvised enemy trench from some considerable distance. Everyone else had sought shelter in a dug-out except Crosland and his cameraman, who were outside getting their camera in readiness and were focusing on the area around and above the enemy trench. Just then Col. Dunlap, U.S.M.C., approached them and explained that although the range had been estimated graphically, their position was exceedingly dangerous, as it was impossible to determine the exact range until after they had opened fire, and he suggested that they photograph the position from within the dug-out.

Crosland explained that he would be unable to get the desired results by photographing from the dug-out, and so he and his cameraman agreed to "take a chance," and they, with Colonel Dunlap remained where they were

The command "fire," was given by field telephone from the dug-out and simultaneously they began to crank. Four shrieks were heard coming in their direction, then four explosions directly over the enemy trench. The range had been accurately determined and they were safe. Consequently they remained long enough to obtain some photographs of bursting shrapnel.

Hedda Nova Begins New Feature for Vitagraph

Hedda Nova, the Russian actress recently engaged by Albert E. Smith, president of Vitagraph, to play star roles in special features, will begin work on her first feature next week. The title of the picture has not been announced. Miss Nova has been engaged for two weeks in reading material from which to make a selection.

Tucker Artistry Forges to Front in Goldwyn Feature

ALTHOUGH George Loane Tucker is by no means a recent acquisition to the Goldwyn force of directors, he remains a cause for congratulation, according to an announcement issued this week from the Goldwyn organization, in which Mr. Tucker is given great credit for the Mae Marsh feature, "The Cinderella Man."

In "The Cinderella Man," according to Goldwyn, Mr. Tucker's opportunities began when the script of the stage version was handed to him and did not end till the picture had been assembled, cut and titled. Mr. Tucker's continuity of the Mae Marsh story, it is said, might well serve as an example to every writer who aims to achieve a perfect adaptation of another's play or book. Not only was every point in the Carpenter play said to have been brought out by means of visualized action, but scores of contributory causes, focusing around the high lights in the story, were translated into action, surely and steadily, with a minimum of "spoken" titles.

It was Mr. Tucker who convinced Hall Caine that of all the novelists' stories "The Manx-Man" was the one he alone should produce. This happened to be the very work the writer had refused to permit in pictures, giving as his reason his disbelief in the ability of any man to transfer the novel to the screen. Furthermore, Hall Caine, it is claimed, regarded every spot on the Isle of Man with such tenderness and veneration that he declared no mere camera should ever attempt to give the quaint island a degree of beauty less than it possessed in real life. The young American director overcame these apparently insurmountable obstacles. The result is said to be apparent in his conception of "The Manx-Man," and to those who know the circumstances it is a milestone in his character development as well.

Thompson Directs Bessie Love in New Pathe Feature

Frederick Thompson, who produced for Paramount "The Goose Girl," with Marguerite Clark as the star, and who is claimed by Pathe as the first legitimate stage director to go into motion pictures, has been engaged to direct Bessie Love for Pathe, it was announced last week.

In regard to his new connection, Mr. Thompson said: "I joined Pathe because I consider Bessie Love absolutely the biggest bet in pictures," said Mr. Thompson. "She is a mere child and her future is absolutely unlimited. The other day I heard some one speaking of one of the most popular stars—probably the most popular—say to the man who controls her services: 'Don't you wish she were as young as Bessie Love' and that man's monosyllable answer spoke a volume."

Miss Love, under the direction of Mme. Alice Blache, has now almost completed the "Spring of the Year," based on Henry Kitchell Webster's novel, "The Painted Scene," and scenarioized by Agnes C. Johnston. The first picture on which Mr. Thompson will work with her is "How Could You, Caroline?" a story by Zola Forrester, the scenario for which also is being done by Miss Johnston, author of Gladys Hulette's successes and known as one of the best writers of high comedy in the business.

Mr. Thompson's assistant and art director will be S. M. Unander, a graduate of the University of California and the University of Syracuse, an artist and an expert on lighting and architecture, who has been with Mr. Thompson for years.

Sidney Mason Leading Man with Bara in Late Picture

Sidney L. Mason has been engaged for the leading part opposite Theda Bara in her latest production for William Fox. Mr. Mason has completed, recently, "The Painted Madonna," in which he presents the leading role opposite Sonia Markova. Previous to joining the Fox forces, Mr. Mason was seen in Bluebird productions.

Mr. Mason, before entering pictures, was prominent on the speaking stage. He had the role of Blackie Daw in Cohan and Harris's production of "Get Rich Quick Wallingford," and had the part of Jimmy in "Alias Jimmy Valentine."

In Miss Bara's latest production, under the direction of J. Gordon Edwards, Mr. Mason presents the role of an artist.

Wisconsin Exhibitor Writes Mutual Regarding Picture

At Iron River, Wisconsin, William Russell in "My Fighting Gentleman," a Mutual-American star production, was shown at the Daniels theatre. E. F. Daniels, the owner, wrote to Mutual as follows: "We played the Mutual picture, 'My Fighting Gentleman,' featuring William Russell, last Sunday night and on Friday 'The Birth of a Nation'—both productions tell a story of the South during reconstruction days, and many of my patrons, and myself, liked the Mutual feature the best."

Laemmle Answers Exhibitor on the Footage Tax

Does Not See How Exchanges Can Keep Their Name on the Door Unless Tax Is Charged—Attributes Condition to Desire for Gain

CARL LAEMMLE, president of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company, has written the following letter to a Western exhibitor in answer to the question: "How can the exchanges which are not charging the war tax stay in business?"

"This is in answer to your favor of recent date in which you ask the very natural question, 'How can the exchanges which are not charging the tax stay in business?'

"Frankly, we do not know how they can do it. In fact we do not believe for one instant that they can pay this tax themselves and avoid raising their prices at a later date.

"It is more than probable, we believe, that they hope to pose as champions of the exhibitors and thus draw an amount of business away from us only sufficient to cover the absorption of the taxes but to produce an additional profit for themselves.

"If we were to pursue the course that they have adopted, all or most of the producing companies would have to go out of business and in all probability the companies you mention would not be any more likely to escape this result than any of the other companies. No doubt we would have made ourselves great temporary heroes, in the eyes of many exhibitors, if we had not said anything about passing the tax along to the public through the theatres; but in the end it would have ruined the exhibitors by reason of the fact that it would have ruined the producers and thus shut off all sources of film supply for theatres.

"All the producers combined cannot afford to pay a tax of $100,000 every week, whether the public believes it or not. But if such an amount is passed along to the public, the public will not even feel it.

"Unfortunately, there is not another industry in the world in which the tax has been levied in just the manner that it has been levied in the picture business. In all others, it is levied in such a manner that it goes on to the public very directly and very quickly. In our case we are practically placed in the position of having to beg the cooperation of exhibitors when as a matter of fact they should not only be willing but eager to give it in order to save themselves and the whole industry.

"This company will not ask the Government to repeal the tax law, no matter how unfair its provisions may seem, because the United States needs the money and must have it. If the exhibitors feel that it should be repealed; if they can convince Congress that it should be repealed, well and good. That is none of our business. The exhibitors have as much right to run their affairs as the producers and exchanges have to run their own. But as long as the law is a law, it is our plain duty to do the best we can to act as collectors for Uncle Sam. If we fail in this, we fail in all.

"Common sense compels every thinking man to know that those companies not charging the tax MUST MAKE IT UP IN SOME OTHER WAY. We don't pretend to know what that way will be, but we do know that the exhibitor cannot benefit by it in the end.

"We could have handled the whole matter in quite a different way if we had chosen to say nothing about the tax at all but simply and quietly advance prices all along the lines. Bue we chose to be perfectly frank about it and make no profit on the war tax. We figured, as nearly as we could, what the war tax would cost us and then passed it along to our customers, knowing that they in turn would have to pass it along to the public. I might say, incidentally, that in figuring we gave ourselves by far the worst of it. As a result the amount we collect from the exhibitors cannot equal the amount we must pay to the Government.

"We chose the frank and open method for the very simple reason that it seemed the honest thing to do. We could have employed camouflage or we could have indulged in mock heroics to fool our customers, but we took it for granted they would prefer open and aboveboard treatment. We took it for granted that they knew that no tax on any producer in any line of business is actually absorbed by the producer (unless he is making an exorbitant profit) but that every single penny of it, and some times more, is passed on to the ultimate consumer, the public. Sometimes it is passed directly; at other times indirectly—but it always goes down the line in the end.

"Not a single objection was made to our method of collecting the tax until a few professional agitators stirred up a cloud of dust to blind the exhibitors and make them think we were abusing them. This is unfortunate but it does not influence us to change our attitude, because we made sure we were doing the right thing before we went ahead."

Bluebird Speeds Up to Keep Supply Adequate

Five Feminine Favorites and Franklyn Farnum Are Busy on Locations—Third Year Begins with Release on January 21

WITH Bluebirds definitely scheduled well into January, Managing Director Carl Laemmle is urging along the production of features at Universal City to keep the supply adequate and listed far enough in advance to give exhibitors every opportunity for advantageous publicity well ahead of release dates. Bluebird's five girl-stars and Franklyn Farnum are all busy on location turning into completed products the scenarios that are depended upon to maintain the standard of excellence the program has established.

Incidentally the third year of the Bluebird series begins with the release set for January 21—Dorothy Phillips in "Broadway Love." Bluebird No. 104, ending the second year, will present Mae Murray, in "Face Value," a week earlier.

The schedule of releases for January is summarized below: December 31: Violet Mersereau, in "The Girl by the Roadside," a dramatization of Varick Vanardy's novel of the same title, Directed by Theodore Marston. January 7: Carmel Myers, in "My Unmarried Wife," screen version of Frank H. Adams's story, "Molly and I"; produced by George Siegmann, and released as Miss Myers's second feature in the Bluebird program. January 14: Mae Murray, in "Face Value," the story by Miss Murray and her director, Robert Z. Leonard, offered as Miss Murray's second Bluebird. January 21: Dorothy Phillips in "Broadway Love," produced by Ida May Park, from W. Carey Wonderly's story; featuring Lon Chaney and William Stowell, who head the supporting company.

There is one more release in January to be accounted for, and to fix that issue there are several subjects from which a selection may be made. In the regular routine of presentations, either Franklyn Farnum or Ruth Clifford will be the star for the last week of the month.

Mode of Living Contributes Answer for Pathe Serial

Pathe announced last week that the seven out of the more than 50,000 entrants in "The Neglected Wife" prize-awarding campaign who received fitting remembrances around Thanksgiving, stated that they found their solution of the problem while living and studying their own lives and those of friends and acquaintances.

Some of the women who took part in the campaign wrote their answers on "The Neglected wife" from a standpoint of successful wives.

ADVANCE OFFERINGS OF THE PROGRAMS

Laemmle Picks Features for Broadway Showing

First of These Are "My Unmarried Wife" and "Beloved Jim," with Carmel Myers and Priscilla Dean in the Chief Roles

Carl Laemmle, of Universal

MANAGING DIRECTOR CARL Laemmle, of the Broadway theatre, makes announcement this week of a number of very important productions, which will go into the Broadway during the months of December and January, during which time a double bill and continuous performances, at popular prices, will be Mr. Laemmle's rule.

The first of these special features had their initial showing on Sunday afternoon, December 9, and are "My Unmarried Wife" and "Beloved Jim."

"My Unmarried Wife" is adapted from the Frank R. Adams novel, "Molly and I," and produced by George A. Siegmann. Carmel Myers, last seen at the Broadway, in the Jewel feature, "Sirens of the Sea," has the leading feminine role, and Kenneth Harlan, seen also recently at this playhouse in the Lois Weber-Jewel masterpiece, "The Price of a Good Time," plays the male lead. The cast includes Beatrice Van, Pat Calhoun, Marc Fenton and Jack Hutchinson.

"Beloved Jim" is also in five reels. The story is a Christmas one, done by Joseph Girard and produced by Stuart Paton, who produced Universal's "Twenty Thousand Leagues Under the Sea" Priscilla Dean, who appeared in two Lois Weber features, "Even as You and I" and "The Hand That Rocks the Cradle," plays the leading feminine role and that of the wife of "Beloved" Jim Brockton, portrayed by Harry Carter The remainder of the cast includes J. Morris Foster, Charles Hills Mailes, Frank Deshon, Sydney Deane, Ed. Brown, Jos Girard and Mrs. A. E. Witting.

Pathe Shows Strength in Its Holiday Line-Up

"The Life of Our Saviour" Heads the List, and Marion Davies Feature Is in Vanguard—Scenics and Educationals Included

PATHE Exchanges, it was announced this week, are ready to furnish a large number and great variety of pictures suitable for the holiday and Lenten season.

The special Pathe-colored production, "The Life of Our Saviour," with new prints and paper, heads the list and "Runaway Romany" released December 23 and starring Marion Davies, is also worthy of special attention.

In addition to a great number of split reel scenic, cartoon and educational subjects, including especially the new Argus Pictorial, Pathe calls attention to the following features starring Gladys Hulette, Baby Marie Osborne, Irene Castle and others: "Over the Hill," "A Crooked Romance," "Miss Nobody," "Streets of Illusion," "The Last of the Carnabys," "The Cigarette Girl," and "Pots and Pans Peggie," all with Gladys Hulette; "The Heart of Ezra Greer" and "Hinton's Double," with Frederick Warde; "A Little Patriot," "Tears and Smiles," "Sunshine and Gold," "Told at Twilight," "Twin Kiddies" and "When Baby Forgot," with Baby Marie Osborne, and "The Angel Factory," "Les Miserables," "When Love Was Blind," "Mayblossom," "Her Beloved Enemy" and "France in Arms."

The Lonesome Luke and Harold Lloyd comedies include "Over the Fence," "Pinched," "Bliss," "The Flirt," "All Aboard," "Move On" and "Bashful."

Vitagraph Releases Polite Comedies in One-Reel

The Greater Vitagraph Company has begun releasing a new brand of polite comedies featuring Edward Earle and Agnes Ayres under the name of "Vitagraph Comedies." The first of these one-reelers is "The Family Flivver" and the second "Paging Page Two." Graham Baker is directing them. Percy Standing, who played the role of the dictator in Thomas Dixon's "The Fall of a Nation," appears in the second one in the uniform he is wearing as a member of the Royal Flying Corps of Canada. Percy was accepted in the Flying Corps some time ago, but has not been called for service. In the meantime, while he awaits orders, he is working at Vitagraph.

O. Henry and Chaplin Set the Pace in Canada

Two of the most popular series of pictures in Canada just now are said to be the two-reel O. Henry pictures and the Chaplin re-issues, both distributed through General Film Company, Limited. Announcement has just been made that the O. Henry pictures will be shown every other week at Loew's new theatre in Montreal as a regular feature. Other important bookings are pouring in upon the Montreal branch of General Film, indicating that the O. Henry features have earned a prominent place for themselves on the programs of the Dominion.

The Chaplin re-issues are said to be especially popular in the Province of Ontario.

Nazimova Goes South for New Metro Production

Mme. Nazimova and her entire Metro company have gone to a Florida city, where they will spend several weeks in the preparation of a new special production de luxe, under the direction of George D. Baker.

A slight indisposition prevented the departure of the star for the West last week, and by the time she was ready to travel, plans in regard to her next picture were completely changed. Mayor Miller of St. Augustine, was a recent visitor at the Metro studio, and he succeeded in persuading its general manager, Maxwell Karger, that the balmy climate of Florida would be an ideal place in which to have madame spend part of the winter.

"Frauds and Free Lunch" Takes the Screen This Week

"Frauds and Free Lunch" is announced by Albert E. Smith, president of Greater Vitagraph, as the Big V comedy release for the week of December 10, and "Noisy Naggers and Nosey Neighbors" as the subject for the week of December 17. Montgomery and Rock are featured in the first of these, and Lawrence Semon is the star of the second named feature. Florence Curtis, the Vitagraph dancing girl, plays opposite Mr. Semon and others in his support are Joe Basil and Pietro Aramondo. Mr. Semon also wrote and directed this comedy, which was the last he made in the East. Mr. Semon, with his acrobats and cameraman, arrived at the Vitagraph studio in Hollywood last week and already has commenced on a new comedy.

All of the Big V's are now being made in California, there being three companies at work on them. One of these is headed by Montgomery and Rock, under direction of Dave Smith, and another is headed by Jack Dill and Carolyn Rankin under direction of A. J. Howe. Semon, as heretofore, will continue to write and direct the comedies in which he appears.

Polly Moran Cleans Up Town in Sennett Comedy

As described by Paramount Pictures Corporation, "Taming Target Center," the Paramount-Mack Sennett comedy which follows "That Night," released December 16, begins with a riot and ends with a prayer. It brings again into prominence Ben Turpin, the sheriff; Polly Moran, who succeeds him; Tom Kennedy as a cafe proprietor, and Gonda Durand, the leading vampire. William Campbell directed it with the supervision of Mack Sennett.

As the story goes, Ben was a real good sheriff when there wasn't any sheriffing to do, but when Polly, bent on matrimony, visited Target Center, trouble started. The jail, formerly a place of repose, was disrupted and filled with lodgers perforce. Polly discovered that Ben was not as brave as he looked and meantime the leading vampire of the town entered the plot and Ben became involved in a network of circumstantial evidence. But it all ended when Target Center donned its Sunday best and went to church—the first time in its ruddy career.

Pathe Well Pleased with Bookings on New Serial

Pathe Exchange managers in all sections of the United States are said to be reporting that the bookings on "The Hidden Hand," the newest serial released by Pathe equal those on the continued photoplay, "The Fatal Ring." The reports of the new serial given by the trade paper reviewers after the advance showing of the early episodes were followed with interest by the exhibitors.

An unusually complete publicity and advertising campaign was prepared by Pathe to bring this serial to the attention of the motion picture fans of the country.

William Russell Stars on New Mutual List

"New York Luck" Is Described as Story of Frazzled Finance, and Is Accompanied by Other Mutual Releases of Interest

WILLIAM RUSSELL is the "headliner" in the Mutual release schedule for the week of December 17, appearing in "New York Luck," a story of "frazzled finance," intrigue and romantic adventure in the great metropolis.

"The Lost Express," with Helen Holmes, arrives at the threshold of the mystery; Billie Rhodes comes near losing her happy home in "Little Miss Fixer." The Cub Comedy, with George Ovey and the Mutual Weekly balance the schedule.

Never has William Russell, it is said, appeared in a more engrossing characterization or staged a more thrilling sight, than in his latest Mutual-American production, "New York Luck," released Monday, December 17. At the beginning of the story he is a country station agent.

There is said to be an unusual twist to the story, distinctly agreeable. It was written by Charles T. and Frank Dazey, scenarioized by Chester Clapp. Edward Sloman directed. In the cast are Francelia Billington, Harvey Clark, Clarence Burton, Edward Peil, Alfred Ferguson, Frederick Vroom and Carl Stockdale.

A domestic tangle, arising from a family wrangle, gives Billie Rhodes another of her comedy roles in the Strand one reeler, "Little Miss Fixer," released by Mutual, Tuesday, December 18.

The strongest dramatic climax yet reached is said to be shown in "Unmasked," Chapter XIV of "The Lost Express," the Signal-Mutual photonovel, starring Helen Holmes, released Monday, December 17. Despite the discovery that "The Hare" is proven to be an impersonation, the clever villain succeeds in actually marrying Helen while the real secretary is held a prisoner.

George Ovey, "double crosses" old man Grouch in his latest Cub Comedy, "Jerry's Double Cross," released by Mutual on Thursday, December 20. The Mutual Weekly, released Monday, December 17, shows momentous events on land and sea with a liberal number of stirring happenings in the war zone.

Bluebird Names Its Stars for 1918 Program

Early Weeks of New Year to Bring Harry Carey, Louise Lovely, Grace Cunard, Herbert Rawlinson and Jack Mulhall in Features

THE distribution of Universal's product for the early weeks of the new year will account, it is said, for an array of special attractions designed to center renewed interest in the stars that have been prominent in past releases originating at Universal City. Harry Carey, Louise Lovely, Grace Cunard, Herbert Rawlinson and Jack Mulhall, stars long identified with Universal's activities, figure as leaders in the arrangements for the first six weeks of 1918.

There has been a careful selection of vehicles to suit the screen temperaments of the various star players, Harry Carey being furnished with Western, Louise Lovely having an emotional melodrama, Herbert Rawlinson figuring in a highly exciting adventure, Grace Cunard starring in sensations and Jack Mulhall having a romantic play to suit his style.

Here are the specifications, in brief, that apply to these Universals so far as special features have been definitely scheduled for release: December 31: "The High Sign," a Herbert Rawlinson production, starring the hero of "Come Through" and other productions. Elmer Clifton directed. January 7: A Louise Lovely production, "The Wolf and His Mate," with Hart Hoxie, Betty Schade and Alfred Allen, in a feature directed by Edward J. Le Saint. January 14: A Grace Cunard production, "Hell's Crater," featuring the star of some of Universal's most successful serials. January 21: "Madame Spy," a Jack Mulhall production, with Claire Du Brey and Donna Drew leading the support. Douglas Gerrard directed. January 28: A Harry Carey production, directed by E. J. Le Saint; "Phantom Riders," with Molly Malone. December 4: The Louise Lovely production, "Painted Lips," directed by Edward J. Le Saint, with Betty Schade, Alfred Allen and Louis J. Cody in the cast.

Two William Fox Players Make Name in "Les Miserables"

WHATEVER may be the public verdict of "Les Miserables," the production will be memorable to two young women in the employ of William Fox as having been the picture which gave them their opportunities to prove their right to be starred.

Before Madame Sonia Markova was announced as a star, Mr. Fox wished to verify his judgment by a try-out and gave her the part of Fantine in his William Farnum de luxe production of Victor Hugo's masterpiece. He put her in high grade company, knowing that if she could make the part stand out under such conditions she had the mettle justifying advancement. That his judgment was correct is proved, he believes, by the attention Madame Markova received from New York critics and reviewers at the opening of "Les Miserables" at the Lyric theatre December 3.

The other young woman who started her first starring picture under Mr. Fox's management just after finishing her performance in "Les Miserables" was Jewel Carmen, who had already proved her attractiveness and worth in numerous pictures, including William Farnum's de luxe production, "When a Man Sees Red." Mr. Fox brought her from the coast especially to play the part of the grown-up Cosette, and her portrayal was so satisfactory that she was sent immediately back to California, and Frank Lloyd with her, to be starred in a play called "The Kingdom of Love," in which she has been given opportunity to display her emotional talents.

Elsie Ferguson, Whose Most Recent Screen Feature Proved Her Not Alone a Remarkable Artiste But a Drawing Card as Well, Is Said to Have New Opportunities in "Rose of the World," Forthcoming Artcraft Feature

Elsie Ferguson Feature Brings New Year In

"Rose of the World" Is Star's Next Artcraft Production, Under Tourneur Direction—Wyndham Standing Has Male Lead

THE initial Artcraft release for the new year, according to announcement, will be Elsie Ferguson's "Rose of the World," recently produced under the direction of Maurice Tourneur at the Fort Lee studios. This photoplay is adapted from the novel by Agnes and Edgerton Castle and presents Miss Ferguson in the part of Rosamond, the wife of Capt. Harry English, an officer in the British army, who is slain by the natives in India. Rosamond marries Sir Arthur Gerardine, the aged lieutenant-governor and then discovers that her love for her first husband is constantly increasing, until the very presence of Sir Arthur is repugnant to her.

As the story is unfolded Rosamond becomes involved in a web of great dramatic intensity which drives her to the verge of madness. In roles of such heavy dramatic proportions, Miss Ferguson has repeatedly proved herself to be supreme, and it is thought that this, her most emotional character since entering the motion picture world, will prove an artistic accomplishment second to none ever registered on the screen.

Miss Ferguson's leading man in "Rose of the World," is Wyndham Standing. In this picture, Mr. Standing portrays a dual role and it is expected, will receive considerable favorable comment as a result of his individual success in support of the star. Others in the cast include Percy Marmont, Ethel Martin, June Sloane, Clarence Handysides, Marie Benedetta, Gertrude Le Brant and Sloane Le Masber.

The story is laid in India and London and in staging the photoplay, Director Tourneur has displayed his usual care in presenting the correct atmosphere, as was disclosed in "Barbary Sheep" and his various other film plays of foreign locale.

This is the third photoplay Miss Ferguson has appeared in for Artcraft Pictures.

Marie Dressler Finishes "Fired" for Goldwyn

Her Second Comedy for That Organization Takes Two Reels and Is Said to Surpass First—Star Wrote the Story Herself

NEWS came from the Los Angeles studios of the Dressler Producing Corporation this week that Marie Dressler has completed her second comedy for Goldwyn release, entitled "Fired." It is in two reels and is said to be even funnier than her first one, "The Scrub-Lady," which received an ovation wherever shown.

Reports from cities and towns in which "The Scrub-Lady" has been shown, according to Goldwyn, indicate that Miss Dressler has lost none of the public which used to see her before she gave up the speaking stage for the motion picture screen. Newspaper critics have spoken of the vitality of her broad humor, which never seems to wane, and which apparently is even better reflected on the screen than it was exemplified on the stage.

Miss Dressler is said to believe that the satisfactory completion of her second comedy marks her entrance into the ranks of successful scenario writers.

"I wrote the story of 'Fired' all by myself," she said proudly, "and, if I do say it as shouldn't, it strikes me as pretty blamed funny. I'm going to write all my own stuff hereafter—not because I believe I'm so much better at writing than people who get money for it, but because I think I know how fearfully funny I can be on the screen if I have the chance. Nobody else who has ever written a scenario for me seemed to think I could be funny enough to do justice to their most advanced ideas. Just for that, I'm going to show 'em what a scream I can be."

Miss Dressler is now ready to begin work on her third comedy for Goldwyn. The scenario is by Marie Dressler.

Marion Davies Makes Debut in Story of Her Own Writing

THAT every person in the United States believes he or she can write stories for the screen is the opinion of scenario editors who are always on the lookout for good material for their film production and receive little worth-while material from the untrained writers, and that every woman between sixteen and sixty believes she can out-act any of the popular screen favorites is the opinion of the directors at the motion picture studios, scattered throughout the United States.

But to write a story, because an interesting idea came to her, and develop it along the lines that made it an ideal motion picture story, and to have it eagerly snapped up by the officers of a producing company, to whom casual allusion of it had been made, with the proviso that she herself act the leading role in it, was the luck that befell Marion Davies.

It was while Miss Davies was playing a part in "Oh Boy!" the musical comedy, that she wrote the story of "Runaway Romany" as her first picture is called. She mentioned it to an official of the Ardsley Art Film Corporation and he asked to read it. When he read it he wanted to make ararngements to produce it, and this was agreeable to Miss Davies. However, when he insisted that she play the lead in it, she hesitated until a test was made of her before the motion picture camera and was passed upon by the directors.

Pathe expects to release "Runaway Romany' 'Christmas week.

"Sadie Goes to Heaven" Features Mary McAlister

"Sadie Goes to Heaven," little Mary McAlister's newest Essanay production, is nearly completed, it was announced this week by Essanay. The picture tells the story of a tenement waif and her dog, in search of happiness in the home of a millionaire.

According to the Essanay publicity department, Patsy, the canine aspirant for histrionic honors, was imported from a Michigan farm, and will be returned there when the production is completed.

Paramount Turns Clock Backward in Announcing Feature

IN announcing the Pauline Frederick feature, "Mrs. Dane's Defense," which has been scheduled by Paramount for release on January 7, the publicity department of Famous Players-Lasky, presided over by John C. Flinn, has delved into years agone in order to lend proper accent to the release.

It is cited that "Mrs. Dane's Defense" is a product of that period in the literary and artistic history of England and America, the Eighteen-Nineties. It is true that it did not come before the public until the first year of the new decade—1900—but it was written in the preceding years and reflects the rather startling qualities that characterized nearly all the dramatic and literary output thereof. The Eighteen-Nineties was the period of Aubrey Beardsley, the poster, the fad magazines, the bicycle, the exotic school of poets and writers, of purple patches and crimson moments in literature, of the revolt against the previous almost puritanical decade, of strange and grotesque occurrences—of realism, particularly.

"Mrs. Dane's Defense" is said to be a strikingly effective piece of dramatic writing and its stage qualities will no doubt be recalled by all who saw it played. For the screen it is said to possess splendid possibilities, and Hugh Ford in directing it saw and took advantage of these in every instance.

Miss Frederick, it is announced, has also completed "Jealousy" meanwhile and it will be released later in the year by Paramount. This picture, by George V. Hobart, was directed by Robert G. Vignola.

Past Year for Vitagraph Shows Much Activity

Blue Ribbon Feature Released Each Week and Three Serials Distributed, in Addition to Comedies and Several New Features

Gladys Leslie, with Harry Morey in Vitagraph's "His Own People"

THE year 1917 will probably go down in Vitagraph history as one of the most active twelve months, from a production standpoint, in the history of the company. During that period the company not only released a five-reel Blue Ribbon feature each week and made three special productions, but also put out three serials of fifteen episodes each, made a comedy a week and introduced several new features to its program. These included the Bobby Connelly Series, in which the boy star was featured; the Paula Blackton Country Life Series; the Favorite Film Features, a unit made up of carefully selected short-reel subjects from the Vitagraph library, and the new Vitagraph Comedies, put forth the first week in December on a weekly release basis.

Albert E. Smith, president of the Greater Vitagraph Company, established and maintained a "best authors" policy by which he obtained for adaptation the works of the leading contemporary fiction writers, and he also vastly increased the company's list of stars.

Walter W. Irwin, general manager of the Greater Vitagraph distributing organization, reports that the firmly established policies of the company, the added list of stars and the continuous flow of production have been reflected by the response of exhibitors to such an extent that the company has been forced to expand its sales organization several times during the year and the enlarged force is still rushed to capacity.

Consistency of program has been more than a slogan with Vitagraph during the past year, and its product, as recorded in the reviews of the trade press, has been fully up to the standards. Beginning with "Blind Justice," a seven-reel feature released the second week in January, the company's offerings have been uniformly excellent.

In addition to Anita Stewart, Alice Joyce, Earle Williams and Harry Morey, Vitagraph now numbers among its featured stars Gladys Leslie, Corinne Griffith, Agnes Ayres, Nell Shipman, Carol Holloway, Hedda Nova, Grace Darmond, Florence Deshon, Alice Terry, Mildred Manning, "Mother" Mary Maurice, Eulalie Jensen, Julia Swayne Gordon, Miriam Miles, Edward Earle, William Duncan, William Dunn, Alfred Whitman, J. Frank Glendon, Marc MacDermott, Evart Overton and Little Bobby Connelly. Other favorites who are regularly included in the Vitagraph casts are Little Aida Horton, Adele de Garde, Patsy DeForest, Katharine Lewis, Little Helen Connelly, Webster Campbell, Denton Vans, Otto Lederer, Robert Gaillard, Templer Saxe, Stanley Dunn, George Holt, Charles Kent, Bernard Siegel, William Shea, Herbert Prior, Arthur Donaldson and Bigelow Cooper.

The Vitagraph comedians include Lawrence Semon, Earle Montgomery, Joe Rock, Joe Basil, Pietro Aramondo, Jack Dill and Carolyn Rankin.

Metro Screens Debut of Play in "Daybreak" Feature

The opening night of a new play has been reproduced and screened in connection with "Daybreak," Emily Stevens's final screen production of 1917, which is a picturization of the play by Jane Cowl and Jane Murfin, which June Mathis and Albert Capellani have adapted for the screen. Mr. Capellani is also directing the production.

An entire audience was engaged to take part in these scenes and a New York theatre was used as the "location," and an act from the stage play of "Daybreak" was presented. In these scenes, Miss Stevens as Edith Frome sits in the stage box with her husband, Arthur Frome (Julian L'Estrange) and sees enacted before her eyes what seems to be a chapter from her own life. Her own problems are made visible, and she accepts the solution reached by the stage heroine as the solution of her own problems.

Exhibitors Seek O. Henry Film for Christmas

Many exhibitors are reported by General Film to be inquiring for "The Gift of the Magi," one of the earlier O. Henry productions for use as a holiday subject.

"The Gift of the Magi," with Patsy De Forrest and William Dunn featured, deals with the problems of the James Dillingham Youngs, a young married couple, to solve the Christmas present problem in a satisfactory manner. Unknown to her husband, Mrs. Young sacrifices her beautiful hair to buy an expensive chain for her young husband's valuable watch, while he denies himself to buy a handsome hair comb which the young bride has always desired. The climax that results when the two exchange their presents makes it a most entertaining holiday story.

Triangle Releases Two Dramas on December 16

Belle Bennett Said to Do Excellent Acting in "Because of a Woman" —Irene Hunt Appears in "The Maternal Spark," by Hamilton

ACCORDING to announcement this week, the Triangle program for the week of December 16 offers two dramas of life and business that have more than usual interest. "Because of a Woman," a seven-reel feature with Belle Bennett in the leading role and Jack Livingston, supporting, will be the first release. Irene Hunt, Josie Sedgwick and Rowland Lee share honors in "The Maternal Spark," scheduled to follow.

In the first feature, Noel Clavering (Jack Livingston), is employed as business manager by the Everett Engineering Company., in West Virginia. He is a well liked, capable worker and popular with everyone. Things are running smoothly enough, when one day information concerning a mining property that the Everett Company prepares especially for a client, leaks out. A competing firm taking advantage of the "leak," purchases the property, before the Everett client has had an opportunity to secure the information. The next day the local papers all run two column stories giving particulars as to the deal and hinting that a "shake-up" is imminent at the Everett offices. From here plenty of action is promised.

In "The Maternal Spark," Howard Helms (Rowland Lee), a young attorney of Pepperell has progressed rapidly. John J. Mills (Edwin Jobson), a railroad president, is attracted by the attorney's unusual ability and takes a fancy to him. Mills offers Helms a position as confidential secretary. So Helms, his wife Mary (Irene Hunt), and their little son Bumpkins (Joey Jacobs), come to the "big city" with the railroad president.

"The Maternal Spark" was written by R. Cecil Smith, the scenario by George du Boise Proctor and the play was produced by G. P. Hamilton.

In the Triangle-Keystone Comedy, "The Sanitarium Scandal," the Keystone bathing beauties do much in causing a general disturbance. The Sanitarium Hotel is a peaceful place until Peggy Pearce and her diving nymphs arrive. Then Baldy Belmont, a professor, Paddy McGuire, a porter and Fritz Schade, the sheriff, all fall for the girls and many "wet scenes" take place thereafter. William Beaudine directed the picture.

Two one-reel Triangle Komedies, "His Bad Policy" and "A Discordant Note" are also included in the week's releases.

Lyons and Moran Head Own Universal Company

Eddie Lyons and Lee Moran, Universal Joy Dispensers

AFTER appearing in fifty-two one and two-reel Nestor Comedies on the Universal program for the past six years, Eddie Lyons and Lee Moran are to produce their own comedies for the Universal organization. This was arranged recently when Lyons and Moran spent a month in New York with the officials of the Universal. The two comedians returned to the coast recently, and within a few days completed arrangements for making their own subjects, and are now at work on the first which will be titled "The Pig Skin Hero." Their producing organization will include players who have appeared in past releases in which Lyons and Moran were featured, and Eugene DeRue will serve as assistant director, and Al Cawood will be the cameraman.

"The boys," as Lyons and Moran are known at the studio and throughout the West Coast film colony, have a unique record, in that they have played together longer than any other two players of screendom. They both left the vaudeville stage to accept a position with the Universal at the same time, and have been together since that day. All of the time, up until now, that they have played for the screen they have worked in Nestor Comedies where they were featured, with but one or two exceptions when they appeared in five-reel comedy dramas. "The boys" organization will be independent from the Universal, but they will have the advantage of the technical department of Universal City, and also will work there, they having rented stage space for the making of their comedies. Capt. Leslie T. Peacocke, one of the best known scenario writers, has been engaged to write comedies for Lyons and Moran.

The brand name for the comedies to be made under the direction of Lyons and Moran is yet to be selected.

You are not going to war. The men who are need all the comforts you can give them. Help them get cigarettes. That is your patriotic duty. If you aren't helping in the "smokes" campaign, get busy—now. Don't be a slacker!

Paramount Releases Reid Feature on December 17

According to Paramount Pictures Corporation, Wallace Reid is destined to qualify as a Western star of no small calibre in his two forthcoming Paramount pictures, "Nan of Music Mountain," to be released December 17, and "Rimrock Jones," which is to be a January release.

Frank H. Spearman, who wrote "Nan of Music Mountain," is said to know his West thoroughly and is also possessed of the ability to involve the rugged types to be found in the mountains and the prairies of the Far West in romantic situations, thereby creating fiction that has a basis in fact but which possesses the high-light and the shades such as can be supplied only by a real artist in letters.

"Daughter of Destiny" Coincides with History

The story of "Daughter of Destiny," in which Madame Petrova is scheduled to make her bow as the star of her own organization on December 23, is said to be very timely, in so far as history-in-the-making is concerned. It revolves around a series of incidents which take place in the fictional kingdom of Belmark, wherein the monarch of the European principality receives an ultimatum from the emperor of another country to the effect that Belmark must declare itself or have the neutrality of the country violated.

The Petrova Picture Company believes that the theme which dominates the story will please exhibitors greatly, and has announced that the advertising possibilities are unlimited.

"Les Miserables" Draws Praise When First Shown

The newest of photoplay masterpieces, "Les Miserables," in which William Farnum has the role of the immortal Jean Valjean, had its first presentation on December 3 at the Lyric theatre in New York, and instantly won the plaudits of the thousands who flocked to see it. It is the general belief that William Fox, who produced the feature from Victor Hugo's melodrama, has never offered a subject of greater promise, and of promise which appears to have been already partly fulfilled.

Reviewers are agreed that William Farnum's dramatic work is one of the screen's notable contributions, and Frank Lloyd's direction is a triumph of the filmmaker's art.

General Releases New Rastrelli Laugh-Provoker

Amedee Rastrelli, the French comedian, who is putting his fun-making capabilities into one-reel comedies for Essanay, is said to continue to set a fast pace for brother comedians in "Make Your Eyes Behave," the General Film current release in the series. It is claimed he has developed new comedy stunts in this subject.

The current Essanay scenic is "The Great National Industries of Canada," said to be an entertaining review in picture form of the great advance Canada is making as an industrial nation.

O'Brien Opposite Miss Talmadge in "Ghosts of Yesterday"

Eugene O'Brien, who was seen opposite Mary Pickford in "Rebecca of Sunnybrook Farm," and who more recently played the leading role opposite Norma Talmadge in "Poppy," "The Moth" and whose latest appearance is in "The Ghosts of Yesterday," featuring Miss Talmadge, is one of the few stars who is combining work behind the footlights with work before the camera.

Mr. O'Brien has the principal male role opposite Alexandria Carlisle in "Country Cousins," which has had a successful run at the Fulton theatre for some weeks. It is announced that this play will close the latter part of this month, and Mr. O'Brien is undecided whether or not he will go with the road show. He has only recently finished his engagement with Joseph Schenck, as leading man for Miss Talmadge in "The Ghosts of Yesterday," adapted from Rupert Hughes's novel of the same name.

Lowry Production Claims Widespread Attention

Goldwyn Pictures Corporation, in an announcement last week, gave considerable accent to its belief that never has a picture been produced with such wide-spread interest in its making as "For the Freedom of the World."

This film is a patriotic spectacle, produced, it is said, with the idea of awakening Americans to the situation caused by the war and bringing home to them the facts which already have been realized by the public in the countries of all the Allies.

The story of the film was written by Captain Edwin Bower Hesser, an officer of the American Legion of the Canadian Army. After arrangements had been made to produce the film on a tremendous scale, the producers obtained the co-operation of the Canadian Government in making it, according to announcements.

Artcraft Releases Farrar Subject December 17

"The Devil Stone" Is from Jeanie Macpherson Scenario and Was Staged by Cecil De Mille—Story Is Based on Superstition

THE next production to be released by the Artcraft Pictures Corporation will present Geraldine Farrar in her newest photoplay vehicle, "The Devil Stone." A story of unusual interest is promised in this picture, which is said to be considerably different from any of the former film plays in which the star of the screen and opera has thus far appeared.

Cecil B. De Mille, producer of previous Farrar cinema triumphs including "The Woman God Forgot" and "Joan the Woman," is responsible for the staging of her latest vehicle The story, disclosing a theme of weird fascination, was written by Beatrice De Mille and Leighton Osmun and adapted to the scren by Jeanie Macpherson.

In her new picture, Miss Farrar creates the role of Marcia Manot, a simple Breton fisherwoman. Removed after the early part of the story to America, she becomes the wife of an unscrupulous millionaire owner of the fisheries, the site of her girlhood days. The underlying theme of the narrative, namely, the sinister effect of the world-old stumbling block of man, superstition, furnishes the basis for a story of interesting study, since it links with the tale of Grenelda, the ancient Norse Queen, a modern development of the curse placed upon the possessor of the devil stone, carried down into the events of the life of Marcia Manot, as a Breton fisher girl and later as the wife of Silas Martin in America. Apparently the curse which the dying priest placed upon the Grenalda of old is carried down into the life of Marcia, for a series of direful events take place until after the death of her crabbed husband.

Through the latter events of the story in America runs the thread of a romantic love, culminating in the happy marriage of Marcia to Guy Sterling, the young business manager for her husband.

In the cast are Wallace Reid, Hobart Bosworth, Tully Marshall, James Neill, Gustav von Seyffertitz, Ernest Joy, Mabel Van Buren, Lillian Leighton, Burwell Hamrick and other well-known film players. "The Devil Stone" will be released by Artcraft on December 17.

New Theatres Get in Line with O. Henry Features

Evidence of the growing popularity of General Film's O. Henry pictures continues to accumulate in new bookings from many theatres which have never shown these subjects before. The four-reel subjects, in particular, are said to be enjoying an unusually successful run in all parts of the country, the entire series of seven features having been contracted for by the Princess theatre in Denver. Each subject will be given an extended run and will be advertised heavily by the Princess management.

Production Outlook for Next Year

BY WALTER E. GREENE, PRESIDENT OF ARTCRAFT PICTURES CORPORATIONS

WHAT future does the next year hold forth for the motion picture?

I do not think that any radical changes will be made in production. Five years ago the Famous Players released its first long feature, presenting famous plays and noted actors, and it was followed by the Lasky Company. The combination of the two, and of Artcraft, are still carrying out the original policies of presenting the best that can be obtained.

The five-reel feature has been the crucible in which the entire industry has been crystallized, and the supreme test to which actors, directors and scenario writers have been put. Much promising timber has developed fatal defects in being driven over the five-reel course, and we have today stars of unquestioned merit, repeatedly proven in the box office.

The long-reel feature with a star lifted the motion picture from a catchpenny business to a giant industry. The public has shown its approval, and has consistently patronized the theatres showing these better films. Producers are engaged in catering to the public, and are anxious to make the films wanted. Patrons of picture houses can co-operate to a great extent if they would signify to the manager whether or not a particular picture has pleased them, and also state the kind of stories they like best.

No doubt, even among the stars, you will find a division between the stage and studio, but these are exceptional cases. Geraldine Farrar is possessed of a marvelous voice, and she maintains her position in the operatic world in obedience to popular demand. George M. Cohan's personal interests, his plays and theatres, demand attention, and he has been able to give but little of his time to pictures.

I see no reason for material changes during the next year, with the exception that the productions will continue to get bigger and better in point of merit. As in all new industries, individualism has given way to organization, and the trade-mark of the organization which has established a reputation for the best pictures will be the guiding star for the public to follow.

One point has been definitely settled for the future, and that is that the regular theatre no longer competes with pictures. The wide scope of the photoplay has attracted men of the biggest caliber, and every stage star has acted before the camera. The motion picture has grown so powerful that it can command talent and ability to an extent that the regular theatre cannot meet. There is not a theatre in existence that could afford to pay the salaries of a big picture star and a famous producer, to say nothing of the big casts and general production cost.

Vitagraph Releases Earle Williams Feature

"In the Balance," Scheduled for December 17, Said to Give Star Great Opportunity—Produced Under Direction of Scardon

EARLE WILLIAMS, as John Strangeway in "In the Balance," a Greater Vitagraph Blue Ribbon feature, scheduled for release December 17, will be seen, according to Vitagraph, in one of the strongest characterizations since his portrayal of John Storm in "The Christian."

"In the Balance" marks the appearance of E. Phillips Oppenheim on the list of Vitagraph's "best authors," others on the roster being Robert W. Chambers, O. Henry, Alfred Henry Lewis, George Randolph Chester and Lillian Chester, Frederick Upham Adams, Cyrus T. Brady, James O. Curwood and Earl Derr Biggers.

The picture is an adaptation from the novel by E. Phillips Oppenheim, "The Hillman," and is declared to be an extraordinarily powerful story with highly romantic element in it. It was produced under the direction of Paul Scardon, and is said to be probably the finest piece of photodrama ever put forth by this director.

Grace Darmond and Miriam Miles, who has played in several Blue Ribbon features, are the chief feminine supports of Mr. Williams, and the entire cast is said to be one of the best balanced and most capable that has been seen on the screen in months. Robert Gaillard plays the role of an elder brother of Williams, a character role, and Denton Vane is effective as the heavy.

President Smith expresses the conviction that "In the Balance" is one of the finest five-reel features of the year. Director Scardon, in addition to turning out a smooth drama, has excelled himself, it is said, in the novelties and original lighting situations which he has introduced into the picture, and attention is called to the exceptionally rich settings of the picture.

"This feature," said President Smith, "is fully up to Vitagraph's standard, and has everything to recommend it, from the standpoint of star, story, direction, lighting and production—all the elements that go to make high class photoplays.

Every Day Incidents Help Billie Rhodes Along

Exhibitors declare, according to Mutual, that one of the secrets of the popularity of Billie Rhodes's Mutual-Strand comedies—quite outside of the prettiness and cleverness of the star herself—is the fact that the pictures are built on every day incidents to which Miss Rhodes applies a well balanced sense of humor.

The Rhodes comedies are something more than merely 1,000 feet of well acted comedy. The incidents they portray are things that happen in every well regulated household on certain occasions and under certain conditions but which usually turn out domestic tragedies instead of family comedies.

William Fox Slates New Farnum Picture December 16

William Fox plans to release another Standard picture December 16. It will be a William Farnum production, "The Heart of a Lion," based on Ralph Connor's novel, "The Doctor."

The story, which has been read by thousands of moving picture patrons, is called by the author "a tale of the Canadian Rockies," and has been closely followed, it is said, by Director Frank Lloyd in his screen version. Most of the opening scenes, laid on a farm, were taken on Mr. Farnum's country place on Long Island, several of the old country town characters introduced in the picture being friends and neighbors of the actor.

William Farnum, of course, has the role of "Barney Kemper." The part of the brother is played by William Courtleigh, Jr., and the other principals include Mary Martin, Wanda Petit, Walter Law, Marc Robbins and Rita Bori.

Pathe Changes Hulette Release to December 30

Gladys Hulette's next appearance on the Pathe program will be on December 30 instead of December 9, in "Over the Hill."

The cast includes J. H. Gilmour, as the millionaire owner of a chain of newspapers; William Parke, Jr., as his spendthrift son Roy; Dan Mason, the character actor, as an old minister; Gladys Hulette as his plucky little daughter; Chester Barnett, as Allen Stone; Richard Thornton, as Jim Barnes, the editor; Joyce Fair, Paul Clerget, Tula Belle, Inda Palmer, Johnny Carr and William Sullivan.

Fox Makes Over Hundred Features in One Year

Average of Productions Is Six Reels, and Twenty of the Total Were Specially Elaborate — Most Taken in California

Sidney L. Mason is Leading Man for Theda Bara in a New Fox Production

ONE hundred and five productions averaging six reels each, are William Fox's contribution to the 1917 screen product. Twenty photoplays in this total were specially elaborate and spectacular.

The output from the Fox studios is said to be the largest for a year of any concern having no subsidiary producing organizations. It represents an annual consumption in excess of 8,000 miles of film—more than enough to reach across the continent to San Francisco and thence on to Yokohoma, or from London to Moscow and back, twice. The amount of celluloid used would make a strip almost one-thrid of the way around the world.

About three-fifths of the pictures were taken in California. The rest were made at the Fox plant in New Jersey. All of the twenty-six Foxfilm comedies and the six Fox-Lehrman Sunshine comedies were done in the West. Such pretentious superproductions as "The Conqueror," "The Honor System," "Jack and the Beanstalk," "Aladdin and the Wonderful Lamp," "Treasure Island," "Cleopatra," and many others, were likewise screened on the Pacific Coast.

One of the most important of Mr. Fox's achievements during the year was the inauguration of the series of photodramatic spectacles such as "Jack and the Beanstalk" and "Aladdin," with Francis Carpenter and Virginia Lee Corbin. These plays were of a type new to the cinema world and their advent was the occasion of wide laudatory comment.

Twenty-seven stars were on the William Fox lists in the last twelvemonth. Of those still with the organization, George Walsh and Virginia Pearson appeared in the most features—eight each. June Caprice had the leading role in seven, William Farnum and Gladys Brockwell in six each, and the others range from five down to one for Sonia Markova and Jewel Carmen (whose initial starring vehicle, "The Kingdom of Love," is released on December 23).

Theda Bara was in seven productions, under the direction of J. Gordon Edwards, the most notable of which was "Cleopatra."

William Farnum in "Les Miserables," directed by Frank Lloyd, was another ultra-fine film. The picture has just begun a run at the Lyric theatre in New York.

Vitagraph Signs Grace Darmond for Features

Engagement Results from Player's Excellent Work in New Earle Williams Feature—Has Been in Pictures Three Years

ALBERT E. SMITH, president of Greater Vitagraph, announces this week that he has signed Grace Darmond, sometimes called "The Lillian Russell of the Screen," to a long-term contract and that she will be starred in Blue Ribbon features.

Miss Darmond was recently engaged for a special role in "In the Balance," a five-reel feature in which Earle Williams is featured, and her work was said to be of such extraordinary merit that President Smith immediately offered her a permanent place in the circle of Vitagraph stars.

Miss Darmond, who is one of the youngest stars in motion pictures, has been a featured player almost from the day she stepped into the Selig studio in Chicago, three years ago. She got her first chance in pictures when, as a schoolgirl, she visited the studio with a party of her classmates, and the director impressed them into a scene.

Prior to her advent in pictures and even while she was going to school, Miss Darmond had had some experience in theatrical stock, and, after a brief experience in small parts at the Selig studio she was advanced to the position of a leading woman. Her first important picture was "Your Girl and Mine," a propaganda picture made for the Illinois Suffrage Association and written by Gilson Willets. Next she played the leading feminine role in a three-reel subject, "The Quarry," and then was featured in support of Tyrone Power in "A Texas Steer," later appearing with Otis Harlan and then with Harry Messayer.

President Smith declares that Vitagraph will feature Miss Darmond in Blue Ribbon features, and is planning to provide her with vehicles which will display her beauty and talent to their fullest extent. At the present time she is working with Harry Morey and Florence Deshon in "The Other Man," a Blue Ribbon feature now being produced.

Vitagraph Announces Features for Immediate Future

ALBERT E. SMITH, president of Greater Vitagraph, announced this week that the Favorite Film Features to be released the last two weeks of this year and the first week of the new year will be as follows:

December 24: "The Masked Dancer," a two-reel drama with Myrtle Gonzalez, George Holt, Beatrice Dominguez and Kail Farmes, and "The Wonderful Statue," a one-reel comedy, with Lillian Walker, Flora Finch, Mary Maurice, John Bunny and Courtenay Foote.

December 31: "The One Good Turn," a one-reel drama, with Florence Turner, Leo Delaney, Helen Costello and Georgia Maurice, and "Pickles, Art and Sauerkraut," a two-reel comedy, with Sidney Drew, Louise Beaudet, Jose Sadler, Ada Gifford, Hughie Mack, James Lackaye, Templar Saxe, Anders Randolf and William Shea.

January 7: "The Trap," a two-reel drama, with Edith Storey, E. K. Lincoln, L. Rogers Lytton, William Humphrey and Harry Northrup, and "A Change in Baggage Checks," a one-reel comedy with John Bunny and Flora Finch.

The Vitagraph announcement states that the demand for this unit of their service, which consists of selected subjects from the Vitagraph library, is growing in popularity each week and exhibitors are booking them for months in advance. As an example of the excellence of the pictures that make up these programs, the one entitled "Pickles, Art and Sauerkraut," in which Sidney Drew is featured with an all-star cast is cited. This is said to be a comedy of extraordinary merit, one of the laugh-making incidents showing Sidney Drew, as the artist-husband of a delicatessen store owner, using a football player's noseguard as a gas mask in attacking a cake of Limburger. This picture was made about three years ago.

Gaumont-Mutual Weekly Shows Naval Graduations

Timely views in No. 153 of the Gaumont-Mutual Weekly, released on Sunday, December 2, show the graduation of the new classes of reserve officers and students of our nautical schools. At Fort Meyer, Va., President Wilson and his wife are interested onlookers, while Secretary of War Baker hands commissions to new officers.

This number of the Weekly contains many other subjects. In Phoenix, Ariz., Governor Campbell presents the colors to the Range Riders Regiment, while the crack cowboy cavalry entertains the fifty thousand visitors to the Arizona State Fair. Somewhere on our coast rookie sailors are shown in an educating boat drill. Everywhere in the United States Red Cross workers are doing their bit, nad in one subject they are shown making bandages and appliances for wounded soldiers. Away down in Texas Governor Hobby and his staff review thirty thousand men of the army of liberty. On the Pacific Coast an old wooden dry-dock has been burned to make way for a newer one with greater capacity, and the construction of the new concrete dock is pictured.

Critics Find Much Human Interest in "Les Miserables"

Human interest is the keynote of William Fox's production of "Les Miserables," according to the dramatic critics of New York who witnessed the initial showing of the picture on the night of December 3 at the Lyric theatre. The production also was praised because of the care and accuracy with which the Victor Hugo story has been followed. William Farnum, in the role of Jean Valjean, generally was given great credit.

It was the judgment of the New York Herald reviewer that "the photoplay probably is as close an approach to literature as has been accomplished on the screen," and the Morning Telegraph declared "the visualized work is every bit as strong as the printed word."

Following are a few of the comments: "There are people who are continually crying for better pictures. To them we would say: 'See 'Les Miserables.'"—New York Tribune. "Quite the best picture that has been seen hereabout for a considerable period."—New York Times. "In strength of plot and human interest 'Les Miserables' surpasses the memorable 'Honor System.'"—New York American. "A note of poignant human interest was dominant through it all."—New York Herald. "An excellent example of what the movies can do for the classics of literature."—New York Morning World. "The humanity of the book was well reproduced."—New York Post. "Months of preparation have been spent and the splendid photoplay showed fine evidence of this fact."—New York Globe. "A delicious piece of character work. It was a triumph of art for William Farnum."—New York Evening World. "The film moves on with a dramatic intensity thart never flags. Always the human interest is uppermost."—New York Evening Telegram.

Paramount Plans Big Send-Off for New Year

January Expected to Bring Diversity of Subjects and Stars of Unusual Worth—First Appearance of Beban in Several Months

TO give the new year of 1918 a rousing send-off on its way toward 1919 and history, Paramount, in an announcement made this week concerning plans for releases in January, promises a superior list of photoplays, starring some of the most popular players, and written by prominent authors.

The schedule is rendered notable for several reasons, not the least of which is the reappearance of George Beban, after several months, in "Jules of the Strong Heart," directed by Donald Crisp, and presenting the character player in the role of a trapper in the North Woods. The story is by William Merriam Rouse, the scenario by Harvey F. Thew and Frank X. Finnegan.

Another interesting announcement is that J. Stuart Blackton's second Paramount picture, "The World for Sale," filmed from Sir Gilbert Parker's novel, will be released in January. This is the production which called for such distinct character types and has for its leading players Conway Tearle and Ann Little with a well selected cast. This was adapted and supervised throughout by Mr. Blackton.

Pauline Frederick appears in "Mrs. Dane's Defense" from the Henry Arthur Jones drama, and which, directed by Hugh Ford, the scenario being the work of Margaret Turnbull, promises to be one of the most effective pictures in which the star has appeared.

Wallace Reid is said to have a stirring story in "Rimrock Jones," adapted from Dane Coolidge's novel, by Harvey Thew and Frank X. Finnegan, and directer by Donald Crisp.:

Charles Ray, the Thomas H. Ince star in Paramount pictures, has a new type of story in "The Hired Man," it is said, with its New England characters and locale. The scenario is by Julian Josephson, and the picture was directed by Victor Schertzinger under the supervision of Mr. Ince.

Julian Eltinge's new picture, for January release, is "The Widow's Might," by Marion Fairfax. It was directed by William C. De Mille, and is said to be highly entertaining, with an altogether new angle.

Jack Pickford appears in "The Spirit of '17," by Judge Willis Brown of the Chicago Juvenile Court. Julia Crawford Ivers did the scenario and William D. Taylor directed the production.

Goldsoll Finds Russian Pictures Meet Favor

Returns from Flying Visit to Various Pathe Exchanges, During Which Time He Talked with Exhibitors Concerning Films

L. H. GOLDSOLL, general manager of the Russian Art Film Corporation, recently returned from a flying visit to the Pathe exchanges in Boston, Cleveland, Detroit, Chicago and Cincinnati, where trade showings were given of "The Painted Doll" and "The Queen of Spades," two of the first pictures of the Russian repertoire of plays to be released and is greatly pleased with results.

Mr. Goldsoll found, it has been announced, that no apologies were necessary as to the pictures being foreign, and in his talks to the exhibitors, laid stress upon the fact that these pictures were made in Russia. His explanation as to the origin of the idea for the producing of this repertoire and how Mr. Kaplan secured the ex-Czar's permission to allow the stars of the Moscow Art theatre to enact this series of pictures, as well as how the objections of the artists themselves to condescend to appear in pictures, were overcome, was much appreciated by the Pathe exchange men and exhibitors.

Mr. Goldsoll said that bookings far exceeded his expectations and that reports from many exchange men and exhibitors who had seen the first release, "The Painted Doll," referred to it as a 100 per cent picture.

What was commented upon in different cities was the evident demand for Russian subjects, as confirmed by other large producers trying to secure Russian actors and using titles resembling those used by the Russian Art Film Corporation in their repertoire of plays.

The motion picture critic of the Cincinnati Times-Star said after seeing "The Painted Doll": "Motion picture plays in which actors express something more than the ability to portray action and situations as described in the usual scenario, are those which will soon be offered to Cincinnati theatres through the Pathe exchange, and known as 'Russian Art Films.' A few days ago two of these photoplays, which were made in Russia by actors from the Royal theatre at Moscow, were given a private screening for exhibitors and the press in the projection room of the Pathe offices here. At the conclusion of the first five-reel feature, 'The Painted Doll,' the guests agreed that they had witnessed something altogether new in motion pictures, artistic, pleasing, classic."

Walthall Feature Possesses Appeal to Women

"His Robe of Honor," Cited by Paralta as Having Qualities That Act as Magnet to Feminine Minds—Hodkinson Releases

ACCORDING to an announcement last week from Paralta, "His Robe of Honor," the first Paralta play in which Henry B. Walthall is to be seen, is certain to prove a favorite photoplay feature with the women of this country. This offering, which is from the well known novel of the same name by E. S. and J. F. Dorrance, presents at the beginning its central figure in a state of degradation, such that only two possible forces could save him—religion, or the uplifting power of a good woman's soul.

It is this latter influence that the authors have adopted, and they carry it out to a logical and pleasing conclusion. At the same time they furnish contrast to the good woman through the presence in the cast of another who is more or less of an adventuress but who, nevertheless, raises herself to better things at the end.

The character created by Walthall for the screen is that of Julian Randolph, a lawyer who is crooked on a big scale and successful financially. His services are finally needed by the boss of New York State politics for the defense of the boss' brother who is guilty of murder. Randolph is regarded as the only man who can save him from the chair.

Randolph, however, drives a hard bargain. If he frees the murderer he is to be appointed to an expired vacant term on the State Supreme Court bench and is to be re-elected for a full term.

The lawyer wins his case by placing upon the jury three men who are under great obligation to him. The boss carries out his part of the bargain.

But meanwhile Randolph has come under the influence of Lara Nelson. The young girl's attitude toward life, and especially the things that Randolph thought important, teaches the former ambulance "chaser" that there is a whole world of honor which he had only sensed very vaguely. There is born in him the determination to be an honorable judge.

Julius Stern Tells Details of Star System

Stellar Lights Now Shining Include Hughie Mack, Gail Henry, Mack Swain, Myrtle Sterling and Bobby Dunn—Ambrose Comedy Shortly

HAVING decided to add stars to the L-Ko brand as an extra attraction for exhibitors who have been showing the long-established comedies under the trade mark exclusively, President Julius Stern, in co-operation with Director-General J. G. Blystone, announced this week a few of the forthcoming attractions in detail. Hughie Mack, Gail Henry, Mack Swain, Myrtle Sterling and Bobby Dunn are all working, under individual directors, in active preparation of forthcoming L-Kos, it is made known.

The second comedy in the "Ambrose" series, following "Ambrose's Icy Love," to be released December 26, will be "Baseball Ambrose," in nine innings of the national pastime condensed into two reels of fun. There will be a lively comedy with grotesque Gail Henry demonstrating "The Price She Paid," and Archie Mayo is directing Bobby Dunn in a bath-house feature that will engage a large assemblage of L-Ko beauties.

"Barbarous Plots" will have Hughie Mack as the star, with Bobby Dunn featured. In this subject there will be, it is said, an unusual assemblage of old favorites who have frequented L-Kos for some time, including Eva Novak, Dick Smith and the comedy "vamp," Katherine Young.

Spence Devotes Full Time to Comedy-Dramas for Walsh

RALPH H. SPENCE, who for some time has been writing the R. A. Walsh features for William Fox, will devote his future energies toward creating comedy-dramas for George Walsh, it was announced last week.

To Mr. Spence goes the credit for writing several of the most successful comedy-dramas in which George Walsh has appeared, the last two being directed by R. A. Walsh, who recently signed a contract with Goldwyn Pictures Corporation. The Walshes are brothers.

Before joining R. A. Walsh as scenario writer, Mr. Spence was editor of the Fox-Sunshine comedies in Los Angeles. Previous to joining Henry Lehrmann at the Sunshine Studio, Mr. Spence was assistant manager of the Fox comedy department at Los Angeles, his new duties as scenaric editor of the Lehrmann plant coming as the result of the merger of Foxfilm comedies with Sunshine comedies. Mr. Spence's first comedy efforts were at Mack Sennett-Keystone studios, where he specialized in humorous subtitles.

Taking a common Bermuda onion as the basis for a series of complications, Mr. Spence is now writing a farce for George Walsh that bids fair to surpass all his previous efforts. The temporary title of the new farce is "In Onion There is Strength."

Margarita Fischer Is Star of "Miss Jackie of the Army," a Mutual-American Production.

Sheer-Bernstein Place D'Evans in Castleton Feature

IT was announced from the Sheer-Bernstein offices this week that Herbert D'Evans, who is represented officially by that company, has been appearing in the principal male role opposite Barbara Castleton in a new feature which is being made at the Biograph studio. The production is called "The Ashes of Her Heart," it is said, with Burton King directing.

Eugene O'Brien, also represented by Sheer-Bernstein, is at present being heavily exploited because of his English character part in "The Country Cousin" at the Gaiety theatre. Mr. O'Brien made his first picture appearance with Mary Pickford in "Poor Little Peppina," immedaitely after he closed a long season with Frances Starr in "The Case of Becky." Previous to this production, he occupied the principal male role in Belasco's "The Governor's Lady," in which he was co-featured with Kelsey and Shannon.

Mr. D'Evans came to this country with the production of "Quinney's" from His Majesty's theatre, London, where previous to this he had important roles in Drury Lane productions and under the auspices of Sir Herbert Tree.

His first motion picture engagement was as an extra man for William Fox. During his engagement in the Maxine Elliott theatre in "Quinney's," someone suggested to him that he would make an excellent screen figure. In order to discover his own possibilities, he applied to Sam Kingston for anything from $1 up. Mr. Kingston told him to take a dress suit and be in Fort Lee the next morning at 8 o'clock.

Irene Castle Starts the New Year for Pathe

In an announcement this week concerning the manner in which Pathe will begin the new year, "Convict 993," a five-part Pathe Play featuring Irene Castle, is scheduled to draw the distinction of inaugurating 1918 for the Pathe program. This picture was produced by Astra from an original scenario by Wallace Clifton, of the Pathe scenario department.

Associated with Mrs. Castle in the cast are a number of players of sterling merit, some of whom have been starred in Pathe productions in the past. Prominent among them is Warner Oland, fresh from his triumphs in "The Fatal Ring." Mr. Oland within the last year or so has played many parts in Pathe pictures. His "villains" are of a new type. He plays with repression and dignity. Helene Chadwick is another member of the cast who has been seen frequently in Pathe pictures during the past year. W. H. Gilmour, who has had prominent parts in many of the Gladys Hulette pictures, and whose "old man" characterizations are always sympathetic and able, is another prominent member of the cast. Harry Benham, who has played heroes for Thanhouser, Universal, Fox and World, plays opposite Mrs. Castle. Bert Starkey, the "spider" of "The Fatal Ring" fame, is still another member of the cast worthy of more than passing notice.

"Convict 993" is described as a "crook" play, the kind audiences like.

General Begins New Year With a New Series

Judge Willis Brown Writes Two-Reel Stories for Screen Use, with Special Appeal to Young and Old—Wrote Pickford Story

WHAT is considered one of the most interesting acquisitions in many months was announced this week by General Film Company. It is a series of two-reel stories by Judge Willis Brown, the children's advocate and author of numerous successful film features.

Beginning about January 1 these new stories will be distributed at intervals by General Film Company and will no doubt constitute an important advance in the presentation of photoplays appealing to young and old alike. The California Cinema Company at Los Angeles, recently incorporated, is sponsor for the productions.

Judge Brown is among the country's foremost authorities on juvenile matters and has originated many unique and worth while legal end educational methods in behalf of minors. He originated and was the administrator of the Parental Court of Gary, Ind., the first of its kind, and was the founder and first judge of the Utah juvenile courts, said to be the most advanced juvenile courts in the world. He also originated the boy city movement at Charlevoix, Mich., and devised the Boyville civic plan, an educational system of boys' work based on preventative lines, and has done more than any other authority to improve and advance conditions with regard to the status of juvenile cases in and out of the courts of the land.

Judge Brown's appearance as a film producer is not casual nor experimental. As a writer of photoplay stories of youth, he is already considered a success. Three of his most recent films are "The Saint's Adventure," featuring Henry B. Walthall, "The Girl Who Won Out," featuring Violet MacMillan, and "The Spirit of '17," in which Jack Pickford is starring. For some months he has had in preparation the new screen material written in his characteristic vein to be known as the "Judge Brown Stories." For the most past juvenile actors will be featured in these new stories.

Fox Presents Big Cast in "Unknown 274," December 16

June Caprice, Smile and All, in William Fox's "Unknown 274"

AN unusually large cast containing the names of numerous favorites of motion picture patrons is announced by William Fox for the Fox special feature to be released December 16. The title of the production is "Unknown 274," the star is June Caprice and the supporting company, comprising ten actors and actresses, includes Kittens Reichert, Florence Ashbrook, Tom Burrough, Inez Marcel, Dan Mason, Richard Neill, Jean Armour, William Burns and Alexander Shannon. Another important member of the company is "Lady," the dog.

The story is that of a girl who was placed in an orphanage by her mother when the latter's husband was arrested by trickery in this country for failure to perform army service in his native land. The girl is discovered in the orphanage by a scheming couple who adopt her in the hope of being able to marry her to some rich man. The girl meets a rich young man, just as was planned, but he does not happen to be the sort of man the schemers had hoped to find. Result: He rescues the girl from her bad environment. About the same time the girl finds her father as a result of playing an old violin which had been left with her when she was placed in the orphanage. The theme of the story is stated to be "from poverty to millionaire's wife."

The picture was made under the direction of Harry Millarde, and George Scarborough wrote the scenario.

Well Balanced Suspense Promised in "Lost Express"

Evidence of well balanced suspense in motion picture direction is said to be apparent in Chapter XIV of "The Lost Express," the fifteenth chapter photonovel starring Helen Holmes, which is nearing its conclusion. Chapter XIV entitled "Unmasked," scheduled for release December 17, carries the many audiences which have been watching the chapter play, to the very brink of the mystery and leaves them still in wonder and suspense at its solution.

The mystery is founded on what became of the lost express. The train disappeared completely in Chapter I of the serial. While there have been many near solutions, the picture has sustained interest and kept away from a definite indication of what happened to the engine and its three coaches after it left the station and failed to show up at the station next beyond.

You are not going to war. The men who are need all the comforts you can give them. Help them get cigarettes. That is your patriotic duty. If you aren't helping in the "smokes" campaign, get busy—now. Don't be a slacker!

Jack Cohn Points Out Changes in Current News Reels

COMMENTING upon the news reel of today as compared with the news reel of days gone, Jack Cohn, manager of Universal's three news services. said last week:

"Look at a news reel on the screen today, and then cast your mind's eye back to the news reel of 1912—the days "berore the war." There's a difference, isn't there? Not the war pictures, but the regular run of pictures dealing with the doings of the day. Then there was a plethora of views, a paucity of news. Now the motion picture theatre public demands something more than mere motion in a news picture. They don't look for acting in it but they do demand action. The scenes presented must be news in fact as well as in name—big news, news that's worth while.

"The war," he continued, "has brought every mind into close touch with big events. It has forced a quickening of the public news sense, developed a keen perception of news values. I am not speaking now merely of war pictures. They are important, of course, but the public are not interested in them alone. They also want the pictures of the doings of the day, but they want only the important doings, and they want those presented in a dramatic way. They want life, character, action.

"When Universal put out its exclusive pictures of Pershing's reception in France the people were wide awake to their news value. Oh, yes; they know a big scoop on the screen when they see it. And then there were aeroplane pictures, where the eyes of the audience went up in an aeroplane with the cameraman and were right among the fliers, observing their every movement at close quarters—not on the ground looking up at specks three or four thousand feet above them."

Universal Screen Magazine Features "Pig Clubs"

"President Wilson," said President Laemmle of Universal last week, "has emphasized the fact that increased hog production is vital in the present crisis. In a telegram he sent the rangers he said: 'We are today a nation in arms and we must fight, and raise stock, conserve food to the one common purpose.'"

"The big point brought out by Mr. Hoover in his recent appeal to the press of the country to enlist in the campaign to increase food production was the necessity for encouraging hog raising. Therefore I consider our contract with the United States Government's Department of Agriculture, which grants us the exclusive rights to show these government made films, to be of unusual importance because of the timeliness of the subjects, which is significantly exemplified in our forthcoming release of the Universal Screen Magazine in which what the Bureau of Animal Industry is doing in organizing Boys and Girls' Pig Clubs is strikingly shown on the screen."

Strand in New York Shows Essanay Short Scenic

A distinction not usually granted to one-reel scenics was accorded the first release of a series offered by Essanay under the title of "Wonders of Nature and Science," by the Strand theatre of New York. The picture was run the full week and was advertised.

That it is a feature is attested to by the fact that it shows a group of America's most famous writers and authors indulging in the art of Walton. In the film are Maximillian Foster of The Saturday Evening Post, Jack Lait of the Chicago Tribune, Hugh Fullerton, magazine writer and baseball dopester, "Bill" McGeehan of the New York Sun, and Grantland Rice.

Argus Pictorial, December 16, Shows Five Subjects

Following the title, "Coral Limestone Rocks," in Pathe's Argus Pictorial No. 3 released December 16, is said to be a pretty series of pictures made in Bermuda, showing the peculiar characteristics of the coral rock which forms the foundation of most tropic islands.

This is followed by what is said to be one of the most spectacular subjects ever shown in motion pictures. The titles explain that the crystallization of certain solids can be watched under the microscope, and the first scene shows the preparation of the solids; then is shown the actual crystallization taking place, magnified on the screen over 30,000 diameters.

Professor R. H. Thatcher, of Columbia University, shows how fascinating designs are produced. So well is this subject illustrated that it is claimed any one can reproduce them with the simplest implements by merely following his simple though thoroughly expedient methods.

The banquet season is caricatured by the little clay figures modelled by Helena Smith Dayton and animated by H. D. Ashton, and the Amphileptus, the tiny inhabitant of fresh water ponds, less than five-hundredths of an inch in length and clearly shown through the microscope, winds up this reel.

Factory Trip Scheduled in Paramount Pictographs

The 97th release of Paramount-Bray Pictograph, the "magazine-on-the-screen," will take Paramount theatregoers on a trip through one of the largest factories in the world devoted exclusively to the production of confections. It should serve to bring to consumers the reasons why candy made by reputable manufacturers is not only wholesome but kept free from possible contamination in its production.

Hearst-Pathe Shows Volcano Eruption at Rotorua

From New York to New Zealand is a far cry, but in the Hearst-Pathe News No. 98 are said to be some remarkable scenes showing the eruption of the volcano Waimangu at Rotorua in that British island. The camera was perched upon the brink of the crater and caught a number of scenes showing the clouds of smoke and steam arising from the depths of the earth far below. In connection with these scenes are one or two others showing the "stern and rock bound coast," in that vicinity.

Among the other features of this number are scenes of the new Polish army which has been organized in France and is now fighting on the side of the Allies.

From Seattle, Washington, come views of an 8,800 ton ship which was built in 79 days after the keel was laid, this being one of the first to be launched under Uncle Sam's new shipbuilding plans.

Physical Culture Magazine Grows in Public Favor

The newest screen novelty, Bernarr Macfadden's Physical Culture Screen Magazine, continues to be one of the most pleasing single reel attractions yet produced, it is said. The monthly subjects, released by General Film Company, provide instruction in various phases of health development which have a most timely value just now. The second number of the magazine offers a varied program which will no doubt appeal to all types of picture fans. The camera has caught a group of modern mermaids doing a number of swimming and diving stunts, and Bernarr Macfadden gives a muscular drill which should aid in strengthening the back.

An interesting feature is the portable gymnasium for the use of the younger members of the family, from the baby on up. Miss Margaret Crawford's class of young women appear in an esthetic "Dance of the Fountain." A touch of comedy is provided by the game called "Waterloo Tag," in which a hose, a hydrant and a crowd provide a lot of merriment.

War Department Asks Hearst-Pathe for Photographers

In an appeal sent out last week by the International Film Service, Inc., it became known that the War Department has requested the Heart-Pathe News Reel to make a special effort to secure photographers for the Signal Corps of the Aviation branch of the service.

The current Hearst-Pathe News Reel shows in some detail the work which these photographers will be called on to do. It also carries a request that all men subject to draft who have not yet been called and who can qualify either as motion picture photographers or as still photographers, enlist in the Signal Corps.

Short Subjects in Review

By Clara DeLissa Berg

WINNING BY A TAIL

"It's a grand life if your tail holds out," says Pack Horse One to Pack Horse Two, in the latest Bruce scenic. That is because, when Mr. Bruce takes his pack train over mountain trails where a pace of more than three miles an hour might be fatally disastrous, he ties his horses head to tail, with a stout double twist of the rope, and dubs them "The Chain Gang." (Educational Films Corporation).

The camera record of this expedition is as fine a picture as any that Mr. Bruce has offered us. Men, horses, and the dog are seen, now silhouetted against the sky and distant peaks, now descending an almost vertical trail to a ravine's depth. Or for a restful interval they pace along the side of a level stream whose clear waters throw back their perfect image. Nor does activity cease with the end of toil. The shades of evening find the patient horses, their feet hobbled, but otherwise free, rolling luxuriously in the soft turf on which they bed for the night.

The film is a happy combination of scenic beauty, movement, and the humor that characterizes all of Mr. Bruce's splendid productions.

HORSES IN AND FOR THE ARMY

Refreshing to the eye, tired perhaps of the mechanical monsters our ingenuity is producing, are the splendid Percheron horses which are exhibited (Mutual Weekly, No. 153) to prospective buyers from Japan. It is said that they are destined for the Mikado's army.

Cowboys of Phoenix, Arizona, now a crack cavalry regiment, vary the monotony of military drill with an exhibition of their ever-delightful feats of horsemanship.

A fine sight is the body of 30,000 men who march in review at Camp Travis, Texas. A panoramic view of the camp discloses its extent and the ranks falling into line at the entrance of the parade ground.

Those who some weeks ago saw the pictures of the principals in the celebrated Mooney case of San Francisco in the Mutual Weekly will note with interest in this issue that further action is being taken to bring justice to light.

WHERE BERNHARDT USED TO PLAY TENNIS

Though no longer playing tennis with her great grandchildren, Sarah Bernhardt is still leading her exuberent life, when the stage does not call her, on that rugged, surf-beaten island off Brittany, pictured under the name of "The Pearl of the Atlantic." (Pathe Exchange). Sarah's spacious mansion and her Greek theatre built within sound of the sea are the only modern dwellings seen. For the rest, there is a castle of the time of Louis XIV, a quaint little village with boats resting in an artificial harbor running up between its streets, and always rocks, grottoes, and dashing surf. Kelp-gathering is a profitable industry for the men, while the drying of the delicate seaweeds and their application as a decoration on chinaware employs the women.

From this salty atmosphere we are taken to a stagnant freshwater pond and introduced to the queer insects that dwell therein. There is the Le Nepe, a disc with legs and a periscope-like arrangement for breathing, the Water Needle, whose name is sufficient description, a water caterpillar set all over with breathing tubes, and some flea-like creatures who engage in a blind but joyous acrobatic performance. Humorous titles enliven the picture.

ITALIAN ENGLAND

The England of thatched cottages or stately Tudor manor houses we know and love. But in "Tonic Towns of England" (Pathe Exchange) we see an England so picturesquely Italian that it needs the English names to remind us that we are not in Sicily or Calabria. "Tonic" in this connection indicates health resort, and is doubtless bestowed because of the bracing effect of the climate. Speaking personally, the writer would find the mere loveliness of these terraced towns, ancient arched bridges, and tumbling mountain streams quite enough of a restorative. The film is beautifully hand-colored and in every detail charming and attractive.

DAME FASHION AND THE MUMMY, INC.

When Fashion, most alive and up-to-the-minute lady, wants a new idea, she visits the Metropolitan Museum of Art (Universal Screen Magazine No. 50), hobnobs with the Curator of Antiquities, and derives inspiration from a Peruvian mummy older than the Incas! Indeed, so much to the taste of Madame is the garment fashioned two thousand years ago, and so becoming to the charming young lady of today who tries it on, that it is copied virtually without change for a modern wearer. A Chinese robe whose style dates back 2,500 years, serves as inspiration for a wrap, and a Coptic jacket and Siberian dress appear to excellent advantage in materials woven today.

So much for the ladies. Of interest to the men is the training of firemen rookies, which includes the erecting and scaling of ladders, the handling of hose, and rescue work. Equally interesting is it to watch the aviators of the United States Signal Service inflate their useful observation balloon. They must have taken the cameraman along, for we look down from a great height on the spreading, flat earth, whose surface must be intently studied for possible lurking enemies.

A glimpse into the past is afforded by pictures of the primitive methods still employed in the Blue Ridge Mountains of North Carolina where modern machinery is unknown. Lucky for our food supply that the modern powerful harvester shown by contrast is prevalent elsewhere!

BOXING FOR WOMEN

We hope that the possession of the vote by women will not mean the necessity of their acquiring the science of physical defense, but if it does may they all exercise their skill as deftly and gracefully as Miss Vera Roehm (Paramount-Bray Pictograph No. 97), a well known exponent of physical training and a woman of superb carriage and movement. With the aid of a clever woman pupil Miss Roehm demonstrates the Battling Nelson hook, the Kid McCoy counter, and other tricks of the pugilist's art, and plays chief role and victor in a little drama entitled (we believe!) "He Went Up Against It and Went Down."

A canine athlete unexcelled in his special line is the whippet, a dog bred from a greyhound and geared to go at thirty-five miles an hour, "the fastest thing on four legs." The spirited little creatures lined up for a race quiver with excitement and must be firmly held till the starting signal sends them catapulting down the track.

Sugar does not seem so scarce when we see the great masses of it employed in the making of pure candy. Many processes and skilled hands are needed to produce the Life Savers so familiar to us.

Bobby Bumps, bent on early Christmas shopping, emulates the speedy dressing methods of the fireman and makes a quick getaway but forgets to keep his eye on Fido, whose ambitions to shine lead him into disastrous contact with the machinery of the Wrapping Department. "Rapping" of another variety awaits him at the hands of the irate Goldie.

PASSING STRANGE ANIMALS

Between 1850 and 1880, the North American bison were driven from an area embracing perhaps five-sixths of the United States to a tiny spot hardly visible on the map with which Mr. Ditmars introduces his picture, "Our Vanishing Game" (Educational Films Corporation). With melancholy interest one views the herd at the New York Zoo—splendid beasts and giants compared to the lean European type presented in contrast. Interesting also from this point of view as well as in themselves, are the various types of African buck which, despite the camouflage Nature has bestowed on them in color and marking, are disappearing before advancing civilization.

PICTURES IN YOUR PAPER

The pictorial section of the Sunday newspaper made a great stride forward artistically with the introduction of the rotogravure process. International-Pathe, in its film entitled "The Rotogravure Section,' pays its respects to this important branch of picture printing. The huge metal roller is carefully burnished, negative and then positive plates are made of the artists' work, and from the latter a carbon print on heavy paper. This last is applied to the roller in a wet condition; the paper backing is removed, and the roller with the carbon emulsion adhering to it is then etched. The picture concludes with a close-up of the huge press turning out the printed folded sheets. The photography is excellent, but more explicit titling would add to the layman's understanding and enjoyment of the reel.

DOING IT BY HALVES

Lake steamers were built to stay on the Lakes. So when they start for the coast to enter Uncle Sam's oversea service (Hearst-Pathe News No. 97) they prove just about twice too long for the locks through which they must travel. Therefore shipbuilders drive into them with augurs and saws and cut them in two as easily as you or I would divide a pound of butter. Airtight coverings are then applied to the sundered ends, and the half-boats proceed on their way, to be reunited at the end of their journey.

Another example of mechanical ingenuity is furnished by the gunners of Italy, whom we see laying the foundations of a big gun, assembling it, and finally putting it into action.

The graduation exercises of the Officers' Training Camp at Fort Meyer and views of different branches of the aeroplane industry are other interesting features of this reel.

SOME LADIES FROM BAGDAD

"Chu Chin Chow," the operatic extravaganza from London, is repeating its success here. Some of the startling costumes worn are displayed in Hearst-Pathe News No. 98 by members of the company. The settings of the stage serve as background and add beauty to the pictures.

Preceding this and opening the reel in a spectacular manner are remarkable telephoto views of an active volcano in New Zealand. The steaming crater is shown, the piled lava, and the wrecked homes. The ocean, too, feels the disturbance and pounds violently on a nearby shore.

New York's waterfront is again called into prominence by the recent federal decision to place it under military guard. Here we have extensive views of the towering buildings and a panorama taken from a height looking over the city toward the Hudson.

The entire reel is notable for the interest of its subjects and the excellence of photography and editing.

VIGOROUS MEN

Almost it would seem from Universal Current Events No. 30 that the men had the world entirely to themselves. First of all, the many types of skilled workers needed to make aeroplanes for our Signal Service are shown at their various branches of the industry. A fine body of men are the sailors of the French fleet, who are seen in vigorous exercises that keep them in condition during spells of inactivity. Gymnastics of another kind are indulged in by our own young warriors, when the Polo Grounds in New York are the scene of a football struggle between aviators and the Pelham Bay Naval Reserve.

Poland and the Poles have been so entirely submerged by the nations battling over their frontiers that we almost forget there still exists a Poland enshrined in the hearts of her sons. On the French front a Polish legion has battled bravely. Its heroes, some of them maimed and blind, are here receiving honors at the hands of the French general.

Views of the ceremonies attending the installation of Carranza as Mexican President afford glimpses of ambassadors of many nationalities. We wonder what happened when the polished envoy from Great Britain met the helmeted representative of the Kaiser!

One humanly feminine note. Mother and grandma smile over the youngster who hears "Daddy!" on the dictaphone record sent from the far-away camp.

IN THE INDEPENDENT FIELD

Dintenfass Producing "My Four Years in Germany"

Mark M. Dintenfass, President of Mark M. Dintenfass Productions, Inc., Creating for the Screen Ambassador Gerard's Story

MARK M. DINTENFASS, president of the Mark M. Dintenfass Productions, Inc., 220 W. 42nd street, New York, announces that his production of James W. Gerard's, former Ambassador to Germany, drama, "My Four Years in Germany," is nearly completed and that it will be ready for distribution on the independent market, soon. Mr. Dintenfass will be remembered as one of the pioneers in the picture industry and "My Four Years in Germany" is his first contribution to the screen's list of dramas in some time. He is one of the early producers of patriotic pictures.

Mr. Dintenfass said: "I made Civil War pictures almost ten years ago at the Dintenfass-Champion studios at Coytesville, N. J.—the oldest moving picture studio in that state, with the exception of Mr. Edison's original one at Orange.

"I am spending more money on the smallest studio scene in Ambassador Gerard's "My Four Years in Germany" than an entire play cost when I entered the business. Director William Nigh has not spared expense, and when you know entire foreign localities had to be built for the majority of the scenes, you will appreciate what that means. Five times as much footage as we expect to actually use, are being taken. That will give in idea of the scale on which we are producing."

Mr. Dintenfass entered the business as an exhibitor. He opened the first motion picture house on Market street, Philadelphia, which now has a dozen theatres. That was in 1905. This limited venture as a producer made him sigh for the big producing field—then New York—where he became interested in the Cameraphone Company. Next he launched the Actophone Company, which was his own. When the independent producers entered the field, Mr. Dintenfass organized the Champion Film Company, which had a most successful career. It was purchased by the Universal Film Manufacturing Company in 1912. Mr. Dintenfass was a prime mover in the organization of the Universal Exchange, of which he became secretary and treasurer, and managing director. He has since parted with the majority of his interests in the Universal, and except for financial participation in a comedy producing company has been in virtual retirement.

W. H. Productions Announce Second Hart Release

W. H. Productions Co., which is now releasing on the independent market their first production featuring William S. Hart as "the two-gun man" in "The Bargain," announces that they have now in preparation the second Hart feature which will be entitled "The Bandit and the Preacher." The role of the bandit is said to be a wonderful characterization by Mr. Hart. Mr. Hart is supported by Robert Edeson, Herschell Mayo, Rhea Mitchell and Gladys Brockwell in this production.

One of the most spectacular fights that has ever been staged is said to take place in this production.

Sol Lesser, of San Francisco, and Mike Rosenberg, of Seattle, two of the most prominent independent exchange men in the West, bought the rights for their respective territories.

Max Glucksmann Increases Film Shipments Abroad

A brief review of the motion picture industry, as applied to the foreign market, indicates that during the six months the New York offices of Max Glucksmann have been open an increase has been noted in the volume of American films shipped for distribution in his territory, including Argentine, Uruguay, Paraguay and Chile and other South American republics.

Jacobo Glucksmann, manager of the New York office, recently returned from Chicago after a sojourn of ten days, where he went to renew contracts with the American Film Company and with the Essanay Film Mfg. Company. Mr. Glucksmann controls these productions, besides many others, with exclusive rights in his territory, and reports the two named as being among the most popular brands that are at present being shown in those sections.

Sixteen Sennett-Produced Comedies on Open Market

Hiller and Wilk announce that they have sixteen Keystone-Mack Sennett comedies, which they are offering on the independent market for the Broadway Films Company. This is the first time, with one exception, is is stated, that Keystone comedies have been offered to the independent buyers.

The sixteen comedies offered on the open market, for the first time, feature Mabel Normand, Fatty Arbuckle, Chester Conklin, Mack Swain, Syd Chaplin, Ford Sterling and Raymond Hitchcock. "The Submarine Pirate," in four reels, featuring Syd Chaplin; "Fatty and Mabel Adrift," in three reels, featuring Fatty Arbuckle and Mabel Normand, and the remaining features are in two reels.

The other fourteen comedies are "Cinders of Love," with Chester Conklin; "He Did and He Didn't," with Fatty Arbuckle and Mabel Normand; "The Other Man," with Fatty Arbuckle; "Bright Lights," with Fatty Arbuckle and Mabel Normand; "Bucking Society," with Chester Conklin; "The Snow Cure," with Ford Sterling; "The Village Scandal," with Fatty Arbuckle and Raymond Hitchcock; "Saved By Wireless," with Chester Conklin; "Fatty and the Broadway Stars," with Fatty Arbuckle; "Dizzy Heights and Darling Hearts," with Chester Conklin; "His Wild Oats," with Ford Sterling; "Waiters' Ball," with Fatty Arbuckle; "His First False Step," with Chester Conklin, and "Ambrose's Cup of Woe," with Mack Swain.

Valentine Grant Is Featured in "The Belgian," Sidney Olcott's Production

"The Belgian" Shown at Hero Land Bazaar

"The Belgian," Sidney Olcott's first independent production, was shown at the Hero Land bazaar at the Grand Central Palace, Wednesday, December 5, on which day Belgium Day was observed.

The presentation was given at the request of Mrs. W. T. Mali, wife of the Belgian consul in New York, under the joint auspices of Mr. Olcott and Frank G. Hall, president and general manager of the U. S. Exhibitors' Booking Corporation, by which "The Belgian" is being distributed.

The picture was shown in an improvised theatre on the fourth floor of the building, and was viewed during the day by several thousand men, women and children. Special admission was charged and the proceeds devoted to the Belgian war charities.

An interesting feature of the presentation was the appearance in person of Miss Valentine Grant, who is featured in the Olcott production with Walker Whiteside.

"Efficiency"

By H. J. Shepard

EVERY time an honest press agent runs out of material for a story for his client, he hammers out four or five paragraphs in order to tell the trade "That Mr. X of the 'best of them all' Film Corporation is organizing his company upon new and novel lines of efficiency." So thick and fast do these reports come in that it has come to the point that every office in the industry is apparently running at top speed and the picture business should be the most efficient in the world. Perhaps some day we shall arrive at this utopian condition, but never through the nimble mind and pen of the overenthusiastic publicity man.

There are four cardinal virtues in an efficient organization—Brains, Reliability, Industry and Ability. Real efficiency means the accomplishment of purpose with the least amount of expense and without the waste of time. It means that the business of an organization must be based upon a carefully thought policy and systematized plan. This takes brains and ability. The carrying out of such a policy or plan requires concentration, and concentration calls for Industry. No office can carry on a proper business without the confidence and respect of its associates. It must be reliable.

Importance of Subordinates

EFFICIENCY does not emanate from one man. An executive may lay out a plan but putting it into effect devolves upon his subordinates. In selecting the staff for any office care must be exercised in getting men who possess these qualifications and breadth of vision which will enable them to grasp the significance of a policy and follow it intelligently. "Hired men" should be eliminated if possible. All should work in a spirit of co-operation toward a common end, which is the secret of real business success.

Let us look at a few of the problems of the distributor and the exchange, and see why it is that the majority of them are not getting the necessary results—in spite of what the P. A. may say to the contrary. One of the greatest stumbling blocks which stands in the way is "Service."

"Service" is a much abused word. It is one upon which they harp continually. Unfortunately for the exhibitor it usually means —nothing. Thus although the exchange and the distributor seldom realizes the fact, it works like a boomerang and returns to their own disadvantage. When an exhibitor is promised service and the same does not materialize, he naturally goes to another firm when he is ready to buy again. He hears about it, reads about it, and therefore continually looks for it.

Real service depends primarily upon keeping promises and naturally the salesman is the medium through which the exhibitor expects this service. He is in a position to know and appreciate the conditions relative to every exhibitor in his territory and if he is a "live wire" and on to his job, he can show what real service means. The distributor and exchange may try to back up their exhibitors, but nothing of real value to the latter can be accomplished without first hand contact. That is the salesman's function and it is that fact that the exchanges and distributors must drive home to their representatives.

Too Much "Bull"

THE average salesman is too prone to rely upon "bull" to sell his wares. He will promise anything in order to book his pictures and these promises are but seldom carried out. In consequence, the exhibitor has grown singularly distrustful of the "bull throwing" salesman and as a result, the latter is only good for the "once over." "Bull" is all very well at the right time, but it takes an artist to judge properly the time and quantity to be used. It is time for the modern salesman to cut out the "bull" and, for the sake of the organization he represents, to be there with the goods.

The more recent addition to our American vocabulary, "camouflage" is a first cousin to "bull." This applies, however, more to the distributing organization than to the salesman. The real meaning of camouflage is "it looks like it—but it isn't." With a number of distributors, it takes the form of distorted advertising, of covering up the weak spots in their pictures. Sometimes the word "service" which appears so frequently in the advertisements and publicity matter, is but a part of the disguise of a lax and inefficient organization. Nothing can be built solidly upon sand, and no business can survive that is not founded upon the principles of honor, industry and truth. The real worth while concerns have ruled "camouflage" out and are simply stating facts, stating them baldly and without any trimmings.

Advertise!

ADVERTISING, of course, is one of the most important branches of the film industry, but there is advertising—and advertising. Much of the advertising at present is futile and wasted. The idea of many distributors is centered upon one thing, "put punch in it." The result is that they are punching air, for the "lay out" is simply a vulgar splurge of crystallized crudity. Real advertising values can be obtained only through careful effort applied with inner knowledge of the workings of men's minds. The advertisement must state the plain truth interestingly and with simple sincerity, creating confidence in the reliability of the advertiser and establishing the desirability of the advertised product. It is work for the experienced specialist who has an accurate knowledge of his product and a keen understanding of his audience. What we are trying to do then, is simply to analyze the everyday situations in the industry and profiting by the experience of others, pick out the best plans and policies for our organization, then by the application of sound, efficient business principles and with an ultimate purpose, will weld the whole into a compact, smooth running machine. By this method we will be able to inspire and justify the confidence of the people we deal with.

William Russell Starts Work on "Polo Jack" Feature

It was announced last week by the American Film Company that William Russell has started work on the final of his present series of six pictures, entitled "Polo Jack," another Charles Turner Dazey story which even promises to excel "The Sea Master" and "New York Luck," also by Mr. Dazey and recently produced by William Russell under Edward Sloman's direction.

William Russell, American Star

The screen adaptation of "Polo Jack" is the work of James E. Hungerford, the well-known author engaged recently by the American Film Company.

Miss Francelia Billington will again play opposite Mr. Russell.

"'Sins of Ambition' Ivan's Strongest Creation"

V. H. Hodupp of St. Louis, Who Purchased the Rights for That Territory, Pronounces It Big—Leah Baird, Wilfred Lucas, Head Cast

LEAH BAIRD, Wilfred Lucas and Barbara Castleton head the cast which presents Ivan Film Productions, Inu., latest feature for the independent market, "Sins of Ambition." It is stated that this late production, which is scheduled for release December 19, is the best creation of the Ivan company.

The merits of the production are best established in the recommendation which the picture received from V. H. Hodupp, of St. Louis, who purchased recently the rights to this feature for his territory.

"When buying," said Mr. Hodupp, "I always keep four cardinal points in mind: First, the title of the picture; secondly, the story; thirdly, the cast and direction, and fourthly, of course, photography.

"To illustrate my above statement as regards the qualifications of a picture for my exchange, a good point in fact may be my most important purchase, 'Sins of Ambition,' the latest Ivan Film Productions' release. At this present time, when a great catastrophe is engulfing the entire world and when ambition seems to have been the cause of all the difficulty, it seems to me that the title of this production will strongly appeal to the public, and while this is not a military picture, yet the title is not a misnomer, for every one in the cast presents a distinct ambition, which is forcefully depicted in the play. As to the story, the plot is so developed as to present a perfect unity of action. In other words, the story is, while replete with strong punches, a harmonious weave of action. As to the third point—the cast. Of course, it is always important to have people with drawing power, people that are known and favorites of long standing and whose artistry stands out markedly. The cast, headed by Leah Baird, Barbara Castleton and Madeline Traverse, Wilfred Lucas, James Morrison and Anders Randolf, is one that I am sure the trade will appreciate. The photography of the picture is perfect."

The picture will have its first showing on Broadway, in the New York theatre, December 19.

Nat I. Brown Reports Progress at Paralta Studios

Nat I. Brown, general manager of Paralta Plays, Inc., who has returned, recently, from Hollywood, after a several weeks' absence, reports that business is booming at the Paralta Studios. He said:

"The progress that has been made since my last visit to the coast is remarkable. When I was at the studios, on my last trip, I thought we had a most exceptional producing organization, but the developments since that time are astounding. Every stage in the studios is working overtime and the results we are getting are gratifying.

"The additional studios, which are now being built on the large tract of land we recently purchased, adjoining the present location, are nearing completion, and when those are finished we will have a plant that is second to none in the world. The carpenter shops, wardrobe and property departments, the electrical and scenic studios are about finished, and work on the stages has progressed to such a point that we will probably be using them within a week or so.

"The Western scenario department is now housed in a building away from the buzz of the studios.

"I am pleased with the progress made."

Gaumont-Mutual Promises Record-Breaking Reel

According to an announcement this week from Gaumont, it would be difficult to pick out the most important subject pictured in No. 154 of the Gaumont-Mutual Weekly, released December 9. This issue contains more than the usual number of timely news subjects, no fewer than seventeen "front page" events being illustrated.

Jesse Goldburg Announces Plans for New Venture

Will Handle and Exploit Independent Features—Will Produce at Least Three Features a Year—Office in Times Building

Jesse J. Goldburg

JESSE J. GOLDBURG announces that he has taken over the offices formerly occupied by the Ogden Pictures Corporation, Times Building, New York, and will handle and exploit independent productions in accordance with the plans formulated by those who endeavored to organize the Producers Protective Association. Mr. Goldburg announces, also, that he intends to enter the producing branch of the industry and will produce under his own personal direction, at least, three features a year. He will exploit features produced for the independent market and will supervise and regulate the advertising and publicity, issued in connection with the productions placed in his charge.

Mr. Goldburg has been prominent in the independent branch of the industry for years. Previous to his present undertaking, he was exploitation and sales manager for the Ogden Pictures Corporation. He organized the Life Photo Film Corporation, which produced "The Grey Hound" and "The Ordeal." Among the stars who were featured in these productions are: Lionel Barrymore, Mary Nash, Florence Nash and Elita Proctor Otis. He organized, also, the Rialto Film Corporation and served in the capacity of exploitation and sales manager. Before joining the Ogden Pictures Corporation, Mr. Goldburg was exploitation and sales manager for the Frohman Amusement Corporation.

Mr. Goldburg's plans in connection with his new venture are best explained by him in the following interview:

"It has taken me exactly seven years to acquire the knowledge, information, and data which I possess in connection with every branch of the industry, and I mean to devote that knowledge to a stabilizing of the state rights market. While I intend that the productions placed with me shall receive in the market every dollar they're worth, I also mean that the state rights buyer shall take no chance with his investment.

"The entire industry has suddenly awakened to a condition of affairs that some characterize as likely to destroy the entire industry. This clarion call is sounded because of extravagance in production and methods of distribution, and lack of business co-ordination. The same condition of affairs exists, although to a lesser extent, in connection with independent producers and state rights exchanges.

"With my organization I hope to ultimately house under one roof a medium of distribution concentrating the advertising mediums, and engaging in a method of exploitation that will materially reduce the expense of selling and exploiting.

"The industry was never in a more profitable or healthy condition or conducted upon a more businesslike basis than before the era of stars with excessive salaries. The very gentlemen who are decrying present conditions are those who hav created the star system with its fantastical salaries. My plans are fully completed, and all that is required to be done is to put each into operation as the progress of my institution justifies, but no production will be handled through my organization unless I can give it my full attention. When I find that I have got to shunt the work which I am expected to perform on to the shoulders of an employee, I will cease for the time being to take on added productions."

You are not going to war. The men who are need all the comforts you can give them. Help them get cigarettes. That is your patriotic duty. If you aren't helping in the "smokes" campaign, get busy—now. Don't be a slacker!

Betty Lee Is the Model in Capt. Edwin Hesser's "The Triumph of Venus"

"The Slave," Billy West Comedy Release, December 15

"The Slave" is the title of the Billy West Comedy release for December, 15. It is in two reels. In the cast appear the names of Oliver Hardy, Leo White, Bidd Ross, Beatrice Joy and Gladys Varden. The scenario was written by Rex Taylor. David Gillstrom, directed.

Billy is a slave in the palace of the Sultan of Bacteria. Horatius Crabbe and his daughter Susie are visitors in Bacteria in search of antiques. The Sultan plans to place Susie in his harem. Billy overhears the plot and saves the girl.

Sterling Pictures Corporation Organized

Sterling Pictures Corporation, a recent organization for the purpose of exploiting special features on the independent market, has taken out incorporation papers, it is announced. The names of the executive officers are not announced.

"The Spy" Attracts Interest in Foreign Territory

The generally favorable reviews and the reports of big business on "The Spy" are resulting, according to the foreign department of the Fox Film Corporation, in many inquiries being made regarding the picture by exhibitors and agencies in territory outside the United States.

Advices from London last week are to the effect that the picture received markedly favorably comment on the occasion of its recent presentation at British trade showings. Interest, of course, is heightened by the fact that experiences paralleling those pictured in the film story have been of common occurrence in England during the past three years. The same, however, is true of other capitals and important cities; in all of these the agents of the contenders in the present world war long have been busily at work seeking information and data which might be of military value.

The Fox management is confident that "The Spy" will prove just as big a success in other parts of the world as it has proved in the United States and at the British trade shows.

Country-Wide Tour in Interest of "Mother"

M. R. Fink, Departmental Head of General Enterprises, Leaves on Extended Trip — "Mother" to Be Shown to Trade in All Important Cities

GENERAL ENTERPRISES, INC., through its sales managers, Arthur H. Sawyer and Herbert Lubin, announces that M. R. Fink, head of the foreign department of this company, will leave, this week, on a country-wide tour in the interest of the exploitation of the McClure Pictures production of "Mother," which is offered on the open market. Mr. Fink announces that he has arranged to have trade showings in all of the large cities, including Chicago, Philadelphia, Washington, Boston and others. These showings have been prearranged by Messrs. Lubin and Sawyer, that every independent in the country will be given the opportunity of viewing it.

Mr. Fink will carry with him copies of the January issue of the Ladies' World, which carries a complete story in fictional form of "Mother." By this method, the old idea of distributing synopses of the film will be eliminated, at the same time giving the state right buyer a far more interesting version of the story than could be secured by means of a synopsis. Mr. Fink, while on his trip, will also complete the previous arrangements which have been made to screen "Mother" for the various uplift societies throughout the country. These showings have been requested because of the strong heart interest shown.

He will carry, also, two prints of the picture "Mother," together with a complete supply of lithographs and advertising accessories in order that the various state right purchasers may be fully informed as to the advertising possibilities of George Loane Tucker's creation.

Elisabeth Risdon is a Wonder in Character Make-Up

Messrs. Lubin and Sawyer report good sales of territory for "The Warrior," the United States rights to which are controlled by the General Enterprises, Inc. They announce that J. R. Grainger, manager of the Allen Film Corporation, Chicago, who purchased the rights to this feature for the states of Michigan, Iowa, Nebraska, Ohio, Indiana and Illinois, has added to this territory that embraced by the states of Kansas, Missouri, Texas, Oklahoma and Arkansas. Mr. Grainger speaks highly of the feature and says that it has remarkable drawing powers and entertaining value.

"Raffles" a Big Success Report Hiller and Wilk

Picturization of E. W. Hornung's Popular Play Going Big—Brenon Buys Northern New Jersey and New York—Barrymore Featured

HILLER AND WILK, who showed, for review, last week, L. Lawrence Weber Photo Dramas, Inc., picturization of E. W. Hornung's popular stage success, "Raffles, the Amateur Cracksman" with John Barrymore in the featured role, report that they have never handled a picture that met with such enthusiastic praise from the trade.

"Perhaps it is the fame of the play," said Mr. Wilk. "Everybody knows it is the one detective play that has been seen on every stage in the United States. It was played in more than 8,000 theatres. In stock it has had more than a thousand representations. In book form, the story was one of the 'best sellers.'

"Perhaps it is the combination of the play's stage and the story's book fame and the association with its screen version of John Barrymore, who plays Raffles. Barrymore is conceded to be the most popular of all the younger stage players today. His performance in the Galsworthy place, 'Justice,' last season and his appearance this year for a long run in New York and now on tour of 'Peter Ibbetson' has added much to his popularity. The widespread fame of the production is evidenced in many ways. The unanimous acclaim of state right buyers and their representatives who saw the picture, and who necessarily spread the report of its excellence is one proof. Herbert Brenon's enthusiastic approval of the production voiced so substantially as to purchase for the Brenon Distributing Company the rights for New York State and northern New Jersey within an hour after the showing. It is big enough to place as an independent show in any first-class theatre and fine enough for any audience anywhere."

Billy West Waltzes to Be Used as Advertising

King Bee Films Corporation have instituted what it believed to be a novel method of advertising the Billy West comedies. An original set of instrumental waltzes, composed by Billy West, will be printed and copies will be released to the newspapers throughout the country. These waltzes cannot be purchased in any music store and will not be for sale. Following the publication of the number, a prize will be offered to the writer who supplies the most appropriates lyrics for the melody. Nat H. Spitzer has named the waltzes the King Bee Waltzes.

William S. Hart, Wounded But Undismayed, Wins His Way to Triumph as the Two-Gun Man in "The Bargain," Being Distributed by W. H. Productions

Prisoners Write Criticism of Hart Production

W. H. Productions Received Written Reviews from Prisoners, Who Saw William S. Hart in "The Two-Gun Man" in "The Bargain"

"THE TWO-GUN MAN" in "The Bargain," the first William S. Hart two-reel production to be released by the W. H. Productions, was shown recently to the prisoners at Sing Sing Prison and members of the Mutual Welfare League. Since the showing the officials of the company have received the following criticisms from the prisoners:

They write:

To go over big:

"A story with a punch combined with plenty of action and an excellent supporting cast. Photography is excellent and the fall of the horse and rider down the cliff is noteworthy. 'The Two-Gun Man' is sure fire and bound to go over big wherever shown.

"(Signed) 66203. SING SING."

The moral effect is voiced:

"In regard to your request, I think Mr. Hart gives a wonderful display. 'The return of a lost sheep to its flock—or to him that overcometh will I grant to sit with Me in My throne—even as I also overcame and sat down with My Father in His throne.'—Rev. 3: 21.

"(Signed) JOSEPH WETTER, 67001,
"Sing Sing."

The point of the story missed:

"In regard to this picture, I think it is very nice; the only part that didn't look good to me was the 'stick up' in the gambling house, because he only took one bag of money, as I think he ought to have taken it all.

"(Signed) EDWARD LANIGAN, 68107,
"Sing Sing."

This criticism shows the strict attention this kind of an audience bestows upon a picture:

"Mr. Hart in his usual characteristic role. The introduction was something novel, but nevertheless good. His horse is worthy of some mention here also. Excellent vivid illustration of the old West.

"(Signed) SIG. RICHOLTZ, 68664,
"Sing Sing."

Sense of humor:

"That 'Two-Gun Man' is a sure thing on the draw. The scene wherein the horse and rider fall down the cliff is worth the price of admission alone. It is a picture of the West without any exaggerations. It is a typical Western picture, and as such appeals to those who like quick action, beginning with the first reel. Mr. Sheriff man runs second, merely showing at heart he is a mighty good fellow. Taken as a whole, photography, acting, etc., you couldn't beat 'The Two-Gun Man' with a drum.

Fleckles Returns from Western Trip—Good Business

Maurice Fleckles, vice-president of Renowned Pictures Corporation, has returned from a trip through the West and reports a bright outlook for Renowned features. He reports good business and normal conditions existing through the West. Mr. Fleckles reports negotiations pending the closing of several big contracts for territory to Renowned's latest feature, Edward Warren's production of "Weavers of Life." New England has been disposed of to Nathan Gordon, of the Globe Feature Film Company, Boston.

The Renowned Pictures Corporation are the sole agents for the Warren productions.

U. S. Exhibitors Adds Four to Its Sales Forces

Recent additions to the sales forces of the U. S. Exhibitors' Booking Corporation, a representative of which is stationed in every large city of the United States and Canada, are Joseph Desberger, G. W. Wilson, A. B. Lucas and Joseph Levy, all of whom have had long experience in the Western district.

Mr. Desberger comes to the U. S. Corporation from the World Film Corporation, and will represent the booking concern in St. Louis, where he will make his headquarters in the Hoffman-Foursquare exchange. He formerly served as manager of the World exchange in St. Louis.

Mr. Wilson, who will direct the marketing of U S productions in the Cincinnati district resigned as representative of the Triangle Film Corporation in that city to join the U. S. forces.

A. B. Lucas also leaves the Triangle to take charge of U. S. business in Kansas City, where he will make his headquarters in the Hoffman exchange. Mr. Lucas has served many years in the Western territory for important film concerns. He was with Paramount in Chicago, Triangle in Omaha and Kansas City, and also served as the Triangle manager in Chicago, which position he resigned to affiliate with the U. S.

Joseph Levy has resigned from the sales forces of Select Pictures, Pittsburgh office, to handle U. S. productions in Minneapolis. Mr. Levy formerly acted as the Fox representative in St. Louis, Kansas City and Omaha.

Al Nathan Returns to San Francisco as Manager

Al Nathan, formerly assistant manager of the Empress in San Francisco, but who for several months was in Los Angeles in charge of the Superba, has returned to San Francisco to take over the Alhambra theatre.

He will also continue in charge of the Los Angeles house, it is said.

Pictures shown include Bluebird, Jewel and other Universal subjects.

Select Makes Changes in Its Branches in the West

A number of important changes have taken place during the current week in several of the Western exchanges maintained by the Select Pictures Corporation.

Harry H. Hicks, formerly branch manager at Los Angeles, has been appointed branch manager at San Francisco. Bernard E. Loper, for the past five years Pathe's manager at Los Angeles, has gone over to the Select organization to be branch manager in the same city. H. L. Knappen has become manager of Select's Denver exchange, thus returning to scenes of his first activity, where he had at one time been manager for Pathe Freres.

Charles S. Goetz becomes sales manager at Kansas City, where he will be under W. H. Bell, branch manager at that city.

The appointing of H. H. Hicks to be executive over the San Francisco branch is in the nature of promotion, and recognition of the exceptionally fine work which Mr. Hicks has done for Select in Los Angeles, at which place he has been for some time past. The San Francisco territory gives Mr. Hicks a larger field, and one with which he is equally familiar, as prior to becoming Select's branch manager at Los Angeles he had charge of the General Film Exchange at San Francisco.

Manager Edel Likes Jack Pickford's Newest Picture

Harold Edel, managing director of the Strand in New York, where the Paramount picture, "Tom Sawyer," starring Jack Pickford, was presented last week, has written to Adolph Zukor as follows:

"I cannot refrain from expressing to you my unbounded enthusiasm on noting the demonstrative reception that was accorded your production of Jack Pickford in "Tom Sawyer," yesterday afternoon at the Strand theatre.

"I wish to place myself on record as stating that, without exception, this is one of the finest productions that has ever been released, in my estimation, under the Paramount banner. The audience was in one continuous uproar from beginning to end."

E. C. Smith Starts New Picture House in Illinois

Work on E. C. Smith's new motion picture theatre in Rossville, Ill., began recently, and when completed the house, it is said, will be the best that money can provide.

The new theatre will seat about 300, and will be equipped with a new projecting machine and other necessary paraphernalia. It is understood Paramount will supply the pictures, in addition to which it is Mr. Smith's intention to present special features occasionally.

Royster Doing Good Business with "The Whip"

Nat L. Royster, Special Features Film Company, has discontinued angling for the elusive fish which inhabit the waters around the Florida East Coast and Key West to drop us a card announcing that he succeeded in doing fine business with "The Whip" in the Southern territory, before taking up the rod and line.

Ethel Lynne and Bobby Vernon Are Contributing Their Well Known and Exceptionally Popular Brand of Light Comedy to Christie Productions

Christie in New York—Reports Good Business

CHARLES CHRISTIE, business manager of the Christie Film Company, producers of one and two reel comedies, arrived in New York last week on business pertaining to the renewal of contracts with the independent exchanges in the Eastern territory.

In his trip across the continent Mr. Christie stopped in several of the larger exchange centers. In Denver, he visited H. T. Nolan of the Consolidated Feature Film Exchange, who has handled the Christie comedies for the states of Colorado, New Mexico, Utah and Wyoming, since these comedies were released through independent channels. Mr. Nolan renewed his contract and will distribute the comedies for another year.

Mr. Christie says that Phil Ryan, of the Standard Film Corporation, covering the territory embraced by St. Louis, Kansas City and Omaha, spoke enthusiastically of Christie Comedies.

"In Chicago," said Mr. Christie, "J. L. Friedman, Celebrated Players Exchange, has hung up something approaching a record for us. There are a hundred and seven theatres in Chicago showing Christie comedies, and Mr. Friedman assures me that the list gives promise of growing still further. A large card on which are the names of these theatres hangs in Mr. Friedman's office, and there has hardly been a day during the last month that new names were not added.

"Just before leaving Los Angeles, Al Christie, who handles all production and direction details at the studio, signed up Bobby Vernon to take the place of Jay Belasco, who is with the army. Mr. Vernon's last position was with the Mack Sennett Keystone Company, where he was one of the few players who appeared in straight parts. He is a valuable addition to the Christie forces and will appear opposite Ethel Lynne. Betty Compson and Smiling Billy Mason compose the other team. The teams will alternate in weekly releases."

Abramson to Write and Direct for Graphic Film

Ivan Abramson, Who Has Severed Connections with Ivan Productions, Becomes President, Director-General of Graphic

Ivan Abramson, of Ivan Film Productions

IVAN ABRAMSON announces that he has severed his connections with the Ivan Film Productions, Inc., which he founded, and of which he was president and director-general for five years, to become president and director-general of the Graphic Film Corporation, with offices at 729 Seventh avenue, New York. Mr. Abramson will write scenarios and direct his own productions.

He has completed a scenario of a new and original story, which he says is the best he has written up to the present time. He is casting for this story, and will soon begin work upon it, taking his company to California for the exterior scenes. It will be released by the Graphic in February. Mr. Abramson is putting into this first production of the Graphic Film Corporation all the experience he gained during his many years of activity in the spoken drama, the opera and filmdom.

Mr. Abramson is responsible for "Enlighten Thy Daughter," "One Law for Both," "The Sins of Ambition," and twenty other screen dramas he has written and produced under his own personal direction.

Hernandez Letter Gives Pointed Foreign View

Uses Regular Form Copy with Which to Reject Agency Offers of Various Manufacturers—Twelve Cents Per Foot High Enough

C. F. HERNANDEZ, Sons and Company, with offices in New York, are using a very pointed and interesting form letter with which to reject offers of agency propositions from manufacturers.

It says in part: "We thank you for the offer of agency for ——— and are quite aware of the reputation they command in the line of manufacturing films. The terms, however, do not suit us, looking to the present state of the market and the trade conditions in India. Even the price of 12 cents per foot is high enough, as agencies on similar terms as offered by you can be contracted for at 7 to 8 cents per foot and 3 to 4 cents per foot for second copies. Even then the business is not likely to benefit the agents, as we have manufacturers actually working in our market on hiring basis. The ——— and ———, two renowned firms, have their hiring circuit in our country with own offices, whose actual cost of films is taken into consideration in hiring their subjects and who can afford to play with this business in any way they like against firms who buy from America as agents. Manufacturers on your side may get firms here to do business with them on the lines suggested by you, but it will not last for any long period. Our own experience about our market in this line shows that the course now open for a vast, enormous and lasting business is in the scheme of manufacturers joining hands with respectable experienced firms on our side by casting their lots together. The manufacturers must make sure about the status, standing and business capacity of firms on our side, and, being fully satisfied on this score, they must send down their productions on their own account as soon as released for hiring purposes in our territories. Arrangement may be made for remittance of hire moneys every week or fortnight. The duty and other custom charges at our end, also the insurance premium on the goods, should be on manufacturer's account.

"The firm on our side should take over charge of such consignments, advertise the products as soon as they come to hand, carry on a regular circuit throughout the territory and hire films on contract, bear all charges in transit from station to station, recover and guarantee the hire money, maintain affice and staff, pay for all postage and telegraph charges at this end. In consideration for all of this, the firm should receive as its remuneration 40 to 45 per cent. of the gross hire money realized, the balance to be remitted to your end. The manufacturers may send in their representative every now and then to verify account and stock, inspect contracts and take instructions from here as to the market requirements and tastes of the people, which would undergo changes in course of time."

New Corporations Enter Motion Picture Industry

During the past week at least six corporations have been launched upon the uncertain seas of the motion picture industry, according to the records of The Corporation Trust Company, of Jersey City.

These include the Ivy Pictures Corporation, with a capital of $500,000, to manufacture films and machines; Pict-Rola Manufacturing Corporation, capitalized at $1,500,000, to make picture machines and talking machines; G. F. Company, Inc., to deal in pictures; Sir Johnston Forbes-Robertson Passing of the Third Floor Back Picture Corporation, capitalized at $1,000 to produce a photoplay; Glen Cove Amusement Corporation, capital $35,000, to deal in pictures; Philadelphia Ideal Film Exchange, Inc., capital $60,000, motion pictures; and Supreme Pictures, Inc., capital $30,000, motion pictures. The organizations, in the order named, are located at Dover, Del.; Wilmington, Del.; New York, Manhattan, Oyster Bay, Manhattan and New York.

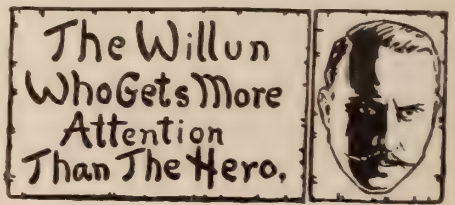
Venetian scenes of the feature.



With the exception of the portion of the Animated the only comedy on the bill was Mr. and Mrs. Drew in "A Question of Wages." This opened with a little southern sentiment and therefore it linked up perfectly with the medley that had gone before.

This is really a bill that in many ways surpasses anything that has before been done. in a motion picture theatre. We told Mr. Rothapfel that, but he would have none of it. "Wait," he said, "until the Rivoli opens and I will show you something real."

And we know he will for Rothapfel is always thinking. It's a mighty good habit for exhibitors to get into.

Raver's New Production Nearly Completed

THE final scenes of the new mystery story, which has been announced as in course of production by Harry Raver, have been photographed and the picture is now ready for the cutting room. The picture is described as a new type of "crook" drama and contains a plot of unusual complications interwoven in a story, which in addition to possessing a strong mystery element, is notable for plenty of action of the rapid fire sort.

Edmund Breese presents the principal male role. Mr. Breese is one of the best known character actors on the screen or stage. He will be remembered for his characterizations of the principal roles in "The Scarecrow," "Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde" and others. It is said that Mr. Breese is called upon to portray nine distinct roles in Mr. Raver's late production.

Harry Raver decided that Edmund Breese possessed ideal qualifications for the part in question and contracts were signed accordingly.

While Edmund Breese has on several occasions, notably in "The Scarecrow" and "Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde" evidenced remarkable cleverness in depicting dual roles, this is the first time in his career that he has attempted the portrayal of nine distinct characters—a task he accomplishes with singular effectiveness in the latest Raver production.

Alma Hanlon who plays the leading female role also has a part which is said to give her excellent opportunities for the exercise of her screen talents. Among her best liked pictures are "The Mystic Hour," "The Libertine" and "The Whip."

Bee-Hive Exchange Reports Big Demand for Comedies

The Bee-Hive Exchange which is handling the distribution of Billy West King-Bee Comedies, in New York and New Jersey, reports that, never in the history of the film business, has there been such a big demand for comedies, as there is at the present. More than two hundred contracts have ben closed for Billy West comedies since November 19, it is reported.

Noble's Production of "Shame" Ready for Open Market

Jules Burnstein announces that John W. Noble's production of "Shame," with Zena Keefe in the featured role, will be placed on the independent market before the holidays. Mr. Burnstein has been engaged in formulating plans for extensive advertising and exploitation plans for the production, and says that every detail is completed.

Mr. Noble, who is responsible for this production, is a prominent director. His best works along directorial lines are, "Romeo and Juliet," with Francis X. Bushman and Beverly Bayne featured; "The High Road," with Valli Valli featured, and "The Awakening of Helen Ritchie," featuring Ethel Barrymore. Mr. Noble spent several months on his late production, "Shame."

"Cleopatra" Offered on Independent Markets

H. J. Streyckmans, of Cleopatra Film Company, Offers Six-Reel Production with Helen Gardner in Title Role

H. J. STREYCKMANS, of the Cleopatra Film Company, announces that the six-reel production of "Cleopatra," with Helen Gardner in the featured role, will be offered on the independent market. This is a revival of the production released several years ago and which was proclaimed by the critics to offer a remarkable version of the adventures of the Egyptian Queen.

It is said that nearly two thousand soldiers take part in the sensational battle in which the combined forces of Cleopatra and Marc Antony are defeated by the Roman army. Alexandria in the height of Egypt's glory is shown, and the elephants, camels, horses, sumptuous settings and battle scenes add to the dramatic story which ends so tragically in the death of Marc Antony and Cleopatra by their own hands.

Miss Gardner is especially fitted for the role of Cleopatra, being a striking beauty.

Charles L. Gaskill wrote the scenario and directed the photoplay, using for the story the main events of Cleopatra's life, based on a combination of Shakespeare and Sardou, together with original incidents interpolated by Mr. Gaskill in harmony with the character of Cleopatra as portrayed by these two famous authors.

Second Ince Production Shown to Trade by Hall

"Those Who Pay," with Bessie Barriscale Featured, Given Enthusiastic Reception by Trade — Praised by Critics

ANNOUNCED as the second special release of the U. S. Exhibitors' Booking Corporation, "Those Who Pay," produced by Thomas H. Ince, written by C. Gardner Sullivan and starring Bessie Barriscale, was shown for the first time at the Broadway theatre on Wednesday morning, December 5, before an enthusiastic audience of exhibitors.

"Those Who Pay" is in seven parts, and unfolds a narrative of romance and political intrigue. Howard Hickman and Melbourne McDowell have important roles.

Frank Hall said:

"Again have the art of Mr. Ince and the splendid work of Mr. Sullivan aided Miss Barriscale in attaining her success by good production and good preparation. Miss Barriscale's performance dominates the seven reels.

"The depth, delicate shadings, the beauty of personality and of feature that she brings to the role of Dorothy Warner are expressive of her talent in the silent drama.

"Thomas Ince's work is so well known that mention of its perfection is superfluous. He handled individual scenes with a fine sense of dramatic effect, and the atmosphere he injects into his work is realistic to a last degree.

"The adventures of Dorothy Warner, who at an early age is left an orphan, with a little sister to support, form a narrative of absorbing interest that culminates in one of the strongest dramatic climaxes ever converted to the screen.

"The final scene in which Dorothy Warner, betrayed by the man she adored, goes to his home at the invitation of his wife, and the succeeding episodes, are deeply interesting."

"Those Who Pay" was given a welcome reception by those who saw the trade showing, last week.

WHAT EXHIBITORS ARE DOING

Sam W. B. Cohn, Manager of the Liberty Theatre in Spokane, Wash.

Turner and Dahnken Present Copies of Address

It was announced last week from the West Coast that for the benefit of those exhibitors who were unable to attend the luncheon tendered S. L. Rothapfel at the Press Club, in San Francisco, the Turner and Dhanken Circuit will mail to each exhibitor in this territory a copy of Mr. Rothapfel's remarks.

The purpose in doing this is to give each exhibitor the benefit of Mr. Rothapfel's ideas of properly conducting a motion picture theatre.

The Press Club felt so highly of Mr. Rothapfel's speech that a copy has been prepared to be filed in their archives.

Director Walsh Gives Good Tips to Live Exhibitors

The director may labor like a Trojan; but the ultimate effect of his picture on the screen depends on the artistic integrity of the individual exhibitor. That is the belief of R. A. Walsh, the director who has used his short leisure before beginning work on his first Goldwyn production to make a tour incognito of some of New York's moving picture theatres.

"Frankly," said Mr. Walsh, "I have been very much disturbed over the way I have seen many of my own pictures run. The Twentieth Century Express is a horse-car beside some of the speed I have seen careless operators of short-sighted house managers put into their films. In my opinion, such haste is nothing short of criminal. It is unfair to the director who has timed his action as closely as possible to the right tempo. And any manager who thinks he will profit by crowding in an extra show by such methods is making a big mistake.

CALIFORNIA.—F. E. McDaniel, of the firm of Hoots and McDaniel, late owners of the Rex theatre, Santa Clara, announces their purchase of the McDonald theatre, at Richmond.

INDIANA.—W. M. and P. H. Dickson of Wabash has purchased the Eagles theatre there. The new owners formerly were lessees of the theatre and took possession on December 1st. Since coming to Wabash this firm has owned the Orpheum, Family, Dreamland and the Colonial theatres, in conjunction with the Eagles theatre, which is recognized as one of the prettiest, best appointed and most commodious playhouses in the State.

IOWA.—Reis and Clampitt will open a new motion picture theatre at Varina shortly.

OHIO.—The Corona theatre, Prospect avenue and East 8th street, one of Cleveland's oldest motion picture houses in the city, has changed hands. Its lease was sold last week by Samuel Aubley and Aubrey Hess to T. Felber. A bonus of $13,000 was paid for the unexpired lease of four and a half years, making it at the rate of $8,400 a year. Arthur P. Halle, Society for Savings building, represented the sellers, and Henry H. Lustig, of Schwartz and Lustig, represented the buyers.

NEW MEXICO.—Ed. Cullom has acquired the Midway theatre at Mogollon, N. M., a mining camp which is located more than 100 miles from the nearest railroad station. Mr. Cullom says he is doing a nice business regardless of the location handicap.

OGEGON.—Ralph Ruffner is the new manager of the Columbia theatre, Portland, and will also take charge of the publicity for both the Columbia and Liberty theatres, which are under the same management.

PENNSYLVANIA.—T. Barnes is erecting a large new theatre at Ellwood City.

New Haven Exhibitors Win with Children's Program

After two months of experiment with children's programs, the Olympia, New Haven, Conn., finds the business a success. Society leaders of the city, members of the Woman's Club, alternate in giving up Saturday mornings to act as ushers and chaperons for the children. Notable among those interested in the matter are wives of well-known Yale professors and New Haven business men.

Children's pictures show a marked increase throughout the state. Among patrons of the Paramount pictures who secure films each week are the headmasters of Choate school, Wallingford; Pomfret Academy, Hotchkiss school, Lakeville; Ansonia high school, and Taft school, Waterville; St. Francis' orphan asylum and Christ Episcopal church, New Haven. Knights of Columbus regularly supply Roman Catholic asylums with reels suited to children.

Boston Shows Decided Leaning Toward O. Henry Films

The O. Henry pictures are establishing a record for popularity in Boston which has seldom been equalled, according to J. D. Levine, General Film branch manager, who was a visitor here last week.

"The O. Henry subjects also have an added appeal in Boston," said Manager Levine, "inasmuch as they meet the strict requirements laid down by the local authorities for the conduct of Sunday moving picture shows. Before a picture can be shown in Boston on Sunday it must have been approved by the police censor. The O. Henry films are included among the limited number of worthwhile attractions which are able to pass this test, and as a result are made the Sunday features in many of the leading theatres. The four-reel O. Henry pictures, in particular, have enjoyed great runs in my territory, and the exhibitors are finding them very valuable for every day in the week. The demand for all O. Henry films has grown enormously throughout Boston and New England, and exhibitors unite in praising them as the most satisfying and attractive subjects they have ever encountered."

Boston Company Opens Branch in New Haven

To meet the growing demand in Connecticut for motion picture supplies, the Boston Motion Picture Supply Company will open a branch at New Haven, Conn., with a full line and a special sales and clerical staff to handle the business. Office and supply rooms will occupy part of the Film Exchange building, Meadow street, as soon as the new exchange of the Paramount and Famous Players picture, now under construction, is completed.

H. T. Scully, Paramount manager for Connecticut, who, with Harry Asher, of Boston, form the Motion Picture Supply Co., will have direct supervision over the new branch.

J. H. Crowley Withdraws from Motion Picture Industry

J. H. Crowley, who has been manager of the Universal Film and Supply Company at Fort Smith, Ark., has resigned from that company, it was made known last week, and intends to withdraw from the motion picture industry. It is understood his resignation takes effect December 14.

Coincidental with the news of Mr. Crowley's resignation comes the announcement that T. W. Sharp, recently traveling representative for Bluebird out of Kansas City and Oklahoma City, has been engaged to take over the management of the Fort Smith office of the Universal Film and Supply Company.

The U. S. Exhibitors' Booking Corporation counts that week lost in which it does not add to its sales force. Joseph Desberger, G. W. Wilson, A. B. Lucas and Joseph Levy are among the most recent acquisitions. It is expected that other district representatives will be named in the near future by Joseph Partridge, division manager, now assembling the company's selling army beyond the Rockies.

Contracts have been signed, it was announced last week, with the Consolidated Feature Film Company, in Denver, managed by Harry Nolan, for the regular weekly release of Christie comedies in that territory.

Christie comedies are in greater demand than ever in Pennsylvania, according to the Peerless Feature Film Exchange of Philadelphia. The information accompanied an order for additional prints.

Changes have been coming thick and fast in Select circles the past few days. The clearing smoke reveals Harry H. Hicks putting the Select office in tip-top shape at San Francisco.

Arthur S. Kane, general manager of Select Pictures, continues on his trip throughout the Middle West. This week he is expected to turn Eastward and visit exchanges at Cleveland, Cincinnati, Detroit, Pittsburgh and Buffalo.

V. P. Whitaker, Select manager in Washington, has moved his headquarters from the old E street location, to 525 Thirteenth street, N. W.

H. T. Scully, Paramount manager for Connecticut, recently said: "The demand for children's pictures grows month by month. Lately these films are being fairly 'eaten up.' Some of them are 'Hulda from Holland,' 'Prince and Pauper,' 'Cinderella' and 'The Dummy.'"

T. W. Sharp, lately representing Bluebird from Kansas City and Oklahoma City offices, on the road, has been chosen to succeed J. H. Crowley as manager of the Universal Film and Supply Company in Fort Smith, Ark.

Jewel Productions, Inc., has made a practice of promoting to office managerships a number of its sales force who have "made good." The latest member to receive promotion is George Lightman, who has been placed in charge of the Cincinnati office.

General Film Company's branch in Denver expects to move into new quarters about January 1. R. S. Nelson is manager.

W. W. Tally is preparing to make his initial road trip as salesman for Vitagraph in the Denver territory.

Dan F. McCoy, of World Film, is covering Colorado, and E. P. Briggs, of the Denver office, is visiting New Mexico exhibitors.

Pathe Appoints Bunn Special Sales Representative

C. W. Bunn, formerly manager of of Pathe's Chicago branch, has been appointed special sales representative by J. A. Berst, vice-president and general manager. Working under the direction of Sales Manager F. C. Quimby, he will visit the various Pathe exchanges.

Mr. Bunn got very excellent results in Chicago because he realizes the Pathe system is of great importance in the successful operation of an exchange. Mr. Bunn was selected for the position of special sales representative because he appreciates fully, it is said by Pathe, the value of this system and because he has demonstrated his ability to put it into successful operation.

His first stopping place on a long tour in the interests of the Pathe organization is the Kansas City office.

Eschmann Calls Meeting of Exchangemen in Cleveland

E. A. Eschmann, manager of the World Film Corporation branch in Cleveland, in his capacity as president of the Board of Exchange Managers, called a meeting in that city last Thursday at the Chamber of Commerce. The object was to discuss what effect the reel tax has had upon the exhibitor during the past month. Mr. Eschmann says that he has not heard of a single theatre closing on account of the war tax, although the exhibitors claimed that it would put 50 per cent. of them out of business.

"The only houses that have closed at all," said Mr. Eschmann, "that I know of, are a couple in such small towns as Chardon, Berea, and Newton Falls, which are running only three days a week now, not because the tax has been too heavy a burden, but conditions are not favorable at the present time for any theatrical enterprise."

E. J. Schmidt Booms Victor Office in Cleveland

Things are booming at the Victor Film Service in Cleveland since E. J. Schmidt took over the reins. The office has been all changed around, and every nook and corner has been utilized as working space. Besides the busy look about the place, the books reflect the energy and enthusiasm with which Mr. Schmidt has imbued the entire organization. Three new road men have been added to the selling force during the past week; they are L. L. Saks, E. M. King and A. R. Nordlie, who report that Bluebird and Butterfly pictures are in great demand all through the state. Mr. Schmidt is especially pleased with the popular reception accorded "The Mystery Ship."

Kingsley Joins Jewel in Detroit

C. G. Kingsley, former representative of the Fox Films in Detroit and Indianapolis, has enlisted under the Jewel banner and will be in charge of the Detroit offices of that company. Mr. Kingsley is well known throughout the Middle West and is considered a valuable addition to the force.

Famous Players, Cleveland Man Answers Army Call

Another exchange in Cleveland will be seriously affected by the draft. George G. Rich, office manager of the Famous Players Film Service, Inc., has received word to report for duty at Chillicothe some time before December 15. Rich had entered a plea for exemption, which was denied. Before entering the motion picture business, he was a member of the Pennsylvania National Guard, so soldiering will not be an entirely new occupation for him. No plans have been made as yet as to who shall assume Mr. Rich's duties during his absence.

JUST FOR FUN

By LONGACRE

DANIEL M. HENDERSON, advertising director of McClure and Petrova Pictures, whose poem entitled "The Road to France," won the $250 prize offered by the National Arts Club, has written another prize winning set of verses entitled "The Red Triangle" to assist the campaign work of the Young Men's Christian Association. They follow:

Lift up the Red Triangle
Beside the thundering guns—
A friend, a shield, a solace
To our ten million sons!
Go build a hut or dugout
By billet or by trench—
A shelter from the horror,
The cold, the filth, the stench!
Where boys we love, returning
From out the gory loam,
Can sight the Red Triangle
And find a bit of home!

Lift up the Red Triangle
'Gainst things that mar and maim!
It conquers Booze, the wrecker!
It kills the House of Shame!
Go make a friendly corner,
So lads can take the pen
And get in touch with mother
And God's clean things again!
Where Hell's destroying forces
Are leagued with Potsdam's crew,
Lift up the Red Triangle—
And help our boy "come through!"

"AT last! Lina Cavalieri on the Screen," gloats the Paramount press agent. And what may the date line on this story be please?

AND WHAT ABOUT THE OWNER?

"HELEN FERGUSON became so attached to the old country mansion used in scenes for Essanay's "The Small Town Guy," that she urged the owner of it to allow her to live there during the week the company remained in town."

THERE was a wild rumor running on Broadway last Friday afternoon. Practically all the film magnates were to convene at the Astor. Special snoop hounds from all the trade papers were on the inside and went around with their fingers in their ears. They'd give one a wise look and smile as if to say: "You poor innocent, it is only such as I, who are on the inside of this tremendous and revolutionary convention."

But later in the day the snoop hounds went quickly under cover. The film magnates were there, to be sure, but the convention was a meeting of the Jewish War Relief Fund.

EDWARD EARLE, Vitagraph star, received a letter from a fan in Japan last week and he is under the impression that the writer was praising him. After telling how much he thought of him, the Jap penned the following ambiguous sentence: "I beg to inform you that your play was everywhere in Japan, high term in praise and Japanese movie insanity have an earnest desire for like it."

Earle's correspondent neglected to state the name of the picture, so the star doesn't know whether the picture drove them insane or whether they were that way before they saw it.

YULETIDE headline: "Taylor Holmes gives nose bleed to player."

NOT ENOUGH REALISM FOR THIS SPECTATOR

ROSCOE C. CUNEO, manager of the Isis theatre at Russell, Kansas, wrote to the Kansas City Perfection Exchange as follows:

"The best thing happened last night and I have had eight years' experience in the moving picture game. You see I had on 'The Fibbers.' Now have you ever seen it? It shows them in the bedroom—two separate beds—each one jumps into bed. The house was quiet and a small child said out loud to its mother: 'Why don't they both sleep in one bed?' It just brought down the house. It was certainly great. People are laughing about it this morning."

BILLY WEST having been arrested and duly fined for speeding may now consider himself a native son of California.

THE Winslow Dispatch prints the following intensely interesting item:

"The Star theatre has purchased a new moving picture machine. The new machine is one of the highest grade machines on the market. The new machine is expected to be installed within the next ten days or two weeks. When it is installed the Star, always a fine picture, will be better than ever."

From which we gather that a new machine has been purchased by the Star.

DAVID POWELL, leading man with Olive Tell, has an unusual hobby. He makes hammered brass trays and boxes and beaten silver ornaments. Italian scroll work, in iron, is the latest thing he tried.

WALTER E. GREENE, president of Artcraft, asserts that the war is causing the public to be more critical, and entertainment is picked with more care than formerly. Critical and peevish may look alike to a warring public.

"THE ROSE OF BLOOD," Theda Bara's most recent William Fox feature, has been stamped with approval by the Government, it is said. The star is now making a new picture at Fort Lee.

WILLIAM S. DAVIS, Vitagraph director, has launched work on a new Bushman-Bayne feature, called "The Woolworth Diamonds." The publicity department has made no mention of the gems being of the ten-cent store variety, which it is presumed they are not.

THE EASTERN STUDIOS

IT is predicted that Yuletide will bring Myrtle Stedman, "state-trotter" and warbler-in-chief at the theatres she is appearing in, to New York and the midst of the Eastern studio colony. Welcome to our city!

WALLACE REID is likewise breaking the ties of the peaceable Pacific, putting the finishing touches on a feature while doing so. Anna Little will come East, also, to appear with Reid in pictures made hereabouts.

VIRGINIA PEARSON, the Fox star, was reminded on Thanksgiving that her home town, Louisville, Ky., had not forgotten her. A much-alive turkey was unloaded at her Eastern domicile, from the Blue Grass metropolis, two days prior.

EASTERN film folk have been advised that a number of Balboa people are shortly to migrate Manhattanward. Besides Jackie Saunders, whom E. D. Horkheimer will chaperon, Sherwood Macdonald, director, plans a tour.

MARY GARDEN, Goldwyn's majestic "Thais," received a new line of publicity last week when the press agent discovered she wore a wooden bracelet besprinkled with diamonds.

JAMES KIRKWOOD, director, is back under the Famous Players' roof after eighteen months of special film work. His megaphone is pointed at Billie Burke, in "Eve's Daughter."

MARGUERITE CLARK and her whole company have journed to Jacksonville for exteriors in "The Seven Swans." J. Searle Dawley, although it's a Christmas story, didn't expect to find much snow in the South.

MLLE. ELEANORA L'JULES, well known in European theatrical circles, has, owing to the war, invaded the picture industry and shows promise of taking the country by storm. Her first appearance will be in a Metro picture.

IN mentioning feminine character artists, Ricca Allen must not be forgotten. Her latest contribution to the screen is in Brenon's "Empty Pockets," before which she made a hit as the witch in a Kellermann picture.

LOUISE DU PRE, the Vitagraph star, is greatly interested in the Universal plan to have players speak the sub-titles. She wonders how stutterers, in outdoor mid-winter scenes 'midst light attire, will make themselves understood.

SHAM warfare is due for a revolution, it seems, as Leroy Baker, mechanical expert for the Whartons, has started making paper bullets for "The Eagle's Eye," in which King Baggot will have the chief role.

ARTHUR JAMES, publicity director for Metro, cares not a drat for seasons, and is furnishing lots of baseball copy in December. Irving Cummings is guarding jealously a ball that took part in the recent world's series.

PERSONAL: Pauline Curley, who has leads with Harold Lockwood, made her first public appearance at the age of three years and nine months. She did a song and dance. A few years show how fast ability develops.

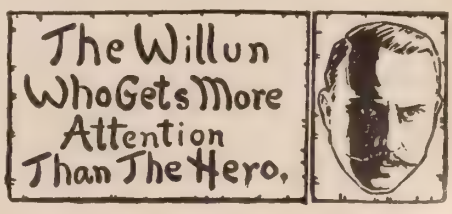
ELSIE FERGUSON'S Artcraft activities have been transferred from Fort Lee to Fifty-fourth street, New York. Director Joe Kaufman now has the star well along in "The Song of Songs." No release date has been set.

HARRY MOREY, the Vitagraph star, has wished the soubriquet of "Some Baby" on his new gasoline-buggy, a nifty Hupmobile. The car is said to be nickel-trimmed, but the nick-name remains unexplained.

ALICE TERRY, former Washington Square player, who is now with Vitagraph, has returned to work at the studio after several weeks of illness. Her first picture was "The Bottom of the Well."

OLIVE TELL occupies a throne—an Egyptian one—in "Her Sister," an Empire all-star production for Mutual. Director John B. O'Brien insisted on truth in all details, and an expensive set resulted.

BABY IVY WARD, Metro's child actress, has made a great hit with Director Frank Reicher, who produced "The Eternal Mother," starring Ethel Barrymore.



CRAUFURD KENT, Cecil Fletcher, Frank Losee, Gertrude Berkely, Robert Cummings, Corinne Uzell, Charles Wellesley and Henry Leone are in the cast of Elsie Ferguson's Artcraft picture now in the making.

MARC MACDERMOTT and John Robertson followed the fire wagon one night recently to a big blaze on the water front. The significant part is that a policeman on the lines recognized the former, having attended many picture shows, and let them through.

THE exhibiting and producing ends of the industry joined recently when Sylvia Jacobs, daughter of a Newark exhibitor, was cast in Metro's "Red, White and Blue Blood" with Bushman and Bayne.

JUNE ELVIDGE has reached that stage in her young life when the magazines scramble for her portrait with which to adorn the front cover. Popularity is a chief asset of the World-Brady star.

J. STUART BLACKTON invited a number of celebrities, including Harry Morey, Alice Joyce, Florence Turner, Mme. Nazimova, Antonio Moreno, Mr. and Mrs. Charles Richman and the Sidney Drews, to a private showing of "The Judgment House," last week.

IN AND OUT OF WEST COAST STUDIOS

By J. C. JESSEN

Constance Talmadge Displays an Odd Taste for Models in "The Studio Girl," a Select Picture

PRODUCER AL. E. CHRISTIE has engaged Bobbie Vernon, formerly with the Keystone organization to play leads in Christie Comedies, and he is now at work on the first subject. In this Ethel Lynne takes the opposite role, that of a domineering wife. Vernon is particularly well known on the screen, having played in many Universal subjects, and later featured in such Keystones as "The Nick of Time Baby," "Caught in a Harem," "Whose Baby?" and others. Vernon is but twenty years of age, and has had more than six years' experience on the stage and screen.

Mr. Christie considers himself very lucky in securing juvenile leading men for his organization. He now has two complete producing units which include Vernon and Miss Lynne who will appear together, and "Smiling" Billy Mason, who, with Betty Compson, will be featured in alternate Christie releases.

Beban Starts New One

Mulberry Bend, New York City, has been reproduced in the Lasky Studio for the George Beban photoplay being produced by William C. De Mille. Mr. Beban, it is said, is going to appear in an entirely new role for him. The photoplay in production is an adaptation from the stage play, "The Land of the Free," which was written by William De Mille. Helen Eddy, who has played in a number of subjects with Beban, is to be leading woman of this production.

Marshall Neilan, since completing the editing of "Stella Maris," the most recent Mary Pickford subject produced, has begun the filming of a new Artcraft scenario which was prepared by Frances Marion, and is an adaptation from a late magazine story.

Filming of the first Cecil B. De Mille production has been commenced. This is a film adaptation from the Perley Poore Sheehan novel, "The Whispering Chorus," which will be used by the book publishers simultaneously with the release of the picture. Kathrine Williams has been selected by Mr. De Mille to play the principal feminine role, and Elliot Dexter has been brought from the Eastern Paramount Players Studio for work in this subject. He will share honors with Raymond Hatton. Miss MacPherson has just returned from a vacation spent in the East.

At the Morosco Studio "Bunker Bean," filmed under the direction of William D. Taylor, and starring Jack Pickford, and an unnamed subject starring Vivian Martin, supported by Theodore Roberts and James Neill, directed by Rollin S. Sturgeon have been completed.

P. A. Kenneth McGaffey will leave during the coming week for a trip East, when he will accompany Wally Reid, who is making a personal appearance tour ending at New York.

Brady Returns from East

Colonel Jasper E. Brady, head of the manuscript department for the Universal Company, has returned from New York where he spent several weeks in conference with managers of the Universal. Since his return several changes have been made at Universal. The writing staff of the scenario department is now made up of George Hively, Waldemar Young, Harvey Gates, F. McGrew Willis, Elliot Clawson and Eugene Lewis.

A new production started by Directress Elsie Jane Wilson is titled "Donna Perfecto," and is an adaptation from a story of the same name by B. Terez Caldos. The screen version was written by Elliott J. Clawson, and Emory Johnson and Ella Hall will be the featured players in this five-reel subject. Harry Holden will play an important character role.

Harry Carey is to play the name role in "Lin McLean," which is an adaptation by George Hively from the book by the same name by Owen Wister. Jack Ford is to be in charge of the direction, and included in the cast will be Betty Schade, Molly Malone, Ed Jones and the Universal cowboys.

Miss Claire DuBrey was badly burned but escaped serious injury this week by quick action of Ben Wilson, when a flimsy dress containing many spangles made of celluloid ignited when a bomb exploded. Wilson wrapped a heavy blanket about Miss DuBrey and smothered out the flames before she was seriously burned. The day following Wilson was injured to the extent of an ear drum being broken by the explosion of a cannon near at hand. Wilson is being featured with Neva Gerber in "The Mystery Ship" serial, and Miss DuBrey was playing the role of a villainess in the current episode.

"More Power to Him" is the title selected for an original photoplay by Waldemar Young now being filmed by Elmer Clifton. This will have Herbert Rawlinson as the featured player, and the part he has in the subject is said to be desirably suitable to him, in that he takes the role of a football warrior. Claire DuBrey is playing the leading reminine role.

Hart Feature Renamed

When the third William S. Hart Artcraft subject was ready for shipment to the laboratories in the East it was decided a new title instead of "The Blood Hound," as the photoplay was known during production, would be more effective and so it was re-christened "Dead or Alive," as the permanent title.

Hart is now at work at the studio in Hollywood where a very unusual setting has been built for the making of the interior scenes for his coming California lumber camp story, exteriors for which were made at Santa Cruz, California, in the redwood district. The setting represents the inside of a saloon, restaurant, gambling hall, and dance hall all in one. Above, in the same setting are the bed rooms of the hotel, and the setting is so built that views showing all portions may be taken at one time.

The company brought back from Santa Cruz the story of Mr. Hart doing manual labor, and as proof offer a strip of film showing him cutting down a redwood giant about two hundred and fifty feet in height and several feet in diameter.

Director R. William Neill is at work on a new Ince subject for Paramount which will offer Dorothy Dalton in the role of a Western girl who weds a member of a family of the New York 400. Melbourne McDowell, Robert McKim, Jack Holt, Dorcas Mathews and William Conklin have been selected for the important parts in this story. This will be of the nature of a society drama.

"Let's Go" is the name selected for Thomas H. Ince's next contribution to Paramount starring Charles Ray. This is a study of heredity which has Billy Elmer in the role of a tenderloin district tough and ex-pugilist, and Sylvia Bremer plays the principal feminine role. The direction was in charge of Victor Schirtzinger.

Triangle Starts Three

At the Triangle Studios at Culver City, three new productions were begun last week. One is in charge of Director Gilbert P. Hamilton, who has William Desmond, Charles Gunn and Jack Richardson as his principals, together with Mitzi Gould, a recent addition to the Triangle stock, Jean Burr, W. A. Jeffries and Walt Whitman. The story is "Captain of His Soul," which is an adaptation from the Elinor Kinkade story titled "Shackles." The plot pertains to the sacrifices made by a young man to aid his brother whom he believes guilty of a crime.

"The Three Godsons of Janet Gontreau" is holding the attention of Director Raymond Wells, and another Triangle company which includes Allen Sears and Margery Wilson in the featured part, together with Wilbur Higby, William V. Mong, Aaron Edwards and Anna Dodge. The Wells story pertains to the activities of a New York stenographer who adopted three German soldiers prior to the entrance of the United States in the world war as her godsons, and later she is caused considerable trouble and annoyance when federal officers believe she is a German spy.

The Randall Parrish novel, "Keith of the Border," has been adapted for the screen by Alvin J. Neitz, and Roy Stewart will be featured in this in the name role under the direction of Cliff Smith. Many of the scenes will be made at the Hartville ranch, and have to do with an Indian uprising. The Stewart-Smith Company are now making the final scenes of "The Law's Outlaw," and upon completion of these will begin the filming of the new story on a big Western set which has been erected at the Culver City Studio. Fritzi Ridgeway is to play opposite Stewart in this new production, and in the supporting cast will be Norbert Myles, Percy Challenger, Pete Morrison and Louis "Bull" Durham. Steve Rounds, former cameraman at the Universal, where he served for more than two years, has been engaged and will be in charge of the photography for the Stewart-Smith Company.

Helene Chadwick, One of Pathe's Most Luminous Stars

L-Ko Sea Nymphs Find Time Now and Then from Their Congenial Duties to Bask in the Balmy Breezes of the Beach

The entire cast for "Limousine Life" being made by Director Jack Dillon and featuring Olive Thomas, includes Joseph Bennett, Lee Phelps, Lillian West, Mary Warren, Virginia Foltz and Mildred Delfino. This photoplay will be completed within the next few days. A very attractive feature of the photoplay will be a fashion show. In these scenes a number of new style gowns will be seen, together with new designs of riding habits which will be worn by Jessie Hallett.

Triangle company making "The Gun Woman," with Texas Guinan in the name part, is working at a big Western set built at the Culver City Studio. The cast in this subject includes Francis McDonald, Ed. Brady, "Curly" Baldwin and Daisy Harlan.

Fox Companies Rest

This is between picture time for three producing units at the Fox Studio, and consequently there is little producing activity there. Frank Lloyd has just completed the direction of "A Soul for Sale," which will offer Jewel Carmen as star, and it is probable he will not take up the filming of a new subject until William Farnum arrives on the coast. Mr. Farnum has been at the Eastern Fox Studio for the past six months, and is expected West shortly. The principals for "A Soul for Sale," besides Miss Carmen are L. C. Shumway, Robert Milton, Genevieve Blinn, G. Raymond Nye and Richard LaReno.

Bertram Bracken has filmed "For Liberty," which has an atmosphere of Berlin at the time of the American declaration of war in the beginning, and closes with scenes of Sammies in the trenches on the Western front. Gladys Brockwell, Charles Clary, Bertram Grassby and Willard Louis appear in this subject.

The only company working at the Fox plant is that filming "Cupid's Round-Up," which has Tom Mix as the star supported by Wanda Petit, under the direction of E. J. LeSaint.

Charles Kenyon, author of a number of stage successes, including "Kindling," as well as a number of screen plays written for Lasky and Universal, is a recent addition to the Fox scenario staff.

At the Sunshine Comedy Plant a new organization began work this week which is under the direction of Charles Parrot. Ford Sterling and Mildred Lee are the principals of this comedy making organization, working under the supervision of Henry Lehrman. Lehrman is at work on a comedy which has Billy Ritchie, Winifred Westover, Hugh Fay, Guy Woodward and Heinie Conklin as principals.

Another Sunshine company will shortly complete the filming of another lion story in which Lloyd Hamilton is the featured player. Delay on this production has been occasioned by injury to one of Hamilton's feet, caused by a heavy swinging door which broke the bones when it closed suddenly.

Keystone Names "Skate" Story

The skating rink story being made by Director Reggie Morris at the Triangle Keystone Studios, has been given the title of "Wronged by Mistake." Much of the action for this photoplay takes place in a

Harry Carey and Mollie Malone, in "Wild Women," a Universal Production

Caroline Rankin, who returns to Keystone organization.

One company of Keystone players under Herman Raymaker's direction, have been reported sea-sick for the past week, as the result of filming "A Sea Serpent's Desire." Whether they are taking exteriors on board the "Fremont" in San Pedro Harbor, or working in the interior at the studio, the effect is the same, for all of the settings have been placed on rockers to provide the rolling motion. Principals of this are Dale Fuller, Maude Wayne, Milton Sims, Lloyd Bacon and "Slim" St. Clair.

The film being made by Harry Edwards with a big cast that includes Alatia Marton, Milburn Moranti, Martin Kinney, George French, Rose Carter, Dorothy Hagar and others, is sure enough of the silent drama type, for the principal actor is a dumb waiter. The title selected is "Ruined by a Dumb Waiter."

The William Beaudine company, which includes Paddy Maguire, Mariana de la Torre, Harry Depp, Lallah Hart and others are at work on a piano mover's story.

One Keystone company is not working at this time for want of a story. This unit has just completed filming "Courts and Cabarets," with a cast that includes Peggy Pearce, Max Asher, Mal St. Clair, Myrtle Reeves and "Baldy" Belmont.

Conway Returns to Studio

Jack Conway, the Triangle director, returned this week from Tacoma, Washington, where he went to be present at the burial of his father, James Conway, who died early this week at the age of seventy-six, at his home near Victorville, California.

Phillip H. White, formerly of the editing department of the Triangle Studios, has been transferred to the scenario staff, where he is writing continuity. White has been connected with the motion picture industry for a number of years, his first big work being that of editing the multiple reel picture, "Quo Vadis."

Casting Director Arthur Hoyt, of Triangle, is confined to his home with the bones of one foot broken. A mystery surrounds the accident, as White does not know how the bones were broken. He retired one evening to awake the following morning with the foot so badly swollen and paining him that he could not stand upon it.

Upon making a trip to San Diego, Director E. Mason Hopper and company playing in "Mr. Butterfly," found that gardeners were at this time remaking the famous Japanese gardens in the Southern city, and consequently they could not be used for scenes in this subject. The location officers of the Triangle Studio are now scouring the West Coast in search of scenes of location that may be used in this photoplay which requires an atmosphere of Japan. Darrel Foss plays the name role, and is supported by Teddy Sampson, two Japanese players, and a great number of Japanese extras. Ann Kroman and Kathleen Emerson take important roles.

Walter Edwards this week made a new production record at the Triangle. In eleven days he completed the five reel subject, "Evidence." Because of this photoplay, those who have seen it, have nick-named Jack Cunningham, "the Henri Bernstein of the screen." J. Barney Sherry and Pauline Stark play the principal parts.

Bessie Barriscale Is Starred in "Those Who Pay," a U. S. Exhibitors' Booking Corporation Feature

Five Triangle directors, Jack Conway, Thomas Heffron, Lynn Reynolds, H. D'Elba and Walter Edwards are now awaiting new stories. These will be supplied in the next day or two, as the working scripts are nearing completion by members of the scenario department.

Universal Companies Busy

Elliot J. Clawson has written a special story for Monroe Salisbury and Ruth Clifford, who will be co-starred in it. The title is "The Highest Card" and the photoplay is now in production.

Other subjects now in production at Universal City, are "The Girl Who Dared," being directed by Allen J. Holubar and featuring Dorothy Phillips; "The Green Seal," which is being made under the direction of Stuart Paton with Carmel Meyers in a featured role, and "The Bull's Eye" serial. James W. Horne and company, which includes Eddie Polo and Vivian Reed, are now at work on the sixth episode of this subject. Director Harry Harvey with Ben Wilson, Neva Gerber and others are busy with the eleventh episode of "The Mystery Ship," and Edgar Jones is directing the filming of "The Quest of Joan" with Louise Lovely in the featured part. The story is an adaptation from the James Oliver Curwood novel, the screen version having been prepared by Doris Schroeder.

Announcement will shortly be made, it is expected, of plans for releasing a series of six two-reel comedy-dramas made for the Universal Company by the Mack Swain Photo Comedy Company which has been working at a Hollywood studio. Mack Swain, who was featured in many Keystone Comedies made during the past three years under the screen name of Ambrose, takes the leading part, and is supported by a big cast, which includes Rae Godfrey, Jack Perrin, Tom Perse, Mae Emory, Russ Powell, William Hutchinson and other well-known screen players. The Mack Swain company was organized several weeks ago and has been at work since under the direction of Anthony Coldeway and Walter Frederick, who have served as authors as well as co-directors. Both are familiar with the character of comedies for Swain, having been affiliated with the Keystone scenario department for a long period. Both have had a number of years' experience in writing photoplays and adaptations. The first of the series to be released is entitled "Icy Love," and will be on the market some time in December. The other comedies will follow one every other week.

Rolfe Enlarges Production

B. A. Rolfe, Western representative of Metro, has completed plans for materially

Ernest Warde Has Been Engaged to Direct Frank Keenan in Pathe Features

enlarging production activities at the studio in Hollywood in addition to the general improvements that have been made there. Many changes have already been made under the direction of Mr. Rolfe, one being the enlargement of the stage to one which is 90x180 feet in dimensions. A new stage 75x125 is now being built and when this is completed both stages will be fitted with walls that it may be closed or opened in short notice.

The initial production of Edith Storey made by Director Tod Browning has been completed, and filming of the second story, "Revenge," an adaptation from "Hearts Steadfast," prepared by William Parker and H. P. Keeler has been commenced. Scenes for this are laid in the West, and will have a cast which includes Wheeler Oakman, Ralph Lewis and others.

"The Winding Trail," the first Viola Dana story made at the Hollywood studio by Director John Collins, has been completed in every detail, from the scenario by H. P. Keeler, and the organization is now working on "A Weaver of Dreams," which is an adaptation by William Parker from the story of the same name by Myrtle Reed. Clifford Bruce is to play opposite Miss Dana in the second subject.

Plans now provide that "Yosemite" is the third vehicle for Miss Storey, and "A Modern Salome," adapted from a story by Marie Morillo is to be the vehicle for Viola Dana.

Sloman Keeps on the Jump

As soon as Director Edward Sloman completes the editing of the film, "In Bad," which has just been completed, he will begin the production of a new subject which will star William Russell, which is at present known as "Polo Jack." This story is from the pen of Charles Dazey, and the screen adaptation was written by James E. Hungerford, a member of the American authorial staff. Francelia Billington is to again play opposite Mr. Russell in the new subject. This is the third film from stories written by Mr. Dazey, the previous ones being "The Sea Master" and "New York Luck." A number of players have been specially engaged for this Russell photoplay. Sidney Dean will take the role of Reverend Robert Moreland, and Carl Von Schiller will take a juvenile part. Carl Stockdale, late of Fine Arts and Lasky Companies, who has been with the Russell organization for the past two months, takes the important character part. Harvey Clark will appear without a camouflage of crepe hair in the role of an English butler. Clarence Burton and Helen Howard complete the cast.

Complete cast for "Mlle. Tiptoe," the American-Mutual subject starring Mary Miles Minter, was given out this week by President S. S. Hutchinson, and includes Alan Forrest, Orral Humphreys, Lucile Ward, Spottiswood Aitken, George Periolat and Clarence Burton. Production on this photoplay was delayed this week because Miss Minter could not appear before the camera as the result of oak poisoning received while appearing in a scene recently in the mountains.

Diando Plays Circus

The Diando Studio was this week the scene of a circus performance for the coming Baby Marie Osborne picture now called "Any Home." It was a circus as is seen most any day in the back yard of most any home where there are children the week following a visit of a regular circus to any town. More than 200 Glendale children took part in the scenes in which Baby Marie was the dainty equestrian, riding her Shetland pony "Dobbins," and Ernest Morrison, the little colored boy, who has played in so many pictures with this Pathe star, was ring master. With the making of these scenes, the third Diando release for Pathe was completed by Director William Bertram.

Director Richard Baker has returned to the Pathe Studio after a week's absence on account of illness, and has again taken up the direction of "Kidder and Ko." During his absence George Marshall served back of the megaphone. The latter part of the week this company, headed by Bryant Washburn and Gertrude Selby, worked at San Pedro where a Down East fishing village which contains an electric sign 280x90 feet in dimensions was erected. The sign will be seen on the top of the buildings in the set.

All members of the Diando and Pathe producing units were guests at a Thanksgiving dinner served at the studio Wednesday, when President W. A. S. Douglas and Vice-President Leon T. Osborne were hosts.

Stern Has New Plans

Plans for preventing delay in production during the rainy season of California and others that will provide for regular release of L-Ko Comedies, have been completed by Julius Stern, who has been on the coast for the past three weeks. The companies have been working overtime during the better weather of the year, and Mr. Stern now advises that the entire schedule of releases for L-Ko Comedies, as well as the Alice Howell Century Comedies, is completed for the months of January, February and March.

By the method adopted by Mr. Stern for the L-Ko Company, the producing unit will not be required to work during the darkest month of the year—January, for a great number of releases have been prepared which will amply provide for the needs of the program. Producing units are now at work at the L-Ko Studios. One is directed by Bob Kerr, and has Gail Henry, Hughie Mack, Bobbie Dunn, late of Keystone, and Kathleen O'Connor as principals. Another under the direction of Archie Mayo has Dave Morris, William Stubbins and Gladys Horton playing the important parts. Jack Blystone is directing the production of an Alice Howell comedy.

At the same studio the Mack Swain Photo Comedy Company continue with the production of their first two-reel comedy which will be released by the L-Ko Company through the Universal.

Hollywood Hookum

Dec. 22, 1917 NEWS MORE NEWS

PATIENCE!

Seven more days must elapse before HOOKUM spreads before you that which it has promised. Some of the writers who have promised a very noteworthy contribution find that it will take them longer to scan the pages of the dictionary and select all the beautiful words for their compositions. They have said "wait," and HOOKUM must pass the word along.

When this promised feature arrives, your hearts, gentle readers, will pitty pat and everything. Maybe you will be thrilled. It's a certainty your eyes will glow with enthusiasm until you read every word of the column.

Yes, it is to be a column, or colyum, or anything like that you want to call it. The brains of the fourth greatest industry under the shining sun and the limpid skies of wonderful Southern California, are to make this the greatest medium for carrying away the storms that may be created by too much rarebit or anything like that.

HOOKUM can only say, the big feature begins next week.—Order your copies in advance.

H. O. Davis is back in town.

Harry Aitken is paying the film center a visit.

Frank Powell was in our town this week picking talent.

S. S. Hutchinson flitted in and out of the film center.

Herb. Rawlinson is reported to be leaving the Universal—again.

Prosperity Note: Josie Sedgwick is now steering a new Buick.

Dick Willis has been writing poetry again, but we'll spare our readers.

Bill V. Mong has taken on a new camouflage — whiskers all over his face.

Director Lynn Reynolds is the father of a boy—yes, this is the second one.

Eddie and Lee escaped from the subdued white way, and again are amongst us.

Harry Depp has laid aside his corsets and is playing the role of a regular man.

When Hank McRae found a gila monster in his office, he closed the place for the day.

Bill Desmond has discovered that a silk shirt patterned after a barber pole is very attractive these days.

Jack Conway was seen wearing a bright yellow sweater the other day, so Cliff Smith went one better with one of a crimson hue.

B. Washburn has confided to the Chamber of Commerce that he loves California. Maybe he bit his fingernails when he said it.

Reggie Morris admonished Dora Rogers this week by telling her not to be so polite to the man who is supposed to be her husband.

Verne Hardin Porter, scenario writer, has leased a cottage at Ocean Park, formerly occupied by Jack London, for inspirational purposes.

William "Bill" Russell claims a new distinction—he has never permitted a publicity man to send out a story that was not correct—our hands are up.

Paddy Maguire was entertained at dinner by the employment manager Ben Singer, Triangle, and then went out and spent his week's wages for food.

Charley Van Loan claims he saw Bill Desmond as a matinee idol the first time when his parents carried him to the theatre, a babe in arms. Desmond threatens a libel suit.

Frederick E. Sturtevant, New York newspaper reporter, claims there are more curiosities at the Triangle Culver City studio, than he discovered while with Roosevelt on the river of Doubt.

Mack Sennett has been off the screen so long, he was not recognized by the gateman of a studio he visited the other day, and would have been thrown out had it not been for an intelligent actor who interposed.

Fay Tincher is said to have had a very successful shopping tour, and bought up all the striped stockings on the market. Lovers of the silent drammar may expect harizontal and perpendicular stripes.

J. R. Crone of the American, has found it necessary to enlarge the doors of the publicity office in order to permit the entrance of the present encumbrance—Dean N. Fifield. And now they call him "slim."

Doug. Fairbanks was seen practicing jumping from the ground over the rear end of his Stutz runabout into the seat, and so it is prophicied that lovers of the cinema will shortly see him do this before their very eyes.

Our set was out in their full regalia this week to celebrate Thanksgiving by attending the M. P. D. A. ball. The doorman at the Alex. confidentially advised HOOKUM that he never knew there were so many handsome men and beautiful women in the world before, and just then Hal Cooley passed.

Keystone scenario—brains department—has notified all owners of objectionable looking automobiles to park them in the rear. The notice is signed by Albert Glassmire, Walter MacNamara, Fred Palmer, J. Farrell Macdonald, Harry Wulze, Jack Jevne, Frederick Bennett and Jay Dwiggins. (We are told none of the above named cats are fortunate enough to own an automobile, except Macdonald who drives his wife's.)

"Les Miserables"

(William Fox—Nine Reels)

REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

THERE are three points which come to mind after witnessing William Fox's special production "Les Miserables," adapted from Victor Hugo's classic.

Firstly, it is a wonderful picture.

Secondly, the treatment accorded it by Frank Lloyd is masterly.

Thirdly, the characterization of Jean Valjean by William Farnum is, beyond the shadow of a doubt, the finest piece of acting he has ever done.

There are three ditinct episodes in the Hugo book. One deals with Jean Valjean, his degradation and his spiritual rebirth, another with Fantine, the fallen woman, the third with Cosette, her daughter. That Mr. Lloyd and Mr. Marc Robbins in their scenario, have welded these three trains of thought into one complete whole, a whole that possesses the fullest amount of human interest ever pictured, is a striking tribute to their ability—their sense of pictorial values.

One or two have become critical because "Les Miserables" the picture, is without some of the incidents of "Les Miserables" in its manifold printed pages. And it is true that certain incidents have been omitted. But these few howlers seem at a loss to realize that had the work been pictured as written, nineteen reels, perhaps twenty-nine, would have been required. To our notion, the picture is as perfect a version of a classic that has rubbed covers with the Bible in many a library as could possibly be achieved.

"Dante made a hell with poetry. I have tried to make one with reality," is a line by the author in the preface to his work. And in the lives of his three principal characters, he created for each their hell, caused by the injustice of the society of the time, by the forces of circumstance pitted against the unfortunates. And it is these hells that create the deep response of sympathy in the heart of the readers of the work—that assuredly will create a like response in the hearts of the observers of the picture.

For it has long since been proven, particularly in the art of the motion picture, that there is no being who attracts so much sympathy, who excites so great an appeal, as the being fighting desperately against odds that crush. Simple because that from such a predicament rises the fundamental element of struggle upon which the drama of life is based. And so in the terrific fight of Jean Valjean, his moments that are the depth of despair, his regeneration because of a single great kindness toward him; so in the pathetic plight of Fantine; so in the cruel hardships of little Cosette, rest a veritable storehouse of appeal, ever ready to burst its bounds as limited in the footage of the picture.

Mr. Farnum's Jean Valjean is, as said before, his best creation. His acting reveals the workings of the tortured soul to their innermost depths and his transition into the venerable old character who spends his last days returning good to the world that so mistreated him is done with wonderful effect. And one must perforce refer to his excellent makeup in the scenes in prison, where spiritually broken unto death, he subsists merely for revenge.

Kitten Reichert gives one of the ablest performances ever rendered by a child as Cosette in her early years. Jewel Carmen is successful in carrying the part through to its mature finish. Hardee Kirkland is typical of the frozen faced and heartless Javert, and Sonia Markova's Fantine is exceedingly well done. Edward Elkas, Harry Spingler and Dorothy Bernard have important roles and handle them well. Billy Foster headed the battery of cameramen.

But when all is said and done it is to the director, to Frank Lloyd, that the greatest share of credit should go. His is really a master work, the equal of which there is none. There is not a man with a bigger name in the field than Mr. Lloyd's, who could have bettered his work in any department, and there are few with bigger names—perhaps none now. The excellence of the continuity, the clarity of every piece of action, the realism of the atmosphere of the seventeenth century, and above all, the fact that his picture is still Victor Hugo's belittle all expressions of praise.

"Les Miserables" is a picture that will live long after the usual feature of the day is a thing of past years.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

His widowed sister and her children starving Jean Valjean (William Farnum) steals a loaf of bread. Captured and tried he is thrown into jail for five years. Successive attempts to escape lengthen his sentence to nineteen. Finally released, friendless, embittered against the world, he wanders the country-side and no one turns a hand to aid him because all know his record. No one but the Bishop (George Moss). He does. Feeds him, takes him in for the night and in return for his kindness Jean Valjean robs him. Again caught by the guards he is dragged back to the Bishop's house in the morning. To save him from the law his host says that he presented him with the stolen goods. And it is only then that Jean Valjean discovers that there is something good in the world to live for. The Bishop tells him that he has bought his soul and given it to God and it is this that transforms Jean Valjean.

Five years later he is discovered as the mayor of a small French town, its leading citizen, its biggest manufacturer, living under an assumed name a life of charity toward all and malice toward none. Javert (Hardee Kirkland), the former prison warden, is inspector of police in the same town. Because of a display of the mayor's great strength he is almost positive in his belief that he is Jean Valjean. But his superiors contradict this, telling him that the real Jean Valjean has again been captured to be tried for another crime. It is a great struggle for the mayor to journey to the next township and give himself up but he does so that the innocent man may go free.

Fantine (Sonia Markova) a worker in Jean Valjean's mills, is discharged because the forewoman learns of her nameless child. Before he is sent away to prison the late-mayor discovers the whereabouts of the girl and on his escape, which follows soon after, goes to her. She, Cosette (Kitten Reichert) has been forced to do a grownup's labor by Thenardier (Edward Elkas) and his wife (Mina Ross), innkeepers near Paris. So Jean Valjean takes her away and establishes himself in Paris with Cosette caling him her father.

There is another skip of years, during which time Cosette (Jewel Carmen) has grown into a beautiful woman loved by Marius (Harry Spingler) a youth of noble birth whose sympathies rest with the revolutionists. And Javert is also in Paris still unsuccessful in his search for Jean Valjean. And too there are the Thenardiers and their grown children Eponine (Dorothy Bernard) and Gavrouche (Anthony Phillips), all professional beggars. When the revolution breaks, Jean Valjean goes to the street barricade to watch over Marius because of Cosette's love for him. Severely wounded, Jean Valjean caries him from the front, descends into the Paris sewers and wanders through the dirty, subterranean maze with Marius on his back until at last he finds a way out. And there stands Javert, only recently saved from the revolutionists by the man he so unmercifully prosecutes, now ready to arrest him because he has the upper hand. But the one spark of kindness left in the grouchy inspector is kindled into a flame when he sees Jean Valjean dirty and bedraggled because of his latest deed of kindness and so he gives a life for a life. With Marius restored, the old man is again happy for Cosette's sake. But the passing years and their hardships have weakened the body of Jean Valjean and soon after the marriage of Cosette and Marius he passes away.

"Miss Jackie of the Army"

(Mutual-American—Five Reels)

REVIEWED BY LISLE M. ALBRIGHT

MARGUERITA FISCHER as the bouncing, flirtatious, irrepressible near-disrupter of army discipline and savior of an army troop train is extremely refreshing in this latest Mutual-American release. There is a great deal of humor and fun injected in the story through her absolute disregard for army discipline and the way in which she persists in receiving the attentions of a young lieutenant in spite of her Colonel father's remonstrances.

The story is rather light even though uniforms, pro-German intrigue, and an attempt to blow up a bridge and wreck a train, do find a place in its construction. There are many laughable situations, among them being Miss Jackie's seizure of her dad's prize collection of old guns to arm a company of "fighting demons," and her auctioning off of a kiss at a Red Cross benefit which is grabbed by a bewhiskered old fossil.

Miss Fischer is given able support by Jack Mower, L. C. Shumway and Hal Clements, who enact military parts in a highly creditable manner. The direction is good and the film ought to find general appreciation among moving picture audiences wherever it is shown.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Jackie (Marguerita Fischer) is the daughter of Colonel Kerwood, commander of an army post, and is so anxious to do her bit in the great war that she organizes a girls' brigade and starts drilling them in her father's home. The Colonel (Hal Clements), however, objects and compels her to disband her forces. In rebellion Jackie resolves to run away and join the Red Cross. That night she sees an officer entering a building that is regarded with suspicion and mistakes the man for her sweetheart, Lieut. Adair (Jack Mower). Her suspicions are strengthened later when she sees Adair follow a soldier into the place. Adair is made a prisoner by the plotters and Jackie flees for help and arouses the post. Just as the traitors plan to throw an electric switch and wreck a bridge and onrushing train, Jackie comes back with a company of soldiers and foils their plot. Lieut. Adair destroys the infernal machine after escaping from the basement and Jackie discovers her mistake in suspecting him and capitulates.

"The Eternal Temptress"

(Famous Players-Paramount—Five Reels)

REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE.

SIGNIFICANCE will probably be attached to "The Eternal Temptress" because it is the famous Lina Cavalieri's first picture done for the Paramount program. The noted beauty appears in the role of a native of Italy, who plays a prominent part in the international affairs of her country and Austria prior to the outbreak of the war. She is the adventuress, the woman of the world, the mistress of not one but of many, whose sense of patriotism and love of a man who has all but disgraced himself before the world because of her, leads her to straighten out his unfortunate affairs that he may not be forever branded a traitor.

But "The Eternal Temptress" is not the type of picture deserving of the significance it suggests. Mme. Cavalieri is a beauty, no one can deny that, and the array of splendid gowns and wraps she wears will assuredly cause gasps of amazement in the feminine ranks of an audience. But the vehicle which Mme. Fred De Gresac has prepared for the star is lacking in true dramatic qualities. The part carried by Mme. Cavalieri, that of Princess Sanzio, attracts neither sympathy nor condemnation until the very last. Harry Althrop, the American, is too much of a cad to be worried about even when his disgrace seems imminent. In other words the story has no characters that appeal to the sympathies of the audience. In fact its single strong situation is its climax.

The body of the story has been written without regard to fact. Realism has often been disregarded to gain points in the development of the story with results that are not in the least commendable. One has the ill feeling throughout the body of the picture that the author wrote hurriedly to gain a desired end. Not the least of the picture's faults is that important international documents are left lying about the American ambassador's office with no one to guard them. The spy, Count Frizl, is one of the most careless fellows ever seen and constantly betrays the high trust placed in him by his government.

Elliott Dexter is the weakling American; Allan Hale plays Count Frizl, and the American ambassador to Italy is interpreted by James Laffey, an actor who has realized his likeness to Ambassador Gerard, improved upon it with make-up, and who might pass for the American official any day if he chose. Emile Chautard directed.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Driven bankrupt by the extravagances of Princess Sanzio (Lina Cavalieri), Harry Arthrop (Elliott Dexter), forges the name of Ambassador Lawton (James Laffey), to a check. This is duly photographed by Austrian secret service agents. One of their number, Count Fritzl (Allan Hale), then commences to lavish gifts upon the Princess so that Althrop becomes insanely jealous. Approached by the Count he consents to secure an important paper in Lawton's possession relating to Italy's probable stand in the war for which he will receive a large sum. He manages to steal it and then, though unwilling, is forced to turn it over to the Count when confronted with the photograph of the check. Lawton and his father discover both the forgery and the robbery and Althrop is consequently brought up before the tribunal of justice.. The Princess learns the whole story and playing a dangerous game, feigns love for the Count. When in his embrace she stabs him to the heart, secures the paper and returns it to the ambassador, thus preserving Althrop's honor and saving the American nation from disgrace. Later she takes her own life, realizing that her love for Althrop is futile.

Others in the cast are Mildred Conselman, Edward Fielding, Hallen Mostyn, Pierre De Matteis and Peter Barbier.

"Because of a Woman"

(Triangle—Five Reels)

REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE.

WHEN shown for review, "Because of a Woman" was at least an hour and ten minutes in the projecting. And it ran considerably over five thousand feet of film. Possibly it is to be cut and possibly then it will past muster as an average picture, but in its present state it can not be described as such. For three reels it holds up admirably well and then the crash comes. Its last reels, three, we should judge, are filled with action that repeats itself, that maneuvers the characters with the result that they perform quite impossibly, all out of keeping with their previous performances.

In this latter part it has been poorly written, poorly scenarioized and poorly directed. The number of scenes showing automobiles starting and stopping, men entering and exiting from houses, reach way up into the twenties, so it seems. The villain is led to reform nicely and go back to his patient wife, while the hero who has stolen the society flirt from the former that this end be accomplished decides to marry her himself. But incessant automobiling by day and by night is necessary before this dual happy ending arrives. A number of eliminations are certainly possible and would lead to some decided improvement, to what degree it is rather hazardous to judge.

Belle Bennett is featured, but her appearance is not put in until the fourth reel. The principal roles are handled by Jack Livingston, Louella Maxam and George Chesbro, a trio who distinguish themselves averagely.

The story is by E. Magnus Ingleton, scenario by George Elwood Jenks, and the direction is Jack Conway's. Paul Eagler at the camera has supplied some excellent night photography.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Noal Clavering (Jack Livingston) takes the blame for a breach of business faith committed by Allan Barrett (George Chesbro) to save the name of Colonel Gwynne (Joseph Swickard), who is thought guilty. After remaining away two years he returns to find Allan married to the Colonel's daughter, Muriel (Louella Maxam), to whom he was once betrothed. Though now holding the confession of Allan he refrains from making it public because of his love for Muriel. When Allan proves neglectful and starts prancing about the town with Valerie (Belle Bennett), a flirt, Noel proceeds to "cut him out," and engage the girl in a flirtation himself. The upshot of it all is that Allan returns a sadder and wiser man to his wife while Noel discovers that he loves Valerie. His proposal is accepted.

Lillian Langdon and George Pearce appear in congenial character roles.

"Little Miss Fixer"

(Strand-Mutual—One Reel)

REVIEWED BY F. G. SPENCER

BILLIE RHODES has a most perplexing role in this latest release, but she acquits herself quite creditably. Her new partner, Cullen, perhaps does not show to as great advantage as did his predecessor, Jay Belasco, but of course there are chances of improvement.

The scheme involved is to deceive Cullen's rich aunt into believing Billie and he are happily married, whereas the truth is that Cullen, in an angry mood, has gone to the mountains to cool off. The aunt is on the point of discrediting Billie, who has sent a hurry-up call for him to return, when he does so and matters terminate happily.

This is a neat little comedy, scheduled for release December 18, and will find favor with all Billie Rhodes fans.

"Tom Sawyer"

(Paramount—Five Reels)

REVIEWED BY R. E. PRITCHARD

THERE are probably no two more charming characters in all fiction that Tom Sawyer and his chum, Huck Finn. Their stories as written by Mark Twain are immortal, and there is no man who has read them who does not still retain in the storehouse of his mind the story of them and feel more strongly the spirit of youth for having read them. And practically every one has read these stories. For that reason this picture should lend itself readily to advertising and should draw immense crowds wherever it is shown. There is not a character anywhere that will appeal to so many people, from youth to oldest age.

Much of the charm of the book has been brought into the picture, but to one who has entered fully into the story there is a measure of disappointment. One will remember that the chief "story" in the book is the adventure in the cave with the criminal. All of this has been left out of the picture. In fact it is only a series of incidents leading up to the trio running away from home and then returning just as their funeral is being held. When the end of the picture comes one feels that the picture has been cut off in the middle. And so delightful have been the five reels that one would willingly sit through five more of them. That is a tribute to the manner in which the picture has been made, but at the same time emphasizes the disappointment. It is decidedly too sketchy.

William D. Taylor shows excellent direction through the picture and there is a splendid cast. Jack Pickford is very pleasing in the title role and achieves the daringly boyish spirit well. With very little to do Robert Gordon is convincing as "Huck Finn," and one would be glad to see him in that role when that one of Mark Twain's stories is made. Clara Horton, as "Becky Thatcher" stands out as a genuine interpreter of a fifteen-year-old girl.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Tom (Jack Pickford) is pictured at the start of the story as a mischievous, but not bad boy, with his Aunt Polly (Edythe Chapman) and his cousins (George Hackathorne and Alice Marvin) in their home. Then comes a fight with the goody-goody boy of the town and Huck Finn (Robert Gordon) is shown watching the fight. Then follows the incident of whitewashing the fence, where his ingenuity persuades the other boys that it is great fun and collects all their trinkets in exchange for the privilege of trying their hand, the result being that he corners everything worth while and gets the whitewashing done without any labor on his own part. Then he falls in love with the new girl of the town, Becky Thatcher (Clara Horton). The next Sunday he goes to church and he determined to attract Becky's attention by winning one of the bibles offered by the Sunday School and exchanges his trinkets for bible cards. He astounds the assemblage when he presents them, but he is discomfited when he is unable to answer questions on Bible history. Then come school scenes with Tom making love to Becky. He is willing to take pnuishment for the evil that he does, but when he is whipped for writing on his slate "I love you," and then is punished at home for something his cousin has done, he determines the world is against him and runs away with Huck Finn and Joe Harper (Antrom Short). They make a raft and go to an island in the Mississippi, but the raft slips away and men who had seen them leaving report that the two boys had probably been drowned. In the meantime Tom is smitten with remorse and writes on a piece of bark the message that he is safe and then swims the river to leave it in his aunt's home. But when he arrives there he finds his aunt and cousins and Tom's mother are discussing the funeral of the three boys which is to be held the next day, even without their bodies. So he determines that a more dramatic thing to do would be to return for their own funeral, and this they do. They are so joyfully received that all their mischief is forgiven.

"My Little Boy"

(Bluebird—Five Reels)

REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

IN "My Little Boy," which Bluebird is offering as a Christmas number, Elliott J. Clawson has evolved a story of absolute heart interest, evidently suggested in part by Dickens' "Christmas Carol" and Eugene Field's poem, "Little Boy Blue." The Yuletide atmosphere with which the author has so beautifully surrounded the domestic circle, composed of husband and wife, little son and old servant, will thaw the heart of the most hardened cynic. It is pretty, real, and old fashioned Christmas which one dreams about but seldom experiences.

And straight from this atmosphere of utmost cheer the author arouses in the spectator the most contrasting emotion. On Christmas morning the Scrooge-like Uncle Oliver goes turkey hunting and the Indian head-dress of the little boy is mistaken for game. There is the shot and the boy is brought home mortally wounded. The scenes about the little chap's death bed are pure pathos. Here is a picturization of a real tragedy, not done extravagantly but quietly and sincerely so that its effect is sweeping. You are caught unawares by the pathos of it. There will hardly be a dry eye in the house that shows "My Little Boy."

Following this episode comes the awakening of Uncle Oliver to disorder that it has all been a dream. But the dream transforms the old man from a hardened cynic to a human being and there is a merry Christmas for everybody. Elsie Jane Wilson has handled every turn of Mr. Clawson's story with an ability, an appreciation of values, that places her firmly in the ranks of the better directors There is never anything false in the story nor in its picturization.

A most capable cast of Bluebird performers interpreted the many roles of prominence. Ella Hall and Emory Johnson are seen to advantage as the husband and wife, and Little Zoe Rae is charming in the title role. Winter Hall, as Uncle Oliver and Harry Holden as Joe, the old servant, add further to their laurels as character actors, while Gretchen Lederer completes the cast with an appealing performance as Clara's mother.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Fred (Emory Johnson), whose guardian and uncle (Winter Hall) is a harsh and forbidding man, has grown to manhood after an early life only made happy by the cheerfulness and love of old Joe (Harry Holden), the family servant. His marriage to Clara (Ella Hall) estranges him from his uncle for six long years, during which time his life and that of Clara's is made happy by Paul (Zoe Rae), their child. Finally, on Christmas Eve Uncle Oliver consents to visit them, but his hardened old soul refuses to yield even to the persuasions of Little Paul. He retires for the night with not even a thought of the blessings of Christmas. On the next day he goes hunting for wild turkeys and Paul, dressed in his Indian suit, goes out too. Oliver mistakes him for game at a distance and shoots, mortally wounding him. After his death Fred and Clara drift apart. A divorce is mentioned but the husband and wife are brought together again by the memory of their child.

Then Uncle Oliver proceeds to awake from this pathetic dream to a happy Christmas. But the painful recitation of his sleeping mind has had the desired effect with the consequence that he joins in with the rejoicing of the season.

"Zollenstein"

(Falcon-General—Four Reels)

REVIEWED BY F. G. SPENCER

THIS picture is one of intense interest, particularly at the present time, when intrigue, lying and general roguery seem to be, in some quarters, the order of the day. The play is well staged, carries its theme delightfully clear and concise to the end, where it furnishes a climax really worth while. The exteriors and interiors are selected with an eye keen to appropriateness, and the tout ensemble reflects creditably upon Director Edward Jones.

"Zollenstein" is from W. B. Ferguson's story of the same name.

The whole cast is selected with great care, Daniel Gilfether, Monroe Salisbury and Jane Pepperell particularly acquitting themselves creditably.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

The Crown Prince of Zollenstein (Monroe Salisbury) is banished because by marrying Lady Maulfrey le Fay (Leah Gibbs), a maid of honor to the Princess whom he was expected to marry. The banished couple go to London, accompanied by their faithful maid, Betta (Jane Pepperell).

Boris (William Edler), an illegitimate brother of the King of Zollenstein, intrigues to secure the throne, but the King on his deathbed recalls the Prince from exile. Lady Maulfrey remains in London and dies giving birth to a son. Boris, hearing of this, sends a huge bribe to Betta to make way with the infant. Betta sends word that she has done so and the King is informed that his wife and son have both died. Betta, however, takes the child away and raises him as her own son, giving him the name of John Mortimer. Meantime the King is killed in a hunting accident and Boris again finds himself near the throne. The Grand Chancellor, however, bitterly hates Boris and when by chance an envoy sees Mortimer and is struck by his resemblance to the late King he conceives the idea of proclaiming that the infant son did not die and having Mortimer act as heir to the throne. This is done and the coronation procession has actually entered the cathedral when Boris announces that the people have been hoaxed. But Betta, who has secretly returned, comes forward with proofs that John Mortimer is really the rightful heir to the throne, and all ends happily with the marriage of the new King of Zollenstein to Princess Zenia, daughter of the Princess who had loved his father so long ago.

"The Seven Pearls"

(Pathe—Fifteenth Episode)

REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

ALL villains are disposed of, all pearls regained, and the lovers duly married in this, the final episode of the serial entitled "The Seventh Pearl." The action keeps up the high pace maintained in the previous fourteen numbers, the various situations being melodramatic in the extreme and calculated to stir the emotions of the serial lover to quite a degree.

After Ilma has deposited six of the pearls in a safe deposit vault, Perry secures them and, the seventh, already in his possession, attempts to make away. The scene shifts to Coney Island where Perry evades his pursuers by posing as a wax figure in an amusement place. Kismet, however, apprehends him and demands the pearls. A fight ensues and both of the participants are killed. Ilma then secures the pearls and hands them over to the Sultan's messenger.

"The Tenth Case"

(World Film—Five Reels)

REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

ONE of the leaders on "The Tenth Case" gives out the information that the story was written by "Budd." This gentleman has devised an unusual situation for his climax, unusual, and, it must be confessed, somewhat extreme. To reach it he starts off in a very conventional way, builds rapidly, but at times artificially, and with more attention to the sensational than to details of picture construction. He has introduced a number of characters that are typical to the last letter. There is the loving wife and the husband whose suspicions overcome his better judgment. The friend in need and the man of the world and the vampire. All of them do quite familiar things and act according to Mr. M. P. Hoyle.

But we are told that conventionalities do small hurt to a picture. If this is the truth then "The Tenth Case" will be entertaining in no small degree. Its striking climax, which is a complete surprise, is certain to create comment whether of commendation or criticism, depending on the grade of intelligence of the audience. George Kelson, a new director in the Brady force, has given it a production sufficient to meet all demands. The auto accident, which mortally injures the villain and causes his dying confession, is well staged, and the less spectacular scenes are handled in kind.

June Elvidge, featured alone, puts spirit and warmth into her role. George MacQuarrie, Gladden James and Eric Mayne furnish strong support.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Claudia (June Elvidge) marries Landis (George MacQuarrie) to preserve the financial position of her father (Eric Mayne) more than for love. King (John Bowers) who loves her is despondent. In time Claudia grows to love and respect Landis. His nephew, Harry (Gladden James) infatuated with an adventuress (Laura Brandon), grows desperate when he refuses him more money. He believes Claudia responsible for his uncle's attitude when in reality he has caused it himself. Searching for a way to get rid of her, Harry secrets himself in her room one evening and when Landis enters steps from behind a screen with coat and collar hastily adjusted. No amount of explaining on the part of the harassed wife will convince Landis that she is innocent. He starts action for a divorce and is awarded it by Judge Wallace (Charles Dungan) who insists that in nine cases out of ten a woman caught in such a position would be guilty. When the judge arrives at his home that night he discovers King, who has come to Claudia's rescue, in his wife's room. He is about to denounce her when Claudia enters and explains the trick. He is convinced then that Claudia's case is the tenth and reversing his own decision awards her the child for part time. Then with the dying confession of Harry, Landis comes begging for forgiveness.

Two Christie Comedies

(One Reel Each)

REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

AL CHRISTIE'S latest contribution to the independent exchanges are entitled "Help, Help, Police!" and "Their Seaside Tangle," and each is fully worthy to bear the name of a producer who has long since stood for the best in light comedy.

The first with "Smiling" Billy Mason and Ethel Lynne in the principal parts relates the story of a married couple who thought to take down their next door neighbor who boasted of his prowess at catching burglars. So both husband and wife hire a gentleman of doubtful character to enter the house on a certain night and act the part of a thief. Naturally when the two men arrive there are humorous complications galore that have the effect not only of intimidating the next door neighbor, but of curing the husband and wife of practical joking.

"Their Seaside Tangle" concerns a honeymooning couple. The husband is jealous and pretends to have taken poison to end it all. The wife discovers his deceit and goes through with her part eventually curing her foolish better half. Jay Belasco, Betty Compson and "Smiling" Billy Mason are the leads in this. It is of the type that should register well in any locality.

"Jerry Takes Gas"

(Cub-Mutual—One Reel)

REVIEWED BY F. G. SPENCER

POOR Jerry, believing his sweetheart fickle, decides on self-destruction. His many plans for same proving futile, he takes a long draught of gasoline, and then hears that his fiancee is waiting for him. They meet at the doctor's, and Jerry, having been relieved of his superfluous cargo, is married then and there to the girl of his choice, who satisfactorily explains the cause of the cloud.

This comedy is perhaps a trifle better than the ordinary run of Jerry comedy, and is bound to raise a laugh anyhow.

"The Maternal Spark"

(Triangle—Five Reels)

REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

"THE MATERNAL SPARK," by R. Cecil Smith, is a conventional though enjoyable picture, the melodrama of which is relieved from time to time by some unusually clever touches of kid comedy. The central figure is the small town young fellow whose success in the city overwhelmes him. He neglects his wife and seeks the company of a woman of the world who reforms for love of him. The wife, however, preys upon the sympathies of this other woman and dwelling largely on her love for children succeeds in influencing her to relinquish her hold.

George Du Bois Proctor did the scenario for "The Maternal Spark" and has treated it exceedingly well. Aside from the fact that he has provided a smooth scenario, the subtitle, particularly those spoken by the second woman, are pronouncedly true to type. The early comedy provided for Joey Jacobs, an extremely clever kid, and the dog is sure fire.

Rowland Lee gives a thoroughly human portrayal as the young husband, while Irene Hunt and Josie Sedgwick respectively carry the roles of the wife and the other woman. Gilbert P. Hamilton gave the picture a realistic production from first to last.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Howard Helmes (Rowland Lee), having impressed a traction magnate (Edwin Jobson) with his ability, is offered the position of private secretary to him and with his wife (Irene Hunt) and son (Joey Jacobs) moves to the city to take up his new duties. Helmes is at first successful but his very success spoils him. He plunges in stocks and wins. Soon he meets Clarice Phillips (Josie Sedgwick), a woman who formerly lived by her wits, but who reforms for love of him. His wife discovers the identity of the other woman in his life and going to her proceeds to make her see the light by preying upon her love for children. The traction magnate discovers that he has spoiled Helmes and breaks him through the market, afterwards discharging him, that he may realize the evil of his ways. He returns to his wife, a different man, and together they go back to their home town, where safe from the evil influences of the city they start life anew.

Frank Newburgh and Frank MacQuarrie appear in smaller parts.

"Until They Get Me"

(Triangle—Five Reels)

REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

"UNTIL THEY GET ME," a Triangle picture, in which Pauline Stark takes a great big leap toward stardom, was shown at the Rialto last week. It was evidently chosen because of its excellent treatment. For while its story is highly interesting it builds to no denouement of real power. Indeed it is the directorial touches supplied by Frank Borzage and the startling work of Miss Stark that makes "Until They Get Me" the fine example of pictorial eloquence that it is.

Its comedy furnished by Miss Stark and Walter Perry, as the Irish sergeant, is unexcelled, the love touches in which the little lead again figures prominently are charming to a degree, while the snatches of pathos introduced here and there are of the purest ray. Miss Stark will doubtless be heard from in the future. She is the Mae Marsh type of actress and performs with not the slightest touch of affectation or mimicry.

Mr. Borzage did his superlative work from a scenario supplied by Kenneth B. Clark.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Kirby (Jack Curtis) kills a man in self defense. Returning home he discovers that his wife has died in childbirth. Leaving the baby in charge of friendly old Indians he escapes from Selwyn (Joe King), a member of the Northwest Mounted Police. Every year he returns to visit his child.

Margy (Pauline Stark), running away from a ranch where she is the equal of two hired men, encounters him fleeing from the American sheriff. She aids him across the border and hides him just as Selwyn encounters her. Because she knows his story she lies and says she is unaware of his whereabouts. Selwyn takes her back to the post, where Margy finds a home. After a few years she is the idol of the camp, admired and loved by all, including the commander (Wilbur Higby) and his wife (Anna Dodge), but chiefly by Selwyn. He, however, refuses to marry her until he has captured Kirby. And finally he succeeds, but influenced by Margy and learning his captive's story, does everything in his power to make his penalty easy.

"Bucking Broadway"

(Universal—Five Reels)

REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE.

"BUCKING BROADWAY" is a satisfying picture. It has good comedy and good melodrama. Yet a formula may be used in describing it. To wit: one western girl, one western boy, one eastern villain with powers of persuasion, disappearance of western girl and eastern villain, final rescue of girl by western hero. Around this framework of conventional characters and like situations George Hively has written a lively scenario that is both entertaining and humorous, but never at all suspenseful for reasons that are most obvious.

The early western scenes presenting the love making of Harry and Helen are quietly amusing. The appearance of the villainous city man forecasts the following events which are handled in quick style. There is more of the comedy of the wild and woolly westerner arriving in the effete east and then there is a lively fight between Harry and the cowboys on one side and the city man and his dress suited aides on the other. Director Jack Ford has burlesqued this fracas to an extreme degree, which after all, was probably the only thing to do considering the story.

Doraldina, the Dancer; Antonio Moreno, Warner Oland and Helene Chadwick Are the Star Players in Pathe's Extraordinary Special Feature, "The Naulahka"

Harry Carey is his usual picturesque self as Cheyenne Harry, a role with which he is now synonymous at least, if not identical. Molly Malone is a sweet little heroine and Vester Pegg typically villainous with curling moustache and fancy clothes.

An afternoon audience at the Broadway theatre where "Bucking Broadway" was first shown in New York were apparently thoroughly amused by the comedy in it, but not overly excited by its well worn plot, the outcome of which looms as bright and clear in the first reel as the midday sun.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Cheyenne Harry (Harry Carey), cowboy on the ranch belonging to Ben Clayton (L. M. Wells), proposes to Helen (Molly Malone), his daughter, and is accepted. The advent of Thornton (Vester Pegg), a buyer of cattle, interrupts the love affair, for Helen is immediately fascinated by him. She consents to leave for the city with him on the very day that her engagement to Harry is to be announced to the boys. Harry, however, follows after and with the aid of a kind hearted crook of the feminine gender, succeeds in locating the now disillusioned Helen. The rest of the cowboys, headed by Buck (William Gettinger), having brought a shipment of cattle to town come to Harry's assistance and after a long and hard fought free-for-all on a roof garden, put Thornton and his friends to rout.

"The Skylight Room"

(O. Henry-Broadway—Four Reels)

REVIEWED BY F. G. SPENCER

TO Jean Paige is intrusted the part of delineating the character of Elsie Leeson, the occupant of the skylight room and reason for O. Henry's story. She does so delightfully, although it must be admitted that the picturization of the story seems to lose sight of some of the author's pungent punch, but the picture as directed by Martin Justice is a worthy production, and carries a full quota of pathos. William Lampe, who as Billy Jackson has not much scope for his abilities, and it is only in the last act where he is called upon. But as the ambulance doctor called to visit Elsie, and, on recognizing her, he puts enough dramatic intensity in about three minutes' work to fully make amends for his absence from the former acts. The balance of the cast all do good work, particularly Mr. Skidder (Carlton King).

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Elsie Leeson comes to Mrs. Parker's (Grace Ashley) rooming house and takes its cheapest corner, the skylight room. She finds copying to do and occasionally in the evening sits on the front steps with the other roomers. The women of the house are jealous, the men adoring. One night she points to a steady blue star above them and tells them she has named it Billy Jackson and that it shines down through her skylight.

And then work ceases and Elsie starves—bravely, cheerfully. One night she drags herself to her skylight room and, throwing a goodbye kiss to Billy Jackson, lies down with a smile. They find her the next morning and an ambulance is sent for. Mrs. Parker tells the young ambulance doctor that she cannot understand what is the matter with Miss Leeson—but he flies upstairs, gathers her in his arms and rushes down, paying his respects to Mrs. Parker on the way in a manner that leaves her feeling crumpled in body and mind. He tells the driver to drive like h——.

Next day the newspaper says, "She was taken to Bellevue Hospital suffering from debility induced by starvation. Mr. William Jackson, the ambulance physician, says the patient will recover."

"An International Sneak"

(Mack Sennett-Paramount—Two Reels)

REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

A HIGHLY ludicrous burlesque on the spy melodrama current in the present day, is "An International Sneak," Mack Sennett's latest contribution to the Paramount comedy program. Chester Conklin is featured as Walrus, the agent of "His Imperial Majesty," and his mission is to blow up a munition works. Naturally he bungles the job because a girl detective proves very much smarter than he is.

Every scene of the picture is treated with an extremely clever sense of burlesque, even to the manner of deriving suspense while the clock slowly ticks away the minutes to the fatal hour of the explosion. Conklin's ability in this line has never been doubted, and in these two reels gives a thoroughly humorous performance. Ethel Teare is a charming detective, while Billy Armstrong is the terribly mistreated hero.

Fred Fishback and Hampton Del Ruth directed.

"The Lost Express"

(Signal-Mutual—Two Reels)

REVIEWED BY F. G. SPENCER

THE twelfth episode of this stirring serial, "Daring Death," fully merits its title, for after the gun fight between a sheriff's posse and the syndicate gang, Helen and Murphy, the detective, still pursue their quarry with as much avidity as they in turn are being pursued. In the meantime Papa Thurston's private car is sidetracked for repairs and he telephones this information to his mine manager, but it also reaches Baron & Co., and they decide to take strenuous steps to prevent the old gentleman's arrival. This they do by sneaking up on the sidetracked car, and, after crippling the brakes, start the car hurtling down a steep grade. This episode closes with a most realistic picture of the private car, all in flames, headed for—where?

Helen, as usual, covers herself with glory all through the chapter, one of her main stunts being the rescue of Murphy from the railroad tracks, just in the nick of time, to permit the limited to pass. This she does by dropping from the cables supporting a suspension bridge, from which Murphy had been dislodged by a bullet.

The series is maintaining its interest and thrills remarkably well, and this chapter will prove as acceptable as any which have preceded it.

"The Dream Doll"

(Essanay-Perfection—Five Reels)

REVIEWED BY LISLE M. ALBRIGHT

A PAIR of living dolls play the principal roles of this five reel Perfection feature, and they do so well that they make some of the flesh and blood actors and actresses of the screen seem very woodeny and stiff indeed. Judy Juniper and Larry Little, two fourteen inch dolls, about whom the action centers throughout most of the story, can do everything but talk, and that can't be done on the screen anyhow, except through the medium of the sub-title writer.

"The Dream Doll" is a capital story for children especially, for "that their dollies might come to life" is the wish of nearly every little tot during nursery days. Though appealing to children in particular, there is a good enough story in the play, and the acting of the marionettes is clever enough to hold the interest of grown-ups as well.

Probably very few people who watch these two little dolls traveling through the world of make believe in search of happiness will realize the time and laborious effort that had to be spent filming them. Howard S. Moss, the Essanay director responsible for the production, spent five months in making this novelty picture. But the result was worth the effort, for five reels of exceptionally fine entertainment for the kiddies has been provided. Although the dolls monopolize the screen most of the time, a few Essanay players figure in the picture to bring out the differences between the doll world and the real one. The story deals with the workings of a marvelous elixir of life which is discovered by an old toy-maker. He applies a drop of it to a doll and it immediately comes to life and the dream is under way.

"The Lost Express"

(Signal-Mutual—Two Reels)
REVIEWED BY F. G. SPENCER

THE last episode of this serial closed with Thurston, his daughter Helen and two companions on a runaway car and the party is in desperate straits. This episode, "The Escape," shows a truly wonderful escape, for with the car aflame and plunging headlong, quick wit and ready nerve are necessary. Helen, who evidently knows every yard of the road, suggests that they leap from their traveling inferno into the bay as they cross the bridge. This the quartet do and they are rescued by a motor boat. This is not the only thrill in this chapter, which chapter also includes a peculiar turn, in that Pitts evolves a scheme for reinstating himself in Thurston's favor, by unearthing a twin brother who "confesses" having wounded Gaston Pitts and relying on his likeness to his brother, takes the latter's place as Thurston's secretary and consequently being responsible for all the devilish concoctions of the syndicate.

This phase of the picture is not convincing; there are several breaches to be covered before the average fan will be able to figure the matter out.

But then Helen is there with her daring, and she too, apparently believes the flimsy story and now openly declares her love for Gaston Pitts.

There are but two more chapters to this interesting serial and the outcome of the syndicate's wily p'otting and fiendish scheming will be watched with interest.

"Fanatics"

(Triangle—Five Reels)
REVIEWED BY JOSEPH L. KELLEY

"FANATICS" is a Triangle production of the vampire variety. The story was written by John Lynch and scenarioized by Joseph A. Roach. Raymond Wells directed. No one of the cast is a star as that term is usually accepted. Olga Grey, Adda Gleason and J. Barney Sherry have the principal roles. Miss Gleason although not a recognized star, does some very clever work and is an actress of the first degree because of her work in this picture. She convinces in every scene and typifies the part which she is called upon to interpret.

The Triangle production should be given a hearty reception in the theatres which cater to the patrons who demand the picture with the vampire type. Through it all runs this vein of screen entertainment, referred to as vampirish. Miss Grey is the vampire and convinces throughout the run in this role. The theme is not new, but it has been developed with new and original twists. It is the old case of the wealthy business man being attracted to the vampire. The author does not permit of a complete capture by the vampire, and in this he has done well.

"Fanatics" has been given a good production by Director Wells. The photography was done by Pliny Horn. The director selected good types, but in some instances rather amateur actors. Donald Fullen lacks poise and overacts in the scenes calling for emotion. William V. Mong in a character role has a wild idea of the manner in which an anarchistic leader should conduct his meetings. He overdoes the part. Eugene Burr does a "bit" well. W. A. Jeffries convinces in the role of a mill foreman.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Robert Lanthrop (Donald Fullen) is infatuated with Lola Monroe (Olga Grey). He is hard pressed for cash. His wife, Mary (Adda Gleason), does not know of his perfidy. He goes to Nicholas Eyre (J. Barney Sherry), a wealthy steel manufacturer, for money. He loans him $1,000. Latrop goes to Lola's apartment, and finds her in the arms of her lover. In a fight that follows Lathrop is killed.

Lathrop's wife, thinking that it is Eyre's fault, joins a band of anarchists and incites violence. She organizes a strike among the workmen at Eyre's mill. She secures work in the office to accomplish this end.

Lola meets Eyre, and uses all her charms to win his affections. He sees her, but is not impressed.

The men strike, but Eyre, having been informed by a faithful workman, arrives in time to avert violence. The leader of the anarchists, Groesbeck (William V. Mong) meets death. Mary Lathrop finds the canceled check which Eyre had given her husband, and learns the real facts. She goes to him and is forgiven. Eyre claims her as his wife.

"Those Who Pay"

(U. S. Exhibitors' Booking Corp.—Seven Reels)
REVIEWED BY JOSEPH L. KELLEY

BESSIE BARRISCALE has been given few such opportunities to appeal to her audiences through the medium of the screen drama as she is given by C. Gardiner Sullivan in his strong, appealing version of "Those Who Pay," produced by Thomas H. Ince, under the direction of Raymond B. West. Throughout its seven reels dramatic action comes to the centre of the screen and holds with the tensity of stranded cable. There is that appealing note sounded in every flash, in every scene, in every reel that not alone calls for but demands the undivided attention of an audience. The author at first touches the pathetic note and then running the scale of dramatic interest has reached the height of appealing emotion with a compelling harmony that is never once interrupted by a discordant note. He has lain a firm, convincing foundation, and Director Raymond West, through the medium of the dramatic talents of Miss Barriscale and Howard Hickman, has brought his ideas into being and the result is a model of gripping, compelling scenes, tense moments and ideal entertainment for any and all theatres where the drama is projected in pantomime.

The theme of the story is founded on the delicate subject of domestic relations, but not once does the risque rise to the surface and present itself in immodest raiment. It is clothed with the delicate shadings of the beauty that emanates from innocence—the innocence of youth in love and unconsciously sacrificing all for that love that is given from the depths of the heart.

Miss Barriscale has grasped the intent of the author with the result that she gives a performance par excellence. First, the confiding girl who sees the world through the eyes of poverty, she is swept from this world by the love of one who betrays her. Then the mistress, happy in her rich surroundings until she learns that she is only a toy. Then the one who sees the artificiality of the world in which she lives and then—not vengeance, but a passive silence, willing to sacrifice her new world if the woman entitled to the love of the man who has betrayed her is given justice.

"Those Who Pay" is an example of properly constructed screen drama. It is enacted by artists. There is not a moment during the run of the seven reels that can be referred to as dull. The action moves swiftly, unbroken by unnecessary det Every scene is a link in a chain that holds together an inter interesting drama. The sub-titles are entitled to especial tion. The one who wrote them is due praise. They add little to the convincing element of the play.

Howard Hickman, in the chief male role, opposite M riscale, gives a performance that is his best. He con every scene. Dorcas Mathews, in the role of the w promise of playing the featured role in future produc bourne McDowell in a character part, does good photography, the work of Charles Stumar, is of

"The Honeymoon"

(Select Pictures—Five Reels)

REVIEWED BY JOSEPH L. KELLEY

CONSTANCE TALMADGE has been given a light comedy-drama in which to present the featured role of "The Honeymoon." The story was written and scenarioized by E. Lloyd Sheldon and produced by Select Pictures under the direction of Charles Giblyn. The author has relied a bit too much on the notoriety of Niagara Falls, to support his plot which is commonplace and without strength. Upon the most trivial incident he has based the reason upon which depends the action of the main theme and once started there is little in the light of real drama to hold the threads together. There is nothing that can be referred to as real, substantial plot material that binds these incidents together. Any one of them could be left out and the story would run along in our minds without apparent loss of a link.

It is good comedy but light drama. Miss Talmadge holds the center of the screen from the first flash to the final fade out

She is given every opportunity to look pretty and this she does, leaving no room for doubt.

Director Charles Giblyn is strong on atmosphere. Most of the action of the story takes place at Niagara Falls, and here Mr. Giblyn has taken his company.

Earle Foxe, opposite Miss Talmadge in the leading male role, does good work. Maude Turner Gordon, Russell Bassett, Harriss Gordon, Lillian Cook, Julia Burns and Sam Coit—all have minor roles.

"The Honeymoon" should be received with a welcome at both the big and small houses for the reason that Miss Talmadge is featured. She has a good following and in this pictures her admirers will see her prominently casted. The photography, done by Hal Young, is up to the present-day standard. The subtitles are appropriate and contain some good, clean humor.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Susan Lane (Constance Talmadge) becomes jealous of her young husband within a few minutes after the marriage. Richard Greer (Earle Foxe) is approached by Susan's Brother Phil (Harris Gordon), shortly after the marriage ceremony and pleads with Richard to intercede for him in order that he may be freed from the promise he has made to marry Maisie (Julia Burns), an actress. Marion Starr (Lillian Cook), one of the bridesmaids, bids Richard good-bye, and Susan thinking that she has shown a bit too much interest in her husband, is jealous.

The couple leave for Niagara Falls on their honeymoon. There Richard sees Maisie advertised as the principal attraction at one of the theatres. He remembers his promise to Phil, and that night he begs to be excused, telling Susan that he has an important business engagement. He sees Maisie in her dressing-room.

The hotel maid, while attending Susan, sees a picture of Richard. She is also maid to Maisie. She tells Susan that she saw Richard in Maisie's dressing-room. Susan learns the reason for her husband's absence. She goes to the theatre, is admitted by the maid, and sees Richard leaving Maisie's dressing-room. Susan immediately arranges for a divorce. She writes her father and he telegraphs her that he has engaged counsel and the divorce will be granted. She takes another room in the hotel and refuses to admit her husband. After a series of incidents, Susan learns from her father that she has been granted a divorce. Her father and mother arrive at Niagara Falls and they tell her that it was only a joke perpetrated to teach her a lesson. By this time Susan has forgiven her husband, having learned that his mission to see Maisie was to help Phil. She and Richard are united.

The Chicago Exhibitor struck the keynote when he said:

"I buy the Motiograph for they give service that serves"

ALL projectors give service, but that is not saying what kind of service. What you want is a projector that will work in your projecting room for many months with no continued annoyance to you and your operator. Your competition is keen and you must give your audience perfect projection. You will find this in the MOTIOGRAPH. Read what the Chicago Exhibitor says:

Gentlemen:—

Replying to your request of recent date as to how the Motiograph machines are working, I am pleased to say that we have received the service that serves from your projector during the last eighteen months.

I have watched my audience constantly and believe they are entirely satisfied with the projection. Personally, I believe that it cannot be improved upon, and this is one reason why I replaced the projecting machines which I used in my New Hub Theatre for about nine months with your late model MOTIOGRAPH. Since then I can see a marked improvement in the projection at that theatre.

I want to thank you for the Motiograph Service that you have given us since we have used your machines.

Yours truly,

Exhibitors

What are YOU doing now?
What have YOU done in the past?

To Support a National Fraternity of Motion Picture Exhibitors?

For about eight years,

Exhibitors of this country
As a very general thing Have Not given their whole-hearted support
To any National Organization of Exhibitors

National Organizations lived from funds raised by a few officials,

By giving Balls, Expositions, Trade Shows, Trade Papers and on propositions where mostly the film interests gave freely to these affairs.

Now mostly
You GET what you PAY FOR,

As you individually did mostly nothing,
Therefore you individually receive mostly nothing,
And furthermore, what could you expect under the circumstances?

Yes - -

All Motion Picture Organizations should work for the best interests of the entire Industry. Agreed

But - -

Sometimes — yes, ofttimes — questions arise whereby there must be decided

What shall be rendered to the Exhibitor?

What shall be rendered to the Film Producer?

At such a time

A National body of Exhibitors
Must be free from entangling alliances.

If a National Body officially Owns a Trade Paper

That lives by the advertising of Film Producers

Can that Body protect the interest of the Exhibitor, first, last and always or—

Give the Exhibitor the benefit of the doubt?
A Fraternity that lives entirely by the aid of its membership can protect. To have such a Fraternity use this coupon:

A few weeks ago the American Exhibitors' Association was organized.

This new Body of Exhibitors
Have no entangling alliances
No one man controls our destiny
No Official receives a cent of salary
We allow only Motion Picture Theatre Owners or Accredited Managers to become members.

Every Exhibitor is welcome and requested to join.

Every Local Body is invited to affiliate.

The moment you join you at once become a power for your own good.
This Organization will do big things for you and the Industry
When the majority of Exhibitors are enrolled in our membership.

The reason of past failure

Was because so few took any interest in National affairs.
An organized few are doing much for themselves
While an unorganized majority struggle blindly.
A large Organization of Exhibitors will do the right thing
Because it is large.

Now is the time to join the AMERICAN EXHIBITORS' ASSOCIATION. WE ARE ARRANGING TO KEEP A REPRESENTATIVE IN WASHINGTON ON THE TAX QUESTION. That is why you should HURRY.

We want you to join now because we want to know what you want,

So as to give you just what you want.

Exchanges—and the National Anti-Misframe League

WE are sending out a letter to the head of every exchange system in the country asking for a statement of their activities in improving the physical condition of films which is so necessary in keeping up theatre patronage. This letter is printed below so that every branch exchange in the country may know what we are asking of their head office and what the head office may in turn expect from them.

This is the letter:

"Exchange Manager,

"DEAR SIR.—When the National Anti-Misframe League was started by MOTION PICTURE NEWS it was done with only one idea—the improvement of the picture on the screen. There was no thought or intention of 'passing the buck' to the operator and getting him to do any of the work which was entirely up to the various exchanges, but merely to have him co-operate with the exchanges.

"To-day we find that this work has been appreciated by some local exchange managers and with the co-operation of members of the League in various territories film conditions have been improved. In other sections they are still bad, even though the League operators are doing their best to improve them.

"This is a bad time to do anything which does not tend to improve theatre patronage, otherwise exchange receipts will show a sudden shrinkage which spells financial loss. If pictures are not clean, if they do not contain full footage, and do not tell the story as it should be told—they will not 'get over,' and are not deserving of successful bookings.

"Today you have a League of operators—one out of every twenty in the country—who realize conditions and know that their jobs depend largely on the physical condition of every reel of film they show. This is a body of men which cannot be overlooked and who demand that their cooperation be reciprocated in every possible way.

"I would call your attention to the pledge which every member of the League has signed:

NATIONAL ANTI-MISFRAME LEAGUE

PLEDGE

"'As a motion picture operator who has the interest of his profession at heart and is willing to assist in eliminating some of the evils practised in the operating-room, I promise that I will to the best of my ability return films to the exchange in first-class condition. Furthermore I will, when it becomes necessary, remedy all misframes, bad patches, etc., that may be in the film which I receive and in this way cooperate with my brother operators and give greater pleasure to those who make up the motion picture audience by showing films that are free from such defects. I also promise that I will not make punch marks in film, and when film is received by me with punch holes, I will notify the exchange to that effect, so that they may use their efforts to correct this evil.'

"This is only done as a cooperative method of helping the industry increase its gross business and not to lift in any way the responsibility from your branch exchanges.

"You, as the Manager of the Exchange System, are in touch with the work of the National Anti-Misframe League, but you may not realize that our membership now numbers approximately six hundred (600) active and hard-working operators, all striving for better physical condition of the films they receive. They want to co-operate with you and your branches even more than they are doing now. Will you outline for the benefit of these men just what you are doing to promote these improved conditions?

"Your statement will be published in MOTION PICTURE NEWS and will be read by all League members. It is an opportunity for you to go on record with a worth-while statement which will mean much to the industry and the operators.

"Very truly yours,

"_____ _____"

EVERY active operator in the country will sooner or later join our ranks and become active in the promotion of the National Anti-Misframe League. It is the only method that is active in bringing about one of the necessities of our industry—better film for the audience—film which will tell the whole story—film which will increase patronage.

This is something which is a part of theatre management or under-management, for the operator cannot only help make a theatre's reputation but he can actually break the house and put it out of business.

He should have a large part in the decision as to which exchange shall supply the film, as we believe our League members are doing today. He should report poor film conditions to the manager and he should do anything in his power to cancel film service from an exchange which is not sending out film in condition suitable for exhibitors.

E. K. GILLETT.

EQUIPMENT OPERATING PROJECTION QUESTIONS ANSWERED

Light Intensities for Motion Picture Projection

[Editor's Note—The following paper was read by Mr. J. T. Caldwell at the New York meeting of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers, held in October. Through the courtesy of the Society we are able to publish the paper before its appearance in the printed transactions of the New York meeting.]

I HAVE been invited to address you on the subject, "Light Intensities for Motion Picture Projection," a subject which is of very real importance but concerning which there is a scarcity of data. The best I can do, therefore, is to discuss the factors affecting light intensities and draw from this discussion tentative conclusions for your consideration.

First of all, it is of interest to note that the eye sees a picture on the screen not by the light which strikes the screen, but by the light which the screen reflects to the eye. If we imagine a perfectly black screen—one which reflects no light at all—we see at once that no matter how strong the beam we project on the screen we will obtain no picture at all. Screens used in practice vary in reflection factor, that is, in their power to reflect light, through very wide limits; hence it is obviously necessary to consider the reflection factor of different screens when discussing screen intensities. Nor is it correct to assume that the screen which reflects the highest percentage of the light striking it is necessarily the best screen to use, for the manner in which the reflected light is distributed is also a factor which affects the brightness of the picture. For example, it is possible to conceive of a screen which reflects a very large proportion of the light striking it, yet which, due to the fact that it distributes the reflected light far out to the sides, is actually less satisfactory than one which reflects a lower percentage of the light striking it but which confines its reflected light within useful angles.

From the standpoint of their reflection characteristics, screens in common use may be divided into two classes:

(1) Diffuse reflecting screen;
(2) Spread reflecting screens.

Of the first class, white cloth screens and plaster screens are typical. A white cloth screen when clean can be made to reflect as high as 70-75 per cent. of the light which strikes it, and a plaster screen 80-88 per cent. The light is reflected at wide angles, as shown by the diagram Fig. 1. Such screens are well adapted to theatres in which the position of the seats with respect to the screen is such that the picture must be viewed at relatively large angles, for no matter from what angle the screen is viewed, the brightness is the same because of the way in which the light is reflected.

Aluminumized screens and ground-mirror screens are examples of the spread reflecting class. A clean aluminumized screen can be designed to reflect about 60-65 per cent of the light striking it, and will confine the reflected light within an angle of approximately 30 degrees. Ground-mirror screens when clean can be made to reflect approximately 80-90 per cent. of the light and confine the light within about 30 degrees. Such screens are well adapted to theatres in which the seats are so arranged that the picture does not have to be viewed at large angles.

Fig. 1 shows the relative brightness of matte, metallic-surface, and ground-mirror screens when viewed at various angles.

Allow me to emphasize the point that the reflection factors I have mentioned assume a clean reflecting surface; a very slight accumulation of dust can reduce the screen brightness very materially. I believe that with a schedule of regular and frequent cleaning theatre managements can in many cases increase their screen brightness by fully 50 per cent. of their present average values if they desire to do so.

Thus, it is sure that the intensity of the beam projected determines only relatively the brightness of the picture.

Uniformity of screen illumination is another factor which must be considered in connection with screen intensities. It is not uncommon to find screens upon which the intensity near the center is several times the intensity near the edges of the picture, or where the intensity on one-half of the screen is much higher than upon the other half. When this condition of non-uniformity obtains, certain portions of the picture are, of course, brighter than others, and while the eye cannot readily detect small differences in brightness, the fact remains that to say a screen is illuminated to a certain average intensity is not definite when a wide difference exists between minimum, average and maximum intensity values. Good projection requires a screen intensity approaching uniformity, and the nearer the intensities at different points come to being equal, the better will be the projection from this standpoint. The uniformity of intensity at different points on the screen is affected by the condenser design, steadiness of the light, and by refinement in focusing adjustment.

Fig. 2 shows the distribution of light on the screen with a typical direct-current arc lamp projector. Fig. 3 shows the higher degree of uniformity obtainable from some Mazda lamp equipped machines.

Another factor which we must consider is extraneous light. Obviously a higher screen intensity is required in a theatre in which daylight is allowed to enter, or where lights are kept burning at all times, than in one where all the light comes only from the projection apparatus. The effect of extraneous light is to decrease the contrast between the high lights and low lights on the screen. If, for example, the intensity of the beam in a low light of the film is, say, 1/50 of a foot-candle at the screen, and in the high lights the intensity is, say, 2 foot-candles, the contrast is 1-100. If upon the screen image is now superimposed an intensity of 1/10 of a foot-candle, due to extraneous light, the contrast becomes approximately 1 to 17. From this it is apparent that even a very low intensity of extraneous light calls for considerable increase in screen intensity if good contrast is to be secured. In this connection I may say that the organization with which I am connected has under way at present an investigation of motion picture theatre lighting and will be glad to co-operate with this society in determining what constitutes good theatre lighting, and in making definite recommendations for those interested in this subject. There is, I believe, little question that some system of general illumination is desirable.

Before leaving the subject of contrast, I wish to mention that film producers are endeavoring to a greater and greater extent to provide the proper degree of contrast in their films. More and more care is given to lighting their scenes in such a way that with a projecting beam of normal intensity the proper gradations of light and shade will appear on the screen.

The use of tinted and toned film is becoming more extensive. This tinting and toning serves two purposes: it lends color to the scene and it reduces the intensity. Usually, the producer has both of these effects in mind. He uses a blue tone, let us say, to portray a moonlight scene. The color gives the observer an impression of moonlight; the producer intends in all probability that the low intensity shall help in furthering this impression. If, then, the operator, seeing that the picture is not perfectly clear, sends a rush of extra current through his carbons he kills to an extent the impression that the producer hoped to convey. I have talked with producers who considered this natural tendency of the operator to be a matter worthy of no little consideration.

Data which I have obtained on the transmission of samples of tinted film may be of interest.

Film.	Percentage Absorption of Light by Various Tints of Films.
Blank	9%
Yellow	21%
Light Amber	22%
Heavy Amber	33%
Light Blue	33%
Dark Blue	40%
Green	53%
Purple	62%
Orange	67%
Red	79%

The illumination on the screen with the shutter stationary and no film in the machine has been taken as 100 per cent. The values for the tinted samples are given in percentage of light absorption due to the different tints. The values given in the table represent tests on a single sample of each tint, and while these samples are believed to be typical, others might of course show somewhat higher or lower values.

In view of the foregoing general discussion you will not be surprised when I say that suitable intensities for motion picture projection range probably from as low as 2.5 foot-candles to as high as 30*, depending upon local conditions. I do not think that 2.5 foot-candles is sufficient for the projection of a dense film on a dusty muslin screen; neither do I think that an intensity as high as 30 foot-candles is desirable for a light film projected on a highly selective or spread reflecting screen. I know of cases where theatre managements have been forced, through the complaints of their patrons, to reduce the intensities they were employing from a value near the upper limit of the range I have given to a considerably lower one. If muslin or plaster screens are used, and these are faithfully kept clean, I believe an intensity of 5 foot-candles should be ample for the proper projection of all except very dense films. If an aluminumized or ground-mirror screen is employed a value of 2½ foot-candles should be ample. A great many theatres are projecting pictures with less than 3 foot-candles, using a plain screen, while the largest and best known theatres are obtaining less than 10 foot-candles on a plain screen. The distinction between dense films and tinted and toned films is of interest. In the former, the density is due to variation in exposure and development, and is not as a rule obtained with a definite purpose; in the latter, the purpose is to lend color to the picture and to control its brightness. I believe that an intensity of 5 foot-candles on any good, clean screen will be sufficient for the projection of any film sent out by a competent producer, and I also believe that no discomfort will be experienced from intensities in the neighborhood of 10 foot-candles. In giving these values I presuppose the intensity due to the general illumination of the theatre to be of a very low order and assume the measurements to be made with the shutter open and no film in the machine. As I have previously mentioned, the effect of extraneous light in decreasing the brilliancy of a picture is very marked.

(Mr. Caldwell by means of demonstration apparatus showed various photographs and prints illuminated at intensities of 1, 2 and 25 foot-candles. The demonstration showed that 1 foot-candle was too low an intensity for good vision, that 25 foot-candles was so high as to be glaring and that color distinction and details were largely lost, and that at 5 foot-candles the subjects appeared to the best advantage.)

You may be interested in a device which has recently been developed which makes it possible to measure screen intensity and screen brightness very quickly and with accuracy. This device, shown in Figs. 4a and 4b, is known as a "Foot-candle Meter." I shall be glad to discuss this instrument in detail with those who are interested.

In this meeting we are interested in projection apparatus only in so far as the component parts of the two systems, arc lamp and Mazda lamp, affect screen intensities. I shall discuss these two systems very briefly from this standpoint.

* Gage, S. H. & H. P. "Optic Projection." 1914.

 Optic Projection, J. A. Orange. Trans. I. E. S., Nov., 1916.

Fig. 5 shows the arc lamp system as it is now and as it has been for a number of years. The light intensity at the screen with any system is of course dependent upon the light given off by the source, and with both arc lamp and Mazda lamp systems the light which the source gives off is dependent, but not in equal ratio, upon the current which flows. The condensers in all arc lamp systems must be located at a considerable distance from the source, chiefly because of the intense heat of the arc, and manufacturing considerations limit the sizes of condensers to the point where, as you will note, the angle or zone subtended by the condenser with respect to the arc is small. With direct-current arcs this is not so great a handicap as with alternating-current arcs, for the direct-current arc throws the greater portion of the light it generates forward. The objectives used with arc lamp equipment are made small in diameter with respect to their focal length in order that irregularities in the arc will not be annoyingly apparent on the screen. There is a possibility of increasing the screen intensity with arc lamp apparatus by increasing the aperture of the objective lens, but under present conditions such an increase would be likely to be obtained at a sacrifice of steadiness in the illumination of the picture. There seems to be a possibility of increasing the intensity produced by direct-current machines by more careful design of the shutter and possibly by rotating the shutter at higher speeds. It is doubtful if the shutters of alternating-current machines can be much improved, because the cooling of the carbons is so rapid that a stroboscopic effect is likely to be encountered. This effect is, of course, very marked where 25-cycle current must be used. You will note that with the Mazda lamp system, Fig. 6, a mirror can be used to redirect into useful directions the light which the lamp gives off in directions away from the condenser. The use of this mirror increases the illumination on the screen by approximately 75 per cent. The lamp is so designed that relatively little light is thrown off to the sides, that is, a relatively large part of the light either strikes the condenser directly or indirectly by reflection from the mirror. The fact that the light source is confined within a bulb eliminates danger of cracking the condenser; hence a short-focus condenser which subtends a large angle can be utilized. Through the design of a special prismatic condenser the necessity for a thick and heavy lens with accompanying aberration is obviated. The fact that the light source is absolutely steady and without noticeable flicker, even on 25-cycle current, permits the use of a wide aperture objective lens with an accompanying good utilization of light. Shutters can be designed to operate very effectively with Mazda equipment because of the fact that the filament, being heavy, does not get a chance to cool between current reversals. When arc machines are being adapted to the Mazda lamp, it is of advantage to bear the point in mind that the shutter can usually be improved. It is due solely to the better utilization of light that the Mazda lamp—a source of lower brilliancy and far less energy consumption than the arc—can be used to project satisfactory motion pictures.

Fig. 4a

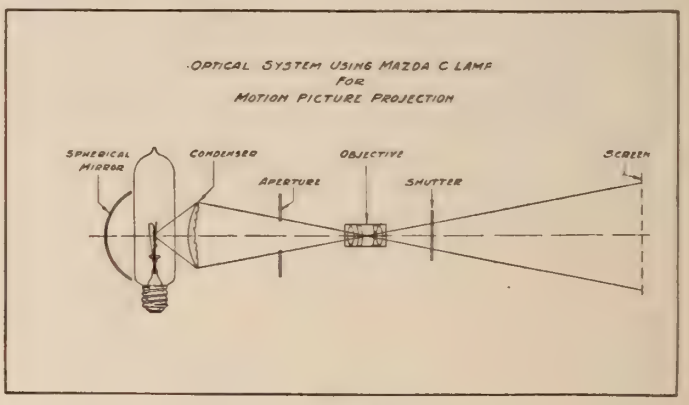

Fig. 6

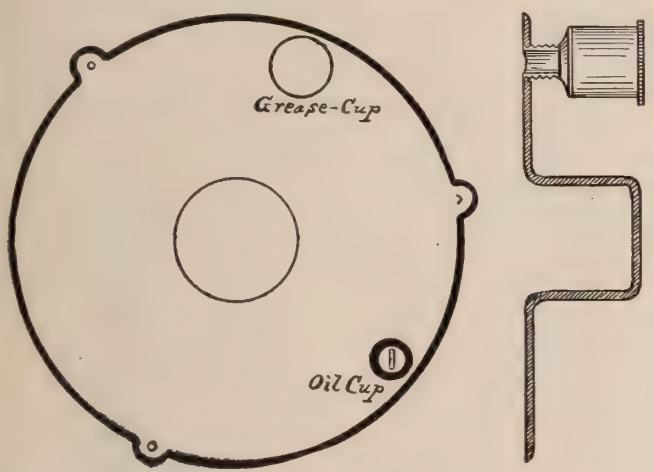
For many years the arc lamp has been practically the only light source used in motion-picture projection work, and higher and higher amperages have been employed as the size of theatres has increased and as competition between theatres has become keener. It appears that a reaction from the very high values may be logically expected, for a brilliant picture loses its attractiveness when discomfort and eye strain from glare is experienced. A bright screen viewed against a dark background produces an effect similar to that produced by a bright street light viewed against its background. In the first case the effect is less marked and may not be attributed to contrast in brightness, and for this reason is probably more serious than if the trouble were recognized at once and corrected. Flicker and arc travel are also more pronounced at high intensities than at low ones, and we may, therefore, I believe, expect to see the higher intensities gradually abandoned in favor of intensities of the lower order.



Grease-Cup for Powers Intermittent

A. B. WERHAN, Wadsworth, Ohio, writes: "I have two Powers machines, one a 6 and the other a 6A. If the intermittents of these machines are properly packed, and are operated at the proper speed they will project a very steady picture. I have purchased two new covers for the intermittent casing, and put on grease-cups above the place where the usual oil cup is located.

"I have used this for the last two weeks and everything is working fine. It takes me about two minutes to pack the intermittent casings of my machines. I use vaseline, and in the old way you have to remove some gears before you are able to get at the casing.

"The enclosed sketch shows the arrangement, but anyone attaching a grease-cup to the Powers intermittent casing must be careful to grind off the end of the cup which projects through to the inside of the intermittent casing cover (after the cup is screwed into position—Ed.) There must be no end projecting inside the casing or there will be trouble.

"If by any chance, the intermittent casing is packed too full, the operator should open up the oil cup and let the vaseline work itself out. Use the cup to force the vaseline into the casing, but don't keep the cup full when running or the vaseline gets warm; it melts and will run out of the grease-cup if the cup is too full.

"The grease-cup not only saves the operator of a Powers machine the trouble of removing gears in order to pack the intermittent with grease, but also insures a steady picture

Mazda Lamp Projection to Be Demonstrated At Important Meeting of Illuminating Engineering Society

THE large amount of research and experimental work which has been expended upon motion picture projection with Mazda lamps will be comprehensively reviewed at the forthcoming meeting of the New York Section of the Illuminating Engineering Society.

This meeting will be held at the Edison studio, 2826 Decatur avenue, Bedford Park, New York City, at 8 o'clock Thursday evening, December 13. The Edison studio may be reached from Grand Central Station by the New York Central Railroad to the Botanical Gardens Station, or it may be reached by subway to 149th street, transferring to the elevated to the end of the line.

The subject of the main paper of the evening is "Motion Picture Projection with Tungsten Filament Lamps," the paper being jointly prepared by the National and Edison Lamp Works of the General Electric Company, the Westinghouse Lamp Works, and the Research Laboratory of the General Electric Company.

Points of comparison with arc systems now in use (with special attention to A. C. circuits) will be presented, and films will be projected with the incandescent lamp equipments at the conclusion of the paper.

The meeting is to be held at the Edison studio by invitation of Mr. L. N. McChesney, manager of the studio, who has promised a practical demonstration of the taking of motion pictures.

The illuminating Engineering Society extends an invitation to all readers of MOTION PICTURE NEWS who are interested in the subject to attend the meeting.

AS a motion picture operator who has the interest of his profession at heart and is willing to assist in eliminating some of the evils practised in the operating-room, I promise that I will to the best of my ability return films to the exchange in first-class condition. Furthermore, I will when it becomes necessary remedy all misframes, bad patches, etc., that may be in the film which I receive and in this way co-operate with my brother operators and give greater pleasure to those who make up the motion picture audience by showing films that are free from such defects. I also promise that I will not make punch marks in film, and when film is received by me, with punch holes, I will notify the exchange to that effect so that they may use their efforts to correct this evil.

Kalamazoo Local Joins N. A. M. F. L. in Body

AS the membership in the National Anti-Misframe League is steadily increasing, and the objects of the League are now widely known, it is becoming the fashion for the various operator's Locals to give their support to its progressive policies by joining the N. A. M. F. L. We have the pleasure this week of enrolling the complete personnel of Local 188, Kalamazoo, Michigan, and a few remarks from the letter of Mr. G. A. Knowles, Secretary of Local 188, will serve to demonstrate the progressive ideals of the Kalamazoo operators.

Mr. Knowles says:

"I have been requested to write you regarding membership in the League. The following list includes every motion picture machine operator in the city, all are union men and more than pleased with the object of the League. Furthermore, I can assure you that all are eager to become members."

AS the reflection and absorption losses to which a pencil light is subject in traversing a lens have been demonstrated by mathematical computation, we have next to follow the light rays to their points of incidence upon the flat surface of the focusing-screen, or the photographic plate, and in this connection it must be immediately apparent that all rays do not fall upon the surface of the plate at normal incidence. The inclination of the oblique pencils, which form the marginal portions of the image, increases with increasing distance away from the axis, with the result that the illumination steadily decreases toward the edges of the image, and this decrease in intensity in the case of light rays which do not fall upon the plate at normal incidence also follows a well known photometric law. This is the Lambert cosine law, which states that the radiation (or brightness) per unit area of a surface is proportional to the cosine of the angle of emission (measured from the normal to the surface considered). When Lambert advanced this law ("Photometria"—Augsburg, 1760), he had in mind a glowing (or radiating) sphere, and in the case of glowing bodies it is of course apparent that the light is emitted in the strictest sense, but it will be apparent that the cosine law is likewise applicable to the measurement of the brightness of an illuminated surface. We have therefore to see how the cosine law applies to the intensity at various parts of a wide-angled image, such as is produced by a camera objective upon a photographic plate, and it must also be remembered that as marginal image points are at greater distances from the center of the diaphragm than points at the center of the image, the inverse square law also enters into the calculations. We now return to Dr. Zschokke's article in which the application of these photometric laws to the intensity of wide-angled images is comprehensively explained.

Quoting Dr. Zschokke:

"The natural reduction of the intensity of a lens towards the edges of the photographic plate plays quite a different part from the increasing loss by reflection in the case of oblique pencils of rays. By natural reduction of the intensity[1] is here meant the departure from the intensity possessed by the ideal lens, and the law of this departure is comprehensively shown by Figs. 3 to 6. In Fig. 3, A—A represents the aperture of an ideal lens. The axially parallel incident rays combine at the focus where the intensity of illumination is represented by I. Now, in order to investigate the law of variation in intensity (at different parts of the image) we first assume that the surface of the image produced by this lens is exactly spherical, and that the radius of curvature of this spherical image surface is equal to the focal length of the lens. We see, therefore, that the point of intersection of the oblique pencil of rays is to that of the axial pencil as cos a:I, where a is the angle of inclination of the oblique pencil. The intensity at any point of the curved image surface (Fig. 3) is therefore expressed by

$$I_1 = I \cos a$$

"In practice, however, a good lens yields an image surface which is flat instead of being curved like the image surface shown in Fig. 3. Image points away from the axis are therefore at a distance from the center of the diaphragm represented numerically by

$$t = \frac{f}{\cos a}$$

"Now, it is well known that the illumination, or brightness, varies inversely as the square of the distance, and the ratio of the intensity of a point in the image at some distance from the center, in the case of a flat image surface (Fig. 4), is to the intensity of a similarly located point on the curved image surface (Fig. 3) as

$$I_2 : I_1 = f^2 : \frac{f^2}{\cos^2 a}$$

from which we have the relations

$$I_2 = I \text{ and } a = I \cos^3 a$$

"We have, up to the present, assumed that the axis of the pencil of rays was at right angles to the surface of the plate (perpen- dicular incidence) which, in reality, is only the case at the center of the image. In the case of all pencils of rays which reach the image-plane, the angle of incidence is equal to the angle of inclination (Fig. 5), but the luminosity of a surface depends upon the angle at which it receives the rays, and is proportional to the cosine of this angle. The intensity I_a of a point in the image away from the axis, is, therefore, expressed by

$$I_a = I_2 \cos a \text{ or } I \cos^4 a$$

"This is the law of the natural decrease in illumination from center to edge of the image produced by a photographic objective, and this decrease in illumination (according to the fourth power of the cosine of the angle of inclination of an oblique ray with respect to the axial or central portion of the image) is graphically illustrated by the diagram Fig. 6. In Fig. 6 the angles of inclination of the oblique rays are laid out along the abscissa axis at intervals of five degrees, starting from the axis or center of the image, while the ordinates of the intensity curve represent the brightness of the image points formed by pencils corresponding to the various degrees of obliquity. It will be apparent, after a study of this intensity curve, that the effect of the natural falling off of the illumination is alone responsible for the reduction in brightness of a point (in the image) 35 degrees from the axis to barely half of the intensity at the focus."

The Duplex Polishing Machine

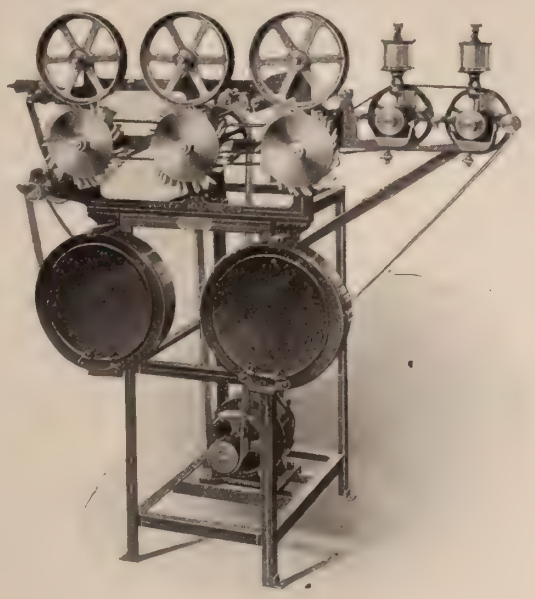
WE have recently had the opportunity of examining the latest and most improved model of the Duplex polishing machine, at the well equipped shops of the Duplex Machine Company, 316 75th street, Brooklyn, N. Y., and the following description will doubtless prove interesting to Camera Department readers.

The Duplex polishing machine may be used both for polishing newly made cinematograph positives, or for cleaning old or used prints, and negatives may also be polished on this polisher without fear of scratching them. In this latter connection it is also stated by the makers that the emulsion side of negatives may be polished on the Duplex polishing machine with entire safety, which indicates that the scope of usefulness of the apparatus is very extensive.

As the illustration shows, the Duplex polishing machine is mounted on a neat stand of enamelled angle iron, and is entirely self-contained, the driving motor being mounted at the lower part of the stand. The motor is of ½ h.p. and is supplied for either A. C. or D. C. of any required voltage.

The reel of film to be cleaned or polished is placed in the supply magazine, which is similar to the magazine of a motion picture projector, and after passing through the polishing devices is received and wound up in a take-up magazine of similar style.

The take-up magazine is equipped with a tension device of the friction-disc type, which insures even rewinding and freedom from strain, while, as an extra refinement, the spindle of the supply magazine is also provided with a tension device, which causes the film to be paid out at just the proper speed.



Upon issuing from the supply magazine the film passes over the moistening rollers, which are made of felt, and serve to moisten the back of the film with the cleaning fluid. These moistening rollers, or distributing felts, as they are termed, are in turn moistened by the cleaning fluid which falls upon them, drop by drop, from the feed-cups, conveniently located above the distributors. The feed-cups are of the sight-feed type, allowing the flow of the polishing fluid to be observed at all times, and are, of course, provided with means for adjusting the rapidity with which the distributing rollers are moistened with the polishing fluid. In addition, each feed cup is provided with a spring tension which maintains the rate of flow exactly as adjusted by the polishing machine operator, which will be found in practice a convenient feature.

After being moistened on the back by the distributing rollers the film passes to the buffing wheels in the manner shown by the illustration. The film is supported, while being polished by the buffers, against three large idler wheels shown at the top of the cut, which are covered around their peripheries by fine velvet, so as not to scratch or injure the emulsion side of the film being polished.

As the illustration clearly shows, the polishing wheels, or buffers, are of the type containing a series of flaps made of felt, and when the Duplex polisher is put into operation these buffing wheels revolve at great speed, and the degree of pressure under which they come into contact with the film is sufficient to thoroughly polish any film by the time it has passed the third buffing wheel.

It will be noted that the film is carried through the Duplex polisher by two sprockets, one being located between the first and second buffing wheels and the other just above the take-up magazine. It will also be readily apparent that if the film-feeding mechanisms of a polishing machine do not work in exact concordance, the film might either run slack at places or else become too taut, in which latter event the film strip would be strained to the breaking point. To eliminate any such mishandling of film the feed sprockets of the Duplex polisher are connected by a shaft and driven in unison by a positive worm drive.

As further evidence of the careful designing of the Duplex polishing machine attention should be called to the small idler rollers which hold the film to the feed sprockets, and guide it at other places during its passage through the apparatus. These rollers are carefully relieved at the center, so as not to touch the surface of the film, and are instantly removable for cleaning by raising up a spring clip, similar to those used in modern projecting machines to secure the reel in the take-up magazine.

Accessibility and interchangeability seem to be features of this new Duplex polisher, as the fluid distributing rollers, the buffing rollers and the large idler wheels at the top of the machine may all be removed very quickly by unscrewing the knurled nuts (having left-hand threads) by which they are secured to their respective spindles. This permits the rapid renewal of the buffing and distributing wheels, when they become worn or soiled, and the Duplex Machine Company are prepared to supply new felts for these moistening or polishing wheels at less cost than the same can be made up by users of their machine. It has further to be emphasized that all of the felts supplied by the Duplex Machine Company will be found to fit the respective rollers accurately, and may therefore be put in place without loss of time. It is not generally found necessary in practice to renew all of the polishing, or buffing, wheels at the same time. The buffer nearest the moistening rollers becomes soiled most quickly, and the most advisable procedure is to remove this and move the second buffing wheel up to replace it. The third buffer is moved up to take the place of the second one, and a new and clean buffing wheel placed on the spindle nearest the take-up magazine. In this way first-class results are achieved economically.

Before terminating this description of the Duplex polishing machine it should be mentioned that all important revolving parts throughout the apparatus are equipped with S. K. F. self-aligning ball-bearings, which insure accurate operation and long life, as any student of mechanisms knows.

MUSIC AND THE PICTURE

Musical Review of Latest Compositions

1—"Told at Twilight," by Huerter. A composition most appropriate for pathetic situations. (Published by the Boston Music Co.)

2—"When a Boy Says Good-Bye to His Mother," by Jack Frost. (Published by Frank K. Root & Co.)

3—"Way Down in Macon, Georgia," by Paul Biese. A composition of exceptional standard quality in 2/4 time. (Published by the Frank K. Root Music Co.)

4—"Just as Your Mother Was," by Harry von Tilzer. The very latest of this gifted writer's musical gems. A really delightful melody which shows Harry von Tilzer at his very best. (Published by Harry von Tilzer.)

5—"You're Breaking My Heart with Good-Bye," by Abe Olman. A pathetic composition which every musician should add to his library. (Published by the Vandersloot Music Co.)

6—"In a Garden of Shadows and Tears," by A. Manlowe. A very attractive melody of pathetic character. (Vandersloot Publishing Co., Williamsport, Pa.)

7—"Hail, Hail the Gang's Here," by Theodore Morse. Every musician knows the famous old song hit, "We Won't Come Home Till Morning." "Hail, Hail," is better. (Leo Feist Edition.)

8—"We're After You," by Lloyd. One of those typical up-to-date march songs, appropriate for cartoons of political character. (Jeff Branen, Ed., 145 W. 45th street, New York City.)

9—"I Wonder How the Old Folks Are at Home," by F. W. Vandersloot. One of the most popular compositions by this famous composer. (Vandersloot Music Co.)

10—New York's big, smashing Spanish musical success, "Land of Joy," has been published by G. Schirmer and is now obtainable at special reduced prices.

11—"Defend America" (march), by A. Hadley. A stirring march, mostly appropriate for news weeklies. (Oliver Ditson Edition.)

12—"Jack o' Lantern" (musical comedy), by Ivan Caryll. Several popular song extracts have been published lately by Chappell & Co., N. Y. C.

13—"Blue Rose Waltz," composed by the writer of "Missouri Waltz," a wonderful and dreamy waltz, which can be considered a very valuable addition to any musician's library. (Forster Music Pub. Co., Chicago.)

14—"Dramatic Recitative," by Sol. P. Levy. The Cinema Music Co., who is publishing this number, offers it at a special price of 30c for orchestra, and will refund the money if not satisfactory. (Cinema Music Co., Columbia Theatre Bldg., New York City.)

15—"Strike Up the Band, Here Comes a Sailor," by Chas. B. Ward. An inspiring and well-sounding melody; most appropriate for news weeklies. (Published by Harry von Tilzer, New York City.)

Gilbert and Friedland Get a Running Start

L. WOLFE GILBERT and Anatol Friedland's new ballad, "Are You From Heaven," promises to make them just as successful as publishers as they have been as song writers. "Are You From Heaven" is well liked by scores of the big time artists, and is now being featured by May Naudain, Belle Baker, Charles King, Dorothy Jardon, Courtney Sisters, and others too numerous to mention here. Friedland certainly knows the knack of writing plaintive melodies for the pleading lyrics of his versatile partner. "Are You From Heaven" is a wonderful number for pictures, where soft music is appropriate.

Where Next

IT is nothing unusual to see Feist's songs getting publicity in newspapers and magazines, for with Feist this is part of the business, but one would not be likely to think of seeing trade papers of entirely different lines making a feature of his stuff; but from the way Feist does things you are just as likely to see some mention of "Over There" or one of his other numbers in The War Cry or the Painter's Journal as you are in a musical trade publication. Just how he gets the notices is a secret that he does not tell. A week ago, Tobacco, the leading tobacco paper of twelve in this country, gave up an entire page to a story of how "Over There" was sold, illustrating same with Mr. Feist's picture and a photograph of the $25,000 check breaking through the chorus of the song. There was some mention of the cigars smoked during the negotiations for the transfer of the song, giving the editor a peg on which to hang his story and pass out some live news to his readers.

Jos. W. Stern & Co. Issue New Juvenile Ballad

"SEND BACK DEAR DADDY TO ME," by Irving Maslof and Harry Tenny, looks like a successor to Sterm's former juvenile hits, "A Little Lost Child" and "In the House of Too Much Trouble." E. B. Marks says it is one of the best juvenile songs he has heard in years, and, although it has been out but ten days, it is in great demand by performers, big and small.

"Indianola," an instrumental number by S. R. Henry, is becoming more and more of a hit every day. Mr. Henry wrote "By Heck!" which enjoyed a long run of popularity, but he feels confident that his new number will outdo "By Heck!"

Considering the fact that the music business is now in the worst month of the year, Mr. Marks said that he has nothing about which to complain, for all of the firm's numbers are doing well, especially "Set Aside Your Tears," 'Oriental Nights," "Lily of the Valley," "Camouflage," and "When the Moon is Shining."

Harry Von Tilzer Finally Gets a War Hit

FOR some time Harry has been fishing for an idea that would hit the public in a patriotic way and has found a winner in "It's a Long Way to the U. S. A." For getting acts, Harry says it is as good as any novelty or comic song on the market, and the way the picture musicians are sending in for it indicates that it will not die out for a long time to come. Picture pianists find that "Just as Your Mother Was" makes another splendid number for quiet situations in photoplays. Business has been so good that Harry is not worried as to where he will get the money to hand out Christmas presents.

E. M. WICKS.

General Comments

JAMES W. CASEY, representing the Echo Music Company, has gone on the road to drum up some orders for the firm. And James usually gets them when he starts out.

Jerome Remick and Company have withdrawn from the Authors and Composers Society. Those on the inside are not surprised at the withdrawal.

Richard Gerard and Harry Armstrong, writers of "Sweet Adeline," have joined hands for the purpose of writing another "Adeline." Armstrong has been so busy with shows of late that he has not devoted much time to the writing end of the business.

Fred Reimers, the opera singer, thinks so well of "I Wonder How the Old Folks Are Tonight" that he has made a record of it for the Victor.

Fred Forster has just put out "Faugh-a-Ballagh," which means, clear the way. The title has been getting quite a little publicity in the newspapers of late.

THEATRES WORTH WHILE

Entrance and Auditorium View of Eckel Theatre, Syracuse, N. Y.

Eckel Theatre Begins Its Fifth Year at Rochester

ECKEL theatre, Rochester, N. Y., on November 27 celebrated the end of its fourth successful year. This house, owned by the Eckel Company, and under the management of B. F. Cornell, Eckel Theatre, Syracuse, N. Y.

The building, which is constructed of brick, granite and steel, occupies a plot, 185 by 66 feet, at No. 218 East Fayette street, in the business section of the city. The interior decorations in marble and stucco. The lobby is very attractive and forty feet long by twenty wide.

The house seats 1,690, the seats having been furnished by Haywood Brothers and Wakefield. Three Powers machines are used projecting the pictures 120 feet to a Mirror screen. Iridescent machines are also used in the operating room. Indirect lighting is used and the Powers regulation ventilating system.

Music is one of the specialties of this theatre, it being furnished by an excellent ten-piece orchestra and a William A. Otis organ.

The theatre gives seven shows each day and changes the bill three times weekly. The shows average eight reels. Five, ten and fifteen cents is charged during the afternoon, and ten, fifteen and twenty-five cents in the evening. Paramount and Artcraft pictures are used. The theatre is a heavy advertiser, using newspapers, postcards, circular letters and a house program.

Mission Theatre Reopens in San Francisco

ON November 15 the New Mission theatre, San Francisco, was rededicated by Mayor James Rolfe, Jr., himself a Mission resident, who delivered an address. The original theatre was opened in May, 1916, and it is a remarkable tribute to the management of the house that within such a short time it was found necessary to remodel and enlarge the house in order to care for the crowds.

Kahn and Greenfield are the owners and R. F. Abraham the manager. Originally seating 1,800, a thousand additional seats are provided in the new house. The theatre now represents a total investment of $300,000, and is unquestionably one of the finest suburban houses in the world.

The promenade is one of the distinctive improvements of the house and gives ample space for the large overflow crowds. It is finished in oak, and is decorated with artistic panels holding photographs of noted motion picture stars. Just off the promenade are the offices of the manager, rest rooms and a board of directors' room for the Kahn and Greenfield circuit.

Easy gradations lead to the balcony and loge sections, the latter located in the rear of the main auditorium. There are fifty of these loge sections, each containing six seats. The mezzanine floor, entirely devoted to rest rooms, is reached through the foyer.

Elaborately grilled the vaulted dome over the balcony with its intricate design is an architectural feature which adds beauty to the huge auditorium illuminated by the Cove system.

One of the novelties of the house is the operating room, so is one of the handsomest in the state.

placed that all may see the mechanics of projection. This is located in the center of the foyer, at the rear of the main floor and shut away from the patrons only by glass panels. The projection room is equipped wth three Simplex machines and all the latest accessories. It has a tile flooring and the walls are also of tile.

Another novelty to the house is a walled-in playground where the parents may leave their children during the performances.

The musical feature of the house is furnished by a large orchestral organ manufactured by the American Photo Player Company. The pipes are in harmony with the architectural design of the auditorium, and the volume of tonal qualities are in thorough sympathy with the acoustic qualities of the theatre.

Kahn and Greenfield also own the New Fillmore theatre, representing an investment of $250,000, and fills the same role in its section of the city as does the Mission.

The New Fillmore theatre has elaborate accommodations provided for the comfort and convenience of its patrons in the form of spacious lounges, rest rooms and drinking fountains. An automobile entrance on Eddy street is an innovation, and there is a turntable to expedite the return of the machine to the street.

Broad inclines in the new house provide easy access to the loge section and balcony, from any part of which a view of the screen is obtained.

Indirect lighting systems in the new picture playhouse cleverly reveals the delicate tinting of walls and ceiling without garish display or interference with the screen play. The French gray finish of orchestra chairs and interior woodwork harmonizes with the restful decorative scheme.

Health and comfort are assured by an extensive vacuum and ventilating system with which the theatre is equipped.

Messrs. Kahn & Greenfield realizing the necessity of appropriate music for the accompaniment of their pictures installed an immense orchestral pipe organ, manufactured by the American Photo Player Company. This organ, which is among the largest in the city, spreads its pipes to either side of the screen, enhancing the architectural beauty of the auditorium.

Musical programs will be a feature in the various showing of photoplays.

Ridgefield Park House Scores Success

WILLIAM O. MASCHKE is scoring a big success these days with his Strand theatre, Ridgefield Park, N. J. It is one so well managed that it is a favorite with the people of that section.

The building occupies a corner plot, 30 by 125 feet, and is of brick. It seats 600, and is heated by steam and ventilated by the Typhoon system. Two Powers machines are used for the projection, 48 feet, to a Radium Gold Fiber screen. Two economizers and a dimmer are also included in the projection room equipment.

Strand Theatre, Ridgefield Park, N. J.

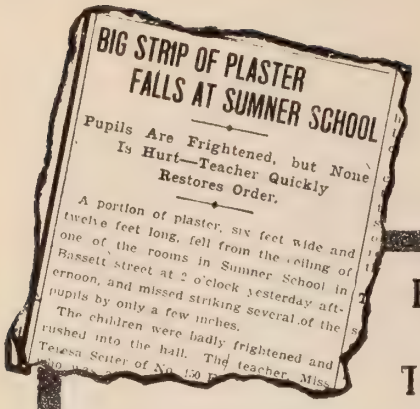
The interior of the house is finished in blue drab. Music is furnished by a piano. Program is changed six times a week, Artcraft, Paramount, Goldwyn, Bluebird, Triangle and special features being used. In addition there are news reels and short comedies. There are three shows a day, averaged seven or eight reels each. Five and ten cents is charged at the matinee and ten and fifteen in the evening, with the war tax additional.

Newspapers, programs, posters and window cards are used in the exploitation.

DIRECTORY OF NEW THEATRES

CALIFORNIA

L. B. Todd and M. E. Fletcher have consolidated their interests in the Gem and Electric theatres, Blythe, and are also erecting a new theatre building for motion picture purposes on Hobsonway. The new building will be 50 x 110 feet and will seat more than 500 people on an inclined floor. The plans have just been completed by Architect G. L. Kirby and Mr. Todd states that the contract for the construction will be let as soon as possible.



One of the most attractive motion picture theatres in Southern California is now being started in Pasadena by George W. Stimson of that city. The site is on the south side of East Colorado street, between El Molino and Hudson avenues, in a location conveniently accessible both to the main business section and the residence district. It is understood that the project will represent a total investment of approximately $75,000.

CONNECTICUT

Frank J. McCabe, 461 Eighth avenue, New York, has given plans to Lapides & Feuer, 478 Walter street, Bridgeport, for a $170,000 theatre at Bridgeport.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

The Rialto Theatre Company plan to erect a new house at 713 Ninth street, Washington, costing about $250,000.

IDAHO

Architect Shreeves, of Ogden, is preparing plans for the erection of a $40,000 motion picture theatre at Montpelier. Tunks Bros. and Chris Olsen are the promoters. The structure will be two stories high, of brick construction, costing $40,000. It will be 50 by 250 feet in dimensions. On the first floor there will be a storeroom, on the corner, 34 by 100 feet. On the east side of the storeroom there will be a 16-foot lobby leading back to the rear part, which will be used for theatre purposes. This will be a strictly modern playhouse in every respect, with a seating capacity of about 1,000.

ILLINOIS

A building, to cost around $750,000 and which will contain what is claimed will be the largest moving picture theatre in Chicago, with a seating capacity of 3,500, is to be erected at Sheridan road and Lawrence avenue by Barney and A. J. Balaban and Morris and Samuel Katz, who recently erected the Central Park avenue theatre at Central Park avenue and Twelfth street. The proposed building, which will be of fireproof construction, will be five stories high and in addition to the theatre will contain ten stores on the ground floor and a 100 room hotel on the upper floors. Architects C. W. and George L. Rapp are now working on the plans and it is expected, if weather conditions will permit, to break ground early in the coming year.

The theatre will be modeled after the Central Park Avenue theatre only it will be much larger. There wil be a main floor, a mezzanine box floor and a balcony and the general finish and furnishings will be of the best character.

KANSAS

Tackett Brothers are erecting a modern theatre at Coffeyville for vaudeville and motion pictures.

LOUISIANA

Frederick R. Heiderich, Jr., who for several years has been the active manager of the Lyceum theatre in St. Charles street, New Orleans, has been rushing the work on the remodeling of the Trocadero theatre at 721 Adams street, and this remodeling practically amounts to rebuilding. The result is worth the trouble and expense for the new theatre is to be one of the prettiest and most attractive of the suburban houses in the city. The theatre is one of the most practical ones imaginable, for Manager Heiderich has omitted nothing that will contribute to the pleasure and convenience of the patrons who without a doubt will vote this house their favorite theatre. A fine organ, invisible lighting, attractive decorations, and dozens of little conveniences will combine to make the new place of amusement popular.

MARYLAND

The Monumental theatre is to be remodeled by John Henry Nickel, 700 East Baltimore street, Baltimore.

A motion picture theatre will replace the trolley company's office in the Antietam Fire Company Building, on Summit avenue, at Hagerstown.

MINNESOTA

Grand avenue, St. Paul, may have two motion picture theatres. Earl H. Miller has asked for a license for a motion picture theatre at 917 Grand avenue, near Milton street. Recently the City Council granted a license to Heilbron and Weiskopf at 1051 Grand avenue, which is near Oxford street.

MISSOURI

Joplin may have a big new motion picture theatre if the Hughes-O'Rourke Construction Company, lessees of the Club theatre, can induce an investment concern of some sort in Joplin to erect the kind of house they want. According to Ray Stinnett, general manager of the Hughes-O'Rourke houses, the company will pay a year's rent in advance and put up any kind of bond desired for the rent for nine more years, at a figure that will get within reaching distance of $10,000 a year. A theatre that will seat at least 2,500 persons is needed, Stinnett says.

St. Louis soon will boast of a new hotel which, besides being an innovation in hostelry structures, will tend materially to improve and beautify one of the city's most depleted and rundown centres. The proposed hotel, which when completed, will represent an outlay of approximately $1,700,000, will be located on the city block bounded by Seventeenth, Eighteenth, Market and Walnut streets. The hotel building itself will be only three stories high, but will contain 400 rooms. These will be located on the second and third floors of the building, 200 rooms on each floor, and each will contain alternating shower and bath. The first floor of the building will be given over to various stores, a moving picture theatre, a mammoth convention and assembly hall and many other features. Richard H. Cole, of Los Angeles, Cal., who is in St. Louis consulting with Frederick N. Judson, trustee of the Nathan Cole Estate, is one of those interested in the proposed hotel structure. Cole also is consulting with the Frank Obear & Son Realty Company, who will have charge of the building. Cole, who is known throughout financial circles of the country, is the son of the late Nathan Cole, founder of the National Bank of Commerce in St. Louis.

MONTANA

The new Opera House at Marysville, a progressive and prosperous mining camp, was opened last week. J. Otis Mudd, B. Betor, F. A. Boeckman and Mrs. Matt Dorrity are behind the venture. The new Opera House is a substantial frame structure, 30 by 70 feet in dimensions, with a stage large enough for theatrical shows, as well as a moving picture booth. The building is well ventilated and lighted with electricity. Although the exterior from an architectural standpoint is unpretentious, the interior more than offsets this, being finished in elegant style. Plays, lectures and public entertainments of every description will be booked by the Opera House Company. Motion picture shows also will be put on in the near future, the number of times a week depending on the patronage.

Announced that J. W. Brandt has completed all arrangements for the construction of a modern theatre, store and apartment house on Main street, Baker. The theatre will have a seating capacity of 450. Contract for erection will be let shortly.

NEBRASKA

A. H. Blank is erecting a new theatre at Omaha, which will cost $400,000. The theatre will play vaudeville and pictures when completed.

NEW MEXICO

The new motion picture theatre at Hurley is now finished, and is one of the finest in the State. Under the management of James A. Shipley, who recently purchased the interest of L. T. Gooding, only the best pictures will be shown and in addition, first-class road attractions. The seating capacity is about 600. The stage is large enough to accommodate a large troupe, there are two large dressing rooms, scenery and other features too numerous to mention. The interior decorating is artistic and exceedingly beautiful. The theatre can be used also as an auditorium for public gatherings, as a dance hall and as a lodge room.

NEW YORK

A two story building will be erected soon at Clinton and Attorney streets, a few hundred feet north of the Williamsburg Bridge, New York City, for motion picture purposes, and an option has been taken on the property by the Blindermand & Cohen Amusement Company. They have leased the land for twenty-one years, with privilege of buying, from the Grossman estate, which has owned the property for more than fifty years.

Plans for building a $12,000 theatre at Camp Upton, New York, are now being drawn with the intention of opening a soldier playhouse at camp on Lincoln's Birthday, 1918. The theatre will probably be located at Fourth avenue and First street, Camp Upton, on a site 140 x 220 feet. The plans are being drafted by a number of men of the 305th infantry who in civil life were architects.

A two story motion picture theatre is being erected at Central avenue, Dunkirk. B. A. Aldrich is the contractor.

Charles E. Mott, 1,330 Prudential Building, Buffalo, is preparing plans to erect a $35,000 moving picture theatre.

Tony Pulvina, 87 East Third street, Dunkirk, is going to remodel his motion picture theatre to the extent of $3,000.

The Lyric theatre, Endicott, which is about completed, will be conducted under the management of Benjamin Dittrich.

Allen & Palmer are having a motion picture theatre erected at Gloversville.

A moving picture theatre will be erected on the site of Thames livery stable at Lansingburgh.

W. W. Mase will establish a motion picture theatre in the Masonic Building, Prattsville.

NEW JERSEY

A large moving picture interest from New York City has leased a plot of ground next door to the new restaurant on Main street, Creskill, and proposes putting up a motion picture theatre with seating accommodations for 1,500 people. It is scheduled to be completed within one month.

The Lyons Theatre Company, at Park Place, Morristown, have filed articles of incorporation.

Plans for the building of a large motion picture theatre at Wrightstown, near Camp Dix, have been completed. Some of the men behind this movement are Kays Morgan, J. H. Turner, attorneys, Asbury Park.

The United Cinema Theatres Company, Inc., a stock corporation, is erecting on the north side of the Banta Place, Hackensack, in the rear of the post office, a new theatre building for the purpose of exhibiting motion pictures exclusively. The building is 54 feet in front and 160 feet deep. It has two stores on each side of an arcade, and the auditorium will seat 700 people in the orchestra and 265 in the balcony. All chairs in the orchestra will be upholstered seats, and backs and the seats of all balcony chairs will be upholstered.

OHIO

The Grand theatre, Toledo, recently damaged by the fire and afterward sold by W. S. Persons to Farney & Kvidera, was opened recently under the special auspices of the local Red Cross Chapters which received the net proceeds from the first four shows.

OREGON

Hood River will have a new electric theatre here after February 15, with a seating capacity of 500 persons, according to an announcement made yesterday by Arthur Kolstad, local film play man. The new playhouse will be known as the New Liberty.

PENNSYLVANIA

A new theatre, at Creekside, has been opened recently by the owners and proprietors, Messrs. Capano & Valenti.

PHILADELPHIA

Plans have been drawn for a theatre on Idaho street, in Farrell, for George Gage, to cost $125,000.

A new $75,000 theatre is being erected by George J. Higgins at Shamokin, Pa., and will be opened in a few days.

TEXAS

Christopher Essing is erecting a new motion picture theatre at Gatesville.

UTAH

The new theatre recently erected by George Steed, at Fremonton, was opened last week to capacity business.

VIRGINIA

W. J. Rakely has leased the store building at 16 North Sycamore street, Petersburg, and will convert it into a motion picture theatre.

F. A. Bishop has the contract to erect a new $20,000 theatre, at Camp Lee, Petersburg.

A building at Bereley will be converted into a motion picture theatre by J. C. Johnson.

WASHINGTON

Dr. Johnson has purchased the Shearer lot, adjoining Rosenstein's store, Toppenish, says the Toppenish Tribune, and will start immediately the erection of a theatre building. This new house will be used exclusively for pictures and will be equipped with all of the latest picture machinery necessary to the production of feature films. The plans will be drawn by Architect Weatherwax of North Yakima and it is the doctor's plan to have the building begun almost immediately.

Among the larger of the structures now being planned for Camp Lewis, Tacoma, are four theatre buildings, to seat between 1,700 and 1,800 people. Architects Rigg and Vantyne are in charge of the work.

A permit for erection by Frederick Mercy, of a moving picture theatre, at North Yakima, to cost $10,000, has been issued by the city and removal of a residence from the ground upon which the theatre will be built had commenced.

Mr. Mercy now owns or leases both motion picture houses in the city, and is lessee of the Yakima, where road shows appear. He bought the lot on which he will now build last spring, resold it at an advance of $2,000, and purchased another property upon which he planned to erect a theatre to cost $75,000.

Abandoning the larger plan for the present at least he repurchased the single lot for $12,000, which was a further advance of $2,000 over what he had sold it for.

John S. Baker and H. T. Moore are erecting a motion picture theatre at the corner of Ninth and Market streets, Tacoma.

Economy

is Spending Money where it will bring most returns. If you skimp on your printed matter—if you save a few nickels on your weekly program you can rest assured that those who live in your neighborhood will skimp also, and will save a nickel by not going to your theatre. A Ten Dollar Bill that brings in Twenty Dollars is well spent. A single Dollar that doesn't bring in more than its face value is poorly invested.

A War Message to Exhibitors

Men:

With war pictures and war taxes and war prices upon you, you are probably ready to agree that your business is war.

Some carry this a point further and conclude that what Sherman said about war therefore applies to business. But we can't see that. In the place Sherman referred to there can't be any fun; and there's plenty of fun and fascination in the war of business—especially when you win.

To win, however, you've got to wage the right kind of a fight. If you go to sleep in the trenches, the other fellow will come over the top and wipe you out. See?

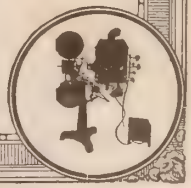
Don't let 'em. Use your head. Fighting nowadays is a science.

Have you the best guns? Watch your screen and see what the guns in your Projection Room are doing.

Are they making a hit? If not, don't blame the ammunition. The finest ammunition won't camouflage poor hitting. So get the right kind of gun.

We hardly need tell you what make to adopt. Simply watch those who have won gloriously in the fight and you'll see the Simplex nameplate on every one of their field pieces.

It's a gun that shoots straight to the mark; every shot goes home and counts in the battle for success. That, by the way, is the right kind of conservation.



Speaking of conservation reminds us that since you have become used to Mr. Hoover's meatless and wheatless days, maybe you won't object to the fact that " Every day is Troubleless Day " where the Simplex gun is used.

And say! You'll not consider it " trouble " when you use up a lot of tickets, will you?

To win (that's easy to be seen): Train Simplex Guns upon your Screen

DO you remember "Snow White," considered the most beautiful and gigantic Christmas spectacle of all time?

It was the greatest Christmas money-maker for exhibitors ever filmed.

Most elaborate production in which Marguerite Clark has ever appeared

Scenes occupying the entire Famous Players' New York studio, effects without parallel—photographed under the new Sunlight Co. special lights, assuring you of lighting effects that will startle your town.

Book it long enough to handle the crowds that word-of-mouth advertising will send to you. Take into consideration the Christmas holidays—the children are off from school and will flock to see this great picture.

Press, Exhibitors, and Public vote "Tom Sawyer" one of the best pictures ever released under the Paramount trade mark.

I WISH to place myself on record as stating that without exception this is one of the best productions that has ever been released, in my estimation, under the Paramount banner.

—Harold Edel, Managing Director, Strand Theatre.

Old, young, and middle-aged appeared to enjoy equally the adventures of Tom Sawyer, cleverly portrayed by Jack Pickford.

—New York Herald.

Yesterday at the Strand Theatre large crowds saw the first public exhibition of "Tom Sawyer" and found the story as engrossing as ever.

—New York World.

There was the fine art of Jack Pickford, the delightful manner in which it was presented and the sub-titles, which were a joy.

—New York Tribune.

EVERY audience that sees this picture, while it is new, is good for two more—run it long enough to take care of all of them.

REX BEACH PICTURES

"The Auction Block" A Huge Hit

ATTENDANCE records for the entire year 1917 have been broken throughout North America by Rex Beach's greatest story, "The Auction Block." This sensational success proves the Goldwyn statement that "good pictures cure bad times in the theatres." Read these reports of exhibitors and powerful daily newspapers:

NORTH

Boston Post: "The Auction Block is the biggest attraction of the year. Long lines waited in the cold for admission. Throngs turned away." Boston Traveler: "An endless line at the box office." Boston Herald: "It made hundreds wait on the street to gain admission." Boston Transcript: "Vividly remarkable."

EAST

Joseph Grossman, Standard Theatre, Cleveland: "Broke all records for the year." Cleveland Leader: "A tremendous picture that has packed the Standard." Cleveland Press: "One of the few pictures worthy of particular recommendation.' Edward A. Zorn, Temple Theatre, Toledo: "Drawing bigger crowds than any of Rex Beach's other great pictures."

WEST

Chicago Examiner: "The Auction Block is the 'honey' that will draw the people in swarms to box offices." Chicago Post: "It thrills one even more when seen a second time than it does the first time." Aaron J. Jones, Chicago: "It is a tr mendous hit." Chicago American: "The Auction Block has the heaviest booking ever recorded in the Chicago territory."

SOUTH

Atlanta American: "Tremendous in its appeal, The Auction Block instantly drew the crowds. It is what motion picture showmen call 'a clean-up picture.'"

There can be no "holiday slump" or depression if you play "The Auction Block" and other powerful Goldwyn productions.

Mae Marsh's Triumph in "The Cinderella Man"

RELEASED today throughout North America, Goldwyn's production starring Mae Marsh in "The Cinderella Man," by Edward Childs Carpenter, has the advance approval of the powerful trade journals and more than two-score important exhibitors who predict that it will make more money for theatre-owners than any Goldwyn production thus far released. The following reviews of the greatest Mae Marsh picture ever made will interest all exhibitors:

VARIETY

Jolo: "The Cinderella Man," Goldwyn's eighth release, marks a mile-stone in the advance of this company. Mae Marsh is as elusively charming as always. George Loane Tucker, the director, has far out-distanced any work he ever did in England. One of the smartest pictures of the year that ought to bring the money.

MORNING TELEGRAPH

Frances Agnew: "The Cinderella Man" is a credit to the delightful charm of Mae Marsh, the genius of George Loane Tucker and his technical staff, and the abilities of an all-star supporting cast. This picture will get the money.

M.P. NEWS

Peter Milne: If the name of Goldwyn had not been popular zed long before this, "The Cinderella Man" would turn the trick with ease. It is the most delightful film drama that the writer has had the good fortune to see.

M.P. WORLD

Louis Reeves Harrison: Goldwyn presents a sympathetic adaptation of Edward Childs Carpenter's story, "The Cinderella Man." . . . Mae Marsh again shows her half-compassionate, half-whimsical talent. This production makes a charming Christmas story and will prove an attractive addition to any program the year round.

DRAMATIC MIRROR

D. A. Balch: Exhibitors will find "The Cinderella Man" a safe booking proposition because of its "legitimate" source and the firm excellence of its production. . . . One wonders how it could possibly be better.

TRIANGLE

The Handwriting on the Wall

YOU have recently read statements about the many changes that are about to take place in the motion picture industry. Complaints are made of over-production, extravagance and waste, unreasonable salaries paid stars, duplication of exchanges, etc.

There is no doubt but that conditions in this business will change. Any business which has grown to the size of the motion picture business in such a short time is bound to have developed extravagances that need elimination. It is exactly such conditions as those existing at present which prompt men in the industry to stop and reflect. It is from such conditions that changes come and methods are adopted which establish a business on a more stable basis.

Triangle will not make any prophesies at present concerning the future of the motion picture business. We realize that there is and always will be a demand from the public for this type of entertainment. Our policy is simply that of developing better pictures and of so systematizing the business that high grade motion pictures can be sold to exhibitors at a price that will show them a profit.

We believe we have already done some things toward systematizing, economizing and eliminating waste in the distribution of motion pictures—but we also appreciate that there is much more to be done. We intend to keep working until a lot more is accomplished.

The Triangle Studios at Culver City are being operated under plans which have proven successful in the largest industries in the country. A maximum of return is procured from every dollar invested in equipment. System, efficiency

and economy are rigidly enforced in every department of the studios.

This increase in efficiency and elimination in waste means better pictures at smaller costs. The money thus saved means lower prices to exhibitors. Taking into consideration the unequalled quality of Triangle pictures, there are none on the market today selling at more reasonable prices.

We are advising exhibitors to book the Hart and Fairbanks reissues. Reports prove that these pictures are drawing even larger crowds than when first issued. This is due to the fact that no better pictures have been made. Remember these are the pictures that made Hart and Fairbanks so universally popular. The large number of bookings we have made, and the constant stream of testimonials to our exchanges, indicate that every exhibitor should book the Hart and Fairbanks reissues.

We repeat that we want to make a regular business of the distribution of moving pictures. We are using our time, money and best efforts in endeavoring to give exhibitors better service. We are trying to play the game perfectly fair and square. This is evidenced by the fact that we do not transfer to exhibitors the war tax levied by the government on film manufacturers.

So watch Triangle. Watch Triangle pictures and Triangle service. If we can be of service, write the Triangle exchange nearest you.

"What Shall We Do With the Motion Picture Business?" a booklet containing Mr. Hodkinson's famous "Open Letter" on present and future conditions and Mr. Stanley V. Mastbaum's telegram, and also a statement of Mr. Hodkinson's stand on current problems, will be sent free upon request. Drop a postcard to-day.

QUALITY INSURANCE

The announcement last week of my arrangements for using the shipping and other exchange facilities of the General Film Company on PARALTA PLAYS and other product which I shall distribute answers the immediate questions of the trade.

It also now allows me to express my real message to the industry.

This message is that I expect to tie together responsible elements within the business to promote and insure quality as the basic principle of our progress and our profit.

The means for tying these elements together I do not find in the industry at present.

Analyzing the whole situation, I have therefore picked upon the neglected spot in the industry as the means for uniting all responsible elements now existing, and as the critical point upon which to bring my new leverage to bear. I have obtained the rights to what has been called which is an improved medium for photographing and projecting motion pictures, a medium which is to the motion pictures of to-day what the modern disc phonograph is to the old wax cylinder, what the broad gauge railroad is to the narrow gauge line, what the motor truck is to the one-horse express wagon.

A four-page supplement describing the process in detail will be issued with the Motion Picture News of next week, January 4, 1918 (published December 26).

In this new process, and in its absolute control by my organization, you will see not only a bigger and better product on the screen, something which will lift motion pictures to a higher plane of public entertainment than it has ever reached or ever could reach in its present form, but you will also see in it a means by which the wheat of quality pictures can be sifted from the chaff of mediocre pictures. This leverage will let us go to the public with an assurance of QUALITY WHICH THE PUBLIC WILL RECOGNIZE. This is the all-important thing at this time.

A GUARANTEE AND CONTROL OF QUALITY,

The Motion Picture PLUS will therefore be the first true stabilizer of quality production, for upon the screen itself, every moment the picture is shown, the audience will recognize our process, and that process must and will be confined to the highest type of pictures made, with all the quality elements now recognized.

It is for this reason, more than any other, that I am tying my forces to the Motion Picture PLUS as THE ONE MEANS BY WHICH QUALITY CAN AGAIN BE STAMPED UPON A PRODUCT, for only by going to the public with the leverage of unmistakable quality can we turn this business back into substantial, sane, profitable business channels.

The Buoyant Spirit of Wholesome Youth

in Its Most Captivating Moods

as Interpreted by the World's Greatest Children's Advocate:

Judge WILLIS BROWN

A Wonderful Series of Crisply Visualized Two-Part Stories of the intensely Appealing Juvenile Heart Is Coming from this man:

Detroit Free Press

Judge Brown is an informal speaker, but an eloquent one, with an eloquence all his own. He is an actor one minute, a prosecuting attorney the next, a criminal lawyer and orator in turn—a master of hearts at all times. He is unique. No wonder he is popular with the boys, he is one himself, with the clairvoyant boyhood that follows mature wisdom humbly and observantly.

St. Louis Exponent

Judge Brown took the platform at the Odeon Theater literally as well as figuratively. A man of wonderful energy, no pent-up nook confined him. He moved about the whole time and held every listener fascinated and enthralled. He carried the great audience with him first to last, moving them at will to roars of laughter or to tears. The audience cheered to the echo or gave applause that in many cases only partially concealed tears.

Without fanfares, smashing of cymbals,

we booked "A Man's Man" into Clune's Auditorium, Los Angeles, Calif.
It crowded that theatre —
which seats over 3,000 — four times every day for a full week.
And it broke the Saturday night record.
That is the only booking
"A Man's Man" has had.
It was our acid test for merit,

WE ENCIRCLE THE GLOBE

To Motion Picture Buyers and Distributors

¶ New York is the world's principal film distributing market. The output of the leading American and foreign studios is screened, on release, for J Frank Brockliss, Inc.

¶ We are thus in a position to supply buyers at a distance with the best films on the open market.

¶ It is vital to your success in the motion picture distributing business, that you should be represented in New York by a house of the standing of J Frank Brockliss, Inc whose knowledge of conditions and requirements in foreign countries is based upon long experience.

To Motion Picture Manufacturers and Producers

J. FRANK BROCKLISS, INC., has the largest list of motion picture buyers in all parts of the world, of any house in the film distributing business. We market World's and Foreign Rights, outside the United States, of all suitable film productions on terms that will be found of mutual advantage. We give all propositions the most careful attention.

The list of films printed in the present number of this bulletin, show the variety and interest of the productions that we are handling in every foreign country.

"THE FROZEN WARNING"

IN SIX PARTS

DIRECTED BY

OSCAR EAGLE

Moving Picture World says:

One of the surprises in store for the screen public is the splendid manner in which the famous skater, Charlotte, has succeeded in her first attempt in the moving picture drama. The photography of the picture is clear and the locations and settings are unusually artistic and pleasing. But, after all is said and done, the drawing card of the production is contained in the scenes in the new Chicago Arena, where Charlotte, untouched by camera-shyness, performs the wonderful skating feats for which she is famed over two continents. To those who have or have not witnessed the skating of Charlotte these scenes alone are worth the price of admission.

It is only fair to say that there are numerous dramatic stars who have not made good on the screen as pleasingly as the little skater, Charlotte.

The picture is clean and wholesome in quality, spectacular and otherwise interesting, and should be one of the best box-office attractions on the market.

The Dramatic Mirror says:

Points of Interest: The Skating of the Star, the Beauty of the Exterior Scenes, and the Scene in Chicago's Huge Skating Rink

Irrespective of the merit of this production, as yet unnamed, which marks the first screen appearance of Charlotte, who is, unequivocally, the foremost female exponent of the art of skating, the valuable publicity that lies in her name is an asset that must at once be appreciated. At the time of her appearance at the New York Hippodrome and on tour, Charlotte's fame spread to all corners of the country, and, being still fresh in the minds of the public, should prove to be a certain drawing card.

The director has given the picture scenic investiture of the first order. The interiors are attractive and every one of the outdoor scenes has a beautiful background that appear to have been photographed on an extensive country estate.

The name of the star is a certain box-office attraction.

There Is Urgent Need For the Services I Offer

TO INDEPENDENT PRODUCERS my message is I will procure in the United States and Canada the maximum worth of your productions within a reasonable time. TO STATE RIGHT BUYERS my message is I will offer only those attractions that are of positive box office merit and at prices that will insure you at least a reasonable profit. TO BOTH INDEPENDENT PRODUCER AND STATE RIGHT BUYER my message is a sale and exploitation policy that will build a permanency of business relations and permit of your continuing because both will be doing business on a reasonable and profitable return and no inflation of values and no "bunk."

Mr. J. J. Goldburg,

New York City.

My dear Mr. Goldburg:-

I read your announcement in the trade papers which contained your generous acknowledgment that your new organization is patented after the ideas which I had in mind, when I proposed The Producers' Protective Association.

I want to say in answer to your announcement that I certainly believe you can, and will succeed. I am firmly convinced that the motion picture industry, or so much of it as is engaged in the manufacturing of independent productions requires a sales and exploitation agency as you have formed and I know of no man throughout my broad acquaintanceship who is better qualified or fit by reason of his knowledge, practical or technical of motion picture productions, sales and exploitation, to head such an institution, as you.

In your connection with my company I want to reduce to writing, what I have stated openly, that you have given me more than 100% of services. You may rest assured of my hearty cooperation, and I believe other independent producers will join with you.

Very truly yours,
THE FROHMAN AMUSEMENT CORPORATION.

WAR TAX!!

The undersigned committee of the Allied Exhibitors' Organizations of America elected by the Joint Conventions of all Exhibitors Organizations, held at Washington, D. C., December 11th and 12th, hereby request the fullest co-operation and assistance of every motion picture exhibitor in America.

We are charged with the duty of gathering the exact and absolute truth of how the war tax is effecting every motion picture theatre with a view of securing through united effort a readjustment of the war excise taxes on motion picture theatres and film for presentation to Congress.

Therefore, we respectfully request each and every exhibitor to fill out the following blank, giving the full facts and figures available, the experience of each theatre, and forward immediately by mail to:

FRANK REMBUSCH,
Secretary, Allied Exhibitors Legislative Committee,
Indianapolis, Indiana.

How does the business of your theatre for the month of November, 1916, compare with the month of November, 1917?

.....

Have you suffered a comparative loss? and to what do you attribute same?

.....

Did the war tax effect your business? and to what extent?

.....

General remarks:.....

Volume 16 No. 26 December 29, 1917

Speaking of Christmas

AN editor's inviolable privilege is that of prognostication. Equally precious to the manufacturer is the opportunity to make known his plans for the coming year. Both are the fruits of Holiday Numbers.

As we have given the following two pages to our own "glance forward on the picture industry," and the later pages tell us what the producers have in store, we feel that we may be pardoned for devoting this page to a subject that is also of more or less importance, namely—ourselves.

We plan a heart-to-heart chat. The sort of confidences that go with holly wreaths and evergreen branches. Come to think of it, why shouldn't a paper render an accounting to its readers in return for the money and confidence that it asks of them?

Last Year We Made a Resolution

WE said: "We shall get out this year more than ever before—a service paper. Service to the exhibitor—news service, booking service, advertising service, technical service, music service—in short box-office service, from cover to cover of the publication."

We humans usually like to forget our New Year's resolutions. They are ashes in which we prefer not to rake. They bring up memories of well-aimed intentions too soon side-tracked.

But here in the News office we feel just a wee bit of pride as we scan the editorial page resolution in our last year's Holiday Number.

Less White Space for the Press Agent

HEADING the list is the Exhibitors' Service Department. Twelve pages weekly, conducted by experts, devoted solely to the problems of the box-office. Twelve pages that have been praised with equal heartiness by managers of two hundred seat houses and two thousand seat palaces.

Then come three pages of Box-Office Reports. An ambitious effort, enlisting the aid of hundreds of exhibitors, calling for expert handling and careful tabulating—but achieving its object—box-office service.

There has come a broadening of the Music and Projection Departments to still further increase their usefulness. And this week starts the prize plum of all:

A "Question and Answer Department" conducted by S. L. Rothapfel!

Service Need Not Be Labeled Service

IN other ways we have tried to live up to our resolution. Editorially, we have preached "better retailing" constantly—perhaps, to the point of boredom—because we sensed the conditions which the war, the Mastbaum telegram and its attendant communications from other film men, have now brought to the light of day.

Some exhibitors told us that our "better retailing" talks were "boosting the manufacturer's game." They reasoned with as little logic as the few producers who every now and then tell us "You let the exhibitors run wild with the paper."

In the presentation of the news and feature articles we have also followed the Service precept—"Cover the field completely, cover it brightly, cover it in compact, readable fashion."

We have some further plans in this regard for 1918. Publishing wrinkles that will aid you more than ever to "find what you want when you want it." Elaborate plans that will give you more than ever—"a trade service, plus a trade newspaper, plus a trade magazine."

But Perhaps We Are Getting Boastful

WE promised not to, when we stole this page from its usual editorial function. But we have one more thought seeking expression—and it will give us a chance to finish this page eating humble pie.

A producer said to us the other day, "I know you are getting out the best paper, but do they appreciate it?"

This is a fact—and a producer's "they" always mean "exhibitors."

He made us sore at first—then we got to wondering.

We could cut our editorial expense one-half if we were satisfied to keep up with the procession—we ruminated.

But then we thought of the hundreds of exhibitor letters we receive each week. Of the occasional cheery words they contain. And we laughed. But, nevertheless,

Will You Wish Us a Merry Christmas?

THERE'S the thought we have been leading to. Certainly—it's daring. Surely—it's presumptuous.

But Times Square has a lot of fellows like the producer we have just mentioned. Men with warped estimates of the exhibitor intelligence. They are bothersome enough to prompt our request:

"Will you wish us a Merry Christmas?"

Five minutes of your time: a sheet of paper or a postal card; a brief expression of opinion regarding Motion Picture News—and, say, wouldn't we have a cheery Christmas?

Don't say, "The other fellow will do it"—you do it—now! And remember, a word of criticism, a suggestion for improvement, will be just as welcome. The big thing is to let us feel your interest and good-will.

Of course, we're nervy. But, will you—Mr. Big Exhibitor and Mr. Little Fellow—take five minutes off to "Wish us a Merry Christmas"?

The same to you! And many of them!

WHAT OF THE NEW YEAR?

By W. A. JOHNSTON

THINGS are not happy in the picture industry, as the year of 1917 draws to a close.

Pessimism is equally mingled with uncertainty—in all branches of the industry.

The one question asked today by practically every individual—however large or however small his investment, or whether he is a producer, distributor or exhibitor—is: "What of the future? How secure and how good is my investment?"

Possibly our function as a trade organ is to gloss over the real facts; to talk optimism since optimism breeds optimism, and because pessimism is only a psychological state of mind.

We don't believe in this fol-de-rol in the first place; and secondly, we feel free to speak frankly of pessimism because we feel as frankly optimistic of the future—But sanely optimistic.

1918 is not going to see us all on the Easy Street of our dreams.

The theatres built on bad business judgment and badly run—the pictures made for which no market exists—the exchanges aimless or useless in purpose or existence—all will have a mighty hard road to travel in 1918; harder than ever before, fatally hard, because industrial conditions are acute and because the industry itself is being forced to clean ship and ruthlessly discard the barnacles and waste it has annually carried.

1918 will not see this young industry matured and well-ordered—like older industries, or like industries whose product is not such a novel and baffling mixture of art and merchandise.

To use another simile, 1918 will not see this industry's tangled skein of yarn—and certainly it is a tangle—all whipped out and into even strands.

But during 1918 there will appear straight threads among the tangles—threads which followed clear through will take the tangles out, shaping policies in other words which will make for order.

1919 or 1920 may not see big and definite results; but the ordering process is beginning at least.

We are not talking in the air. We have definitely in mind the theatre, the picture maker and the picture distributor who look upon this industry as a business and not as a game, who regard their capital as an investment and not as a poker pot and who are using the good sense and enterprise that make headway in other fields.

For these factors we are optimistic—whatever the present outlook.

Our optimism is based first of all upon the one sure basis of this business, the one good friend that has kept it going and going big, despite its prodigious waste and disorder — namely, the box-office with its all-cash daily inflow.

Right now there is a dropping off of theatre attendance. That part of it which is due to war taxes and war uncertainty will not continue—if we are to be guided by the experiences of other countries at war. Certainty—even of very bad war conditions—and a clearer conception of war's stern duties will make more theatre patrons. People will settle down. Motion pictures, after life's necessities, will suffer less than any other retailed commodities. There is a certain increased demand, during war, for good, low-priced entertainment.

Secondly, with so sound and big a basis, any industry will, through ordinary business evolution cleanse and cure and save itself. That is certain. But we do not believe that we shall have to wait for this slow and sure process. It is inconceivable to us that men and policies will not arise to hasten this evolution.

It is inconceivable to us, to be concrete, that several thousand theatres will be allowed to close their doors this winter because they can't get the

W. A. J. Says:

Possibly our function as a trade paper is to gloss over the real facts; to talk optimism, since optimism breeds optimism. We don't believe in this fol-de-rol in the first place; and secondly we feel free to speak frankly of pessimism because we feel as frankly optimistic of the future.

1918 is not going to see us on the Easy Street of our dreams. But the ordering process is beginning at least.

Our optimism is based on the one sure basis of the business, the one good friend that has kept it going and going big—namely, the box-office, with its all-cash, daily inflow.

right pictures at the right prices—unless, of course, they deserve to be closed. Such an exigency as this will, of necessity, create new and adequate measures of relief.

We have had plenty of publicity recently upon waste in production and distribution and upon other factors which, combined, have shot rental prices up to an alarming figure.

The war tax has brought matters to a crisis—with producer and distributor affected equally with the exhibitor.

The war tax is not the big trouble.

We recently likened the industry to a leakage-laden boat just rocking safely along and suddenly and dangerously shipping water because it had to bear a new and unexpected burden, small but not small enough.

The real trouble is fundamental—and broad.

It isn't star's salaries—alone; nor waste in production—alone; nor waste in distribution—alone; nor inefficient exhibition—alone.

The answer is simple; the solution the same as it always has been. It is: "fewer pictures, better pictures, longer runs." This, compactly and comprehensively, is what we need to day, what will solve the troubles of each warring branch of the industry. We need it just as much today as when we announced and appealed for this wholesome condition two years ago in MOTION PICTURE NEWS.

The main reason we have not generally arrived at "fewer pictures, better pictures, longer runs" is because each branch of the industry has been striving for the goal too much in itself and with too little regard for the other branches.

This goal cannot be reached by any one branch of the industry.

We can not reach it now through producer amalgamation or distributor amalgamation or exhibitor amalgamation.

We can only achieve it through a coordination of all these branches of the industry, based upon the inevitable cause and effect working of keen, sane business policies.

These policies are bound to arise.

They will be the clear, long threads that will unravel the kinks in the whole tangled skein—because men with clear eyes can follow them straight through.

We have, as we have said, had plenty of discussion upon the twin subjects of waste in production and distribution.

There is another prime subject that has not been dwelt upon and which we make emphatic here.

It is the subject of better pictures.

We have spoken of the box office as the one big basis of this business, the one thing we have surely and generously had so that we have worked thus far regardless of waste.

Let us safeguard this treasure-box with our greatest of all our efforts.

Reports reach us of the waning popularity of motion pictures. They come from thoughtful observers in the best theatre centers.

Picture theatre admissions have been advanced—never before so sharply. Perhaps fifty per cent of picture houses—largely in the cities—have jumped prices fifty per cent. Prices have been put dangerously near vaudeville prices.

And from one city comes the ominous note: "vaudeville is coming strong."

We have put pictures into near price competition with vaudeville. How about the competitive entertainment we are prepared to offer? What are we going to give the public for its money?

Let us not dodge the question. Let us not talk big and vaguely of the photoplay art and its great possibilities.

We are in the show business—and in competition with all forms of entertainment—and we need the masses and the classes.

A Buffalo Manager—in one of the best articles we have ever read—tells in next week's MOTION PICTURE NEWS how he raised prices successfully. He kept prices in the background—never let them figure in the matter; he simply gave and talked quality of entertainment. And the people paid and were satisfied.

Successful managers everywhere are doing

Says W. A. J.:

The answer is simple; the solution the same as it has always been. It is: "Fewer pictures, better pictures, longer runs."

We have put pictures into near-price competition with vaudeville. What are we going to give the public for its money?

Just moving pictures won't do. The stars won't do. We shall need this year the development of the story—need it as the story has never been needed before.

The industry's best motto for 1918 is "The Public Be Entertained."

HOLIDAY GREETINGS TO THE TRADE

By John R. Freuler

"If one were to take the recent eruption of interviews, statements, letters and other expressions in the trade press at all seriously it would be necessary to feel highly alarmed about the present and future of the film industry. A great many drastic remedies, a very great number of prescriptions, a lot of 'expert' advice is being offered for conditions in the motion picture industry.

"I did not know it was that sick. I do not now think it is. In fact, the film industry is a lot better off in beginning the new year than this sudden uprising of the doctors would imply.

"The film business is working out its own salvation, and will continue to do so throughout 1918 and following years."

By Albert E. Smith

"1917 has been a year of fulfillment for Vitagraph. With the dawn of 1918 comes the assurance, born of the things already accomplished, that the new year will see the ties of friendship between Vitagraph and Exhibitors more firmly bound than ever. All that we know, all the resources that we can command, are being put into the making of Vitagraph pictures and every effort of ours will be given to make 1918 the best year the industry has known."

By Walter W. Irwin

Shoulder to shoulder we must stand, exhibitor, producer and distributor in this critical hour. The grave peril that confronts all free peoples, is reflected in the difficulties that beset our industry at this moment. The fight that we are waging for our Country and to amalgamate the industry, so that it may best serve the Nation, calls for the kind of manhood that has always responded to America's needs. Strife or lack of unison within our ranks must reflect injury to the Nation and to the industry itself. My fervent wish at the close of this momentous year, is that we may all be given the strength and courage and clear vision to unite all branches of the industry, in support of the cause to which we have dedicated our very lives if need be.

In looking forward to the year to come Triangle does not care to make any statement, either as to the changes that it believes will be brought about in the industry, nor to its future policy. Triangle prefers to call to the attention of exhibitors some of the steps in advancement that it has recently made.

Exhibitors appreciate the stand that Triangle has taken on the war tax, in that it has decided not to transfer to exhibitors the tax of 15 cents per reel, levied by the Government against film manufacturers, producers and importers. Triangle believes that this tax was intended for manufacturers and therefore does not think it right to transfer this burden to exhibitors.

Triangle has also resorted to every effort possible to better serve exhibitors. One evidence of this desire to co-operate with exhibitors is shown in its recent announcement that it would furnish to regular Triangle exhibitors, one seven-reel picture each month, at no extra cost, to be released on the regular program.

Triangle is endeavoring to secure the best stories obtainable, to spare no efforts in securing high quality production, and finally to sell pictures, at such reasonable prices, that any exhibitor who knows how to properly present a picture cannot fail to make money with Triangle productions.

"Never before was the picture producer in as direct competition with the legitimate theatre as he is today. Legitimate attractions in New York are today playing to partially filled houses because amusement seekers cannot afford to pay five and six dollars for tickets plus the war tax.

"Their patrons are turning to motion pictures, for, in the screen theatres, they can see the best productions for the price of the legitimate theatre's war tax. By appealing intelligently to these new patrons the exhibitor can make them permanent followers of the screen.

"It is my firm belief that if there is one industry in the world that is not going to suffer as a result of the war, it is the motion picture industry. Entertainment the world must have, and has had in all its great national crises, but it must be entertainment at a moderate price."

By Samuel Goldfish

With war, Liberty Loans and taxes surrounding us, there are those who cannot see in the immediate future any extraordinary prosperity for the motion picture industry. But in my belief, better pictures than ever before and more intelligent methods of putting them before the public should combine, in the coming year, to make truly great an industry that shows every sign of greatness.

Now that it is over, there is no use denying November saw a bad slowing-up in the theatre business all over the country. So quick has been the recovery, however, that even in the latter part of November and early December most sections reported a decided brace. As December has gone on this has quickened into better conditions all along the line. There is no doubt about what 1918 holds for the motion picture industry. It will be a year of tremendous activity. There may be changed conditions to meet, but the fact that everything in the United States will be going at top speed and high pressure means prosperity for amusement enterprises, of which motion pictures is overwhelmingly the chief. Select Pictures Corporation has in full swing its policy of Stars in Star pictures with Stars to market them, and is ready for the New Year!

If it is the picture business you are talking about, everything looks good to me.

I think I am the only man in the entire industry who has not had a single kick to register on account of the war tax. Things look bright—never better!

I said some time ago that the operation of the various taxes imposed by war conditions would prove a blessing in disguise to the picture business. I said that this would come about through the elimination of the undesirable elements in the industry.

I am standing by my guns. Let the calamity-howlers holler!

By Carl Laemmle

The business is too big and the men engaged in the industry are too resourceful to let the changed conditions brought on by the war tax work more than temporary embarrassment or confusion. The manufacturer and exhibitor will find the way to better serve the public than they ever have; and this will be accomplished through co-operation and better understanding of the changed conditions forced upon every branch of the industry.

By Adolph Zukor

Motion pictures claim a million friends to one detractor. To all those many milions, then, I would say if I could, "It is you we are working for, day in, day out, to bring a little of surcease from care, to 'brighten the corner where you are,' to hold forth what we can of relaation from the stress of a world that has forgotten 'peace on earth, good will to men,' to make permanent the conviction that Christmas is a feeling, not a day."

So to all these and to the men who work for them in whatever the capacity, may I offer, humbly, my sincerest Christmas greetings, heartfelt, profound, with the wish for that success that is based on high hopes and high ideals.

By Hiram Abrams

It is the end of a year of remarkable progress in motion pictures, a year filled with more that goes to make up a matter of congratulation than many of us have perceived as we went along. Despite the world conflict, despite the turmoil of the times, Christmas can come to us in the same spirit as of old. And in this spirit I express to all News readers my heartiest Christmas good wishes and the hope that the New York may bring not alone prosperity to all, but the secure feeling of good service, faithfully rendered.

By Walter E. Greene

"The war has done more than anything else to eliminate this element of chance in making a purchase. The established commodity of supreme merit now receives greater public support than ever. A brand of pictures that has the confidence of the public is the exhibitor's greatest asset, particularly at this time. As in the past we will strive during 1918 to make the trade-mark ot Artcraft Pictures stand for the 'biggest and best' in clean motion picture entertainment. Conditions abroad have proved that the public will continue to patronize the photoplay in war times. Hence the exhibitor who presents the best pictures in the most effective way should now, as always, find his business a profitable one."

By W. W. Hodkinson

The motion picture has never ceased to improve and advance, and today is leaping forward toward broader usefulness and vaster audiences. Unsound finance and unfair organization will hold back only those who cling to these methods. All who hold true to the Motion Picture itself and its finest mission may face the New Year serene and confident. The Motion Picture is stronger than any force which can assail it.

By George K. Spoor

I want to thank the Motion Picture News for this opportunity to wish the exhibitors of the United States the greatest success for the year 1918. While there is a seeming depression due to present conditions, I am convinced that manufacturers and exhibitors doing business on a sound basis will come out better than ever before. It behooves every one of us to see to it that business is kept going in normal channels, for the soundness of the nation and its ability to carry on the great undertaking it is now engaged in, depends on every business man doing his part to keep the work of the country going on as usual.

Screen Trains U. S. Soldiers

Government Uses Pictures to Bring Recruits to High Point of Efficiency—Chosen from Thirty Plans

IT was announced from Nat S Strongs's office in the Longacre Building, last week, that the motion picture is to play a far greater part in the present world war than even its most optimistic supporter would have ventured to predict. It is to be used for the intensive training of soldiers, the turning of recruits into the finished product.

After all other methods of direct instruction of recruits have failed of the desired results the United States Government has turned to the screen to bring the recruits to that degree of efficiency that will enable them to enter the first line trenches after a few weeks post graduate course in the direct military instruction school.

For several months government officials, members of the War College and staff officers of the army have been seeking some method by which large bodies of men might be taught military tactics and evolutions by one instructor and at one time. More than thirty plans were suggested and all were rejected. Almost at the moment when the officials in charge of the training of the immense army composed of absolutely raw material had decided that the old drill ground method of instruction of man by man and squad by squad would have to continue, Leslie W. Brennan, a Utica financier, advanced the idea that properly taken motion pictures would solve the problem.

The suggestion of Mr. Brennan was met with skepticism, so much so in fact that he offered to stand the entire expense of proving that his suggestion was not only plausible but practical.

Secretary of War Baker issued orders that the Plebs at West Point, acknowledged to be the greatest military school in the world, be placed at the disposal of Mr. Brennan. With an expert camera man and assisted by Captain Matthew Tomlinson, instructor of the West Point Plebs, Mr. Brennan went to the big military school on the Hudson and started the pictures for which the Plebs posed in the manual of arms, school of the soldier, school of the squad, school of the company, semaphore, arm signals, firing positions, grenade throwing and trench work.

Upon the completion of the pictures they were screened for members of the War College and were demonstrated to be of such value that the War College assigned Captains Ellis and Gary, authors of the Plattsburg Manual, to enlarge upon the first efforts and the government appropriated seven hundred and fifty thousand dollars for the work.

Captains Ellis and Gary have been working for several weeks on the enlarged pictures which are about ready for distribution to the cantonments.

Omaha Exchanges Satisfied

Triangle, Mutual, Universal and Pathe Claim Increase in Business—Tax Fright Gradually Passes Over

"THE Triangle exchange is just beginning to feel the results of the war tax of 15 cents a day per reel being charged by some of the other exchanges," said Manager F. W. Thiele, of the Omaha office. "I have letters here from managers of theatres in little towns throughout the territory saying they will have to close if they are compelled to pay the tax. It is not much, but it cuts an awful hole, they say, in their net profits."

Manager Herman of the Mutual Exchange, in Omaha, says his firm's business has grown beyond his highest expectations. "And in the face of lying reports being circulated by our enemies," he said. "They are telling the exhibitors that, although we are not charging the 15-cent tax, we are taking it out of them in higher poster rates and other unjust and unexpected increases. Some of the exhibitors are believing these lies and I have had to nail a few of the reports to show them they are not true."

"We had a considerable number of exhibitors quit us when we first began charging the tax," said Jake Mitchell of the Laemmle, or Universal exchange, "but they are coming back. Just this week we have had a number of exhibitors return to us. They say they cannot get good pictures without paying the tax, and that their patrons demand our programs. They make more money, they say, by taking our service and paying the tax than by taking some other service and not paying it. We are slowly convincing them it is necessary for us to take this charge if we are to maintain the high standard of our pictures."

"Lots of kicks, but nobody quitting," said Manager C. E. Holah of the Pathe exchange. "A number of exhibitors are paying under protest. Our reports this week show an increase in business over any time this season, before or after the tax."

"We are paying it. We feel we are getting stung, but we are powerless to help ourselves," say the exhibitors in the city.

Exchange Declares Omaha Gets Advantage

"Omaha pays 40 per cent less for its states right features than Sioux City, Ia., a smaller city," is the declaration last week made by Manager Max Wintroub of the Fontenelle Feature Film Co., states right dealers, of Sioux City. Mr. Wintroub has often complained that Omaha exhibitors, especially the most important, will not pay a high enough price for his features.

New Corporations

A LIST of new motion picture corporations in the States of New Jersey and New York for the week ending December 15 as furnished from the records of the Corporation Trust Company, 15 Exchange Place, Jersey City, N. J., is as follows:

Tom Moore Organizes Own Review Board

Tom Moore of Washington, has organized a small review board of his own, consisting of five members, including two women. All films to pass muster must receive an excellent mark from each member. This review board meets every morning and passes on the films to be used in the Moore houses for the following week.

When asked how this has helped his business, Mr. Moore replied: "I find that this personal, particular censoring has increased the patronage of my houses greatly. And it has eliminated the occasional exclusion of a picture after its first showing because it did not come up to my standard. There are plenty of pictures and plenty of excellent ones. Our review board rejects one picture in every three, as not passing the high mark I have set for my houses. My patrons appreciate this personal interest in their welfare and have been loyal supporters."

"Rose of Blood" Passes Without Cuts

After "The Rose of Blood" has been reviewed in Washington by the Committee on Public Information and by representatives of the War Department, L. M. Rubel, director of the Division on Pictures of the Committee on Public Information, wrote the following letter:

"The picture 'The Rose of Blood' has been reviewed by this committee and representatives of the War Department, and is released for exhibition without cuts or changes."

In Chicago Major C. L. M. Funkhouser in his capacity of film censor, had refused to pass the film.

THE WEST COAST

"BEST KIND OF A BUY"

"On my recent trip through the West Coast States I found MOTION PICTURE NEWS to be the strongest trade paper. Exhibitors everywhere read it.

"They are delighted with the West Coast sub-edition, looking forward to it eagerly each week. Its advertising pages ought to be the best kind of a buy for the owner of territorial rights to pictures in these eleven Western States."

The above is the voluntary testimony of Frank Backer of the Mammouth Film Corporation, 729 Seventh Avenue, New York City.

San Francisco Managers are Roth's Guests

THE film exchange representatives of San Francisco were guests at a banquet given by Eugene H. Roth, managing director of the new and beautiful California theatre, on Tuesday evening, December 4, in the Monte Carlo room of the Bergez-Frank Old Poodle Dog restaurant. At the opening of the California theatre the film men had presented an elaborately gotten up testimonial to Mr. Roth, and this banquet was an expression of Mr. Roth's appreciation therefor.

In their testimonial the exchange men said:

"To Eugene Roth: Aware that the new and magnificent California theatre, whose doors are thrown open for the first time to the moving picture loving public, represents an appeal to all that is highest and best in our art and craft, lending to the finest work of the producer a fit setting for its display and to the votary of the art a sublime temple for his devotions on a scale of majesty, of beauty and of grandeur hitherto unapproached and realizing this new edifice and the enterprise for which it stands now come as the culmination of long, patient and painstaking labor on the part of its manager, Eugene H. Roth.

"And as testimony to his undaunted energy, his unbounded faith in the moving picture industry, his vision and his zeal, and as a further manifestation of those fine ideals for which he has always stood in his daily dealings and business relationships,

"The undersigned representatives of the motion picture industry of San Francisco desire on this occasion to extend to Eugene H. Roth their sincere congratulations upon the auspicious event, to express to him their gratification and their deep appreciation of the service he has rendered the craft, to give assurance of the high esteem and warm personal regard in which he is held by all his friends, endeared to him by his kindliness, graciousness and many fine personal qualities, to assert their confidence in the unqualified success of the new venture, under its present guidance, and to voice the hope that this new structure, destined to dignify and elevate the motion picture art, will long endure a monument worthy of the city by the Golden Gate, a delight to this and many future generations."

The guests at the banquet were Benjamin Simpson of Triangle, Louis Reichert of Metro, Herman Wobler of Artcraft-Paramount, Newton E. Levi of Mutual, E. M. Ashler of Turner, and Dahnken, Kahn and Greenfield, owners of the New Mission and New Fillmore theatres, Louis Hyman of All Star, J. W. Allen of Artcraft-Paramount, E. O. Child of Pathe, Ralph B. Quive of Vitagraph; M. L. Markowitz of the California, A. Markowitz of Western, Marion Kohn of Consolidated, E. C. Jensen of World Exchange, Ben Cohen and X. K. Stout of Select, M. J. Cohen of the George Kleine System, C. M. Simmons of State Right Distributors, H. A. Schmidt of General, E. H. Emmick of Peerless, William J. Citron of Fox, E. B. Johnson of Turner, and Dahnken, Edward H. Kemp, representing Motiograph machines, W. O. Edmunds and Joseph A. Huff.

The affair was a great success, continuing to the early hours of the morning, with speeches by Mr. Roth and all the guests.

Changes in Kleine System

E. R. PEARSON, Western Division manager of the George Kleine System, and in charge of all the territory west of Chicago, resigned on December 1, and for the present Manager Harry Scott of the Eastern Division has charge of the field. It is rumored that a separate Pacific Coast Division is to be formed, including the San Francisco, Los Angeles, Seattle and Salt Lake officers, and that a Western man will be the manager.

Photoplayers Equity a New Association

PHOTOPLAYERS' EQUITY ASSOCIATION is the name given a new organization of the film colony, composed of players who wish to do away with the exorbitant charges said to be made by booking agencies. The association has been formed but a short time more than a month, and already has more than 900 members. The dues are one dollar for initiation, one dollar per month, with a possibility of greatly reducing the monthly dues at a little later date. The officers of the association have been in touch with the greater number of the studios on the coast and have the assurance that help will be secured through the association. No one can become a member of the association unless he secures the recommendation of a successful director. Beginning the first of December, a new by-law went into effect, which provided for expelling anyone who accepted employment through any agency or exchange to which a commission is paid from each and every day's wage. Frank Fanning is manager of the association, and the officers are: Raymond Cannon, president; M. A. Strong, vice-president; Oscar L. Horn, secretary-treasurer. Board of directors: L. S. McKee, Thomas Santchi, Aileen Smith, Thurston Hall, W. M. McCormick, Pearle Elmore, Alfred W. King, Hector Sarno and Christian Lynton.

Community Singing Ruffner's Plan

RALPH RUFFNER, bellweather for a host of film exhibitors throughout the country, has his Columbia theatre patrons singing.

No sooner did Ruffner take over the Portland Jensen and Von Herberg house than he introduced his daily song fest, a feature which made such a hit with Spokane audiences.

"If you can get these Portland people to singing I'll buy you a hat," growled Organist Thorne when "Ruff" sprung his novelty.

At that Thorne seemed to have the situation doped out correctly when the first stanza of "When You and I Were Young, Maggie," was flashed on the screen. But with the second stanza a few voices forgot bashfulness, and by the time the sentimental ballad was in its last lines the entire house was inundated in a sea of sound—some of it musical. Visiting film men at the Benson Hotel, several blocks away, heard the outburst and rushed down to the theatre to investigate.

The singing bee is already a popular feature of Columbia entertainment. The crowd always applauds vigorously when the song is finished, while Manager Ruffner has received a number of commendatory letters on his new stunt.

"Merely an interesting bit of crowd psychology," comments Mr. Ruffner. "A crowd tires of nothing but pictures and music for from an hour and a half to two hours, and the singing of the right kind of songs provides relaxation which becomes a real enjoyment."

Partridge Arrives on Coast

JOSEPH PARTRIDGE of the United States Exhibitors' Booking Corporation, has arrived in San Francisco from New York, making arrangements for the release of corporation pictures through the Sol L. Lesser agency, with a corporation representative in charge. Mr. Partridge states that on his tour across the country he found business conditions rapidly improving, the depression that came after the Liberty Bond campaign and war tax innovation being followed by a sharp reaction everywhere.

GARDNER BRADFORD, former publicity writer at the Sennett-Paramount Comedy studio, and H. B. Daniels have been added to the Triangle staff in the capacity of subtitle writers.

Among Film Men on the West Coast

H. H. HICKS, who has served as manager of the Selznick and Select Los Angeles branch since the opening of the exchange here early this year, has been transferred to the management of the San Francisco office by General Manager Kane and left for the Bay City Saturday of this week. Mr. Hicks will be succeeded by B. E. Loper as manager of the Los Angeles branch, and goes to San Francisco to build up the exchange business there to equal that of the Los Angeles branch. Hicks is one of the oldest exchange men of Los Angeles in the point of actual years of experience in the business. For a number of years he was manager of the General Film Exchange in Los Angeles and later general Western representative.

That Mr. Hicks is extremely well liked by both exchange men and exhibitors of Los Angeles territory is brought out in their farewell to him. The exhibitors presented him with a very handsome traveling bag, and the exchange managers arranged a dinner, which was given at the Ship Cafe, Venice, on Thursday evening. At this, Harry Leonhardt of Goldwyn, acting as spokesman for the exchange men and their wives, presented Mr. Hicks with a beautiful fourteen-inch silver loving cup. At this dinner all the managers of Los Angeles exchanges, together with many of the salesmen, were present. The dinner proved a surprise to Hicks, as he had been invited to the beach cafe to take dinner with friends, and there found the exchange managers awaiting him.

The traveling bag given Mr. Hicks by exhibitors was presented by Joe Mathe of the Alvarado theatre, Los Angeles, and Guy Douthwaite of the opera house at Oxnard.

W. CROLETT RIDER is a new salesman of the Los Angeles Select branch. He was formerly assistant manager of the General Film at Denver, later served as personal representative for Paul Neiles, and recently was affiliated with the Triangle branch at Kansas City.

NEW records were made at Tally's Broadway theatre on Thanksgiving Day when the Select production starring Norma Talmadge, "The Secret of the Storm Country," broke every known record of the house for business of one day. The film was on for one week and played to exceptionally good business all of the time.

H. E. WHITE, who was formerly identified with the Peerless Film Service, and later leased a theatre at San Diego, has taken over the lease of the Comedy theatre on Broadway between Fifth and Sixth from the Clune Theatre Company, and will conduct the house until the present lease on the building expires in February.

W. A. CRANK, salesman of the Metro Film Corporation, is home from a trip through various territories visiting the Imperial Valley and the Bakersfield district, where he booked "Draft 258" solid. This film has every day booked for the month of December and January, and many for February.

WHILE doing the Arizona territory recently, Mr. Crank stopped at the Naco Hotel, Naco, Arizona, and was very much surprised to see the sign on the wall which pointed out the information that the room was bullet proof. The hotel is located less than one hundred yards from the border line between the United States and Mexico.

CARR STEARNS, Metro salesman, is now making the thirty towns in Arizona booking "Draft 258" as a special feature.

R. W. McKINNEY, who was formerly with the Triangle as salesman, and later served Goldwyn in the same capacity, has been engaged by Thos. Hancock, manager of the Los Angeles World Film Corporation as salesman, and has taken up his new work.

W. D. and George L. Haines, both formerly affiliated with the Los Angeles Pathe Exchange, are now in the service of the United States Army, W. D. being a member of the Naval Base Hospital Corps, and George L. in the Army. The former left for Philadelphia this week, where he will embark for France.

GREATER VITAGRAPH MANAGER GEORGE FARIS of the Los Angeles branch reports exceptional bookings for the Vitagraph serial "Vengeance and the Woman," his claim being that it is only necessary to show the picture to secure a contract from an exhibitor.

GENERAL WESTERN REPRESENTATIVE HARRY D. NAUGLE is on a business trip to Kansas City which will require approximately ten days.

H. S. STEVENS, who is owner and manager of the Casino, American and Burnside theatres at Portland, Oregon, is in Los Angeles to spend a month or two of the winter season. Mr. Stevens is one of the oldest film men of the coast. Prior to the organization of the General Film Company he opened an exchange in Portland and this was later absorbed by the General. The Stevens exchange was the first one on the west coast outside of San Francisco.

THREE of the McCarthy brothers, Jean, William and Jack, who conducted a circuit of motion picture theatres in and about Aberdeen, South Dakota, are in Los Angeles looking for a location for a theatre, and it is probable they will locate in Southern California, one of the brothers remaining in the West to supervise the business of the California house they purchase.

TED JOHNSTON, secretary of the Idaho Exhibitors' League, and owner of the Strand, Isis and Comic theatres at Boice, Idaho, spent the past week in Los Angeles visiting studios, the guest of Joe Merrick, manager of the Mutual Film Corporation Exchange.

THE Crown theatre at Pasadena, owned by Charles Flagg, has been sold through Leo Ryan, the broker, to Felix Zrebic of Pennsylvania, who recently came to Los Angeles in search of a theatre. Mr. Zrebic took possession of the new house this week, and plans to make a number of improvements.

W. C. BARBER, who owns the Manchester theatre at Manchester, California, the Ivy at Colegrove, California, this week purchased the Auditorium theatre at Gardena, California, of Otto Laho.

IT is expected the Kinema theatre opening, which occurs on December 14, will be attended by practically all of the film men of San Francisco and Los Angeles. Arrangements have been made by the San Francisco branch managers for them to come to Los Angeles in a special car to be present at this event.

The Kinema theatre is now undergoing the last of the decoration work under the direction of Emil Kehrline, and everything will be in readiness for the opening on the day selected. The Cecil B. deMille production, "The Woman That God Forgot," is to be the opening attraction for this theatre. Following that Artcraft productions will be shown.

H. M. LENTZ, formerly manager of the Greater Vitagraph Exchange, Los Angeles, has accepted a position with the Goldwyn exchange, and will cover the Los Angeles and Arizona territories.

WALTER WRIGHT, former director for Mack Sennett in the making of Triangle-Keystone subjects, but who has been in the East for the past six months, has returned to Los Angeles, and will again direct for Sennett, making Paramount-Sennett Comedies.

Among Players in the West Coast Colony

WILLIAM NEILL, director, is now at work on the fourth Dorothy Dalton Paramount subject, and Jack Holt has been engaged to play the leading role opposite Miss Dalton in this subject. C. Gardner Sullivan is the author of this photoplay.

"HIS OWN HOME TOWN," a short story, by Larry Evans, which appeared in the Saturday Evening Post, will serve as the next vehicle for Charles Ray, and it is now in the making under Victor Schertzinger. Sylvia Bremer is to play the feminine lead.

DIRECTOR AL. E. CHRISTIE has during the past week or two been giving considerable attention to the preparation of the producing plant for the winter of wet season, and within a few days one of the large stages will be completely enclosed. A new lighting system has been purchased and is now being installed, thus making possible continuous work during the rainy days.

DIRECTOR CHRISTIE has just completed the filming of a subject titled "Cupid's Camouflage," which has Billy Mason and Betty Compson as leads, and has also made one featuring Bobbie Vernon and Ethel Lynne.

A SERVICE FLAG bearing eleven stars was raised at the Christie studios this week. The former employes now in the service of Uncle Sam are from all departments of the Christie studio and in all departments of the service. The flag was raised by Mr. Christie in the presence of the entire producing organization.

JOHN EMERSON, who has been director-general, and Miss Anita Loos, who has served as scenario writer for the Douglas Fairbanks Film Corporation since the organization of the company, this week tendered their resignations. No announcement is made at the studio as to who will succeed either. Statement is given out by Mr. Emerson that he is returning to New York, where he will take a long vacation.

A JUDGMENT awarding damages to the amount of $5,541.73 to the Universal Film Company was given by Judge Finlayson in the Los Angeles Superior Court this week in the suit of the Universal vs. J. Warren Kerrigan, who refused to work in an uncompleted picture last fall after his contract expired. Included in the amount was a credit of $750, representing a week's salary due Kerrigan for the time he worked in the picture, "The Mysterious Mrs. M.," made by Lois Weber. The case sets a precedent, as the judgment was awarded on a verbal understanding between Mr. Kerrigan and E. G. Patterson, then secretary at the Universal and acting as general manager in the absence of H. O. Davis. The damages represent the sum it cost the Universal to remake the scenes in which Kerrigan appeared by the employment of another actor.

WALLY REID is on his way East, making a number of personal appearances en route, and at the Eastern studio will appear in "Believe Me Xantippe." He was accompanied by Kenneth McGaffey.

ADAM SHIRK, former editor of the photoplay department of the Dramatic Mirror and for some time connected with the Paramount Artcraft publicity department, has been transferred to the West Coast and is expected within a few days.

CHANGE in the title of the Wm. S. Hart Artcraft subject is announced by Thomas H. Ince this week, when it was definitely decided that the film should be known as "Wolves of the Rail," instead of "Dead or Alive." Mr. Hart is now working on "'Blue Blazes' Rawden," the tale of the Redwood Country, in which he is supported by Maude George and Robert McKim. The present production, as well as the one just finished, were written by J. G. Hawks.

"THE KEYS OF THE RIGHTEOUS" is the title selected for the first Enid Bennett Paramount release, which will be finished within a few days by Director Jerry Storm. The company is spending several days at Arrowhead, a resort, sixty miles east of Los Angeles, where the final scenes will be made. Earl Rodney is the leading man of this subject, and the principal players are Joseph Swickard, George Nichols and Lydia Knott.

C. H. CHRISTIE, general manager of the Christie Film Company, is enthusiastic over the increasing demand for Christie Comedies in Eastern states, where he is now making an extended business tour.

AFTER a run of twenty-six consecutive weeks of Christie Comedies, the Palace theatre, Los Angeles, has signed a new contract with the Peerless Film Exchange for indefinite first-run showing of Christie productions.

GEORGE PERIOLAT departed this week for the East on his public appearance tour. He will be gone about six weeks.

DIRECTOR ALLEN J. HOLUBAR and company, which includes Dorothy Phillips as star, will go to Truckee shortly to film snow scenes for "The Girl Who Dared," adapted from the James Oliver Curwood story of the same title. Supporting Miss Phillips in this subject is William Stowell as leading man, and other parts are taken by Priscilla Dean, Lon Chaney, Joseph Girard and William Burress.

"THE HIGHEST CARD," a Bluebird production featuring Monroe Salisbury and Ruth Clifford, has been completed, and E. J. Clawson is now preparing the next subject for these players.

F. M'GREW WILLIS, who was recently added to the Universal staff, has written "The Eleventh Commandment," which will be the next subject, in which Mae Murray is starred under the direction of Robert Leonard.

IN filming the seventh episode for "The Bull's Eye" serial this week, Eddie Polo staged a real thriller when he, by the aid of a rope, jumped off a fifty-foot cliff and alighted at the bottom unhurt, save for a few scratches received from the underbrush. To perform this fete Polo jumped diagonally from the cliff and the rope swung him around a tree, thus taking off considerable of the force of the fall.

HARRY COHN arrived at Universal City this week from New York to make a series of animated song subjects, each of which will run approximately fifty feet in length. This week Mr. Cohn made a booking with Alexander Pantages for the showing of the animated songs in all of the twenty-six Pantages theatres along the coast.

"THE MYSTERY SHIP" serial company, directed by Harry Harvey, is now on the twelfth episode. Scenario for this is being written by W. B. Pearson. The featured players are Ben Wilson and Neva Gerber and Kingsley Benedict.

THE Triangle scenario department has a number of stories in preparation. Jack Cunningham is adapting "Little Red Decides," from William M. McCoy's story. Catherine Carr is writing "A Soul in Trust"; Lillian Ducey, "Woman's Love"; Hayden Talbot, "The Day of Knights," and Robert F. Hill, a new member, is preparing the screen version for "Heiress for a Day."

Salt Lake Jottings

FIVE men of the house staff of Paramount-Empress theatre, Salt Lake, the home of Paramount and Artcraft pictures, are honored by having their names inscribed on an unusually beautiful roll of honor which occupies a commanding position in the foyer. The men are Gordon Thornburg and Philip Hurley, serving with the One Hundred Forty Fifth Field Artillery; and Alvin James, Earl Jackson and Jay Cook, now serving with the United States Navy.

The names are letters on a mat ornamented with the national colors and beneath is a magnificent spread-eagle in an attitude of victory. The shadow frame in which the mat is placed is surmounted by a shield and sunburst in the national colors.

This is only a part of a magnificent decorative scheme just placed in the foyer and lobby. The roll of honor is flanked on the right with the picture bulletin, containing scenes in the making of coming pictures, and feature pictures of the stars at play. On the left is a similar shadow frame with eight circular openings in the mats, from which eight Paramount and Artcraft stars smile greeting to the guests.

Another interesting frame contains a group of Douglas Fairbanks portraits, labeled "A Study in Smiles."

A dozen or more large old ivory urns on pedestals to match have been placed in the lobby, each bearing its burden of exotic flowering plants. This lends a tropical atmosphere to the lobby, most pleasing and restful in effect.

AS a booster for the Douglas Fairbanks picture, "Reaching for the Moon," and likewise a sales stimulant for the Fairbanks book, "Laugh and Live," James Brown, in charge of lobby decorations for the Paramount-Empress theatre, and William Lewis, manager of the Deseret News Book store, Salt Lake, entered into a combination that had good results for both. A window display of the books was made, augmented by "A Study in Smiles" and other Fairbanks pictures, loaned by the theatre. The theatre's advertisement was a neat sign, "See Douglas Fairbanks in 'Reaching for the Moon' at Paramount Empress theatre, just across the street."

"The sale of the books was stimulated greatly," Mr. Lewis said when the display was removed at the end of the week. "We had an unusual call for them, and the window was an attractive business getter."

Spokes in Spokanes Wheel

MANAGER CARROLL of Pathe's is improving and enlarging their offices in Spokane to take care of the added business that comes to this section with the closing of the Butte exchange. As this office will take care of all business from that section, two new salesmen, Mr. Burch and Mr. Cleland, have been added to their field workers.

DR. H. S. CLEMMER of the Clemmer theatre says that "The Woman that God Forgot" proved itself in playing to a record breaking attendance the first part of Thanksgiving week. Marguerite Clark in "Still Waters" kept up the record in a return engagement. The first Goldwyn picture, Mae Marsh in "Polly of the Circus"; Hall Caine's "The Manx-Man"; Marguerite Clark in "Bab's Burglar," and Mary Pickford in "The Little Princess," are some of the big ones announced by the Dr. for December.

MANAGER W. B. COHN of the Liberty theatre of Spokane reports the largest week's business in the history of the house during the week preceding Thanksgiving. Douglas Fairbanks in the "Man From Painted Post," for five days and Bill Hart in "The Cold Deck," were the attractions. Thanksgiving day's receipts exceeded by several hundred dollars in amount any previous Thanksgiving. "Indiscreet Corrinne," Triangle, and "Her Busted Debut," Keystone, were the features.

MANAGERS York and Allender, who recently put on the French war pictures, "Heroic France," at the Auditorium theatre, were compelled to call the police to handle the crowd on the day of the children's hour matinee. Over 4,000 were turned away.

Citizens Trust and Savings Bank

HEADQUARTERS—
MOTION PICTURE ACCOUNTS
in LOS ANGELES, CALIFORNIA

We are enjoying a large part of the motion picture business of this city.

WHY

First— Because we offer fourteen hours of excellent banking service, from eight in the morning until ten in the evening, which affords an unusual convenience for all depositors who are busily engaged during the usual banking hours.

Second—Because we appreciate the worth of, and try to promote the welfare of the motion picture business.

Third— Because our many satisfied depositors bring their friends to the bank, who, in turn, become satisfied depositors.

Fourth—Because all of the stock of this bank is owned by The Citizens National Bank, the total resources of both banks being over twenty-five million.

News of Activities in Utah Film Circles

THE movements of Charles W. Meighan, president of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of Oregon, are watched with considerable interest by both exhibitors and picture patrons in this city for the reason that Ogden is his home town, regardless of what Charlie may say on the subject. He is a former newspaper man of this city and during recent years, before taking up publicity for the Swanson syndicate, he operated an advertising agency in Ogden.

ALBERT SCOWCROFT, president of the Ogden Pictures Corporation, is expected home soon after an extended visit in New York, where he was engaged in business pertaining to the completion and sale of the company's second feature film, "The Grain of Dust," with Lillian Walker as the star. Most of the stockholders in the corporation are Ogden capitalists, but no intimation has been given as yet regarding the future operations of the company.

MANAGER H. E. SKINNER of the Alhambra theatre at Ogden, reports some of the best business of the past several months on Marguerite Clark in productions based on "Bab's Diary." Miss Clark has held her own right along with Pickford and Fairbanks at the Ogden house.

DURING the past several weeks Manager H. E. Skinner of the Alhambra, has been testing out the plan of doing away with an orchestra and using only organ music. He says he is not ready to report a finished decision as to the plan. As organist he has secured the services of Sam Whitaker, regarded as the best in this city and organist at the Ogden tabernacle of the Mormon church. Mr. Whitaker has the advantage of using one of the finest Kimball full section organs in the state, it having been installed in the Alhambra at a cost of $20,000.

ALTHOUGH he seldom puts on features for more than three days, Manager H. W. Peery of the Ogden theatre, reports excellent business throughout a five-day run of "The Barrier." Manager Peery is booking open from the Fox, Goldwyn and Jewel programs. Recently he booked a number of the Fox productions for the holidays and early in January. Among these are "Rose of Blood," with Theda Bara; "The Spy," Dustin Farnum; "The Conqueror," with William Farnum; "Trouble Makers" and "The Honor System." He will book at least two of the fairy tale productions by Fox for holiday week, believing that the productions such as "Babes in the Wood" and "Aladdin" should be a strong appeal to the children at that period.

THE Utah theatre, which was one of the original chain of motion picture houses operated by the Alhambra Theatrical Company, has been re-opened for the winter season after a complete remodelling, which kept it dark for more than two months during the summer. Under the management of A. J. Fyhn, the Utah is now one of the most up-to-date houses in the city and is thriving on a big business drawn by the Metro program and open bookings.

To bring the seating capacity of the Utah up to 600, Manager Fyhn was compelled to enlarge his building by extending the original structure back about 40 feet. In doing so he added a number of features which are bringing favorable comment from hundreds of patrons. For one thing, he lowered the floor until the bottom of the screen is approximately twenty feet high, yet on a level with the rear row of seats. To provide comfort in every part of the house he placed the first row of seats 35 feet back from the screen wall.

Perhaps the biggest boost that Manager Fyhn has given his remodeled house was the installation of wide, deep cushioned seats which invariably bring expressions of satisfaction from new patrons. He also aded a late modern heating and ventilating system, new organ with 678 pipe combinations, a lighting system that gives the impression of stained glass windows along the walls and new furnishings throughout. Manager Fyhn made it plain at the time of his re-opening that all of the equipment, so far as possible, and all of the work represented Ogden products and Ogden labor.

"THERE is nothing less than a cold million in it for the man who can invent a paper bag that will not crackle and popcorn that will not crunch," said an Ogden manager as he watched a popcorn stand move in next door to this theatre. "Almost everybody suffers more or less from 'nerves' and a lot of them ask the ushers to bounce somebody when a crackling paper sack is opened up just under their left ear.

"Of course I for one would like to please them but during these war times we can't afford to call a policeman for every person that munches popcorn when he attends the movies. There seems to be only one way out of it—education. There is room on my screen for a nice polite slide with a little sermon about paper bags and popcorn. Do I hear a second to the motion?"

SINCE five cents was added to the ten-cent admission to meet the war tax, exhibitors in Ogden are just about unanimous that the raise should have taken place about two years ago. Nobody was ever quite able to understand, including the patrons, why the same features that brought twenty-five cents in the neighboring city of Salt Lake could be seen here for ten. One of the exhibitors who is just seeing the light still maintains that the exchanges would have reaped the real benefits in cut-throat bidding for features.

I. P. ARNOLD, representative of the Pathe exchange in Salt Lake City and who calls on Ogden exhibitors regularly, seldom fails to meet up with a baseball story in which he had a prominent part a few years ago. Mr. Arnold at that time was an auditor for the Southern Pacific company and found time between trains to umpire semi-professional baseball games in this city. As a baseball umpire Mr. Arnold was one of the best train auditors in the West.

It happened that he was selected, or sentenced, to preside during one of the decisive games between Ogden and Salt Lake when trench warfare in Europe would look like child's play in comparison to the rivalry between teams and fans. Ogden was some few counts behind along about the eighth inning when Umpire Arnold rendered a decision which, to say the least, did his home town friends no good. Just as the Ogden fans had quit yelling, "Lynch him," a piping little voice up in the bleachers called out: "Say, is your first name Benedict?"

Song Birds Aid Liberty Movie

PROBABLY one of the most unique as well as most charming departures in the realm of showdom was staged at the Liberty, Spokane's (Washington) finest photoplay house, commencing Sunday, December 16. Through the courtesy of Mrs. D. P. Fowler, local bird fancier, Manager Sam W. B. Cohn, has arranged for the use of some twenty odd imported "rollers," the sweetest singing bird of all, to augment his $25,000 Wurlitzer Hope-Jones unit orchestra, during the holiday season.

The birds, all of which were musically educated under the tutorage of Mrs. Fowler's "feathered instructors," will be spotted about the auditorium of the Liberty and will undoubtedly prove to be the most novel "unit" ever added to a theatre orchestra.

Among other features which the "roller orchestra" will furnish special music for will be "Intolerance," which is booked to be screened at the Liberty the week of December 23. It is rumored that the bird orchestra is preparing a special musical score for this attraction, and if they live up to their contract, Spokane movie fans will be afforded a chance of hearing the only canary musical organization in the world. According to Manager Cohn, this is but one of many unique treats which he has in store for the future. "Originality" is the keynote at Spokane's finest photoplay house.

Oregon News and Views

E. J. MYRICK'S Colonial costumed knitting ushers are attracting unusual attention at the Liberty theatre, Portland. The cretonne and satin bustle-effect gowns, poke bonnets, brass-buckled pumps and white stockings, encasing a pretty blonde or brunette, making a pictorial attraction vieing with the screen's most entrancing offering.

Mr. Myrick has a number of other exhibition stunts he is preparing to spring on the patrons of his big theatre and exhibitors who have been forced to follow Myrick's pace for several years are promised some startling competitive service attractions.

L. A. SAMUELSON, former Pathe booker in Portland, has gone to Minneapolis to become associated with W. W. Kofeldt, Portland manager transferred to the Twin Cities Pathe Office.

W. J. WHITE of the Arcade theatre, Cottage Grove, Ore., was in Portland recently with his wife. He has entirely remodeled the Arcade and taken back the Bell theatre, at Springfield, which he had sublet.

W. A. AYRES of the Sunnyside theatre, Portland, reports that his new admission prices are working satisfactorily. From a five-cent fee he increased to ten cents and then added the one-cent war tax.

MRS. WARD COBLE, wife of Ward Coble, owner of the Liberty theatre, Bend, Ore., died in Portland recently after several weeks in a Rose City hospital.

SAM W. B. COHN, who succeeded Ralph Ruffner as manager of the Liberty theatre, Spokane, was identified with the Peoples Amusement Company of Portland for a number of years.

MANAGER BETTS of Sunnyside, Washington, is to build a new motion picture theatre.

P. S. ROVBO has leased the Crescent theatre at Junction City, Ore., from W. S. Trites. He opened his new house last Saturday.

O. C. SMITH of Dallas, Ore., reports that business is good at his Orpheum theatre. He jumped prices from 15 to 20 cents when the war tax became operative.

C. M. HILL reports that Manager Myrick of the Liberty theatre has booked "Joan the Woman" as the special photoplay feature for Christmas week.

EASTERN OREGON had its first snow of the year a week ago, but film exhibition did not suffer.

W. A. BACH, of the "Make it Pay" exchange service of Universal, was a visitor at the Oregon Film Supply Company's offices last week. Mr. Bach has charge of the new service work of the Universal system.

CAPTAIN A. D. LATHROP, who controls motion picture theatres at Seward, Cordova, Anchorage and Juneau, Alaska, is to build fine new theatres at Cordova and Anchorage, according to word brought to Portland, Ore., by F. W. Talbert, special representative of the Oregon Film Supply Company, distributor for Universal film products.

R. E. MACDONALD of Anchorage, has remodeled his Harmony theatre, the construction of balcony nearly doubling his seating capacity.

News Notes from Here and There

C. J. MARLEY, manager Triangle Los Angeles branch office, will leave during the coming week for a trip over additional territory given this exchange which is located in New Mexico on the western edge of Texas. Mr. Marley will probably go as far east as Dallas. Advice at the Los Angeles branch of the Triangle brings the first information of a new circuit being organized along the West Coast of Mexico with houses at Hermosillo, Tampico, and Guaymas. Owing to the embargo on film which by the government is considered an explosive, Los Angeles exchanges are having some difficulty in getting licenses to ship film to these quarters. Business along the west coast of Mexico is reported better than at any time previously.

HARVEY GROSSMAN, who has served as salesman for the All Star Feature Distributors exchange for the past six months, has been appointed special representative for the U. S. Exhibitors Booking Corporation in the Southern California and Arizona territories, and this week resigned from his position with the All Star.. The All Star Company are distributors for the product of this organization, and Mr. Grossman will continue to have his office at the All Star exchange. The appointment was made by Mr. Partridge, general manager of the U. S. Exhibitors' Booking Corporation, who spent the week in Los Angeles in the interest of the company.

TOM WILSON, a member of the photoplay colony of Hollywood, who has played in scores of Fine Art subjects and recently has been with Douglas Fairbanks and Mary Pickford companies, is in a local hospital recovering from an operation in which one eye was removed. Wilson was accidentally shot by a friend while they were quail hunting, one shot penetrating the pupil of his right eye.

THE work of building the new Paralta studio is progressing. All stages are now completed and the work of erecting the steel and glass covering is going forward very satisfactorily. A mammoth new scene dock and property building has been built, and a large number of new dressing rooms will be ready for occupancy within a short time. All of the stages are now in use and the entire plant will be ready about the first of the year.

THE Japanese subject, "Mr. Butterfly," this week took Director E. Mason Hopper and company to Sierra Madre, where exterior scenes were made. While they were absent a big Japanese set was built on one of the Culver City stages. Derral Foss and Teddy Sampson are the principals, and many of the scenes require a great number of Geisha girls.

Funkhouser's Far Reaching Effect

EXHIBITORS throughout the central states, particularly those within Illinois, southern Wisconsin, Iowa and even Michigan, fail to realize, it seems, that the narrow-minded methods, the Czar-like power and the snipping shears of Major Funkhouser, the Chicago censor, are far reaching in effect and play a really important part in the making of their programs the success they desire. They are surprised to hear, it has been found, that the present vigorous fight against Funkhouser in Chicago is also their fight. But it is, and the quicker they join their efforts with those of exhibitors and exchangemen in Chicago and aid them to succeed in the job of ousting Funkhouser, the better for themselves.

That hundreds of exhibitors in the small sized towns throughout these States adjacent to Chicago fail to recognize the sinister influence of Funkhouser's arbitrary and really wanton brand of censorship is brought out exceptionally well in the following excerpts from a letter we have received on the subject from Frank L. Koppelberger, manager of the La Crosse theatre at La Crosse, Wisconsin:

"ALTHOUGH the city of La Crosse has no censor board, the common belief here that we have no censoring of the screen productions is all wrong. The majority of the productions that we get are censored and censored heavily. Theatre managers and film patrons in towns like La Crosse and others that are fed from such a big film center as Chicago are many times wholly at the mercy of 'celluloid slashers' of the Funkhouser type.

"Recently the undesirable activities of Mr. Censor were apparent in several pictures shown here. 'The Honor System' came to us looking like one of grandmother's patched quilts. One place an entire reel had been censored. True, in some cases the censor cut-outs in Chicago are pasted back again after they are through. But more often they are not or the job is so badly done that a good percentage of the worth of the film is killed.

"While La Crosse is fortunate frequently in getting first run pictures, many of their 'shows' are first used in Chicago. These are advertised in La Crosse in advance. Because of the pressure of time new films cannot be supplied. Then we here, who like many others throughout the central states think we have no censorship troubles, must take what Major Funkhouser vented his arbitrary and unreasonable spleen upon. The treatment given Theda Bara in Chicago in her 'Cleopatra' almost assures us that Cleo will not be one of the season's entertainments in La Crosse. If Theda is as naughty as they say, pray tell me why the people of La Crosse cannot be given the opportunity to find this out themselves and use their own judgment?"

MANAGER KOPPELBERGER further says that he is now awake to the fact that the Chicago censorship fight is also his fight. It is up to the rest of the exhibitors in that part of the central west fed with their films from Chicago to be up and doing. Don't sit back and watch the fight. Join in it. Remember that the messing of one of your pictures is often the reason for the unexpected bad opinion of one of your best patrons. Sit down now and write to Alderman Walter P. Steffens, Chicago City Council, how you feel about it. Alderman Steffens is the father of the bill now being considered to do away with Funkie.

M. P. E. L. Consider Censorship and License

CONSIDERATION of censorship troubles and the question now up before the City Council of raising theatre licenses consumed most of the time at the last meeting of the Chicago branch of the Motion Picture Exhibitors League, held in their rooms in the Masonic Temple, Friday, December 7.

The license schedule, approved at a special meeting and presented by Joseph Hopp to the City Council committee which is handling that subject, was ratified and found general favor. It is the most favorable to the exhibitor of four different schedules at present receiving the consideration of the aldermen.

The league politely listened to Miss Harriet Vittum, Mrs. E. Stumer and Mrs. Frankenthal, representing the Women's Division of the State Council of Defense, tell of the needs of their organization and ask exhibitors to give up their receipts for a day. Most of the members, however, felt that they would rather stay out of the poorhouse a little longer and content themselves with paying the war tax and trying to make both ends meet.

Doing Business and Rebuilding at Same Time

E. D. MILLER and L. A. Forbes, owners of the Plaisance theatre, 461 North Parkside avenue, on the West Side, Chicago, intend to enlarge their house from 500 to 1,800 seats and keep it open during the remodeling operations. The novelty operation of building a large house around a smaller one and continuing business except for the short time necessary to break down the old partitions and amalgamate the two into one large house is something rather unusual, even in this age of remarkable engineering feats. And yet this is what Mr. Miller and Mr. Forbes expect to do. During the transitional period they will close shop, but, according to architects' plans already drawn up, the time during which they will have to suspend the revenue coming in at the box office will be unexpectedly short.

The walls of the new theatre will rise around the old building just as a modern double trunnion bascule bridge is reared on the groundwork of one of the old revolving kind necessitating a tieup of only a few hours while the old bridge is wrecked and the new one let down. The owners of the Plaisance have felt the need of a larger house for some time in order to take care of their Austin patronage. They expect to go East in the near future in order to get ideas that will add to the attractiveness of their new house.

Nu-Movie Lite Co. to Merge Interest

THE Nu-Movie Lite Company of Peoria, a $100,000 concern, is to absorb the Livingston Film Company, incorporated for $10,000, according to announcement made by Maurice H. Livingston, manager of the two companies. The two companies are based on the two inventions of the manager, that of the Nu Movie Lite and the stereopticon machine.

Charles A. Anicker, secretary-treasurer of the Livingston Film Company, will take stock in the newer concern and retain his controlling interest. George A. Rice, the third member of the firm, has sold his interest outright.

The directors of the Nu-Movie Lite Company who will form the larger concern by the same name are K. E. Nelson, Carl Harm, M. H. Livingston, L. L. Gruss and F. R. Shoff. All are prominent business men of Peoria.

More Burdens for Exchanges

THE Committee on Licenses of the Chicago City Council recently ignored and cast to one side the pleas, prayers and supplications of the film companies not to be burdened any further with additional taxes and voted to recommend an increase of license fees from $25 to $200 for film exchanges. The aldermen originally had under consideration a schedule that would require exchanges to pay a fee of $250, but after listening to the representatives of the various film companies they modified their demands and knocked off $50.

Penny Shortage Grows Acute

SO serious has become the penny shortage in Chicago that Peter J. Schaefer, vice-president of Jones, Linick & Schaefer, has gone to Washington to seek relief. It is his purpose to impress Secretary of the Treasury McAdoo with the solemnity of the situation.

It has reached the point in Chicago, he says, where motion picture theatres and popular-priced vaudeville houses are unable to cope with the government tax on theatres in an efficient manner without disrupting their scale of prices and policy. The penny shortgage has not been felt so badly in the $2 houses as in the smaller theatres, due to the fact that their scale of prices permit the nickel and dime taxes.

Mastbaum Representative in "Chi"

JOHN E. HENNESSY, general manager for the Stanley Mastbaum Enterprises of Philadelphia, paid Chicago a visit from December 7 to 10, looking over a number of the representative local theatres and making comparisons.

While there he visited the Covent Garden, Broadway Strand, Central Park, Crystal, Adelphi and Metropolitan theatres and found himself very much impressed with this group of showhouses only lately added to Chicago's coterie. He had much praise to bestow.

Bay City Managers War Over Tax

THERE is a merry war on in Bay City, Mich., between the theatre managers and the producers over the fifteen-cents-a-reel tax imposed by a percentage of the film companies. Local theatres state that they stand ready to accept notices of cancellation any time the exchanges see fit to discontinue contracts.

The theatre managers are broad-minded enough to know that the exchange managers at Detroit, which is the distributing point of films for this section, are carrying out the instructions of the New York offices and realize that the exchange men are not putting on the tax with any idea of personal gain.

Detroit Exchange News

THE film exchanges in Detroit are humming these days with all the activity of the proverbial bee-hive. The Central States Edition correspondent in his rounds last week picked up the following bits of gossip:

E. H. GOLDSTEIN, general manager of Bluebird exchanges, was in town and announced the appointment of C. G. Kingsley as exchange manager in place of W. W. Drum, who has resigned to become manager of Foursquare Pictures Exchange in Los Angeles. Mr. Kingsley came from the Fox Exchange in Indianapolis and was formerly in Detroit for that firm. At the State Film Company Earl H. Rathburn, booking manager and son-in-law of Col. W. S. Butterfield, had just enlisted in the Quartermaster Division at Camp Custer.

AT the Pathe Exchange C. A. Mead, special representative for Pathe, was spending a few days. He recently had been in Dallas and on the Pacific coast.

A. I. SHAPIRO, Goldwyn manager, was busy getting his new quarters in the film building in shape with new fixtures, rugs, etc. John H. Kunsky controls the first-run rights to Goldwyn pictures in Detroit.

GEORGE DeBUTE of the Mutual was reporting the biggest week in the history of the local exchange. An all-night force is now maintained to look after shipments.

GEORGE Weeks of Hoffman Foursquare Pictures said that business was jumping every day and that he fully believed Detroit would soon lead all offices.

J. C. FISHMAN of the Standard Film Service reported that he just secured for Michigan a new series of animal pictures, which had already been contracted for first run in Detroit by the Majestic theatre.

THE Dawn Masterplay Company now has four big pictures in Michigan—"Redemption," "The Whip," "Raffles" and "Persuasive Peggy."

DAVE BLYTH, a well-known composer, has been appointed manager of the Detroit office of the U. S. Exhibitors' Booking Corporation, which has opened in the exchange of Foursquare Pictures.

WILLIAM ALEXANDER, special representative for the company, who spent the last two weeks in Detroit, is now on his way to the Pacific coast.

FITZPATRICK AND McELROY of Chicago, now operating extensively in Michigan and Illinois, have just taken over the Rex theatre at Three Rivers, Mich., giving them ten houses in the Wolverine state. Their new theatre, The Lyric, in Cadillac, will open about the 15th of January.

They Say in Chicago That—

THE latest member of the Rothacker Film Manufacturing Company organization to enter the service is Robert Zoncada, who left Chicago for New York to enlist in the navy. Other members of the Rothacker organization now in government service at Washington are George Gibson and Fred Niemann.

"WHITHER THOU GOEST," the Thomas Ince production, which is being handled by Greiver and Herz for this territory, had a three-day run recently at the new Central Park theatre, the Balaban and Katz house, which recently set West Side picture fans agog with its beauty.

THE South Shore theatre, on Stony Island Avenue, beginning last week, started a new schedule of exhibiting pictures only on Saturdays, Sundays and holidays from 2 to 11 p. m.

UNDER the slogan of "Let's Be Cheerful," Rob Reel in the Chicago Evening American continues to urge Chicagoans to lay aside their war worries during Go-to-Movie-Week from Christmas to New Year's and see some of the good pictures being shown at local houses. The idea is one that certainly ought to appeal to exhibitors at this time.

THE Crown theatre, 4013 West Twenty-sixth Street, is closed until December 24, undergoing repairs and alterations.

Cresson Smith of Metro reports that less than 2 per cent of the exhibitors using that service quit on account of the reel tax proposition.

PAUL SMITH, editor of Screen Opinions, that live little sheet put out by Cahill-Igoe, got into the Consumers Building about ten feet one day last week with a batch of new booking books which he planned to give away to exhibitors free of charge. Several of them saw him coming and when Paul turned to take his departure he looked as though he had just bought a million bushels of wheat on the Board of Trade. He left without a copy in his possession and was glad to get out without being permanently maimed.

FOUR Essanay stars, Helen Ferguson, Jane Thomas, Phyllis Diller and Else Hastings, sold about $1,000 worth of tickets for the Palace theatre Red Cross benefit matinee, which was held December 7. The girls visited hotel dining rooms and public meetings during the week in an effort to do their bit for the theatre day fund.

ED H. PHILIPPI, sales manager of the Rothacker Film Company, has been appointed a director in the Advertising Association of Chicago. Among the several activities for which the Chicago Club has become noted is the Moving Picture Committee, of which Mr. Philippi has been chairman for several years.

THE Monroe theatre, at Fifty-fifth and Kimbark, which has been a vaudeville house up until the present, is now using pictures as the chief attraction.

FRED S. MEYER, for eight years sales manager of the Minneapolis Universal office, took charge of the Universal offices in Milwaukee December 1.

H. C. SMITH, proprietor and manager of the Idle Hour theatre in Rossville, Ill., announces that he is rebuilding and enlarging his house so that when it is finished it will be the finest theatre in that city.

CHARLES LAMB of the Palm theatre, Rockford, Ill., was in to see William Jener last week, and before he got away the local Perfection Pictures head had signed him up for several features.

GREIVER AND HERZ report exceptionally big business on their first Lillian Walker release, "Lust of the Ages." The picture is playing all the Lubliner and Trinz houses in Chicago and has just completed an extended run at the Merrill theatre, one of the finest houses in Milwaukee.

SAMUEL S. HUTCHINSON, president of the American Film Company, has returned from the Santa Barbara studios and is now looking for scenarios that will be suitable for the high standard photoplays which he is planning to produce in the near future.

ESSANAY is making a series of slapstick comedies under the direction of Arthur Hotaling. Amedee Rastrelli, French comedian, on leave of absence from the western front, is the featured star and is doing some good work in the north side studios. His manager, however, states that he will soon be on his way back to France to help check the mighty push now being prepared by Hindenburg.

"WITHIN THE LAW" scored a big hit at the Twentieth Century theatre, 3530 West Twelfth street, last week. It completed a five-day run there, which is the longest time it has played outside the loop.

M. H. BRYER, formerly Pathe representative in Michigan and Illinois, has been appointed special representative of the Chicago Paramount Exchange. He will specialize on short-reel subjects.

ASCHER BROTHERS have booked the Perfection Picture "Quo Vadis" for the week from Xmas to New Year's. William Jener, manager of the Kleine Exchange, reports that exhibitors have booked this big feature heavily in all parts of the city and that it is going over well.

M. J. MINTZ of Unity Photoplays is back from a trip to New York. "I believe," he states, has been acquired for Wisconsin, in addition to the territorial rights for Illinois, which his firm already possessed.

FRANK FLAHERTY, district manager for Hoffman Foursquare in this territory, left for Minneapolis the latter part of the week to oversee the official opening of the Hoffman branch in that city.

H. SCHOENSTADT'S new house, the Atlantic, on Crawford Avenue and Twenty-sixth Street, is scheduled to open up about January 15.

E. P. GROHE, popular Fox representative, has been appointed sales manager for the local exchange. Grohe has been with Fox only nine months, but he is an old exhibitor with eleven years of experience behind him and he has a knowledge of showmanship and of the problems incidental to running a house that will be of invaluable service to him in his new capacity.

A. B. MOMAND of Shawnee, Okla., president of the Oklahoma state branch of the American Exhibitors' Association, was a visitor in Chicago a few days last week.

ELI VAN RONKEL of the Chicago Jewel office spent several days last week in Milwaukee and reports that he has booked the Saxe Brothers houses with enough features to start them up in the Jewelry business.

WILLIAM J. QUIMBY recently passed through this city on his way to New York, where he goes to assume the duties of sales manager for Pathe exchanges. He stopped off at the local office and held a short tete-a-tete with Ralph Proctor before resuming his journey East.

C. E. BOND, Chicago representative of the U. S. Exhibitors' Booking Corporation and formerly with Triangle and Paramount, is to be found now in the Hoffman Foursquare offices in the College Building, where he has a desk and is looking after the affairs of the booking corporation.

C. C. Pyle, of the Bartola Company, reports the disposition of a number of organs during the last month.

BILL DUNAS, Illinois representative of Hoffman Foursquare, has returned from a successful trip through the river towns of Iowa and southern Illinois. Mr. Dunas has been connected with the Central Film Company for the past year and only recently switched to the Foursquare standard.

"THE Painted Doll," first of the Russian Art Films to be released by Pathe, was shown at the Bandbox and Bijou Dream theatres in the loop last week. John Kane, manager of the Bandbox, booked the feature for the entire week.

THE Rose theatre, on Madison street in the loop, was practically hidden from the view of passers-by last week due to a scaffolding which the builders had erected while changing the front of the theatre.

E. C. BLAKEMAN, formerly manager of the Paramount short subject department, Atlanta, Ga., is now the sales manager for the local Triangle exchange. Mr. Blakeman is taking the place of J. E. Madden, who has gone to New York after severing relations with Triangle. Mr. Madden's new connections have not yet been announced.

A. J. KRUG, owner of the Park Manor theatre, has purchased the Windsor Park house. He has just installed a Bartola organ in each of these houses and is now resting easy as far as the musical entertainment for his patrons is concerned.

FRANK FLAHERTY, district manager of Hoffman Foursquare in this territory, is back from his trip to Minneapolis, where he established a branch office and left George W. Law in charge. The Minneapolis branch is located on the second floor of the Film Exchange Building.

WILLIAM COOKE, sales manager for the Paramount-Artcraft Chicago office, has resigned his post with that company. He has made no connections yet and is taking a vacation before deciding on his next move.

EXHIBITORS who journeyed up to the Goldwyn offices at 110 South State street to look after their film service last week were rather surprised to find empty space staring them in the face where previously the Goldwyn offices had offered them well appointed rooms in which to transact their business. F. M. Brockell, Goldwyn manager, had gathered his cohorts and during Sunday had moved the offices to the College Building at 207 South Wabash avenue.

REX LAWHEAD, Hoffman Foursquare sales manager for Chicago territory, is back in town again after a successful trip through Indiana.

WHEN C. W. Bunn, manager of the Chicago Pathe exchange, left for the East recently to serve his company in the capacity of special representative, the employees at the Chicago offices presented him with a token of their appreciation and regard in the form of a large silver loving cup.

CHARLES B. MASTON is the manager of the Chicago offices of the Interocean Forwarding Company, a concern which has just recently come into this territory. The concern, while doing a general forwarding business, specializes in film shipments to foreign ports. Mr. Maston has been connected with the Wells Fargo Express Company for a number of years and knows shipping problems backwards, forwards and upside down. The offices of the Interocean Forwarding Company are at 30 North Dearborn street on the seventh floor.

THE new and rigid requirements that are continually being put into effect by the Building Department, especially as regards the storing of film in the loop, have hit the Paramount plans to move from the nineteenth to the twenty-first floor such a blow that officials of that organization now just scratch their heads when asked when the change is to be made and simply say, "I don't know."

WILLIAM JENER, K.E.S.E. manager, reports a big lot of bookings of "Quo Vadis," a revised and elaborated edition of which is being brought out and made ready for release January 1.

M. J. WEISFELDT, head of Wholesome, the mail order film concern, reports that "Little Red Riding Hood" is progressing nicely and will be ready for release about the first of the year.

A. R. RALSTON has just been engaged as a representative of Hoffman Foursquare for the State of Wisconsin.

C. W. ECKHARDT, manager of the Chicago Fox exchange, reports that the "Tiger Woman," which has been held up in the courts since spring, has at last been given a permit.

GEORGE BROMLEY, former manager of the Triangle exchange in Omaha, is now connected with the Chicago branch, under the supervision of Dan Michalove, new manager of the windy city offices.

HARRY K. LUCAS of the Lucas Theatre Supply Company of Atlanta, Georgia, was in town last week and reports that he is selling Simplex machines so fast he can hardly take care of the orders.

C. W. LAWTON, manager of the Motion Picture Products Company, makers of lobby displays, frames, etc., made a trip to Pittsburg and Cleveland last week on business.

Among Michigan and Wisconsin Film Folk

Detroit Exhibitors Hold Out Against Reel Tax

A NUMBER of general managers of film companies who were visitors in Detroit during the past vied with one another as to the film tax situation. They were Abram Carlos of the Fox Film Corporation, E. H. Goldstein of the Universal and Bluebird exchanges, and M. H. Hoffman of the Foursquare Pictures.

Messrs. Carlos and Goldstein are of the one and same opinion—that the film charge has been based on facts and figures and that no individual producer can stand the tax at present profits, whereas it is only a small item to the exhibitor individually. On the other hand, Mr. Hoffman believes the tax is too high and says that seven cents would have been a more equitable charge, in his opinion. He states that where the cost accountants erred was that they based the life of a film on less days than the average life, based on his own experience for a number of years with the Universal.

The situation in Detroit remains unchanged. The majority of exhibitors are not giving in, and there are still close to seventy-five who are standing absolutely together as one. They see ahead ultimate victory and predict that the producers will take off the tax when they find out that the exhibitors are determined in their stand.

However, the number of exhibitors who refuse to pay the film tax are fewer than several weeks ago. Among those who have agreed to pay the tax but who orginially were opposed to it are John H. Kunsky, operating ten theatres; Philip Gleichman, of the Broadway-Strand theatre; Frederick Ingersoll, of the Knickerbocker; Jack Mowat, of the Maxine theatre; Roy Bishop, of the Globe theatre; Hal W. Smith, of the Ferry Field; Henry K. Guthard, of the Fine Arts and Norwood theatres, and Edward J. Murphy, of the Gladwin Park theatre. Outside of Detroit most of the Michigan exhibitors are paying the tax on those programs which they want to keep.

All Detroit Exchanges Move to New Film Building

WHEN the Universal, Harry I. Garson Productions, Inc., and the Artcraft-Paramount companies move into Detroit's new film building at 63 East Elizabeth street it will mean that practically all exchanges but two will be quartered in the one structure.

The full list of exchanges there will be: Jones Film Company, Mutual, Bluebird, Universal, Jewell, George Kleine System, Pathe, Foursquare Pictures, U. S. Exhibitors Booking Corporation, Vitagraph, Fox, General, Goldwyn, Standard, World and Select. In addition to the list are the Universal, Garson Productions and Artcraft-Paramount who will move before the first of January.

The United Theatre Equipment Corporation is also located in the film building on the ground floor.

Madison Manager Attending Washington

JAY E. SHERWOOD, manager of the Grand theatre at Madison and chairman of the committee on war cooperation, is in Washington this week attending the meeting of exhibitors from all over the country as the representative of the Wisconsin Exhibitors' Association. He will seek to have the war tax bill amended so as to exempt moving picture houses having an admission fee of less than 25 cents.

La Crosse Exhibitors Doing Their Bit

EXHIBITORS of La Crosse are back of the government plan of publicity through the medium of the screen to a man. This is seen in the hundreds of slides run free of cost each month (and the theatre man is being crowded pretty heavily in this direction) and the time given by every La Crosse theatre to Four-Minute Men three and four times a week. The Four-Minute speakers have come to be a valued part of the entertainments at every house.

"Kop" Caps the Business in La Crosse

FRANK L. KOPPELBERGER, manager of the La Crosse Majestic theatres, La Crosse, is one of the best-known showmen of the Upper Mississippi Valley and the Middle Northwest. His friends have shortened his name, and all you have to do to obtain a front-row seat in his circle of acquaintances is to call out, "Hello, Kop!"

Mr. Koppelberger's creed is to give the people what they want and as much of it for as little money as possible. The result of this policy is that the rear seats of his two large theatres are as well worn as the front seats. Triangles, special features, Paramounts and the best comedies obtainable comprise the entertainment at the Majestic theatre, where the programs are changed four times a week.

Being a successful showman, it goes without saying that "Kop" is a firm believer in advertising—of every sort and variety and in big bunches. When business is bad—and that's about as often as Douglas Fairbanks fails to bring a laugh—he keeps the "ad alley" of the La Crosse newspapers working overtime, and the jinx, if "Kop" ever had one, gives up the ghost in disgust.

With his policy of the best pictures obtainable, Mr. Koppelberger is filling the La Crosse theatre at three performances every day. Last season the house was dark 75 per cent. of the time.

Now here is a little secret. Mr. Koppelberger lets the kids into his houses for a nickle. Think this over.

Touches Patron's Pride with Tax

THAT the war tax has not injured the patronage at the Franklin theatre, Saginaw, but has even been made an aid to boost business, is the statement of Manager Moeller. The tax proposition has been placed on a patriotic basis. Appeals to the public are made along this line. At every performance slides are thrown on the screen, such as "Every time you attend the Franklin theatre you help Uncle Sam," pointing out that every contribution through the amusement tax is providing that much more finances for the government.

Mr. Moeller also declares that the increase in prices at his movie houses has not affected business. He advanced the admission prices at his Franklin theatre, Saginaw, and Temple theatre, Howell, from 5 and 10 cents to 10 and 15 cents, and says that as a result he finds that there has been no dropping off in attendance. The people want to see the movies, he says, and the difference of 5 cents will not keep them away. In fact, the gross business increased.

Red Cross Campaign in Madison Not Successful

ALTHOUGH all the moving picture houses in Madison cooperated in the Red Cross benefit, severe weather and an apparent lack of interest in the movement by the local Red Cross made the attendance small and only about $50 was realized from the movie houses. The Orton, one of the outlying theatres, had no matinee, but contributed a percentage of the evening's receipts. By special arrangement of the national committee half the funds went to the local committee. This was not learned in time, however, for the local Red Cross to get behind the movement and sell tickets.

Remick Decision on Music Tax Clears Detroit Clouds

THE announcement by Jerome H. Remick & Co., Detroit music publishers, that they would not charge the music tax gives complete relief to the situation. Inasmuch as this concern have published many of the biggest hits in the past five years and are constantly publishing new music of every description, the theatres of Detroit and Michigan feel that they have nothing to worry about and are now absolutely sure that they will fight those who still refuse to withdraw the tax on their music.

Council Kills Sunday Show in Howell, Mich.

A STRINGENT ordinance, prohibiting motion picture shows on Sunday, has been adopted by the little town of Howell, Mich., and became effective Sunday, December 2. The lid has been clamped down tight to prevent the citizens from wandering from their homes or churches to attend the one theatre in the city. This motion picture theatre is the Temple, and it is owned by A. J. Moeller, manager of the Franklin theatre at Saginaw and former secretary of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of Michigan.

Howell is a community of about 3,500 population. The Temple has a capacity of 300. Under the old village laws no Sunday shows were permitted, but when the place was incorporated as a city the town fathers forgot to include a prohibition act for the theatre.

When the Temple management became aware of this oversight it proceeded to throw open the doors of the picture playhouse to the populace. They responded quite liberally. This was last August. However, the council did not take kindly to the idea, and informed Mr. Moeller that he must stop exhibiting. A rule was passed by the council forbidding Sunday shows.

Mr. Moeller believed the council could not legally stop him by the mere adoption of such a rule. So he continued to operate and the residents of Howell continued to attend. Twice Mr. Moeller was cautioned that he must stop, and the third time he was haled before the authorities and fined $5. That was some weeks ago. Since the assessment of the penalty the theatre has been permitted to run. But the council was not to be entirely discouraged nor defeated, and so it went into action to frame and adopt an ordinance in which Mr. Moeller could not find loop-holes. As a result the Temple theatre was closed last Sunday and will continue to be closed so long as that ordinance remains on the books.

Live Items from La Crosse

EDWIN SCHWALBE, assistant manager of the Majestic theatre, La Crosse, Wis., until he recently became a lieutenant of the First National Army of the United States, has been wounded. It was not a German shell which put Eddie on the blink, but a surgeon's knife down in Waco, Texas, where he was teaching selectmen the difference between right about face and right face. Eddie is in La Crosse recovering while his appendix is in Texas.

CHARLES SHOOK, a Chicago theatre organist, hung his coat and hat up in the office of the Majestic theatre, La Crosse, Wis., recently, and before the notes of his music for the first performance were dead he had been invited to make himself at home. His ability to cue pictures is remarkable, and, with an ever varied program, Shook's special brand of pipe organ melody fills the bill.

"MY CINDERELLA MAN," starring the popular Mae Marsh, will be the Christmas Day treat at the La Crosse theatre, La Crosse, Wis. The management is just now filling in with successful special pictures, and for several weeks following the opening of the new year will show very little but Paramount and Artcraft.

SIX and seven changes of program every seven days in a theatre in a city bragging only a population of 35,000 are rare, but this is the boast of Thomas J. Ryan, manager of the Strand theatre, the first and only "uptown" house in La Crosse. Ryan, who is also responsible for the management of the Casino theatre, is able to do this through audiences which he can depend upon.

SOME four or five hundred La Crosse men who have laid down their tools for the latest army rifle will have Christmas presents this year from the Boy Scouts of the city. This was made possible when Frank L. Koppelberger, manager of the La Crosse theatre, gave his entire profits for four days' showing of "The Italian Battle Front" to the Boy Scouts. Movie fans took hold of the plan when it was advertised and made the four days a rip-roaring success.

OPINIONS

"We are more than pleased with the lobby display paintings on "Today," "The Mad Lover" and "The Cold Deck," and have been informed by many Chicago exhibitors that they consider these paintings the best of the kind they have seen."—D. M. Vandawalker, Vice Pres., Doll-Van Film Corp.

"We wish to express our appreciation of the extraordinary quality of work you have put into our lobby display on "ALIMONY," as it is superior even to your former work, which was in itself highly satisfactory."—The H. Lieber Co.

"The lobby displays on "The Mad Lover" and "Today" have arrived and we are glad to say they are the finest that have ever come to our attention."—J. L. Ellman of Harris P. Wolfberg Attractions.

Elgin Fans Pay Tax as Patriotic Duty

THE war tax, they report, in Elgin has made little difference. Patrons pay the extra cent asked in the three houses devoted exclusively to pictures—the Star, the Temple and the Orpheum—more than willingly. In fact, the manager of one of these houses reports, in many cases patrons cheefully throw down ten cents and fifteen cents instead of the six and eleven cents asked and refuse to bother with their change, feeling it a contribution to their country. This surplus, he plans by means of a money globe at the ticket seller's window, to give to the Red Cross chapter here.

At the Grand theatre, where the usual admission price is fifteen cents in the afternoon and twenty-five cents in the evening for moving pictures, the admission to Sunday vaudeville and tabloid musical comedies has been advanced from thirty to thirty-five cents to cover, in part, the war tax. The rest is paid by the management.

Of the draft regulation managers talk less optimistically. Elgin's situation they believe to be peculiar.

Contrary to effect of the draft in Chicago and cities of Elgin's size or greater, where it drew both married and single men, in Elgin the ruling took only single men. As a result some six hundred young fellows with whom the movies were ever-popular, have been taken off the streets of evening. Their sweethearts, who might perhaps seek distraction in the pictures were not the need of knitting so urgent, are staying at home to make warm things for their soldier boys.

And not alone has the knitting craze caused a fluctuation in patronage, they point out, but Red Cross work has taken a number of afternoon women patrons away from the theatre.

Pert Peoria Paragraphs

E. T. EVANS, formerly an exhibitor at Forest City, Ill., has opened up houses at Kingston and Mapleton, Ill. He reports business good and state that he intends running each show two nights a week.

DAVE HARRIS, manager of the Odd Fellows' Opera House, at Hanna City, Ill., has taken over the Gem motion picture theatre in Peoria and will now operate the two. He has purchased new equipment for the Gem, including two new 1917 Motiograph Projectors from the Livingston Film Company at Peoria.

W. E. BERG of La Rosa, Ill, has reopened the Zilm theatre at that place. The initial opening was held last Saturday night and in spite of the severe cold weather he expresses gratification at the good attendance.

THE Kilbourne Amusement Company of Kilbourne, Ill., offered to dispose of their theatre and equipment a short time ago, but have now reconsidered same and decided to start business again with an additional amount of enthusiasm. Now they are glad of their change in plans because they are finding business bigger and better than ever and that interest in motion pictures is steadily increasing.

W. A. STEVENS, manager of the Apollo and Eagle theatres of Princeton, Ill., was a visitor in Peoria, Ill., last week, investigating projection equipment. While in the city he paid a visit to the U. S. Revenue Collector to turn over his war tax receipts.

THAT feature films are more popular with the public than any others is the opinion of W. C. Hippler of Chillicothe, Ill. His box office receipts are given a big boost because of the feature and he has now selected a program which he believes will satisfy his feature-loving patrons.

THE Iowa and Southern Illinois distributing territory of the Nu-Movie Lite, a recent Peoria invention which is attracting much attention in motion picture circles, has been taken over by W. L. Augustine of Decatur, Ill. He made a recent trip to Peoria to investigate the appliance and found it so satisfactory that he asked for the large distributing territory.

"BUSINESS is fine," says S. A Bliss, manager of Bliss lighting plant, and says that the majority of his sales during this fall and winter have been from the East.

BUSINESS for the motion picture men at Yates City, Ill., has been going better since the patrons have come to understand the war tax, says M. Kjallenberg of that place, who was in Peoria recently on business for his theatre.

THE new Harrison Opera House of Harrison, Neb., is to be opened this month and the manager and owner, M. H. Koch, made a trip to Peoria, Ill., to purchase one of the 1917 model motor-driven Motiograph machines, together with the Nu Movie Lite, which have been sent to him by the Livingston Film Company.

PEORIA'S Mayor doesn't believe in the trading stamp as a means of drawing trade to a motion picture show, so he ordered notice to be served on the Garden theatre, 2139 South Adams Street, to cease giving trading stamps redeemable at a nearby store. Under the city ordinance, the Mayor holds that a trading stamp premium is illegal.

AMONG the motion picture managers from Central Illinois who have been visitors in Peoria during the last week are: C. F. Woll of San Jose, Ill.; A. E. Wilson of Cuba, O. U. Peterson of Toulon, Clarence Kief of Hartsburg, Mr. Miller of the K. P. Opera House at Mackinaw, Alex Mason of the Princess theatre at Farrington, and Dr. F. B. Hodkenson of the Roller Dome at Mainto.

MOTION picture houses in Peoria were quick to respond to the request for patriotic demonstrations Sunday afternoon, December 9.

At four o'clock, as had been requested for all over the United States, audiences at each of the picture shows, under the direction of a leader, joined in singing "The Star Spangled Banner" and "America."

Prominent vocalists of the city acted as the leaders in the different theatres. At the Apollo and the Empress, Harry Kruse was the leader; at the Columbia, Frederick Vonawitz of the Peoria Musical College, and at the Hippodrome, which is both a picture and vaudeville house, Lee Weston took charge.

Every show threw on the screen the new stanza of "America" while the people rose and sang.

ONE of the best pictures ever seen in Peoria is the general verdict with regard to the big Goldwyn picture, "Polly of the Circus," with Mae Marsh in the title role.

The extraordinary number of big features, including a circus in real operation and all the number of other big thrills, together with the certain human pathos introduced, proved the reasons for its popularity.

The picture was shown at the Apollo theatre, the largest strictly motion picture house in the city, and each show during its run here found record crowds in attendance, according to the manager, Dee Robinson.

Brief Bits from Springfield

GEORGE W. LAMB of 1712 South Spring Street, Springfield, is one of the winners of Overland automobiles in the recent contest conducted by the producers of "The Crimson Stain Mystery." Mr. Lamb is a mail carrier and a great photoplay fan. There is no doubt but that his Christmas will be a great success.

MANAGER ED KUNZ of the Princess theatre has booked "The Zeppelin's Last Raid," the Thomas H. Ince state right feature. He plans on showing it December 30-31 and January 1.

THE weather has been terrible the past week. Business has been poor at all the theatres. Playhouses that had on special features suffered greatly. Even the houses showing regular programs lost money.

"THE RETREAT OF THE GERMANS AT THE BATTLE OF ARRAS" is proving a magnet that is attracting many to the Majestic. The third episode is now showing and each instalment gets better. It is the opinion of many that these are the best war pictures yet shown in the city.

THE Gaiety is installing a new generator.

DOUGLAS FAIRBANKS is at the Gaiety in "Reaching for the Moon." Lobby conversation says it is "Doug's" best.

MANAGER HARRY LOPER announces "The Auction Block" as the Lyric attraction for December 21, 22 and 23.

PARAMOUNT subjects are going well at the Royal. Gus Kerasotes is giving his patrons a good show for the money.

ED MAISEL, manager of the Capitol, has secured "Birth" for Thursday of this week.

THE Princess is doing well with World films. Carlyle Blackwell and Kitty Gordon were seen in pictures last week and were well received.

"WOMANHOOD, THE GLORY OF THE NATION," was given three days at the Princess. Everyone liked the play. Business was not up to standard on account of the bad weather.

H. A. KELLY of the Superb Film Company is still at Jacksonville, Fla. He is expected back in the city this week. Office reports that work on "Lincoln, from Cradle to Grave," is going along nicely.

HENRY LEHRMAN'S Sunshine Comedies have made a hit at the Lyric. "Roaring Lions and Wedding Bells" was a scream and the monkey in "A Milk-Fed Vamp" is still the talk of the town.

THE CHATTERTON, which has been showing Hearst-Pathe News, will close down next week. It will be dark until Christmas week.

BEN ROVIN of the Amuse-U says he is doing nicely. Ben is charging a "jitney" and says that's all his patrons want to pay.

ALTERATIONS at the Vaudette are completed and Manager Watts has installed more seats. The Vaudette is now as pretty and cozy a picture house as you can find anywhere. Artcraft, Triangle and Paramount pictures are shown.

W. S. HART in "The Cold Deck" is the attraction at the Gaiety on Christmas Day.

THE Majestic is showing "The Boys at Camp Grant," where some local men are putting in their licks, and the rental of the film goes to the Chicago Daily News Tobacco Fund.

RUSSELL LOPER, brother of Harry Loper of the Lyric, and he himself manager of the Kimbark theatre, Chicago, has come out of camp with a first lieutenantcy. He will be stationed at Chillicothe, Ohio. H. T. Loper, his father, and Mrs. Loper, his mother, are looking after the Kimbark.

CHARLES WILLIAMS, manager of the Vaudette, has enlisted in the army and is now at Jefferson Barracks, Mo.

What Kind of a Fellow Is — Abrams?

Being a Glance at the Real Human Side of the Big Men of the Picture Game—Caught in Action!

By William A. Johnston

THERE are two remarkable facts about Hiram Abrams—aside from his being president of Paramount Pictures Corporation.

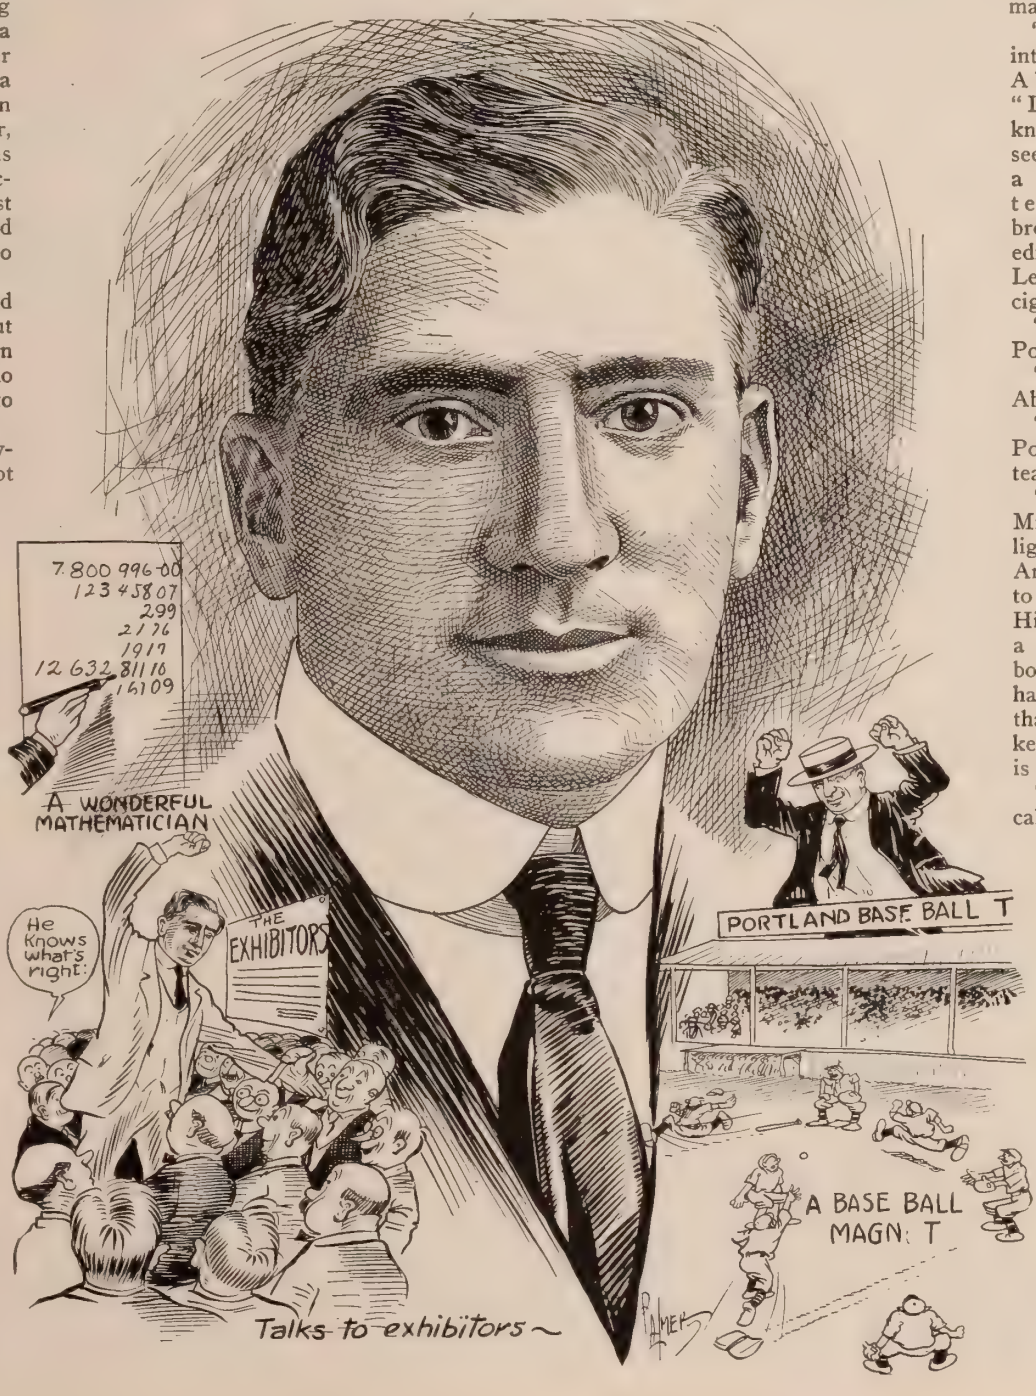
The first is that he did not want this interview; in fact he shyly and sincerely tried to sidestep it.

The second is that in his history it is recorded, in black and white, that, once, as a salesman, he actually demanded a commission instead of a salary.

As an interviewer of public men and as an employer of labor we are frankly skeptical on both points; as you are, gentle reader.

We still believe that Mr. Abrams will purchase a number of extra copies of this issue, keeping one in his desk to be taken out and secretly admired at intervals, and that Mrs. Abrams, after remarking that the cartoon certainly does not do Mr. Abrams justice, will mail the aforementioned copies to a list of relatives and friends.

As for preferring a commission to a salary, we never heard of such a salesman. It is on record, however, that Hiram Abrams sold pictures so successfully that he just naturally evoluted from Portland to Paramount.



We are hardened in these matters, but for sincere evasion of publicity we do hand the palm to Mr. Abrams.

He was so nervous that we got nervous.

"Now, see here, Mr. Abrams," we said firmly, "you shouldn't be interview-shy. On that Western trip of yours we noted first page stories on you in all the big dailies."

Mr. Abrams sighed, as over unpleasant memories. "In San Francisco," he smiled, "a young reporter came to see me. Each of us scared the other. Finally it got on my nerves. 'For God's sake, boy, I said finally, 'stop shaking your knees. Mine are shaking too."

"After that you got along all right."

"Oh, sure."

"Well, so shall we. The operation is only a minor one. Now, let's see, Mr. Abrams, your home is in Portland, Maine."

Mr. Abrams wheeled straight around in his chair and brightened all over. "Then you know Portland?" he asked eagerly.

"Like a book," we prevaricated.

Mr. Abrams' chest expanded and he regarded us admiringly. "Have a cigar," said he.

"It's a beautiful city," we went on.

Mr. Abrams arose and shook hands warmly. Then he dived into his desk. "Have a box of cigars—if you like the one you're smoking," he added anxiously.

"Once," we puffed on, mendaciously, "once we sat in the handsome dining room on the top floor of Portland's splendid leading hotel and got a sweeping view of the city, the winding sea coast and the wooded islands of the bay, its broad, shaded avenues, its magnificent homes."

"Do you know," interrupted Mr. Abrams genially, "I'm glad to have known you. I can see now that it takes a man of deep intelligence and broad culture to edit a trade paper. Let me light your cigar."

"But to return to Portland."

"Yes?" said Mr. Abrams eagerly.

"You own the Portland baseball team."

"It's some team!" Mr. Abrams' eyes lighted up proudly. And, we are prone to remark here that Hiram Abrams has a fine eye. It's a boy's eye. And we have a pet theory that a man who keeps his boy's eyes is a pretty fine sort.

"What do they call you in Portland, Mr. Abrams? Hiram?"

"No," Mr. Abrams looked a trifle sheepish.

"Well, what?"

"Hymie," admitted Mr. Abrams.

"That's all, Mr. Abrams. But we haven't talked about the film business."

"Well, that's a big subject, too—too big to talk about. Let's go to lunch and talk Portland."

Milwaukee Houses Raise Scale

Managers Predict Passing of Five and Ten Cent Shows—Thomas Saxe Declares It Good for Business

HE big men among the Milwaukee theatres all are predicting the elimination of the five and ten-cent picture house. In fact many of them see in the present upheaval and the unsettled conditions of today the passing of the five-cent house, which they say is already done for, and that those managers who insist in holding on are only staving off the inevitable. According to Thomas Saxe, who himself owns a number of five and ten-cent houses, the five-cent house is practically gone and the ten-cent house is going.

"Many of the theatres that now exist are going to go," said Mr. Saxe. "Most people will call this a disaster but those who know will welcome it as one of the best things that ever happened to the business. Right now we have far too many theatres all showing for too little money. What we want is one or two big down town houses showing high class stuff and a number of other cheaper ones like the cheaper grade theatrical performance and then a few widely scattered outskirt theatres. It is going to be a case of the survival of the fittest. What the public demands is bigger and better productions. One way they can be given is by getting more money into the theatre and paying more money for productions. I believe that in the near future the present wasteless exchange method of booking is going to be eliminated. The pictures are either going to be booked like the vaudeville acts are today or some sort of an arrangement such as now handles the booking of the $2 house. The standard price will be 15 cents and 25 cents with some very big attractions getting more money. I do not believe that any of the bigger houses will attempt to carry a fixed admission scale. They will never go below the 15-cent and 25-cent mark—this will positively be their minimum price."

Cromlin Holds Optimistic View

Head of Inter-Ocean Film Company Sees Bright Future in Foreign Markets—Progress Noted

PAUL CROMLIN speaks optimistically of the foreign situation as reflected on the motion picture industry. He reports business good in the foreign markets. Mr. Cromlin is president of the Inter-Ocean Film Company and represents many of the large producing concerns in the distribution of American product in foreign countries. He said, in speaking of conditions abroad and the success which has been the good fortune of the Inter-Ocean since its organization less than two years ago:

"Since organizing the Inter-Ocean one and one-half years ago, we have had travelers in all of the important foreign countries and in addition to establishing our own branch in New York, we have established The Inter-Ocean Film Co., Ltd., with offices at Wardour street, London, and more recently have opened a branch at 43 Rue Le Brugere. We had a representative cover South America and permanent arrangements have been made for all alliances in the South American countries.

"So successful have we been in the placing of American product in foreign countries that we have taken on, recently, an addition to our line. A contract has been closed whereby the Inter-Ocean will exploit all Paralta Plays productions in foreign markets.

"At the same time," said Mr. Cromlin, "we closed a deal with W. H. Hodkinson Corporation, whereby we become exclusive selling agents for this company in the foreign field.

"The theory under which the Inter-Ocean is operating is that the foreign field is a highly specialized branch of the picture industry and the only way in which the best results can be obtained is to make a personal and detailed study of peculiar conditions or requirements of each of these respective territories.

"It was organized on this theory when other concerns were throwing up their hands and becoming disheartened at the complexity of conditions brought about by the great war. I determined that a bold, energetic, aggressive stand should be taken in order to fill the gap in the line and to supply the foreign demand which was there and is there today, despite the handicap of the war.

"Before leaving for England, recently, John H. Taylor closed a deal for twenty-seven Art Drama productions and these have already been contracted for in the United Kingdom and France. Last week, a deal was closed for fifty-seven Christie Comedies for the United Kingdom and those were sold for the coming year at the rate of one per week.

"It is expensive and unprofitable for a concern to exploit their own product in the foreign field when this world conflict is waging, sending travelers and assuming the expenses incident to such procedure at the present time; but by becoming the clearing house for a number of American manufacturers, the Inter-Ocean is able to reduce the expense to a minimum, and place the product in a most advantageous manner with the foreign buyer.

"The outlook for 1918, notwithstanding present obstacles, is most promising and the Inter-Ocean is looking forward to an increased business. Every convenience has been made possible in order that we may best serve the interests of our clients. The foreigner who comes to our office can feel at home, for we made every provision for his comfort and in order that his inability to speak the English language may not interfere with carrying out his intentions, we have the services of linguists who are acquainted with all foreign languages.

Exhibitors Join Hands in Capitol

League and Recently Formed American Association Plan to Unite for Common Good of the Industry—Important Matters Are Taken Up

THE exhibitors of America, represented by the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America, and the recently formed American Exhibitors' Association, are once more arrayed side by side and hand in hand for the good of their business, following the convention of exhibitors held in Washington, December 11 and 12.

Besides being one of the most important results of the meeting, which was well attended, the rejoining of the two factions indicates that the exhibitors realize that only in unity is there strength to meet conditions caused by the world conflict, and that they are going to face these things with an unbroken front spells, in itself, victory for the exhibitor individually and as a whole.

Harmony Committee Chosen

To thoroughly bridge the tremendously wide gap caused last summer in Chicago, from which resulted the American Exhibitors' Association, a committee of eight members was appointed to undertake the work of figuring out details of bringing the two exhibitor factions into one united organization. This committee is composed of four members of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America and four of the American Exhibitors' Association.

What was at first expected to be a difficult task in getting the supposedly warring factions together, turned out to be a very easy and simple operation, doubtless due to the fact that there is hardly an exhibitor in the whole country now who does not realize that united action is needed for the preservation of the business. Dissension was an absent and unknown quantity when the committees who are to do the principal work regarding legislation and amalgamation were appointed, and it is expected that within a very short time excellent results will begin to show from the convention.

Storm Delays Delegates

Owing to the extremely bad weather that had prevailed in the Eastern territory, the opening session of the convention, called at 12.30 o'clock on Tuesday, December 11, by Lee A. Ochs, president of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America, was not as largely attended as was expected. The tie-up of trains all over the country kept many of the delegates from arriving, and for this reason President Ochs announced that the first session would be an informal one. Following this he announced the appointment of a committee on rules and one on resolutions. The former is composed of Harry Bernstein, chairman; Sam Bullock, E. M. Clarke and Joseph Hoppe. The latter committee is composed of Frank Eager, chairman; Charles C. Pettijohn, secretary; Louis L. Levine and Alfred S. Black. All delegates present were instructed to confer with the resolutions committee and submit any ideas they might have on the business to be transacted by the convention.

Mr. Ochs then made an address with a plea for harmony as the keynote, and asked for unity of action by a united body of exhibitors working directly in the interests of the business.

A DAY LATE

And a New Feature of Importance

ON account of the Christmas holiday falling just after our press day, the paper won't get into your hands next week until a day late. Perhaps the delay may be longer, owing to the Christmas mail congestion. But—

Keep your eyes open for the postman. Next week's issue will carry an interesting and important feature: "What Happened When I Raised My Prices," being the actual experiences of a number of exhibitors who took the bull by the horns.

Motion Picture News is going right ahead this winter to justify your faith in "the book with the bright red cover."

A motion by William Brandt, of Brooklyn, to adjourn owing to the fact that nothing definite could be done without more delegates was overruled when Alfred S. Black suggested that representatives tell individual experiences with the war tax, and how it had affected business. For the most part, these reports on the tax were not favorable, as it was predicted that many of the theatres of the country would not only lose money, but would be forced to close their doors.

Will Not Pass Tax

Another of the important decisions of the convention was the placing in the records of great opposition to passing the fifteen-cents per reel tax along. The exhibitors are unalterably opposed to this method of handling the footage charge. Other oppositions placed in the records were: The advance deposit system; the present high salaries, termed exorbitant and unreasonable, of certain stars; the unbusinesslike waste in other branches of the industry by manufacturers and distributors; the daylight saving plan.

The convention expressed itself as being in favor of the issuance by the government of a fifteen-cent coin, which idea was suggested some time ago by John R. Freuler of Mutual; the elimination of or a proper definition of Section 1007A of the War Revenue Tax Bill, and the action of the motion picture exhibitors of Cleveland in their effort for legal relief from the reel tax and to pledge the united support of all organizations in their future endeavors upon this subject. The convention also expressed approval and endorsed a change in the present tax schedule to comply with the elimination of the present tax based on the seating capacity of theatres; elimination of all admission taxes of children under twelve years of age, and the addition of a tax on one cent on each five-cent admission for persons over the age of twelve.

Legislative Committee Appointed

To obtain the necessary legislative remedies for the picture business from Congress, a permanent legislative committee was appointed. This consists of H. B. Varner, chairman; Lee A. Ochs, J. H. O'Donnell, Ernest Horstmann and Frank J. Rembusch. They will represent the exhibitors of the country in all of the legislative work to be done in Washington this winter, and will proceed, it is understood, without instructions or limitations. The necessary expenses for this work will be paid by the allied organizations of exhibitors.

On the second day of the convention a committee of independent producers asked permission to address the meeting, and this was granted. They were: W. L. Sherrill, of the Frohman Amusement Corporation; Lester Park, of Ogden Pictures Corporation; Harry Rapf, I. E. Chadwick, of the Ivan Film Corporation; J. A. Golden, of the Triumph Film Corporation, and Joseph Farnham, of the Frohman Amusement Corporation. The latter acted as spokesman, and expressed a desire on the part of the independent producers to present a plan of co-operative distribution that would eliminate waste. This plan indicated the pictures would be distributed direct from manufacturer to exhibitor, and would be routed over a series of circuits via parcels post.

Connecticut Church Uses Simplex Machine

Because Charles Carver, one-time actor, entered the service of Christ Church, New Haven, Conn., to continue his studies for the Episcopal ministry, that church became the first in Connecticut to adopt the motion picture screen as the best medium to teach children stories of the Bible and impress upon them the lessons of their Sunday school.

Christ Church has purchased a late model Simplex and turned the assembly hall of its parish house into a display room, and beside showing the pictures to Sunday school classes, is giving, once in two weeks, a motion picture display for the public to finance the new project, and latest reports declare the project well timed and highly satisfactory.

Common Sense Causes Gasp

Hodkinson's Deal with General Film Surprising Because It Is Rational, Says the Latter—Move Considered Wise

GENERAL FILM COMPANY this week made an announcement concerning the new arrangement by which W. W. Hodkinson will use the General Film exchanges to distribute Paralta Plays, in which it is pointed out that the move caused a gasp in the industry because common sense in picture affairs always do that—at first.

General Film said: "Apparently few had supposed Mr. Hodkinson could refrain from adding another to the already large list of distributing organizations, in undertaking to market the Paralta Plays. Instead of which he announced that he had found in the General Film Company every facility required for his high standard of operations, and that he was going to use this organization instead of duplicating it."

The joint announcement of General Film Company and the W. W. Hodkinson organization was unexpected because it was so rational. Cool-headedness and common sense in motion picture affairs somehow always cause a gasp—at first. Perhaps some thought General Film Company was not broad enough to welcome independent production for distribution. Just the contrary is true. Perhaps some believed Mr. Hodkinson's genius was really a mania and that he would go on forming new distributing organizations for the mere joy of paralleling those already established. His policy is just the opposite. For, as he says: "I could have opened new exchange offices and piled additional expense upon the already overburdened exhibitor, but in keeping with my policy of utilizing the elements already existing in the business, I have arranged to use the finely equipped offices of a great exchange organization as the means of bringing the products I handle to the door of the theatre under an arrangement which gives us the lowest distributing cost in the industry."

Soldiers Take "Movie" to France

In addition to making things spick and span wherever they may happen to be "somewhere in France," the American soldiers are educating the populace to the joys of motion pictures through the medium of a complete outfit used in camp.

At one end of the Field Headquarters they built a stage that measured thirty-feet across and sixteen deep. Over the entire front they threw a screen of white cotton and at the other end of the interior rigged up a projector. Borrowing films from the French army, they opened a movie, free to any and all, military or civilian, inhabiting the town or country about. Success was instant.

Three shows are given daily and the populace literally flock from miles around to attend them. There is not another movie within thirty miles, and that is in a town of much more importance.

Hazel Mills Adams Featured

James Montgomery Flagg is featuring Hazel Mills Adams, daughter of Dora Mills Adams, as the Superstitious Girl in his new series, "Girls You Know," shortly to be released.

TWO GUNMEN

Harry Green's Little Joke

HARRY H. GREEN, former president of the Motion Picture Exhibitors Corporation of the Northwest, is in the market for a rabbit's foot.

After two unsuccessful adventures as an exhibitor, Harry went in with W. A. Steffes to corner the Independent field. Along came the war and laid out his State Rights business alongside the one-night opera stands. Harry decided there was nothing like business.

He still has a jewelry store. A few days ago bandits entered and said gently but firmly, "Hands up!"

The bandits reminded Harry of an early motion picture trust. They took everything they could conveniently. Despairing of catching the bandits, Harry hopes they will try the independent field with their capital.

Review Board Helps Training Commission

The United States Commission on Training Camp Activities and the Playground and Recreation Association of America have asked the National Board of Review to aid them in making a survey of the motion picture activities of communities surrounding the training camps. Orrin G. Cocks, advisor secretary of the National Board of Review, started, on December 12, for a trip through the South Atlantic states, where some of the largest camps are located. He has already visited Boston and Portsmouth and been in touch with the situation at Camp Merritt and at Norfolk, Va.

The objects of the survey are those of obtainining accurate statistics about the interest of the soldiers in this form of amusement and its relation to other forms of extra-camp amusements; to develop cooperation between the exhibitor and the field representative of the commission; to advise friendly interest in the whole problem between the exhibitor and the local camp authorities; and to assure the communities of the whole hearted support of the motion picture industry in the Government program.

Chicago License Problem Is Unanswered

Aldermen on the council license committee of the Chicago City Council tussled with the theatre license problem again last week. The meeting, which was scheduled as the final hearing on the subject, developed the fact that there was still so much unknown as to the amount of money that could be raised under the various plans submitted that further consideration would be necessary. The city wants to add $20,000 yearly to its revenue through the proposed increase in theatre licenses, and is now considering four different schedules.

General Film Makes Self Strong on Tax

Commenting upon the recent vote of commendation by a league of exhibitors in the Pacific Northwest for General Film Company's attitude in the 15 cent charge matter, an official of the company points to it as another evidence of the cordiality that exists between the company and the exhibitors of the country.

"Perhaps at no time in its history has General Film Company possessed so uniformly the confidence of the exhibitor," said he. "The good intentions of General Film toward its clients are firmly understood and thoroughly appreciated. This gratifying sentiment has been cumulative. It is not the result of any impulsive declaration on the part of General Film Company, nor any protestations of extravagant affection. It has been the result of performance, not boasting. The friendship of the exhibitor has been won in a dignified and lasting manner. And each time when the test came General Film Company, I am glad to say, has been found standing just where the exhibitor could reasonably have expected us to stand—with the exhibitor."

Hodkinson Issues New Process Plan

W. W. Hodkinson announced this week that he will issue next week a supplement to Motion Picture News explaining fully the new process film which he is preparing to release. This new process, which is called "The Motion Picture PLUS," Mr. Hodkinson describes as "Quality Insurance," for, as he points out, he cannot find in the industry as at present consituted, any vehicle which can act as a guarantee to the public of quality, anything, either trade mark or star, which is an insurance that the picture can be anything out of the ordinary.

"The new process picture," Mr. Hodkinson said, "will bring you not only a bigger and better product on the screen, something which will lift motion pictures to a higher plane of public entertainment than it has ever reached or ever could reach in its present form, but also a guarantee and control of quality. It is an "improved medium, a medium which is to the motion pictures of today what the modern disc phonograph is to the old wax cylinder."

Rembusch Replies to Mastbaum

Insists That Amalgamation Can Be Brought About by Standardization, and Incorporates Talk with Selznick—Also Quotes Opinion Voiced by P. A. Powers

THE recent bomb-shell telegram, which found its way into the midst of the motion picture industry, from Stanley V. Mastbaum, of Philadelphia, and which, when it burst with a loud report, created a chorus of replies of various nature, has been commented upon by F. J. Rembusch, among others.

The answer of the secretary-treasurer of the American Exhibitors' Association, Inc., comes in the form of a letter sent to Mr. Mastbaum, and bears the condensed opinion of Mr. Rembusch as to just how the amalgamation of the industry can be brought about, to the best interests of all concerned.

Wise Man to Answer

Beginning, Mr. Rembusch said: "Mr. Robert Lieber of Indianapolis gave me a copy of your telegram that has caused such a stir in the industry, and asked for my opinion as to the best remedy to be applied to the chronic diseases of the industry.

"It would take a very wise man to answer, but I would venture to humbly suggest that gest that amalgamation can be brought about by standardization.

"Just as the size of the film, the sprocket hole, film reel and all mechanical parts have been standardized, so likewise could be standardized the production of film subjects. For example, P. A. Powers suggested to me a couple of months ago when I was in New York that if exhibitors would agree not to use any film service where the star receives in excess of $200,000 a year, or say $1,000 a week, or some such figure, then we would not be playing a poker game with the stakes set sky high, but working along definite, economical business lines.

Talks with Selznick

"Another producer, Mr. Selznick, and I had a talk at Ocean View about the same time and he expressed himself thus, 'While my associates would probably not approve of my expressing this opinion, I want to say that organization of exhibitors large enough to force the producer to work along economical lines I would welcome, but just as long as the exhibitors allow one producer to milk them, then all other producers have the same right, in fact, must exercise the same prerogative in order to live.'

"Therefore, Mr. Mastbaum, evidently the betterment of this industry must come from the exhibitors and come through organization and standardization.

Two Reasons for It

"There are two reasons for this. If it comes through the producers' branch it comes from a small group of men who would probably use selfish methods to the ruin of the exhibitor, but if it comes through the exhibitors' branch, we have here such a large body of men who compose the permanent investment and assets of the industry that their action would be for the best interests of the entire industry, because, first—A large body will do the right thing. Second—Our investments are more permanent, therefore we must look to the betterment of our conditions over a long period, and not as the film producer who must necessarily work out their industry problems on a basis of thirty to sixty days, which is generally the biggest part of the life and run of individual film exploitation.

"Therefore, organization is first necessary, and certainly, above all, national organization — furthermore organization without any entangling alliances, supported only by exhibitors.

Organization Not Favored

"But as a general thing, the big exhibitor has not, it seems, and will not take any interest in organization. Take yourself, Mr. Rothapfel, Marcus Loew and several hundred other big exhibitors whom I could name. You take no interest whatsoever in national organization and never did, but allow a small group of men to be the national organizations and represent the industry when you should have a voice in same and be in the front ranks.

"When the majority of exhibitors take a real interest in national organization work and the organization becomes very large, we can insist on standardization and the amalgamation you speak of will be a reality. First amalgamate the exhibitor together in a great body without any entangling alliances, and all other things for the good of the industry will come to pass."

ROTHAPFEL SAYS—

Read His First Answers to Exhibitors on Another Page

THIS week the MOTION PICTURE NEWS publishes the first answers to questions of exhibitors answered by S. L. Rothapfel, recognized as the world's leading exhibitor, creator of the Rialto and of the Rivoli, which is soon to show the nation new wonders of picture presentation.

Some exhibitors are probably hesitant in sending in their inquiries. But Mr. Rothapfel has offered to do this work, purely because he is whole heartedly interested in the industry and the success of every showman in the country. He is doing a labor of love and conferring a great blessing on his fellow exhibitors.

The only condition to this service is that questions must not enter into the merits of particular pictures or brand of pictures and that they must be sent through the NEWS. Address your inquiries:

Florence Deshon Signs With Vitagraph

Florence Deshon, who completed work recently in Rex Beach's "The Auction Block," in which production she had the role of Lilas Lynn, has been signed by Vitagraph to play leads in feature productions. Miss Deshon is now under the direction of Paul Scardon, playing opposite Harry Morey in his latest Vitagraph production.

Miss Deshon is a striking type of brunette. She had the vampire part in "The Auction Block" and has been seen in leading character roles in several of the big features for the program and open market.

Wesley Ruggles Joins Boys in Khaki

Wesley Ruggles, Vitagraph director, has donned the khaki and now is one of Yaphank's boys. Mr. Ruggles was called in the draft, but obtained a respite to finish a picture he was making for Vitagraph, entitled "The Blind Adventure." Then he waited around a few weeks and, as he received no peremptory order to report at Camp Upton, went to the studio and directed a one-reel Vitagraph comedy, entitled "He Had to Camouflage," Graham Baker, the regular director, acting in a supervisory capacity.

Emerson and Loos Return to New York

John Emerson and Anita Loos, it was announced last week by Bennie Zeidman, press agent for Douglas Fairbanks, are returning to New York, where they will consider a series of offers from various film companies for their services as director and scenarioist, respectively. It is announced their contract with Fairbanks has expired.

This leaves Allan Dwan to direct future Fairbanks features.

Chicago Tells Congress of Tax

Sends Delegation to Washington to Ask Alleviation of Burdens—Shows Decided Willingness to Support the Government

THE Chicago Motion Picture Theatre Owners' Association, at a meeting held in their hall at 19 West Adams street, Friday, December 9, decided to send a delegation of live-wire exhibitors to Washington to represent them at the convention called to consider the war tax and suggest remedial legislation. The delegates were instructed not to "squeal" nor to do anything which would lead Congress to believe the exhibitors objected to doing their share, but to see if it was not possible to get certain modifications in the present tax schedule on the box-office, especially with regard to the tax on five-cent admissions.

The exhibitors expressed the general belief that Congress was amenable to suggestion and did not intend to throw such a hardship upon theatre men as the present tax makes them bear. Louis Frank expressed the general sentiment of the members when he said that the government is going to get the tax one way or another.

"We've got to pay a war tax," he said, "and there's no use trying to buck this thing. All we can do if we send delegates to Washington is to see if we can get Congress to alleviate our burdens. They can't remove them but they may be able to lessen them. We don't want to go down there like a bunch of squealers. That would do us no good. But if we go there like a patriotic group of men ready to support the government to the best of our ability and asking only to be allowed to make a living and fair profit out of our enterprises we are bound to get favorable consideration."

The extent to which the war tax has dipped into the exhibitor's pocket was illustrated by August Zilligen's statement that it had cost him $415 or just $36 more than his profits during the preceding month.

It was suggested that Congress be informed of the willingness of the theatre men to give thirty or even fifty per cent. of their profits. "Other enterprises are taxed according to their profits," one member declared, "Why shouldn't we be taxed that way instead of being required to pay from ten to twenty per cent. of our gross receipts when gross receipts in many instances do not even reflect profits?"

The committee chosen to represent the Chicago local of the American Exhibitors' Association comprised the following: Louis Frank, Edward T. Beatty, August Zilligen and Jacob Cooper.

Brenon Thinks Star Will Wane

Repeats His Assertions That Story Comes First and Foremost—Admits Some Plays Cannot Succeed Without Original Star

HERBERT BRENON, in tabulating his achievements of the past year and in looking forward to the new year, repeats his formerly-made assertion that he is opposed to the star system, and that he believes the pedestal-players are due for a slump in 1918.

Mr. Brenon said: "In the making of pictures I am a firm believer in the story first, last and all the time. I believe that for the development of a screen story as with everything else, the very best material should be obtained, not only for the highest place, but for the most insignificant as well.

"In selecting a cast for production, I do not look for big names. To me talent and suitability are far more important factors. If, however, an artist of world wide reputation is best fitted to a certain type of role, and his name is indissolubly connected with a certain part, I waive the policy of no star, and welcome the appearance of the name of that artist in connection with my production. Take, for instance, the case of Sir Johnston Forbes-Robertson, or Otis Skinner. Who can bring to mind the production of "The Passing of the Third Floor Back" without conjuring up the mental vision of Sir Johnston in his performance of the Stranger? Or again, is it possible to think of "Kismet" without thinking of Otis Skinner in the role of the beggar Haji? These two artists are part of their chartcters in these two dramas. They have created and developed these characters until they absolutely become essential to the presentation of the play. It is impossible to separate one from the other.

"No matter how great the drawing power of a star, however, it is absolutely fatal to sacrifice the production as a whole. That to me is the great argument against the star system, and really the only one.

"When the time comes that it is necessary to sacrifice the supporting company, and cut down on the sets, etc., then it is time to cut down on the star. Otherwise someone is bound to suffer and in nine cases out of ten, it is the exhibitor; and as the exhibitor is the rock upon which the whole motion picture business is founded, it is obvious that to tax him beyond his strength is disastrous."

Baltimore Exhibitors Go to Washington

Representatives from the Maryland Branch to the convention of the members of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America were all selected from Baltimore. The delegation which went to Washington on December 11, 12 and 13 consisted of President Frank A. Hornig, of the Maryland Branch, Walter Pacy and J. Louis Rome.

Michigan A. E. A. Solid

The Michigan branch of the American Exhibitors' Association is now on a permanent basis, as a direct result of a meeting held at the Hotel Tuller, Detroit, on November 27. The permanent officers of the permanent branch, which has a total membership of nearly 300, are as follows: President, S. A. Moran, of Ann Arbor; first vice-president, Herb Weil, of Port Huron; second vice-president, J. R. Denniston, of Monroe; Claude E. Cady, of Lansing, is secretary; Wirt S. McLaren, of Jackson, is treasurer, and Ray J. Branch is state organizer and manager.

The association, in joint session with Detroit exhibitors, went on record as opposing the 15-cent film tax and decided to join the Detroit exhibitors in fighting this tax. They also went on record as strongly opposing the music tax.

Charles C. Pettijohn addressed the exhibitors at their afternoon session, urging greater co-operation, greater organization and greater support to the A. E. A.

Philadelphia Sends Exhibitors to Washington

The exhibitors who were at Washington from Philadelphia during the convention are as follows: From the United Exhibitors' Association: Fred G. Nixon-Nirdlinger, Columbus Stamper, Jay Emanuel, M. Stieffel, L. Kapner, W. Hunt, Allen Snyder, E. J. O'Keefe, Jimmie Ginns, H. Green, Charles Segal, and Morris Spiers.

Representatives from the Exhibitors' League: President O'Donnell, M. Rapport, Benjamin Shindler, Howard Evans, Charles Goodwin, Frank Mace and Jack Conway.

Swanson & Nolan Smiling

The First National Exhibitors' Circuit franchise for Colorado, New Mexico, Utah, Wyoming and part of Idaho is controlled by Swanson & Nolan, of Denver.

Along with other members of the "First National" they are enjoying a high tide of prosperity as the time for Chaplin's first release under his new contract approaches. A letter to the Denver firm from Sid Chaplin stated that he was living on the grounds during the studio construction and that Charlie arrived early and stuck around all day keeping the workmen hustling and in a good humor.

Baltimore Exchanges Help the Drafted Men

A special performance for the benefit of the drafted men at Camp Meade, held under the auspices of the Ladies' Auxiliary of the Sixteenth Division, was held recently at the Gertrude McCoy theatre, Baltimore. Through the courtesy of H. C. Wales and M. Siegel of the Baltimore Film Exchange, the Bluebird production, "The Mysterious Mr. Tiller," was shown. P. Oletsky of the Baltimore Film Exchange, donated an L-Ko comedy and R. Berger and Wallace High of Perfection Pictures, gave "The Man Who Was Afraid."

Under the auspices of the Woman's Twentieth Century Club a benefit performance for the Camp Meade boys was also held at the Rialto, Baltimore, last Sunday.

Ruskin Takes Over Opera House in Iowa Town

J. W. Ruskin of Adell, Ia., has taken over the Opera House theatre and booked a number of super-features for this winter. Mr. Ruskin finds it profitable, he says, to sell tickets in advance for his big features. "It insures a good attendance in the event of bad weather and bad roads," he says. In his opinion the exhibitor can afford to make a discount on patrons who buy tickets in advance.

Tom Moore Reorganizes Forces in Washington

Tom Moore has reorganized his theatre forces into a $2,000,000 company to be known as the Moore Theatres Company. In addition to the three theatres now in operation, the Rialto in the course of erection, and another house whose site has not been selected, near F and Tenth streets, all in the down-town section, the company will control five or more residential houses, located in various parts of the city. It is Mr. Moore's intention to see that every section within a reasonable radius has a large, comfortable, beautiful neighborhood picture house, where the best productions will be shown.

The company will confine its interests to Washington as far as building theatres is concerned.

Bennett Heads String of Picture Theatres

Hugh Bennett of Fairfield, Ia., is president of the Iowa Enterprise Co., controlling a new string of twenty-seven motion picture theatres throughout Iowa. Mr. Bennett was in Omaha last week booking Hart re-issues, Billy West and Christie comedies. "Business is good," he said, "and every indication is it will remain that way. In our theatres we have merely added the 10 per cent tax.

"Iowa theatre patrons want comedies and comedy dramas this season. They are seeking patrons in a manner I never before noticed. Where our attendance for comedies has always been good, now our record houses are when we show comedies. The least bit of advertising brings them out."

Omaha Exhibitor Buys House in Sioux City

Jackson Freeman, owner of the Palm Theatre in Omaha, Neb., has bought the Model at Sioux City, Ia., and sold his house in Lincoln, Neb. He shows vaudeville in connection with his pictures and reports he is doing a big business in Sioux City, where his plan is a new one.

Jewel in Omaha Moves to New Quarters

The Jewel Productions, Inc., exchange in Omaha, Neb., has moved into the same building with the Laemmle Film Service Co., Twelfth and Farnam Streets, Omaha. C. L. Booth is the manager.

TEXAS.—The Ince theatre at Enterprise has been leased by Lon Brown of Duvall, and he anticipates making extensive improvements and alterations.

Pathe Serves Many Theatres in Cincinnati

Out of 110 theatres in Cincinnati, 82 are now using Pathe service, owing to the splendid work of city salesman Chase of Pathe's office, it was announced last week by Pathe.

Calvert Marries and Gets a Promotion

C. W. Calvert, manager of the Bluebird exchange in Omaha, Neb., and one of the most popular film men in the Omaha territory, was married recently and two days afterward learned in Chicago that he had been named manager of all the Laemmle branches in Omaha. The Laemmle Film Service Co. is one of the largest exchanges in Omaha.

Crandall Takes Over Theatre in Washington

Harry Crandall has taken over the American Theatre on First Street and Rhode Island Avenue. After being closed for a couple of weeks for improvements, Crandall's American will re-open about Christmas with a restful color scheme of interior decorations, new lighting system, new screen, and a daily change of high class pictures. The American has a capacity of 600 and is located in a residential section that will give good patronage to good pictures.

Harry Marsey Closes Rialto in Buffalo

The old Family Theatre in Buffalo, which was recently opened under the name of the Rialto, by Harry Marsey, has been closed, it was announced last week. Manager Marsey had re-decorated the house inside and out.

Too much competition and high operation cost, with the war tax as a climax, are understood to have been the cause of the closing.

Los Angeles New House Uses Power's Machines

The new Kinema Theatre of Los Angeles, which has recently been opened, is one of the largest houses, seating over 3,000 people. It is perfect in all its appointments and is equipped with two Power's 6B projectors.

Metropolitan Exhibitors Show Jewel Feature

Jewel Productions, Inc., has announced that twenty-six houses in New York, Brooklyn and Newark, N. J., have booked "The Price of a Good Time" for lengthy runs.

The material and theme of the picture, backed by the added value of Lois Weber's direction, induced, it is said, many exhibitors to cancel pictures they had already booked and substitute the Jewel feature.

Philadelphia Exhibitors Offer Double Bills

It may be generosity or it may be something else, but several theatres in Philadelphia are announcing double bills which consist of two five-reel features for the one admission price.

New Deal Needed in Northwest

Predicted That Attendance at Theatres Will Be Poor This Winter—Some Houses Suffering Consequences of War

ACCORDING to reports gathered from various sections of the Northwest, that part of the country needs a new deal.

Any tabulated report on conditions, according to a representative of Motion Picture News in Minneapolis, is incomplete, for many things are contributing to the bad showing in the Northwest.

The Northwest is a farming country and its people are quick to cut down expenses if there is the slightest need. Every operating expense of the theatre has increased but expenses of patrons have also increased. They are taking it out on the theatre. Attendance is going to be poor this winter.

Theatres just now are taking in about the same amount of money they were taking in before they increased prices 5 cents on November 1. This means a lower attendance. As a result orchestras being eliminated in some cases and only piano used. In others there is some curtailment of expense on the programs though the standard has not been noticeably lowered.

City theatres are not likely to close, though there is danger that some may close in small towns as result of war tax, war expenses and general high prices. Exhibitors and exchanges are working in harmony but the money can't be dragged out.

The most serious situation seems to be a lessening in the general interest in pictures. The high cards have been played. The greatest of film spectacles would not crowd a theatre a week at moderate prices. The stories of well known books have been told and there is no longer that keen interest in seeing the latest or greatest novel filmed. The realism and action of the film which left the speaking stage high and dry in the Northwest, no longer act as a magnet.

One underlying cause is the mass of stuff put out in the lay film journals. Here are shown films in the making. A scene that takes one back to sixteenth century England, with its inns, castles and jousts, is shown to the reader in technical pictures, with a corner of the studio set with the scene and with the lights, mechanics, actors and photographers all in the game. The name of the studio is told, to be sure, but it is bad publicity nevertheless. You attend a high-class picture and hear someone near say: "That scene isn't in a real inn you know. It's just made up in a studio."

Life histories, ages, favorite pastimes and all the rest of the stuff on which patrons are now fed by these publications, makes the film business too common, robs it of the air of mystery which it must have to draw and make a potential actress out of every young girl. As a matter of fact, the more girls read of these magazines, the less they go to the films. They admit as much. They prefer to be discontented, would-be actresses than contented patrons with big happy imaginations.

Lobby displays are little used in Minneapolis in winter, the lobby space being used to shelter patrons from the weather during the one little jam period from 8 p. m. to 8:30 p. m.

It is going to be a tough winter on the industry in the Northwest and it may as well be admitted though no one is taking a negative attitude. They will all hang on if possible.

SHOW THEM!

Let the Patrons Know You Pay the Tax

THE C. & A. Amusement Company, Pocatello, Idaho, operating three theatres, the Orpheum, Princess and Olympic, overheard some of their patrons making the comment that the tax was a fraud, that the theatre proprietors were pocketing the money.

In order to convince their patrons that such is not the case, the C. & A. Company photographed the first check which they delivered to the Internal Revenue Department and had slides made of it, which are promptly flashed on the screens of the three theatres.

How does this idea strike you?

Charlotte Inquiries Flow to Commonwealth

Inquiries as to where the picture featuring Charlotte, the skater, can be seen are pouring into the offices of the Commonwealth Pictures Corporation, Chicago, in a steady stream. Upon finishing the picture a short time ago announcements were sent out to stockholders in all parts of the country. And the result was a drum fire of questioning each exhibitor had to undergo. In assuaging the desire of the stockholders and their friends to see the picture, many exhibitors promised to book it.

H. A. Spanuth, president of the Commonwealth Corporation, only recently returned to Chicago from a ten-day trip to New York, where he staged a trade showing. A number of different plans of distribution have been considered, but the state rights plan has recently been given the preference by Mr. Spanuth and his aides as offering the most profitable method of exploitation.

Poem Dedicated to Charlotte—Mrs. Backus, Author

H. A. Spanuth, president Commonwealth Pictures Corporation, who is offering on the open market the seven-reel feature, "The Frozen Warning," starring Charlotte, the sensational ice skater, announces that Mrs. Bertha A. Backus, of Providence, R. I., is winner of the prize offered by Commonwealth for the most appropriate title for Charlotte's picture.

February Exposition Makes Much Progress

The National Association of the Motion Picture Industry last week announced from its offices in the Times Building that considerable progress has been made during the past fortnight in securing contracts for space allotment for the Motion Picture Exposition in Grand Central Palace, February 2 to 9, 1918.

The exposition will be held under the joint auspices of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry and the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America, and will occupy three entire floors. Twenty-two companies already have taken space and negotiations are pending with nearly one hundred others. Contracts signed thus far are said to be for larger individual spaces than has been the case at any similar exposition of the past and all of the present entrants plan to make comprehensive, attractive displays that will be shows in themselves.

Belgium Photoplays Formed in Chicago

The Belgian Photoplays Company is the new name of the M. L. Fulton Company of Chicago. This concern has taken offices on the twentieth floor of the Continental and Commercial National Bank Building and at present is engaged in the process of reorganization and the election of new officers.

"Belgium, the Kingdom of Grief," a ten-reel feature filled with scenes taken in Belgium and originally made as an appeal to France, England and the civilized world to come to the aid of the stricken country, will be the first release to be made by the new company, it is announced.

The feature, which will be ready for distribution about the first of the year, will have its premier in fifteen cities and the proceeds from these first showings will go to the relief of the Belgians.

A musical setting has been composed which will no doubt add to the attractiveness of the picture, and posters and press sheets are in preparation.

The film will be distributed on the state rights basis.

Baltimore Opens Up With Picture Attractions

Big films are again on their way to Baltimore and from the looks of things it seems that business is anything but dull. Recently Ford's Opera House, running since the beginning of the theatrical season, only big stage hits direct from New York, opened up a week's run with William Fox's "Cleopatra." Last week, the Auditorium, running first class stage plays direct from Broadway, closed its doors against them for a week, for the manager has announced George Kleine's big film spectacle "Quo Vadis" for the entire week of December 17. This week, Ford's Opera House will again present a film production for a week's run, "The Birth of a Nation." New Year's week, the New Pickwick, which is one of Baltimore's largest motion picture houses in the downtown district, will open with "Joan, the Woman."

Creel Gives His Censorship Views

Declares There Is Same Right to a Free Film as to Free Speech and Press—Remarks Occasioned by William Fox Suit Over "Rose of the Blood" in Chicago

IN a deposition, which he gave in connection with the suit of the William Fox Film Corporation to enjoin Major Funkhouser, of Chicago, from forbidding the showing of "The Rose of Blood," in which Theda Bara takes the star part, George Creel, chairman of the Committee on Public Information, declared that "there is the same right to a free film that there is to a free press or free speech."

Coming, as the statement does, from the Government's official censor for newspapers and magazines, the remark is significant, and has been received with great interest by the motion picture industry, as a whole.

Funkhouser Disagrees

Major Funkhouser, in refusing to grant an exhibition permit for "The Rose of Blood," declared, it is said, that he had done so because he believed the exhibition of the photodrama was inimical to the best interests of the Government in the prosecution of the war against Germany.

The Committee on Public Information reviewed "The Rose of Blood" and unanimously approved it for exhibition, but Major Funkhouser, according to the Fox Corporation, still insists that he is a better judge of what the Government needs than the officials designated for this service.

Mr. Creel's deposition was taken by Charles P. Schwartz of Chicago, representing the Fox company, and by Assistant Counsel Frank P. Ayres of Chicago, representing Major Funkhouser.

Mr. Creel, on direct examination, said: "A very intimate contact has been established between the Government and the motion picture industry and the producers of the nation have worked generously to place the purposes and needs of America before the people through the films."

As indicating the close co-operation of the motion picture industry of the United States and the Government, Mr. Creel said that while there is no absolute authority vested in the Committee on Public Information to suppress a picture, there has never been, at any time, such a request made by the committee that had not been complied with instantly by the producer.

Censor Not Qualified

"I dissent in a great many instances from Major Funkhouser's observations as to the views of the Government," said Mr. Creel. "I do not think he is qualified to nor has he the authority to speak for a Government bureau in these matters."

Mr. Creel said the Fox Film Corporation had "very generously placed its entire organization at the disposal of the Government in an effort to aid in the successful prosecution of the war against Germany.

"Our sole object is to prevent the exhibition of pictures that this committee believes to be prejudicial to the national interests," said Mr. Creel on cross examination by Mr. Ayres, representing Major Funkhouser. "Aside from that we have no interest in any commercial enterprise, nor would we feel at liberty to infringe upon the legal rights of any local authority, municipal or state. We simply declare our opinions with regard to these films when presented to us, and that declaration of opinion carries with it no authority other than that imposed upon the individual by his own patriotism.

"We do feel a very vital interest in getting producers to put emphasis upon patriotic subjects and solely because of that we have an interest in the presentation of commercial films. We have made a general request of the motion picture industry that it concern itself more and more with the production of patriotic films."

"As a Government official do you want 'The Rose of Blood' to be exhibited in the cities of the United States, including Chicago?" asked Assistant Corporation Counsel Ayres.

"Yes, sir," replied Mr. Creel. "I want this picture to be shown because it violates none of the requests of the Government and seems to us to convey a patriotic message."

"If it should appear that this picture illustrates an uprising against a Government which is a friendly Government would you still say such a picture ought to be exhibited?" Mr. Ayres continued.

"The policy of this Government," declared Mr. Creel, "is to let the people know the facts in every case and the suppression of facts or happenings is opposed to this policy."

"If it should appear that this film portrays an uprising against the Romanoff Government of Russia at a time when that Government was on friendly terms with this Government would you say that such a picture should be exhibited at this time when we are at war?" persisted Mr. Ayres.

President with Revolution

"The President of the United States himself has declared his full sympathy with that revolution," was Mr. Creel's answer. "It is absolutely opposed to the policy of this Government to suppress the news of world happenings, no matter whether such is liked or disliked by any other nation. The Russian rebellion is a fact. We have accepted that fact and any newspaper, pictorial or film presentation of that rebellion is absolutely entitled to presentation so far as the Government is concerned. We do not object in any degree to any showing of that revolution on the ground that he Romanoffs were the heads of a friendly Government."

Mr. Ayres then set out Major Funkhouser's objections to "The Rose of Blood," stating that "it portrays the revolutions which have occurred and are occuring in Russia, depicting the effects of bombs, firearms and poison. It consists principally of a series of unlawful actions of one mob after another," and asked whether Mr. Creel would object to the showing of the taking of human life on the screen.

"There is the same right to a free film that there is to a free speech and a free press," declared Mr. Creel, "and when the newspapers of the country comment daily upon the destruction of human life it is stupid to try to keep it from the screen."

TELLING RUSSIA

How an Anarchy Might Have Been Nipped

"HAD motion pictures illustrating the various phases of American life been exhibited widely through Russia from the beginning of the war in 1914, it is probable that the present situation in Russia would never have occurred," said Orrin G. Cocks, Advisory Secretary of the National Board of Review of Motion Pictures, in an address on the subject, "Movies and the War," given on December 11 in the First Baptist Church, Syracuse, before the Commercial Club, a large and important women's organization of that city.

Directors Hold Meeting

W. F. Haddock last week sent out announcements to members of the Motion Picture Directors' Association that an important regular meeting of the association was to be held on Tuesday of this week at the studio, 234 West Fifty-fifth street. Several directors, it was made known, were to be initiated and matters of business interest were slated for discussion.

Grand Jury Indicts Goldstein for Picture

It was announced from Los Angeles last week that the Federal grand jury returned an indictment against Robert Goldstein of Continental Film Producing Company, and producer of "The Spirit of 76," and his bond was increased from $500 to $10,000. The charge against Goldstein is the production and showing of a film for the purpose of arousing prejudice against England, an ally of the United States in the world war. Besides the finished negative of the production, and a positive print which was confiscated last week, Federal officers have seized all portions of the film, together with the original manuscripts and scenarios which were being held by a photographer.

The film in question was shown three days at Clune's Auditorium, Los Angeles.

"Eagle's Eye" Goes Forward Rapidly

THE newly announced serial, "The Eagle's Eye," founded on a story written by William J. Flynn, chief of the Unitedl States Secret Service, as an expose of the spy system of the Imperial German Government in America and as a part of extensive propaganda to smash this dangerous menace to the peace and security of this country, is being produced at the Wharton's studio at Ithaca, New York, as rapidly as possible. Every facility of the studio is in use and additional stage room is being added to afford more space for the filming of big scenes, for this picture will contain many of massive proportions.

This serial will be told in twenty episodes. While each episode will be complete in itself and present a specific instance of alien-spy outlawry, all will be interwoven into a powerful dramatic story possessing heroic love interest—an interweaving of fact and fiction. A large company will appear in this production, headed by King Baggot and Marguerite Snow as the hero and heroine.

The cast of characters include impersonations of Count von Bernstorff, late German Ambassador to the United States; Dr. Albert, the arch-spy of all and paymaster general of the secret Imperial Germany army in this country; Captains Boy-Ed and von Papen, naval and military attaches; Wolf von Igel, whose office on lower Broadway was claimed by von Bernstorff as extra-territorial and as part of the German Embassy—and yet he never dared identify the papers seized there as German Embassy records—and other noted personalities in the Imperial spy system whose identities did not become so well known.

Moore Warns of Unusual Express Delays

Tom Moore, of Washington, last week warned exhibitors against being caught "without a show" by unusual express delays, owing to the deplorable conditions in express shipments to and from or between the points of Washington, Baltimore, Philadelphia and New York.

Shipments of all kinds, including films, according to Mr. Moore, are piled up in the Washington branches of the express companies without a chance of reaching to the bottom for a show that may be due. Naturally, the exhibitor, public and the exchanges are in for a disappointment.

Mr. Moore cites as an instance the delay of prints of "The Fall of the Romanoffs," which he expected to open at his theatres on December 2. The films arrived on December 8, six days after they had been billed to appear. The lithographs for this show, Mr. Moore states, arrived one week late.

To avoid repeated setbacks of this nature, Mr. Moore is sending special messengers to deliver the films.

Titan Engages Comedy Leading Woman

For the first time in its existence the Titan Pictures Corporation has engaged a comedy leading woman permanently for the one-reel comedies the firm is filming for the American Military Relief Association.

In the past the company has been using a different star for each picture, including Raymond Hitchcock, Josephine Harriman, Ernest Truex and Charles Grapewin.

Marjory Steed is the permanent addition to their staff. Miss Steed, whose work with the Lubin company won her a reputation for the delineation of comedy roles, attracted the attention of Frederick Russell Clark, president of the Titan company, and Rex Weber, his director, when she was playing opposite Peggy O'Neil in a recent feature release.

A series of special scripts will be written for her by Jo Swerling, the Titan scenario editor. Filming will begin about January 15. The pictures will form a part of the regular Titan program.

FIRST AID TALKS

A New Series Next Week

"DOING Our Bit" was brought in last week's issue to the point where the exhibitor who is about to raise his prices must plan his educational campaign in line with the specific needs of his class of patrons. For that reason Motion Picture News will begin in next week's issue the first of a new series of feature articles under the heading, "What Happened When I Raised My Prices."

Every type of exhibitor will be represented in the series; each will tell in his own language the exact methods he used to put over a raise, what lessons he learned, whether he would use the same method again or what changes he would make in his scheme.

This is just the sort of aid you will need in deciding on your own plan.

The Semi-Annual Index to all motion pictures released during the past half year will be another feature of next week's issue. You need it for its cross-references to Reviews, Music Charts, Ad-Talks, etc.

"The Reader Has His Say," that peppery department of letters from exhibitors, will be more sprightly than ever next week. Don't miss it.

Oklahoman Figures Up Tax Toll on Theatres

Theatre-goers will pay more than half a million dollars a year war taxes, according to an estimate made by Herbert Bolin, collector of internal revenue for the Oklahoma district. Bolin made the estimate, it is said, after he had received returns from 100 theatres out of 500 doing business in the state, covering war taxes for the month of November.

What of the New Year?

likewise. They see the writing on the wall. They are striving for quality entertainment—in music and surroundings.

But what of the pictures? Just moving pictures won't do. The public is screenwise. The mystery of the motion picture is gone. We have assiduously dispelled it—a priceless possession—by letting the public look into the works.

The star won't do it.

The star is a big drawing-card, and always will be. We make no attempt to minimize the star's importance, though we do believe that exhibitor and producer alike have let the star run away with both the production and exhibition of pictures—and that each is equally to blame for the present star situation.

The star is only one factor in the making of picture entertainment. The story is another. Direction is another. The division of importance is mathematically definite.

We shall need this year the development of the story—need it as the story has never been needed before. To this end we require not only the creation of the best authors, but we shall need producers to guide their efforts just as publishers do now, indicating to them what the public tastes are and how they make "best sellers" of pictures as well as of books and magazines.

The public must be entertained this year—if the box-office—and therefore the whole industry is to be safely steered past the experimental end of waste reduction.

Taking all other big problems into consideration—high rentals, stars' salaries, overproduction, waste in distribution, we are inclined to believe that a full box-office is of the utmost and most immediate importance; and that the industry's best motto for 1918 is "The Public be Entertained.!"

Strand Orders Memorial for Its Soldiers

Harold Edel, managing director of the Strand theatre, has engaged G. E. McCune to design a bronze statue in honor of the twenty-one employees who are now in the United States service. Drawings have already been submitted and accepted by Mr. Edel and the memorial will be ready in about a month. This statue will present a gigantic screaming eagle with outstretched wings, underneath which will be inscribed the names of the former Strand employees now in the various branches of the service. An extract from President Wilson's famous declaration of war, together with a facsimile of the President's signature will also be inscribed, presenting in all a pretentious token of regard for the boys, many of whom are already "over there."

The unveiling of the statue will take place in the big lobby of the Strand.

You are not going to war. The men who are need all the comforts you can give them Help them get cigarettes. That is your patriotic duty. If you aren't helping in the "smokes" campaign, get busy—now. Don't be a slacker!

"Best picture I have seen in a long time." "A box-office record-smasher, everybody highly pleased."
WOMAN BENEATH, THE (Ethel Clayton—World)	Ave.	Ave.	Ave.	Ave.	"Good." "Very good." "Picture well liked, star popular."
WOMAN GOD FORGOT, THE (Geraldine Farrar—Art.)	Extra	Extra	Big	Big	"Drew many strange faces" (West). "Very spectacular, wonderful production, yet not over-pleasing." "Grand, wonderful production." "Elaborate, great cast." "Star and title drew first day." "Big production, no heart interest."
YANKEE WAY, THE (George Walsh—Fox)	Big			Big	"Star well liked—good entertainment." "Much better than average Fairbanks; great drawing card." "A relief from the usual murders, etc." "Wonderful personality—forget the war pictures." "A fine comedy drama, many pronounced it equal of Douglas Fairbanks' best work." "Picture pleased, but did not draw." "One of the best of the Walsh pictures."

Exhibitor Service Bureau

Making the Best of It

Some Suggestions on Advertising Where Facilities are Limited

ADVERTISING for the small city and the town exhibitor is more difficult than for the man with the big house in the city, for not only is he unable to afford an equal expense, but the facilities are limited. Many of these exhibitors have written complaining that they have not been able to get the results they desired because their newspapers did not have the type and material. Many of these managers confessed that they themselves were not familiar with type faces and for that reason they were unable to direct the compositors just what sort of type to use.

On the opposite page we are reproducing some displays taken from small city dailies. At the bottom is a display from a semi-weekly paper, where it happens the manager of the theatre works during the day. With this exception none of these advertisements are good advertisements. We are going to tell you why they are not and how you can get newspapers with equal facilities to give you better displays.

Many times we have recommended a "name plate" for your theatre—a design bearing only the name, together with a motto if you wish. This at once makes the advertising distinctive. Your theatre space at once catches the eye. And these are very inexpensive and will last a lifetime. It is an expenditure that will repay you many times. Even if there is not an engraver in your city, write to one in the nearest city and he will be glad to submit designs from which you can select. You will find many of these in the advertisements reprinted in the MOTION PICTURE NEWS week after week and they will give you valuable pointers.

Use this preferably at the top of your advertisement. Don't let producers' suggestions or anyone else cause you to make the name of your theatre second to anything. You will see the reason for this in one of Mr. Rothapfel's answers to exhibitors this week. Make the public GO TO THE RIALTO to see a picture, instead of going to see A PICTURE at the Rialto.

Now next, equip yourself with cuts of the various stars that you play at your theatre. You can get these with practically all the productions these days, from your nearest exchange. Put in with your order on each picture an order for one or more cuts. Some of the exchanges will furnish these free. Others make a slight charge for them. But this is another good investment.

Which reminds us that one exhibitor complains that all these suggestions require expenditure of money. But isn't the very thing that you are seeking to get more people to come into your theatre? Isn't your object to make the public spend more money in your house? If it is you have to give yourself and your house the air of prosperity and the atmosphere of doing things RIGHT. We have never recommended yet a waste of money. These expenditures we are urging on you are INSURANCE.

Now the Academy theatre, two of whose displays are reproduced, does use these cuts. Except for a typographical error the Pauline Frederick display is a fairly good one. The newspaper printing is bad, but that is no fault of the manager. We would have used a little larger type for the name of the star and the title of the production. This is 24 point type used where it should have been 48 point. After the space taken by the cut and the descriptive matter, the bottom half of the ad. appears rather weak. Heavier type here would have made the italic matter at the top stand out more forcefully by contrast and an attractive name plate above all would have centered the attention on your theatre.

The Douglas Fairbanks advertisement is a bad one. In the first place the name of the star and the title of the picture are in far too light and far too small faces and the separation of the name of the star and the title by a lot of reading matter, more or less relevant, is very disconcerting. People looking at a display want to know the name of the star and the title FIRST, and then if they have time they will read the rest. But don't force your patrons to WADE through anything. A much better effect would have been secured by using a two-column space, giving the display greater depth to make up for the width, with the name of the theatre at the top and then: "Douglas Fairbanks in 'The Man from Painted Post.'" Then you could run in the space alongside the cut the reading matter which is given here.

While we do not recommend the use of heavy black types in cases where the theatre has a wide range of choice, we do think that these are best in the case of small papers where the assortment of faces is limited. Now turn over to "Your Idea and Ours" for a moment. Take the cases of the Zelda and the Ogden theatres. The Zelda has used 60 point Condensed Gothic. Gothic is one of the regular standbys. It will be found in every newspaper office. The only trouble about it is that it may have been around so long that the face is worn. You will be able to get the paper to remedy this. How, we will tell you after awhile. Now note the way the name of the star and the title would stand out in this type. And another suggestion: Where your paper has poor printing, as in the case of the Academy, the Gothic will get a much better effect than a lighter face.

The Ogden has used Doric Italic. This is another very common face. Here is a display something on the order of which the Academy should have followed on its picture. The three things that needed to be emphasized, the star, the title and the theatre are brought out in a way that you can't get away from. Both Gothic and Condensed Gothic are also used in the Empire ad.

Now let's take the advertising of the Sourwine (rather a peculiar name for a theatre). The one at the top is taken from the Saturday issue of the newspaper (there being no Sunday paper in this town). The theatre has advertised his bill for four days. The other one is from a Tuesday issue. Despite the fact that a great share of the theatres advertise their coming attractions in equal size type with their next attraction, we want to repeat that this is bad adverising. Sell the attraction that you are playing today. Create a demand for that particular picture and that particular star.

Had we been writing the Saturday advertisement for the Sourwine we would have devoted the greater part of the attention to the Saturday show, which is covered in a separate display. But aside from that we would first have used a light, distinctive border instead of this terrible black smudge that is employed. Even a straight line border would have been much better. Don't try to attract attention to your display by making it ugly. That is the surest way in the world of associationg your theatre with the cheap, the surest way to prevent your gaining patrons that do not now come to your house. If this theatre found it advisable to advertise next week's attractions each Saturday he should have prepared a neat engraved line carrying the same wording. Then we would have devoted four-fifths of the space to "Princess Virtue" because this was the FIRST attraction that he had to sell. We would have used a cut of Mae Murray and have tried to give the public some little idea of the charm of the production. Then we would have used merely the names of the stars and the titles of the other pictures in small type at the bottom of the display. This advertisement at once gets the patron to debating in his own mind WHICH of the attractions he wants to see, rather than MAKES him see a particular one. If he is a devotee of a particular star he will find the information about coming productions even though it may be in small type.

But evidently the Sourwine manager thinks that it is good policy to divide the interest, for he follows the same idea in his Tuesday display, giving just as much attention to the show he is going to have tomorrow as the one he has now. There is no star who lends himself better to the use of cuts than Hart, and by all means

BEFORE we start in to tell you of the accomplishments at the Rialto this week, let us say that some three or four little things went wrong at the first performance. They were little things—things that no one in the capacity audience caught, but they were enough to arouse Mr. Rothapfel and cause him more nervousness than most exhibitors experience when all their films fail to arrive. You can bet that they did not go wrong at the next performance. That sort of thing CANNOT happen at the Rialto, for, as we stood with him Sunday, he has his eye on every detail, and everything that was not exactly right brought some one on the carpet immediately.

How many managers never even see the first show after a change of bill? How can they expect such sort of exhibition to build up trade? It is a case of simply trusting to luck and HOPING that the audience will like it. That is the sort of exhibition of the old days—of the days when the managers took whatever the exchanges sent and shot them to the projection room. If every exhibitor in the country could be invisible and could see Mr. Rothapfel as he goes over the first show, there would be an awakening among the showmen of the country that would accomplish marvels.

Probably the light effects, in all their branches, stand out more than any one thing at the Rialto this week. In the first place, the overture is "Patrie," by Bizet, which was first played in Paris three years after the Franco-Prussian war. It is a marvellous composition picturing the sufferings of the people, but quickly turning into a blast of pride and hope and strength for the country of the future. We have never seen the dome of the Rialto so wonderfully illuminated in the red, white and blue, getting the tri-color effects. This was carried out on the stage and screen by having one side in blue and half of the screen space in red and the other half in blue, while the proscenium lights were burned in red. The audiences quickly got the effect and indicated it by their applause.

There is a remarkable scenic effect from Essanay this week, "Banff National Park." It contains some wonderfully beautiful shots and it was shown to the accompaniment of the andante from Beethoven's Fifth Symphony. The music fits the picture splendidly, but none but onet who had been studying the effect of music and pictures carefully would have gone to such a selection. Most managers would have used some waltz—and they would have failed to get the magnificence of the picture that this splendid selection brought. At the close of this picture, which was devoted largely to mountains and water, the curtains at either side parted showing with dark blue lighting, in perfect harmony scenic that had gone before waterfalls in the mountains, with the, and James Prince sang "The Spirit Flower."

Rialto Animated Magazine this week contains a varied assortment of matter and at least one great novelty. It opens with pictures of the 304th Infantry at Camp Upton, which brought great applause as it was shown to "The Regiment's Return" and then came a picture showing a marine dismantling and assembling a machine gun while blindfolded. "Semper Fidelis," the battle tune of the Marines, was woven into the march that had gone before and these were interspersed with trumpet calls and drum rolls in a manner that was most effective. "Mock Morris Dance" was played with pictures of training New York police horses and then came a cartoon, "Those Meatless Days at the Zoo," showing a lion with his gaunt expression on one of those days. Just at the end of the cartoon there fade in the words, "Sherman Was Right."

And here is an illustration of what the personality and training of a manager can do in developing his employees. As this cartoon was being shown during the selection of the subjects to make up the weekly, Mr. Rothapfel turned to one of his assistants and asked what piece of music that suggested. The man addressed could not answer and then Mr. Rothapfel called his attention to the words, "Sherman Was Right." Quick as a flash came the answer, "Marching Through Georgia." Certainly that was the right thing, and it made a hit with the audience. It is a case of training employees to think—and especially about the LITTLE, BIG things. And when the employees know their manager is thinking all the time, they are very likely to be digging things up on their own account.

"Ski Jumpers" were shown to the accompaniment of a galop played pianissimo and then followed a splendid picture of wild ducks in Oakland, Cal., which went over with big effect because of the music. "Reveille of Spring" was the selection, the piece being played with the stringed instruments all muted to get the effect of the fluttering of wings. "Wonders of Crystallization," showing the effect of chemicals on certain metals under the microscope, was unusually effective, for Mr. Rothapfel successfully tried using colors in the projection, which made the result incomparably more striking than would have been the black and white film. During this there was played "Shadowland" as an intermezzo. Now note another thing. Toward the end of the Drew comedy, the last thing on the bill, this same tune was played again as a fox trot. The reason for repetition? "I like to have an audience go away humming or whistling some music that they have heard." That is the reason I bring it back; the effect is 'reminiscent' and it is effective."

The next of the week were pictures of Jerusalem, during which the orchestra magnificently rendered "The Holy City," and then followed "Miracles in Mud," which ended in showing the kaiser being snuffed out by Uncle Sam's hat. It left the audiences laughing, with a purpose, because the feature this week, Geraldine Farrar in "The Devil Stone," is a very tense drama. More of the good humor before the feature was the delightful singing of "Sally in Our Alley," by Gladys Rice, in costume.

Then the feature. The early parts of this are founded on superstition, and so before the start of it every light in the theatre went out as the orchestra played a few bars and then the lights in green began to come up gradually. It was a weird effect that contributed the perfect atmosphere to the picture.

A czimbalom solo, "Air de Ballet," rendered by Bela Nyary, and a refreshing Metro-Drew comedy, "The Unmarried Look," ended the bill.

Let us leave a thought with you this week: Something "different" can be done with every picture. Take the treatment of the overture, the music of the fluttering of the birds' wings, the introductions to the feature. Start trying to do these things—to think out the spirit and the music of pictures and to give the public the atmosphere—and you will have done wonders.

This Week at the Strand

MAE MARSH keeps the audience laughing this week at the Strand with "The Cinderella Mann" and she sends everyone away from the theatre with a delightfully Christmassy spirit. It is easily the most charming of her Goldwyn productions and a perfect delight to all who have witnessed it.

There was a big hit made at the end of the Strand Topical this week, which followed the overture, selections from "The Fortune Teller." The Topical starts with pictures of cavalry in fencing contests at Fort Myer, Va., and then scenes at Wilkes-Barre in mining coal and some others showing crowds waiting for coal in New York. "Along the Vadar River" in Turkey interested and then came a clever picture of the only dog chauffeur, owned by Weed Brothers of Poughkeepsie. Halifax destruction was shown in some striking pictures and then Katherine Stinson, flying. Under the caption of "On the High Seas" there were pictures of American battleships and destroyers steaming straight at the same, and as the orchestra played "The Red, White and Blue" there was a continuous torrent of applause.

"Nature's Weavers," a Ditmars-Educational, is a truly remarkable picture of spiders at work. There were wonderful "close-ups" that showed the whole construction of the web. "Their Adopted Child," the Jeff and Mutt this week, was mighty broad in one spot, but the audience greeted it with a big laugh.

Knud Dahgaard, violinist, was heard in a double selection and Nadien Tagelli, soprano, sang "Theme and Variations," by Proch.

Rothapfel's Answers to Exhibitors

Mr. Rothapfel Will Answer Here Any Questions Regarding Problems in Exhibition. The Only Conditions Are That the Questions Must Not Bear on the Merits of Particular Pictures or Services and That They Must Come Through the NEWS. Address Your Inquiries "ROTHAPFEL ADVICE, EXHIBITORS' SERVICE BUREAU, MOTION PICTURE NEWS."

I—At my theatre I have been regularly showing a feature and a comedy. That has really been the habit in this city and practically every house follows this set rule. Comedies are unquestionably popular, but good ones are hard to get in sufficient numbers. Then, again, very often the feature is straight comedy, sometimes farce and I believe there is too much comedy element in these bills. But still no one complains about the comedy. However, I want to vary my bill, which I change three times a week, not showing on Sundays.

I cannot afford to have my program longer than seven or eight reels. What would you suggest?—REGENT.

MY chief advice to you is to start right out and do something different. Simply because every other house follows a set rule is no reason why you should. If you will only try and do something a little different from what the other fellow does you will succeed, and the result will more than pay you.

Frankly, I don't agree with you that there can be too much comedy in a bill. We, here, think it a great treat if we can have an all-comedy bill, and you will find that your audience will agree with me. I don't mean that the bill should be all "slap-stick," so-called, or all of another kind, but the great success of our Fairbanks pictures has been due to the comedy element. By that I mean we surround him with a practically all-comedy bill.

I would suggest to you that you run say 400 or 500 feet of good scenics. You can obtain them from any first-class exchange. Then run a topical if your feature is not too long. Follow with your feature and then a one or two-reel comedy. This will approximate 8,000 feet, or you could use the scenic, feature and comedy—or a cartoon that might be funny could be used. Juggle your bill around and try it several ways and see which plays the best.

We run 8,000 feet of film, have an overture and several other numbers; yet we do it all in two hours provided the feature is not too long; in this case we cut other subjects accordingly.

My advice to you is: Get all the comedy you possibly can in your bills. In other words, "Keep the corners of their lips turned up."

II—I am operating a neighborhood house in a city of 350,000. My policy has been to simply show one feature picture and to give two performances in the evening, there being no patronage in the afternoon. As it is the attendance at the second show is not large, and I have been considering adding a comedy and an educational to the bill, giving but one show and raising the price to fifteen cents, but I have to change the bill each night and there are not sufficient good educational and comedies available to do this. How would you suggest that I could better my show? My patrons are of the higher class.—NEW ORLEANS.

I AM not a friend of the daily change and, frankly, I don't think it is good for your theatre simply because I don't think you could maintain a standard. If you have a good feature, the value of it is lost by not playing it longer than one day—the same is true, of course, in the case of a poor picture, but you have a much better chance by having three average good bookings than three fairly good and three poor ones.

I don't agree with you about running one show in the evening. I would give two shows and raise my prices. I would do something to my auditorium to make it more "individual." I would try to increase and make the music better. If you have an upright piano, get a grand and raise the cover. Get some palms. Get some ordinary lights with reflectors and put a little gelatine in front of them. Have your orchestra leader appear in a dinner coat. Have the environment about you appear homelike, nice and clean. Improve your whole atmosphere and have it "polished" and refined. Put "pep" in your show. Use your head. Book good educational pictures and comedies. They can be so thrown together that they will make a good attraction. You can surely raise your prices if you will only try to give the people something a little different and better than the other fellow does. It is up to your showmanship. Don't be one of those fellows who stand out at his door with a plate in his hand waiting for a fellow to drop something into it. Dig your toes in the ground. Take hold of your whole theatre and staff and try to instil into it the spirit that wins. Good taste, pep, good judgment, combined with good executive ability will make you, a year from today, wonder at what you did.

III—I have the only theatre in a town of 1500. It is a rural section and I have done some successful advertising in the nearby towns, but still I am not doing the business I should. I can show only at night because there is no electrical current available until 5:30 p.m. We are showing two features a week, on Wednesdays and Thursday and on Tuesday and Fridays we run serial—different ones—there being no show on Sunday (illegal), or on Monday and Saturday. What can I do with my program to attract more attention?—SENATOBIA.

YOURS is rather a sad case and my only advice to you would be to evolve some method by which you could get the maximum capacity on the days you are permitted to run. I think, in view of the fact that you have but 1,500 people in your town and the rural sections would have to be drawn upon, you should play an exceptionally good bill on the nights you run—and raise your prices. It would pay you to spend a little more money and add a personal touch to your entertainment and build up a clientele for these particular nights. Make them come to your place just the same as they would go to dinner. I would suggest that you read my second answer and imbibe some of the "pep," originality and individuality referred to.

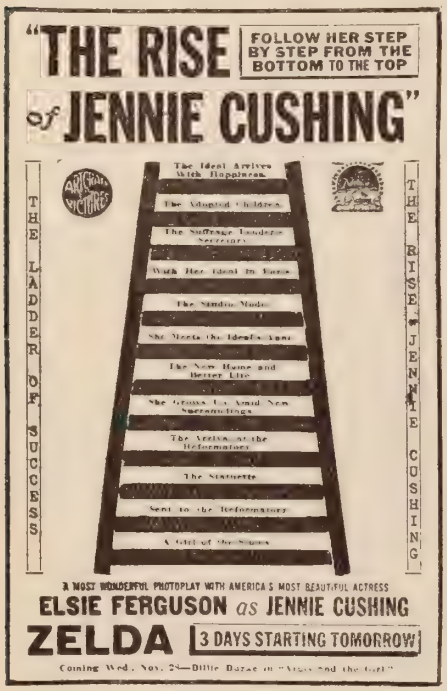
I think that in a small neighborhood such as yours the personality should absolutely be brought out to its fullest extent. Try calling upon the people personally; look them straight in the eye and tell them what you want to give them. Make little talks from your platform and announce what you are going to have next week and ask them to set aside Tuesday, Wednesday or Thursday nights to come and see your show, and then give them something that will bring them out.

I think this will solve your problem. Anyway, I will be glad to hear from you again.

IV—We are building a new theatre which will be the handsomest and finest in the entire section. I have been successful in the management of other houses, but in this city I find that the growth of vaudeville is injuring the motion picture business, and several of the local picture houses have gone over to vaudeville. What sort of a program do you believe would be best to meet the opposition? I will probably change my bill twice a week, on Mondays and Thursdays.—J. A. C.

THE first requisite to any successful theatre manager is a feeling of absolute confidence in himself and a thorough belief in his work. Don't let the growth of vaudeville interefere with you and don't worry because other picture houses have gone over to vaudeville. This is no criterion whatever. It only clears a field for you and lessens your opposition. Put on a good show. Put on an individually different show. Be careful about your new theatre. Start in right. Be careful about your attendants—make courtesy prevail. Take a personal interest in every detail associated with your theatre. See that your show runs smoothly and that it is full of snap. Don't run EVERYTHING they send you; watch your pictures carefully and PICK your show.

I cannot advise or recommend a program. The only program I could recommend is one of your own making and you are able, I judge from your statement of having been successful, to select a good show and devise the proper method of presentation.



You will have an opportunity now to start right in from the beginning and make your HOUSE the thing. Keep your HOUSE before the people more than anything else. Supposing the name should be The Rialto. Make the people come "to THE RIALTO to see the pictures" and not "to SEE THE PICTURES at The Rialto." Have good music—as much of it as you can. Read the first letter I have written this week and use your head. See if you can't decorate and make your place thoroughly "comfy" and homelike. Get the women in—get the feminine touch. Invite suggestions. Just imagine for a moment that every patron that comes to your house is your close personal friend. Don't make the mistake of asking them what they think of the show when they are leaving. Very few will tell you the truth—some won't want to offend you, but there are lots of other ways to find out.

You, young man, have an opportunity—a wonderful one. A new theatre and, as you say, the handsomest and finest in the sec-

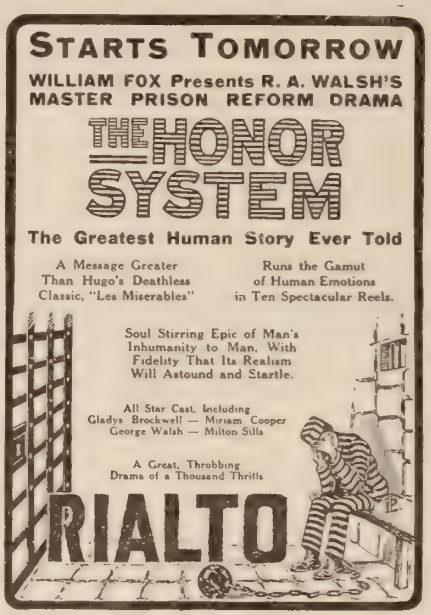
Your Idea---and Ours

ZELDA THEATRE, Duluth, Minn., has evolved a clever advertisement on "The Rise of Jennie Cushing" without going to an expense. It has simply used heavy rules such as will be found in every newspaper office and has arranged a ladder with reading matter telling the story of the picture. It is an advertisement that will immediately attract the attention of the reader because it is different. It would have been slightly more effective had the two perpendicular lines been left out. There was no reason for repeating the name of the picture and "The ladder of success" line is too explanatory; the public likes to get the idea for itself. It's like telling a joke and then explaining it.

The picture business: Get on or get out!

MANAGER H. W. PEERY, of the Ogden theatre, Ogden, Utah, realizes that there is a large crop of curiosity grown every day, and he determined to take advantage of that. He knew that Douglas Fairbanks had an immense following in Ogden and he also knew of the good work of George Walsh. So he wanted to make an appeal to the Fairbanks fans and get them to his theatre to see "The Yankee Way." So he devoted one of his displays to the simple statement that a lot of people think that Walsh has Fairbanks beaten for "pep" and invited the public to come and see for itself. Of course the cut aided a great deal in the display and it was well selected.



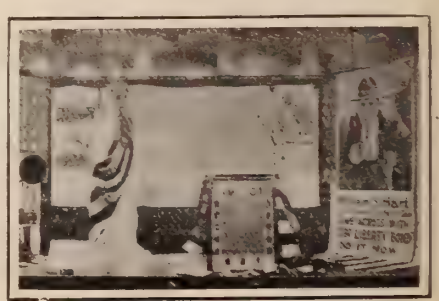
"Teaser" ads. are good when they are well constructed and this is an excellent example.

Pat the public on the back and save all of the kicks for yourself. They'll do a lot more good when used in private.

RECENTLY we printed an advertisement on "The Honor System," and pointed it out as the wrong way to advertise. The man who wrote the display in that case either did not know what the picture was about, or he had some fancied reason to keep it from the public.

But here is the opposite from the Rialto theatre, San Francisco. The manager knew the strong points in this drama of prison life and undertook to bring it out in the strongest way possible. He did it through use of the cut and then gave an added touch by making the letters of the title of the picture out of stripes. That's another one of the little things that we have so often spoken about, and these little things get over with an awful punch.

Have your own present on your theatre's Christmas tree—Progressiveness.



MANAGER J. A. PARTINGTON of the Imperial theatre, San Francisco, has solved the problem of getting the attention of the people who live in apartment houses. He has a neat card like the one reproduced here on each attraction and is able to post them in the elevators of over two hundred apartment houses. By making these cards small and neat there is no objection made by the owners or managers of the apartment to the posters.

Of course, this suggestion applies to comparatively few cities where there are a large number of apartment houses, but the same idea could be effectively used in window displays. Most managers, when they think about a display card generally try to get it as large and gaudy as possible and the result is that they are wasting their money because few people will give display space to such.

Taking the chill off the patron's personality is as important as making his body comfortable.

W. S. DAVIS, manager of the Davis theatre, Norwich, Conn., evidently doesn't let a chance get by him to link public events up with his theatre. His latest example is shown in connection with the second Liberty Loan campaign. The citizens of Norwich were determined to set a new record and all the enterprise of the city was helping out. Mr. Davis remembered some of the posters that had appeared in the first campaign and he also remembered some very effective drawings of W. S. Hart. And he also bore in mind that he was showing the Hart-Artcraft Pictures at his theatre. So he used one of these drawings with an appeal on the Liberty Loan. He didn't try to make the connection with his theatre obvious. If he had tried to do so he would have lost all the punch that he secured.

What Live Wires Are Doing

There will be other Liberty Loan campaigns and there will be plenty of other opportunities to try similar stunts.

It's a great thing to keep your theatre apace with what's happening in the world.

HERE is another display that was achieved without going outside the newspaper office. And right here is a word of advice to the theatre manager. Spend a few hours around the composing room of your newspaper. Get friendly with the foreman and get familiar with the resources of your office. You will be surprised to find the many things that you can do without the expense of going to the engraver.

The Empire theatre, San Antonio, Tex., was quick to see that the title of this picture was the main thing to hammer home and it made this title stand out not alone through the use of heavy type, but by using the circle which carried out the "world" idea. There isn't a great amount of reading matter and all of it bears on the point to be reached. A strong war appeal is made in every sentence.

One idea a day is worth gallons of mere talk.

STAR AND CRESCENT THEATRES, Eureka, Utah, have issued an attractive program for the month of December, combining the attractions of the two theatres. It comes to us through Metro whose pictures and others are used at the two houses.

This program stands out because of the special Christmas design on the cover. Every house should try to arrange its publicity to suit the house and the Star has succeeded in doing this. However, the plan of publishing a program of even one theatre for a whole month seems rather bad. In the first place there is likely to be great waste in the distribution through giving the same patron two or more copies. It is hard to believe that a very great per cent of the people will be interested enough to keep the copies for a full month. Programs, and all publicity, should have an explicit message. Those that attempt to tell everything generally help toward making the morning's fire these cold days.

Mighty good slogan from the Theatre Louisiana, Baton Rouge: Did it ever occur to you that when you leave this theatre you can take away with you only one thing—an opinion? It's our business to see that it's a good one.

STANDARD THEATRE, Cleveland, O., is becoming a regular feature of this department, and justly so for this house is week after week offering examples of the right way to advertise. The man who designs these displays has achieved the thing that we have been urging on exhibitors—the greatest possible punch with the fewest number of words.

The advertisement this week is on "The Garden of Allah," which lacks a good deal of being a new production. Here is a picture that the press agents delight to describe in the circle style and about half of the displays that we have seen on this particular film have used enough adjectives, which could they have been converted into coal would have relieved the nation's fuel shortage.

The drawing tells the story, gives the nature of the production, attracts the eye of the reader. Then the minimum amount of descriptive matter is just enough to excite the reader's imagination.

Enthusiasm is a whole lot more contagious than any disease. Try a little of it on your patrons.

WHEN you talk lobby display to the average exhibitor, he will agree with you that it's a mighty good thing, but the excuse for himself is that he can't afford it. And if you will recall the fact, most of the lobby displays which have been reproduced here have been exceedingly simple and very inexpensive.

Manager Wm. M. Stiles of the People's theatre, Portland, Ore., achieved this effect when he showed "Rebecca of Sunnybrook Farm." He had a streamer effect, with each letter of the title of the picture on a separate triangular banner across the front of the house and then used cutouts of the principal characters in the picture on either side of the lobby. It got an immediate effect because there was no lettering, people studied the characters and grew intersted in finding out what they had to do with the picture. Of course the picture of Mary Pickford was used in the foreground.

Mere space filling in advertising has as much effect on your patrons as a "papered" audience has on your box-office.

Charles C. Perry, Manager Strand Theatre, Milwaukee.

Perry Becomes Manager of Milwaukee Strand

Charles C. Perry, who acted as assistant to Theo. L. Hays, manager of the New Garrick, St. Paul, since that playhouse passed under the control of Finkelstein & Ruben in August last, resigned his berth recently to accept a position of greater responsibility as the active manager of the Strand theatre, Milwaukee.

Mr. Perry, a direct descendant of Commodore Perry, was born at Lafayette, Indiana, thirty years ago. He resided for a time at York, Nebraska, and attended the state college in that city. He was assistant treasurer at the Orpheum theatre, St. Paul, for several seasons, and was also connected with the former Grand Opera House in that city. In 1913 Mr. Perry entered into a managerial speculation on his own account at Sioux City, Iowa. He leased the opera house and gave that city its first introduction to the artistic exposition of feature photoplays. When Fred Hartman, the hero of the Red River Dog Derby race, made a tour last winter, following the dog derby, Mr. Perry was engaged to manage the very successful tour the plucky Hartman made through the West.

As assistant to Theo. L. Hays, Mr. Perry cooperated in the introduction of the many splendid innovations in service and photoplay presentment that have distinguished the policy of that playhouse, particularly the very artistic preludes that are given the screen productions at the New Garrick.

The Strand theatre, Milwaukee, over which Mr. Perry now presides, is a beautiful theatre of large capacity, playing high-class photo features, and one of the most sucecssful playhouses in that city. Under Mr. Perry's direction $10,000 will be spent in beautifying the interior.

Is This Your Theatre?

This is the fourteenth of a series of articles about theatres actually visited and conditions pictured for the benefit of others. After this article the series will be discontinued for the present because the field has been thoroughly covered.

THEATRE N. is a handsome theatre, physically, and evidently cost some $50,000 to build. It has one of the best locations in a city of about 15,000 people and was far more attractive in appearance than either of the two other houses. Yet it was very evident that the house wasn't doing the business, especially the amount done by a smaller and less attractive house a block away.

The plans for the house had been drawn by a man who knew a great deal about theatre construction. It was easy of access and the lobby was a handsome one. Frames had been prepared for the posters and in that respect it was also pleasing to the eye. And after one entered one found the auditorium pleasingly decorated, the seats comfortable and the projection good.

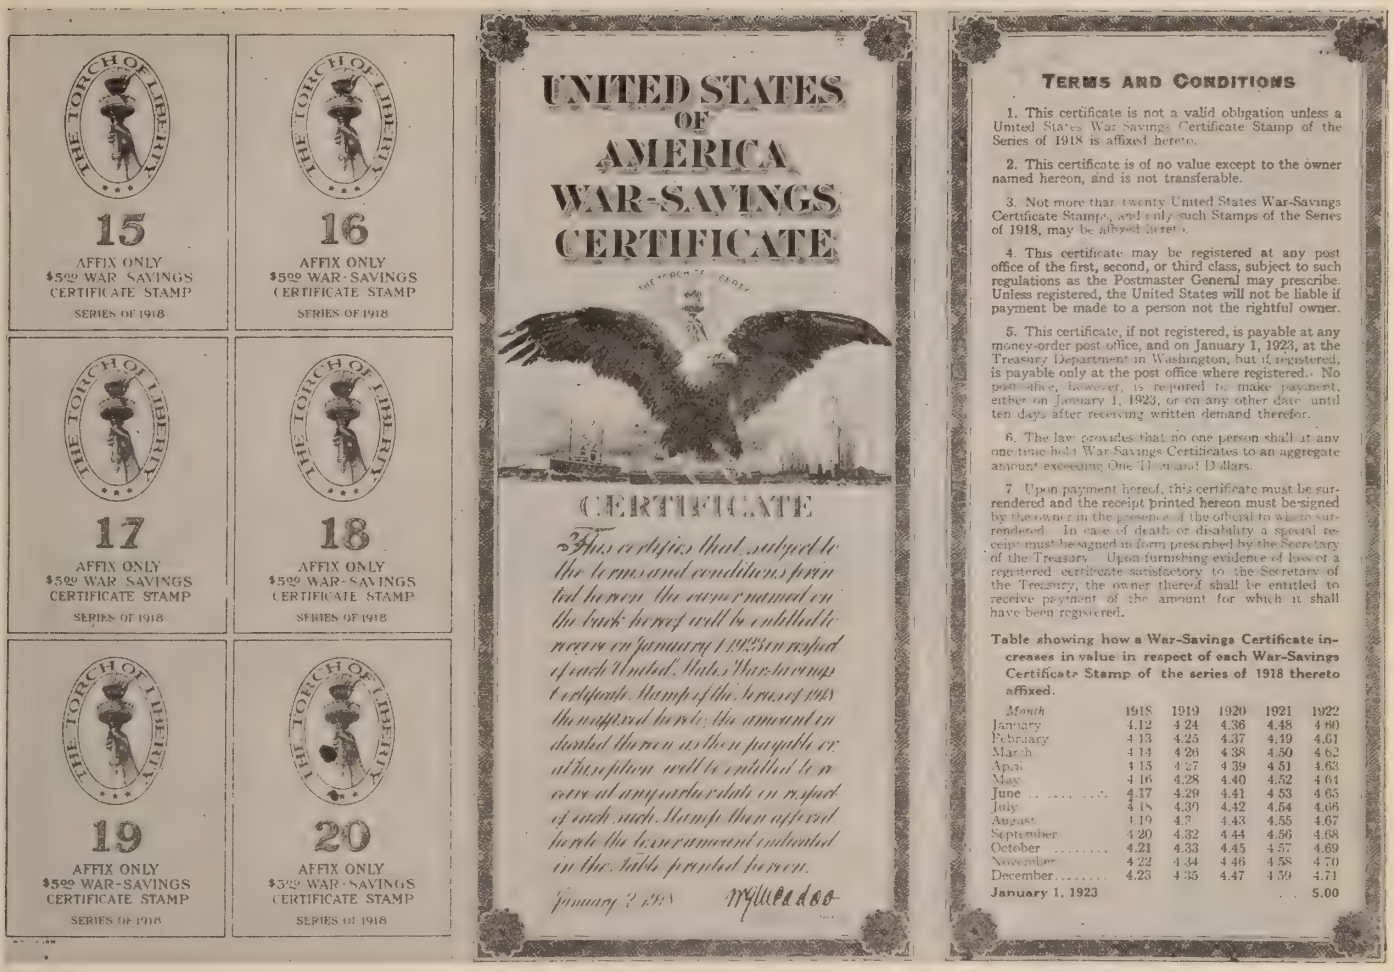
But for an accident we would have wondered for a moment what was the matter with the house. The answer came before we bought the ticket. A couple of patrons were just leaving the theatre when they stepped up to the manager and told him something about the feature picture not being up to the standard. The manager replied: "What are you talking about? If you say that is a bad picture you don't know a good picture when you see one." That was enough of a hint and once on the trail we saw immediately that the manager was out of tune with his patrons.

"Jones thinks he knows it all," one of the citizens afterwards told us. "He came from J——— (mentioning a big city nearby) and he seems to think that this town is not good enough for him. Before he built this house he roasted the other two and said that he was going to show the town how a theatre ought to be run. Nobody can tell him anything and if you comment on a picture adversely you start an argument with him."

That told the story in a nutshell. We examined further and found that everyone "got" the atmosphere of the house, that they felt bleak when they entered the theatre, that the spirit was already in them to look for something wrong instead of expecting to be amused and interested. No theatre built on such foundations can succeed. How often have you heard a patron say that he does not like this or that theatre and then be unable to tell you the specific reason.

There was a creditable newspaper published in the town and we met the editor and purposely led him to the discussion of Theatre N. He had the same sort of comment to make. "Every time we have said anything bad about a picture this man gets sore at the paper and threatens to stop advertising. After one of these complaints I went to the theatre myself to see a picture that one of our young men had said was a poor picture and brought objection from the manager. I found that the reporter hadn't really said enough. I told the manager so and also told him the next time that he made a threat to cut out his advertising, he would have to make that threat good—and permanently so. That was three months ago. Since then he has cancelled the service that furnished the pictures that were being criticised and advertised the fact to the public."

Naturally the newspaper did not feel like going out of its way to help this manager out. His publicity was of the most formal sort. The manager was nothing of a newspaper man himself and his copy was badly prepared and his advertisements lacked the punch. We were told that suggestions had been made to him as to how to improve the matter, but he had received these suggestions as he did all others—with an air of superiority.



There were never any benefits for schools or churches given at Theatre N. The manager couldn't see any reason for that. Hadn't he built a house that was a credit to the town, weren't his pictures uniformly the best and didn't he have the best projection, seats, etc.? Admittedly he did. Therefore, he reasoned the people had to come to his theatre. Yes, they "had to" all right, but they didn't.

It is always well for a manager to have personal popularity, especially in the size of a city where he is expected to know almost everyone, but it is even more necessary to give that popularity to the theatre. We noted that the cashier, the doorman and the usher had all the same air as the manager. They did not watch the little things, they seemed to take the purchase of a ticket as a matter of course. After a slight investigation it was easy to see the spirit that prevailed.

It's mighty hard to do anything with a theatre like N. About the only thing for the manager to do is to sell out and go to some other city and start over again with the lesson learned.

We know a similar case to Theatre N. in another city. This house had earned a bad reputation and it was not even in a good location. It had even been associated with the rather rough element and respectable people never thought of visiting it. It changed hands. The new manager was a man with one of the most remarkable personalities that we have ever met and he set about it to put his personality in the house. He had not been a resident of the city but a short time, but he made himself a part of it from the jump. He was soon the most popular of all the managers with the newspaper men of the city and he made new friends every day. That manager sold the lease on his house for $60,000 and then built the handsomest theatre in the city.

Personality not only pays, but it is absolutely necessary. If you don't put your personality into your theatre and give it real ATMOSPHERE, you will be in the same fix as Theatre N. The motion picture exhibition business is no place for a CRAB.

Reproduction of one of the U. S. War Savings Certificates and a portion of the space reserved for pasting on the thrift stamps.

Universal Launches Big Campaign to Aid in Sale of U. S. Thrift Stamps

AN intensive campaign to co-operate with the United States in boosting the sale of war savings and thrift stamps is announced by Universal in connection with the exploitation of the latest serial, "The Mystery Ship." One thousand dollars in awards for the "best ending" will be paid in Liberty Bonds, savings certificates and thrift stamps to the 388 boys and girls who share in the distribution.

Universal will also encourage employees in all of its branches to follow the lead of attaches of the home office in accepting thrift stamps as part of the weekly contents of their pay envelopes.

As a more widely effective influence upon the millions who visit moving picture theatres every week, Universal will adopt a direct method of advertising the Government plan through attaching a "leader" or "trailer" to every five-reel Bluebird or Universal feature. The star of each production will be posed in the act of presenting the Government plan to patrons of the picture theatre as she holds a placard, plainly lettered as follows: "Help Yourself and Help Your Country. Buy War Savings Stamps. 25 Cents. Ask the Postman." In adopting this means of appealing to the public, Universal is simply following up the work done by large commercial firms in contributing newspaper advertising space to "boosting" the Government's "drives" for war funds.

"We have it on highest financial authority," says Joe Brandt, general manager of Universal Film Manufacturing Co., in announcing the organization's purpose to "boost" the Government plan, "that America as a nation knows little or nothing about bonds. Despite the fact that millions have participated in the two Liberty Loans, there are vastly more millions who have never even seen a Government security, let alone possess one. The 25 cent thrift stamp means just as much to the 'little fellow' who buys one as do the Liberty Bonds purchased in large lots by the 'big fellow.'

"Statisticians know how many million pairs of eyes gaze upon the moving picture screen every day in the year. The people who go to pictures are just exactly the class and kind of purchasers the Government seeks for war certificates and thrift stamps. We shall couple the Government plan with our 'Best Ending Contest' for the very reason that boys and girls will be made familiar with the best way in the world to run their pennies and nickels into thrift stamps and then into certificates.

"Proprietors of moving picture theatres showing 'The Mystery Ship' will be urged to go into the thrift stamp business with the same degree of earnestness that large and small merchants negotiate the alluring 'trading stamp.' On days that 'The Mystery Ship' is shown, the suggestion will be made that exhibitors make a special drive for the sale of 'thrift stamps.' The local postmaster will co-operate with enthusiasm.

"Because it was necessary in conforming to regulations governing contests to announce that children competing for awards need not, of necessity, view the serial on the screen, but might read it in story form, which we shall provide, it will be further to the interest of 'The Mystery Ship' exhibitors to agitate the thrift stamp feature that the kiddies may be attracted to their theatres. While it is a moral certainty that nine out of ten children who compete for awards will insist upon seeing the pictures on the screen, that tenth child is worth going after—and a thrift stamp campaign, conducted by the exhibitor, will turn the trick."

Costume Idea Used Through Theatre

A demonstration of good showmanship was given by Manager Harry Pomeroy of the Globe theatre, Toronto. He booked the Bluebird picture, "The Sigh of the Poppy," for a week's run and then designed a lobby display. He had everything from the ticket girl dressed up as a Chinese character to a Chinaman smoking the opium pipe. Although this Bluebird was an old one the Globe was packed to capacity the entire week.

Hints on Newspaper Advertising to Towns Where Facilities Are Limited

there should have been a light rule and a few lines devoted to the Wednesday attraction. As we have said before, this display is simply an invitation to the patron to pick the bill he thinks is best.

Now the Alamo ad., which appeared in a semi-weekly, is a very good display, except for the name of the theatre, and made with the use of types that are in practically every country newspaper office. The cut attracts attention and the wording is well arranged. We would have used in the upper left hand corner of the display a name plate of the theatre with the date of the attraction, covering one-third of the width of the ad. and then have devoted the other two-thirds to the name of the star in at least as large type as the title of the production. This would have given balance and resulted in more attention.

Just to show what can be done in the smaller dailies, we have reproduced the single column display of the Princess theatre. The theatre has the name plate that we have been talking about and has selected a pleasing and distinctive border that stands out. It displays the name of the star and the title about as they should have been. There wasn't space here for a picture of the star, though we think that the management would have found it worth while using a little more space to get this in.

We have taken these examples, as we will take others, to show you what is wrong with small city advertising and to drive home basic principles of advertising.

Before you tackle the question of the types that are available or anything else you have to learn VALUES. All the type and cuts that were ever made are not going to bring you success unless you know first what you want to say.

Here is one rule that has been followed safely by the manager of a house in a smaller city. He realized that he did not know anything about advertising, but he determined to learn. So he made it a point to see every picture for a while and then to listen to the comments of his patrons—to find out what they talked about. He realized that the sort of things they said about a production were the things to emphasize in the future. He got into the spirit of his audience, learned what impressed them, the things that they liked. And then he proceeded to put these things into his advertising in advance of their showing.

As we told you in another talk, find out the smashing thing in your picture—the reason why you booked it and tell the people that.

And don't be afraid to use the name of the star and the title of the picture in big type. You won't have very much left for anything else; and that's one good result.

Use cuts every chance you get. Sit down tonight and write to your exchanges and find out about these cuts, how much they will cost you to buy outright (in case you are playing the same star regularly this may be the cheaper) or on what basis you can rent them (and in that case use the cuts that are made for the special production).

Determine to put thought and work in your advertising and you have got a basic start.

Next week we are going to try to make it clearer to you how to do these things.

Quinn, Universal Service Head at Denver

Another link in the chain of Service Departments which the Universal is establishing from coast to coast was made when H. J. Quinn, of the Denver Universal office, was placed in charge of the Service Department for the Denver unit, comprising the Salt Lake, Butte and Denver offices.

Rio de Janeiro Theatre Uses Mass of Display on Front of House

RIO DE JANEIRO, Brazil, exhibitors are right up to the times in displaying their wares in front of their theatres. Photographs made by the branches in South America of the Fox Film Corporation, show that some of these theatres go even further than their American neighbors in the use of paper in front of the houses.

Although there is a large amount of this printed matter used, the theatres have learned the lesson of centering their display on one thing. While the greater part of this advertising is in Portuguese, one sheets furnished by the company and the same as those in use in this country are employed to attract the English-speaking public.

Some of the most striking photographs have come from the Cinema Pathe in Rio. At the times these were taken, the house was showing "The Beast" ("Brietalids"), starring George Walsh and Anna Luther, and "The Love Thief" ("Ladras de Amor"). The theatre has a three-story front and most of this is covered with striking lithographs and painted signs on which the name of the production featured stands out so prominently, and is so many times repeated that there is no possibility of anyone who comes within view of the building forming any misconception regarding what the attraction is.

The display is arranged to catch the eyes both of persons passing along the sidewalk in front of the theatre and those who may see the building from a distance. Striking stills from the productions and, in the case of George Walsh, the name of the star also are strongly featured.

Rothapfel Answers to Exhibitors

tion. If you have a good voice in your neighborhood and it has a little local following, use it. Make them sing one little number, a pretty piece that the people will understand. Don't let them sing in Italian or French just because they are taking lessons from someone in town; have them sing the little simple things—heart throbs, the things you and your public know. Use your orchestra as much as you can, but don't overdo it. Don't try to play big overtures with three men. Play pretty little things that the people will understand and you can do with what you have at hand. I could write you a whole book on how to start to run your house but my space is limited. I think I have at least told you enough to give you a start and my last advice to you is this:

Don't worry about opposition coming from vaudeville. Vaudeville is one thing and motion pictures are another and my experience has been that, properly conducted, a motion picture house will triumph in nine cases out of ten.

Holidays Picked by Many Exhibitors as Chance to Popularize Their Theatres

RECENTLY we printed some suggestions concerning stimulation of holiday business which came from Triangle Film Corporation. Since that time various exhibitors have been sending in suggestions that they have tried with success.

Christmas week is really bad for business in most sections, because the people are giving over their whole time to holiday celebrations, but a number of showmen point how to popularize their theatres during that period. Even if there is some loss of revenue, the holidays are well worth while if they add to the prestige of the theatre.

One manager writes that he had always found Christmas eve the worst night of the year and that the receipts on that evening did not pay for the electric current. So one year he closed his house entirely on that date. A few days before the next Christmas the president of one of the local charities came to him and asked him whether he was going to follow the same policy and if so whether the charity might rent the theatre for a benefit that evening.

That brought an idea, and the exhibitor not only offered the theatre rent free, but offered to supply the films and everything else at cost. He saw a chance to get a lot of people into his house who had never been there before. So he proceeded to hunt up the very best picture that was available, the best comedies and the best educational. He instructed his piano player to do her best, put his operator on his mettle and say that the house was in the best possible shape. That was three years ago and the manager writes that he is again giving his theatre to a similar purpose and that he finds that it is the best investment that he has ever made. The benefits do bring out people on Christmas eve and they did convert into patrons many people who had ignored all his exploitation.

Another manager, who shows that he is up on his toes with all of his ideas, uses an interesting method. His theatre is in a city of about 100,000. At the breakfast table one morning his wife commented on the number of boys and girls that were going away to school. This was in September and she was reading the news from the morning paper. Another idea. He went to the newspaper office the first thing and bought copies of the paper for the past two weeks and then he followed the later issues through the season for starting for school. Then he prepared a list of these youngsters. He added to and corrected these lists from the personal and social columns as they began to come home for the holidays.

Then to each one of these he sent a letter expressing pleasure that they had returned to enjoy the holidays at home and calling attention to the attractions that he would have during Christmas week. It was the first letter from a stranger that most of these boys and girls had ever received. It pleased their vanity. It not only increased business during the holiday week, but it made for better and future business by making every recipient a firm and lasting friend of the theatre.

A third manager found it advisable to give a special souvenir program during the holiday week. He did not mail these out just before Christmas because he knew that the mails were congested at that time, but advertised that he would give these souvenirs to all who attended the theatre during the week. Each one of these contained a rotagravure portrait of a noted star. On the face they were stamped "Merry Christmas and Happy New Year, Empire Theatre." Scores of these were framed by patrons and formed a lasting reminder of the house. It's the permanent sort of publicity.

Books of Tickets to Picture Theatre Prove Popular Buffalo Xmas Gifts

MANAGER EARL L. CRABB has a novel stunt which he has introduced at the Strand theatre, Buffalo, N. Y. With the Christmas shopping at its heights and with the thought, "What shall I buy him (or her) for Christmas" on everybody's mind, Strand patrons at intermission read these four slides on the Strand screen:

(1)

ARE YOU WONDERING WHAT TO GIVE FOR CHRISTMAS?

Here's a Suggestion!

WHAT WOULD BE MORE ACCEPTABLE THAN A BOOK OF ADMISSION TICKETS TO THE STRAND?

"Everybody Likes the Strand"

(3)

JUST A LITTLE REMEMBRANCE THAT WILL BE APPRECIATED AND AFFORD
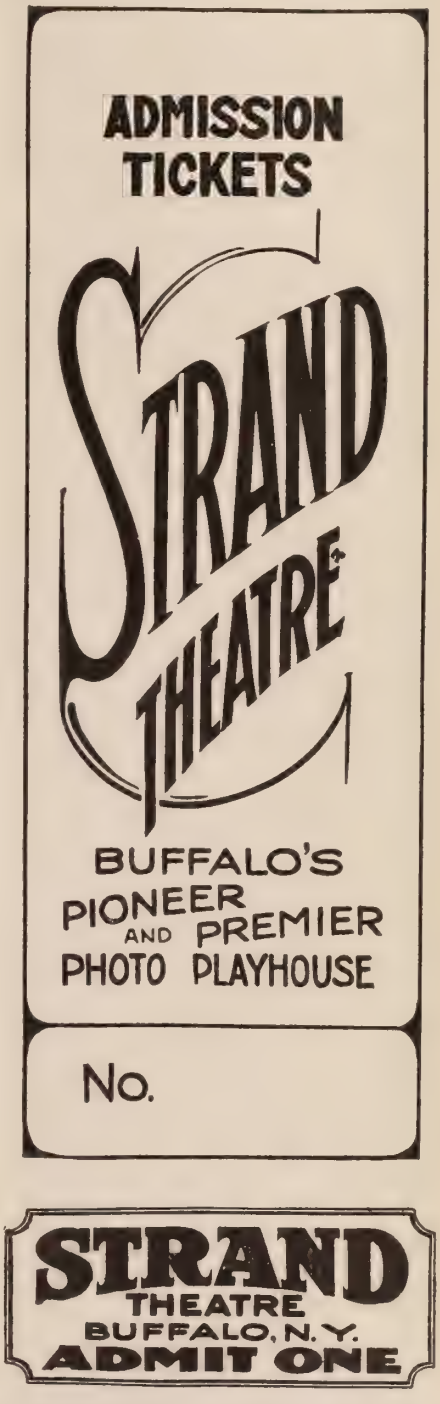
MANY PLEASANT HOURS TO THE PERSON RECEIVING IT!

(4)



ADMISSION TICKETS TO
"THE STRAND"
in Book Form
Prepared by the Management
Especially for Christmas Gifts in four denominations

$1.00—$2.00—$3.00—$5.00

For Sale at the Box Office or in the Lobby

The idea "took" instantly and solved the Xmas problem for many weary shoppers. Almost 50 books were sold on the first two days following the announcement. The books contain a number of tickets, counted so as to include the war tax. Tickets contained in the book admit to lower floor evenings, Saturdays, Sundays and holidays when the admission is 15 cents. If used for week day matinees they will entitle the holder to a reserved seat in the loge.

The little books slip into the vest pocket where they are always available when the holder might feel inclined to stop in and see the Strand show. If there is a long line at the box office, he can go right in. He never has to worry about having the exact change for the war tax and at the same time the girl in the box office is saved much time.

Mary Garden, Prima Donna, Seen in Screen Version of Famous Opera, "Thais"

(Goldwyn Five-Reel Production)

Mary Garden in "Thais," a screen version of the story as told by Anatole France, the famous French novelist. The story is also the basis for the opera of the same name and in which Miss Garden appeared as the prima donna on its initial presentation in America. The famous opera star is supported in this production by Hamilton Revelle, Crawford Kent, Lionel Adams, Charles Trowbridge, Alice Chapin and Margaret Townsend. Frank H. Crane directed. Hugo Ballin was art director. The photography is the work of David Abel. Many of you have seen the opera "Thais." Those of you who have will need no invitation to see the screen version. The singing is of course lacking, but if you will remember there is a strength of action and plot that makes this story a powerful basis for equally powerful drama. "Thais" tells the story of the love affairs and adventures of a beautiful woman of ancient Alexandria. A wealthy young man is in love with Thais and slays a jealous suitor, in defending his love against attack. He has become a Christian and knows that to murder is a crime against heaven. In expiation of his sin he enters a monastery and becomes a monk and goes into the desert to do penance. He becomes known the world over for his sanctity and Thais is knighted the queen of riotous living. He believes that he would be rendering a great service to Christianity if he would convert Thais. He goes to her home dressed in the rich garments of a friend. He follows her everywhere and she becomes frightened. She yields to him and follows him into the desert and becomes a nun. The monk returns to his brothers, but he cannot forget the woman. He realizes that he loves her. His passion masters him and he deserts the order to follow her into the desert. He finds her dying, repenting her sins. He realizes that he is a sinner and that she is the real martyr.

"My Little Boy," with Ella Hall, Little Zoe Rae and Strong Supporting Cast

(Bluebird Five-Reel Production)

Ella Hall, Little Zoe Rae, Emory Johnson and Gretchen Lederer are the featured players in the five part Bluebird production that comes to the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week as the principal attraction. "My Little Boy" is the title of the feature and it is based upon Charles Dickens' story "A Christmas Carol" and Eugene Field's "Little Boy Blue." Elliott J. Clawson, who has prepared for the screen many of Bluebird's productions, wrote the scenario and it was produced under the direction of Elsie Jane Wilson. With the union of the thoughts of Dickens and Fields, two of the most gifted writers of the English speaking race, it can safely be assumed that something of interest results. It has. The story as produced by Bluebird and presented by Ella Hall, Little Zoe Rae and other artists of Bluebird stock makes screen entertainment that is second to none. It is a heart interest drama, full of the human touches that make for good drama. The story tells of a boy and girl who married against their uncle's will. The uncle is a so-called grouch and vowed that he would never be reconciled. Dickens' character of Scrooge and Field's character in "Little Boy Blue" are both represented in this drama. The title would lead one to believe that the picture is for children alone and not of particular interest to grown-ups. It is of as much interest to the older folk as to the children. There is interest for all. The merry days of childhood, the joys of Christmas time, the power of childhood and the reformation of a confirmed grouch to the ways of the optimist—all is blended in this Bluebird production and presented in drama form by a cast of capable screen artists.

"My Little Boy," with Ella Hall, Little Zoe Rae, Emory Johnson and Gretchen Lederer in the principal roles will be seen on the screen of the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week.

"Those Who Pay," a Thomas Ince Production, with Bessie Barriscale in the Featured Role

(U. S. Exhibitors Booking Corp.—Seven reels)

A Thomas H. Ince production comes to the ——— theatre ——— week entitled "Those Who Pay." It is in seven reels and presents one of the strongest dramatic subjects ever projected on the screen of a motion picture theatre. Gripping, tense drama is the foreword and from the opening flash of the strong title to the final scene your undivided attention is demanded. Bessie Barriscale is in the featured role and she is ably supported by Howard Hickman, Dorcas Mathews and Melbourne McDowell. Raymond West directed the production. The story was written by C. Gardner Sullivan. Charles Stumar did the camera work. With the presentation of "Those Who Pay" you will see a story enacted on the screen that holds from the first. Miss Barriscale gives the best dramatic performance of her career before the camera. The story tells of the adventures of Dorothy Warner, who is the sole support of her infant sister. Christmas approaches and nothing has been done to brighten the life of the child. Dorothy wants to purchase a doll but can not afford the money. She goes to the store on Christmas night but she has not sufficient money to buy even the smallest doll. Determined that her little sister shall not wake and find that Santa Claus has disappointed her, Dorothy takes a chance and steals one. She is detected. George Graham, a prominent lawyer, happens near and intercedes. He makes restitution and accompanies Dorothy home. Baby sister is found dead. Graham engages Dorothy as a stenographer. He promises her everything that money can buy if she will give herself to him. She does so, not knowing that he has a wife. She is happy in the thought that some day he will marry her. She learns that he has a wife and in order that the wife may be given the love of her husband Dorothy sacrifices everything that justice may prevail.

"Those Who Pay," with Bessie Barriscale in the featured role, will be seen on the screen of the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week.

"Without Honor," with Margery Wilson and Darrel Foss in the Featured Roles

(Triangle Five-Reel Production)

"Without Honor" features Margery Wilson. This Triangle feature comes to the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week. In the supporting cast with Miss Wilson are Arthur Moon, Walt Whitman, Darrel Foss, Laura Sears, Anna Dodge and Walter Edwards. The story was written by C. Gardner Sullivan, who is responsible for some of the best dramas that have been projected in pantomime. He is considered of the best and his work vouches for this statement. George Elwood Jenks did the scenario. The production was made under the direction of E. Mason Hopper. The photographic work was done by Charles Stumar. The theme deals with a young man who because of the harshness of his parents revolts, goes to the city, lives under an assumed name and through selfishness rather than evil intent marries, when he has living, a wife he does not love, and married only because forced to by his father. Following his marriage there is time of prosperity and happiness. His crime is detected, however, and he is taken from the woman he loves. She is left alone and is denounced as a "scarlet" woman by Deacon Hanford. The husband dies and it develops that the woman who was denounced as unfit was in the right. She leaves with her baby and the Deacon is left to battle with a guilty conscience, because he has unjustly wronged not alone his own flesh and blood, but another. "Without Honor" is a human story enacted in a most human way by a cast of capable artists. There is a lesson taught that all will be the better for having learned. The human side is reflected in every scene, in every reel. Margery Wilson in the role of the wronged woman is an ideal character for the part and presents it with true appreciation. Darrel Foss presents the role of the husband. Walt Whitman, one of the oldest and best known character actors on the stage and screen, presents the role of Deacon Hanford.

"Without Honor" will be shown on the screen of the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week. Margery Wilson and Darrel Foss in the principal roles.

Viola Dana in Adaptation of Arthur's Famous Melodrama, "Blue Jeans"—Seven Reels

(Metro Seven-Reel Production)

The screen version of Joseph Arthur's famous melodrama, "Blue Jeans," comes to the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week. The production was made by Metro under the direction of John H. Collins. Viola Dana is in the featured role. In the supporting cast are Robert Walker, Sally Crute, Clifford Bruce, Henry Hallam, Russell Simpson, Margaret McWade and Augustus Phillips. The adaptation was made by June Mathis and is in seven reels, with the stage version faithfully represented in pantomime. You all are acquainted with the story—or at least that is the supposition. For years the stage play had the same success that Uncle Tom's Cabin, East Lynne and other popular dramas that will never grow old. Miss Dana presents the role of June. Robert Walker has the role of Perry Bascom. Bascom comes to the town of Rising Sun, Indiana, to take charge of the saw mills which for years have been managed by his father's friend, Colonel Risener. Because his half-brother has brought his name into disrepute in the town Bascom changes his name to Nelson—Jim Nelson. Jim meets June, in overalls. He learns that she has been sent to the poorhouse and that she is out on an errand. Jim shares his lunch with her. June finds a home with a kind-hearted old couple. Jim becomes candidate for Congress. He asks June to marry him if he is elected. Shortly after this Sue Eudaly pays him a visit. Jim had gone through the marriage ceremony with her but learning that she had a living husband he had left her. He is threatened with exposure. The fact is made known and Jim is driven from town because he is believed to have deceived June. Jim returns with proof of Sue's marriage to Jim White and he and June are united.

At the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week, Viola Dana in "Blue Jeans," adapted from Joseph Arthur's famous melodrama of the same name.

Bushman and Bayne in Romantic Drama, "Red, White and Blue"—Fascinating Story

(Metro Five-Reel Production)

Shannon Fife, one of the best known story writers, has written a virile, romantic story titled "Red, White and Blue." It has been adapted to the screen by June Mathis and produced by Metro under the direction of Charles J. Babin, personally supervised by Maxwell Karger. Francis X. Bushman and Beverly Bayne are featured. In the supporting cast are William T. Tooker, Adella Barker, Cecil Fletcher, Duncan McRae, Jack Raymond, C. R. McKinney and Arthur Houseman. "Red, White and Blue" is a typical Bushman-Bayne drama and presents Mr. Bushman in a role that registers with a punch every scene. Mr. Bushman has the role of John Smith, on his way from the "wild and woolly" West where he has spent a year or more as overseer of his father's mining interests. En route to New York he meets Helen Malloy-Smythe, daughter of society-mad parents, who are returning from the West. The train is held up by badmen and young Smith saves the passengers from losing their valuables and saves Helen from serious danger. Arrived in the East young Smith and Helen become close friends. Helen's aristocratic mannerisms and her failure to consider the human side of life are the only obstacles between the two. John plans to make her see life as it is led by the masses. Once introduced to this life Helen becomes interested in the welfare of the people and does much to assist them. A nobleman has set his cap for her and her mother is in favor of the match. They become engaged but John breaks the engagement, seeking to teach her a lesson. A fox hunt is arranged and John unwillingly attends. He again saves Helen from danger and their love is renewed, the Count is forgotten and the two are united.

At the ——— theatre ——— week, "Red, White and Blue," Bushman and Bayne.

Marion Davies in "Runaway Romany"—Romantic Story of Mistaken Identity

(Pathe Five-Reel Production)

Marion Davies, the pretty little stage star, has written a story for the screen and she has been cast in the featured role. "Runaway Romany" is the title. The production was made by Pathe under the direction of George Lederer. In the supporting cast are Joseph Kilgour, Matt Moore, Ormi Hawley, Gladden James, Boyce Combe, W. W. Bitner and Pedro de Cordoba. This is Miss Davies' first starring vehicle. "Inky" Ames (Gladden James) is a theatrical press agent and through a fictitious story makes it appear that Anitra St. Clair, an actress, is the long-lost daughter of Theodore True, the copper king. True accepts the actress as his daughter and True, in answer to a telegram received from his representative in the West, leaves with his newly discovered daughter for the West to inspect newly discovered copper mines. Romany is the flower of a Gypsy camp and Bud Haskel, True's representative in the West, has taken upon himself the duty of instructing her in the rudiments of the English language. Zinga, son of the Gypsy chief, loves her. Romany enlists the aid of Bud to prevent the marriage arranged between her and Zinga. Zinga follows Bud for revenge. True's newly discovered daughter dislikes the West. She arouses the enmity of "Inky" and he threatens to expose the fact that she is not True's daughter. Romany has developed into a beautiful girl. She plans to leave the home of True and writes him a letter telling him of her appreciation for his kindness. The night she leaves, True's safe is robbed and she is accused. True's nephew confesses to the robbery. Bud persuades Romany to return. Zinga, the Gypsy, tells True that Romany is his daughter.

Marion Davies in "Runaway Romany" will be seen on the screen of the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week.

Emily Stevens in "Alias Mrs. Jessop"—Story of Unusual Interest—Strong Cast

(Metro Five-Reel Production)

Emily Stevens, star of "The Slacker" and the famous stage star, will be seen on the screen of the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week in "Alias Mrs. Jessop," written by Blair Hall, adapted to the screen by Albert Shelby Le Vino, and produced by Metro under the direction of William S. Davis. In the supporting cast are: Howard Hall, who was seen in the role of the doctor in Richard Bennett's success, "Damaged Goods;" William T. Tooker, Donald Hall, Mrs. Lillian Paige, Eldean Steuart and Mrs. Sue Balfour. Miss Stevens presents a dual role of Lillian Ford and Janet Ford, cousins. They are alike as twins. Janet has been left a penniless orphan. Michael Ford has treated Lillian as he has his own daughter. Mrs. Ford, on the contrary, has treated her coldly. Lillian is caught in a gambling raid, and confesses later to Janet that she has used her name. Janet resents the liberty her cousin has taken, but consents to take the blame, in order that Sir Anthony Jessop, who is engaged to Lillian, may not know of the affair. The story appears in the papers, and Mrs. Ford insists that her daughter leave her home. Janet leaves and attends school to learn stenography. Lillian is married to Sir Anthony. He soon wakes to the fact that his wife is shallow and frivolous. The baby is his one great solace. He unexpectedly interrupts one of Lillian's parties, and denounces her for her frivolity. Lillian, under the pretense of visiting her father who is ill, leaves for America. Her admirer, Raymond Fleury, follows. They stop at the hotel at which Janet has secured a position as public stenographer. Lillian and her lover leave for the West. A cablegram comes from Lillian telling her that her little son has been seriously injured. Janet leaves for England. Jessop believes that Janet is his wife and Janet falls in love with Lillian's husband. Lillian reads that her husband has been made an Earl. She leaves, is followed and shot by her lover.

Billie Burke in "The Land of Promise"—Adapted from Stage Play—Story of Canada

(Paramount Five-Reel Production)

"The Land of Promise," adapted from the stage play in which Billie Burke made such a decided hit a few seasons ago, is to be presented on the screen of the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week. Miss Burke presents the featured role in the screen version as she did in the stage production. "The Land of Promise" was written by W. Somerset Maugham and produced for the Paramount program under the direction of Joseph Kaufman. Mr. Kaufman will be remembered as the one who directed George Cohan in "Broadway Jones." W. Somerset is the author of many successful plays, among them being "Lady Frederick," "The Explorer," "Mrs. Dot," "The Hero," "The Land of the Blessed Virgin" and "The Magician." The leading male role is played by Thomas Meighan, who has been seen in several features in which Pauline Frederick has been starred. Others in a good supporting cast are Helen T. Tracy, J. W. Johnson, Mary Alden, Margaret Seddon, Walter McEwen, Grace Studeford and John Raymond. Miss Burke, the favorite of many stage successes, is seen in the role of Nora Marsh, who has for ten years been traveling companion to Miss Wickham, a wealthy, crabbed old lady, hated by all her relatives. As much as she can like anyone Miss Wickham likes Nora and hinted at making provisions for her in her will. She is taken ill and dies. Nora finds that no provision has been made for her in the will of the old lady. She goes to her brother, Edward, in Canada, "the land of promise." Her brother has married a waitress, who is a faithful wife to him. When Nora arrives the wife becomes jealous. The "hired man," Frank Taylor, has mentioned the fact that he wants a wife to "do the chores." Nora asks if she will do for the position. They are married and go on a farm in Manitoba to live. Nora regrets her hasty decision to marry and leads an unhappy life. How events turn to change the life of the two and the happy ending is told in "The Land of Promise."

"Salt of the Earth," Adapted from Peter B. Kyne's Story—Chester Barnett, Peggy Adams

(Perfection Five-Reel Production)

Peter B. Kyne's story of "Salt of the Earth," which appeared in the Saturday Evening Post and was enjoyed by the millions of readers of that weekly, has been adapted to the screen and produced by Perfection Pictures. The principal characters are presented by Russell Simpson, William Wadsworth, Peggy Adams, Chester Barnett, William Chatterton and Ivan Christie. Kyne's stories are recognized the country over as most interesting. This fact is pretty good evidence that when created for screen presentation they will please. This one does. "Salt of the Earth" tells the story of how a young man, because of his father's unfair dealings, is deprived of the love of "the only girl." Marjorie Kincaid lives with her father in a Western mining town. Brandon Hyde, an Eastern financier, induces Marjorie's father to buy a worthless mine. Monte, Hyde's son, unconscious of his father's swindling methods in deceiving the old man, accompanies him West and meets Marjorie. Marjorie believes that Monte is in league with his father. Before returning East, however, Monte has received a promise from Marjorie that she will marry him if he can prove his innocence. Shortly afterward Marjorie's father dies. Marjorie is left alone and enters a hospital as nurse. Two old friends of Marjorie's father determine to repair the wrong done their friend. They sell Hyde a worthless mine. Monte comes West again to take charge of the hospital in which Marjorie works. Marjorie is indifferent to his advances and he demands an explanation. The two old friends bring the money they have obtained from Hyde to Marjorie. She refuses to take it but Monte does on the grounds that "it is all in the family."

"Salt of the Earth," written by Peter B. Kyne, with capable cast of Edison players, will be seen on the screen of the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week.

Mae Marsh in "The Cinderella Man"—Adapted from Famous Stage Success

(Goldwyn Six-Reel Production)

Mae Marsh in "The Cinderella Man"—You all know Miss Marsh and it is a safe wager that many of you are acquainted with the story for it has been adapted from Oliver Morosco's famous stage success by Edward Childs Carpenter. The screen version was written by George Loane Tucker. Mr. Tucker directed the production. Mr. Tucker will be remembered for his production of "The Manx Man" and "I Believe," two of the biggest successes of the current year on the screen. "The Cinderella Man" is a play of holiday cheer and is most appropriate for the season. Tom Moore presents the principal male role opposite Miss Marsh. Edward Childs Carpenter, the author, is responsible for the stage play which is now delighting all New Yorkers. "The Pipes of Pan," running at the Hudson theatre. Mr. Carpenter has two successes now on Broadway. Others in Miss Marsh's support are Alec B. Francis, George Fawcett, Louis R. Grisel, George Farren Elizabeth Arianns, Mrs. J. Cogan, Dean Raymond and Harry Scarborough. Marjorie Caner is living in Italy with her mother. Her father is a big figure in the financial district in New York. When Marjorie's mother dies she comes to New York and lives with her father. She finds him a gruff millionaire, living the life of a bachelor. His lawyer, his physician and a celebrated musician are his only friends. He wishes her to marry that he may rid himself of the responsibility of caring for her. He is willing that she marry a young fortune hunter. His three friends plan to defeat this marriage for they want to see Marjorie marry happily. At the other end of the block in a garret lives Anthony Quintard, a poet. He meets Marjorie and they become close friends. Marjorie conceals the fact that she is wealthy. The adventures these two young people have and the happy ending of it all are the points of interest of this most human and entertaining screen drama.

"The Last Leaf"—One of O. Henry's Best—Scenes Laid in Old Greenwich Village

(General Two-Reel Production)

"The Last Leaf" is the title of the late O. Henry feature to be shown at the ——— theatre. It is in two reels. Mildred Manning, Bernard Siegel and Patsy DeForest are in the principal roles. The scenes are laid in the Greenwich Village section of New York—the section where the Bohemians hold sway, where the studio supplants the office building of the downtown section and where art takes the hand. At the top of a two-story building in this section Sue and Johnsy have their studio. Johnsy is a frail, tiny girl from the land of the Golden West and Sue comes from the woods of Maine. The time is November. Johnsy is the victim of pneumonia. The doctor had told Sue that her friend Johnsy had one chance in ten of surviving the attack, and that chance was for her "to want to live." Johnsy has given up all hope of recovering and Sue tells old Behrman, the artist on the floor beneath. Behrman appoints himself guardian of the two girls and scoffs at tenderness. The next day Johnsy is better but Behrman is taken to the hospital with the dread disease. Johnsy had made up her mind that when the last leaf on the old ivy vine clinging to the wall outside, and which ran scrambling over the window pane of the girls' room, had fallen, she was to die. Behrman had learned this and the night before had braved the wind and rain, taken his pallette and brush and painted a leaf on the pane when the last one had fallen.

"The Last Leaf" is one of O. Henry's most pathetic stories and adapts itself to the screen with all the sentiment, pathos and human interest that makes it so interesting between the covers of a volume of this author's work.

"The Last Leaf," in two reels. The late O. Henry picture to be shown at the ——— theatre. ——— week on ———.

"Raffles, the Amateur Cracksman," Adapted from Stage Play—John Barrymore Featured

(Hiller and Wilks (Agents)—Seven Reels)

John Barrymore, idol of the stage and screen, is seen in the title role of E. W. Hornung's popular stage success, Raffles, the Amateur Cracksman." Those of you who remember back ten years will remember the big success that this stage production had throughout this country and England. The screen version was written by Anthony P. Kelly. George Irving directed. In the supporting cast are such well known players as Frederick Perry, H. Cooper Cliffe, Frank Morgan, Christine Mayo, Evelyn Brent, Mike Donlin, Mathilda Brundage. Mr. Barrymore presents the part of Raffles, a highly educated young man who travels in the most exclusive social set and who steals for the excitement of the thing more than because of a criminal instinct. He steals from the rich to give to the poor. The story opens with Raffles aboard a ship, in pursuit of an international crook who has come into possession of a priceless ruby. Raffles steals the ruby from the crook but is detected and jumps overboard to escape capture. Mrs. Vidal (Christine Mayo) who is traveling on the ship sees him. She is an English society woman. Later Raffles turns up in London and enters the best society. He attends a house party given by Lord and Lady Amerstith. In that set he meets Mrs. Vidal and she recognizes him as the one who stole the ruby. She keeps the secret because she loves him. Lady Amerstith shows to her guests, among them Raffles, the Melrose pearls. The pearls disappear and Mrs. Vidal accuses Raffles and threatens to expose him. He defies her. A detective is engaged and Raffles is watched. He is followed to his apartment but by a clever ruse he conceals the jewels. Lady Amerstith's daughter loves Raffles and Raffles loves her. She comes to his apartment and he gives her the jewels and tells her to return them to her mother. Raffles proves that he took them to prevent a professional thief from stealing them.

"The Scarlet Car," Adapted from Richard Harding Davis Story—Franklyn Farnum Featured

(Bluebird Five-Reel Production)

"The Scarlet Car" is adapted from Richard Harding Davis' story. The screen version was written by William Parker. The production was made by Bluebird under the direction of Joseph De Grasse. Franklyn Farnum is in the featured role. In the supporting cast are Edith Johnson, Al W. Filson, Lon Chaney and other Bluebird screen artists. "The Scarlet Car" is a typical Davis story. Mr. Farnum has the role of Billy Winthrop, the town idler. His father is editor of the town's only paper. He is an easy going father and has permitted his son, Billy, to drift into the ways of an idler. Billy gets into a street brawl and is arrested. About the same time as the incident took place the old cashier of the town's bank finds a false entry in the bank's books and recognizes the handwriting as that of the president of the bank. The cashier returns to the bank on that night and hears the president, his son and a representative of a brokerage concern discussing the result of the president's speculation. The cashier hears the broker demand a certain amount of money from the president to cover marginal losses. The cashier enters and demands an explanation. There is trouble and the cashier is beaten, his body is taken away in a car and he is left as dead. Billy's father has spent his last dollar to keep his son out of jail and Billy turns over a new leaf and helps his father out of financial difficulty. Billy loves the cashier's daughter and so does the son of the bank president. The president plans to force the girl to marry him, but Billy prevents it and also accidently solves the mystery surrounding the disappearance of the girl's father, the cashier, turns the tables on the bank president and wins the girl.

Beach Story Begins Public Run

Cleveland Newspapers Claim Thousands Were Turned Away from the Standard — Reports on Picture Favorable

RECEIVING, it is claimed by Goldwyn, an even greater welcome than any of his previous motion pictures, Rex Beach's "The Auction Block," began its career as a Goldwyn Picture throughout North America week before last, opening to good business in the first-run cities.

First to report the inauguration of this picture the Cleveland newspapers reported thousands turned away from the Standard theatre.

Among the notices were: The Cleveland Leader: "Rex Beach's vogue through his previous successful pictures could have been expected to fill the Standard theatre on the opening day of his newest picture under the Goldwyn imprint, 'The Auction Block.' But each day's business at The Standard is bigger than the preceding day. It is a tremendous picture of phases of life known to and seen by millions of Americans."

The Cleveland Press: "An excellent and daring production filled with thrilling excitements and intense drama . . . in a few words there is our estimate of 'The Auction Block.' One of the few motion pictures worthy of particular recommendation."

Chicago Examiner: "'The Auction Block' is a sensational picture that has begun by bringing capacity audiences into the theatres at a time when big attendance is needed and required. This is the 'honey' that will make the public swarm to the box-offices."

Boston Post: "The Boston theatre has the biggest screen attraction of the year in 'The Auction Block.' Long lines of patrons waiting in the cold on Washington street while the house empties for the following performance. Throngs turned away. 'The Auction Block' is the biggest picture of the greatest and most successful novelist of our day"

Triangle Advertising Attracts Attention

A PHOTOPLAY journal of Cincinnati, Ohio, in its issue of December 7, published the following editorial in reference to the Triangle advertisements directed to the exhibitors, that have recently appeared in the motion picture trade papers.

"Did you notice that Triangle advertisement in the papers? If exhibitors are reading the moving picture advertisements they no doubt have noticed that the Triangle ad. is one of the most convincing articles that was ever published. Its tone is one of the most friendly messages that ever reached exhibitors' ears. It is a 'straight from the shoulder' talk and we believe should attract every exhibitors' attention.

"This might be a poor way of writing an editorial, but if an honest writer would read ads. as well as news of trade papers, he will soon agree with us that the writer of this particular Triangle ad. as well as the Triangle Distributing Corporation deserve credit that is due them, and they are bound to win their battle in the moving picture industry, because every line of this ad. has a true message that could not have been delivered to exhibitors in more plainer language.

"Finally, ads. of this kind are what every exhibitor is waiting to hear and some more messages of the same quality will more than encourage the managers of the moving picture houses, and will enable them to work in harmony with the producers. Triangle is bound to grow under such management."

Blackton Leaves for Lasky California Studio

J. Stuart Blackton, producer of the novels of Sir Gilbert Parker for Paramount, left December 5 for California to engage in further production work under the same auspices at the Lasky studio. Commodore Blackton took with him Albert Dorris, his film editor, who is an expert cutter as well. From Chicago, they traveled westward via the Santa Fe. Preparations were under way at the Lasky Studio for the reception of the producer, and a special building has been erected to house his personal office and the offices of his executive staff.

The first picture that Commodore Blackton will make for Paramount in the West will be "Wild Youth," written by Sir Gilbert Parker, and said to be one of the author's most fascinating romances.

In the East he has produced "The Judgment House," which has been released, and "The World for Sale," which will be a Paramount release for January.

Fox Stars Celebrate Wonder Week in Theatres

Personal appearances by George Walsh and Virginia Pearson, Fox Film Corporation stars, were features of the celebration of Wonder Week in four William Fox theatres. The dates selected were December 10 to 16, and the theatres were the Bay Ridge, the Crotona, the Folly and the Audubon.

The stars made two appearances at each of the theatres, Miss Pearson being present on nights when "All for a Husband," her last photoplay release, was shown, and Mr. Walsh's appearances being coincidental with the showing of "The Pride of New York," a drama of cantonments and the trenches, part of which was filmed at Camp Upton, Yaphank, N. Y.

Triangle Films Story Called "The Hopper"

Director Thomas Heffron, whose last picture under Triangle colors was with William Desmond in "The Sudden Gentleman," has begun work on "The Hopper," a screen adaptation from Meredith Nicholson's story by the same name, which appeared in Collier's Weekly. Jack Cunningham did the continuity.

It is described as a crook comedy story, with a reformed safe-blower in the title role, and in this story the man who wanted to go straight finds himself forced into a kidnapping and a robbery. Included in the cast are William V. Mong, who has the title role; Irene Hunt, Walt Whitman, George Hernandez and Peaches Jackson.

Fox General Manager Sees No Crisis

Predicts That Industry Will Have Biggest Year in Its History in 1918—Cites Conditions in Other Countries as a Criterion

IN a general announcement last week, occasioned by the fact that the old year is slipping swiftly away and the new one will shortly step across the threshold of 1918 to get a good look at conditions in the motion picture industry, Winfield R. Sheehan, general manager of the Fox Film Corporation, finds much cause for rejoicing at the conditions as Kid New Year will find them. Mr. Sheehan, it is quite evident from the tone of his message, sees no crisis in the industry, and asserts that his view is very logical when conditions in other countries are considered.

Biggest Year Yet

To put the most optimistic part of his announcement first, that it can better impress upon distributors, manufacturers and exhibitors the full and paramount meaning at stake, Mr. Sheehan prefaced his bundle of cheer with the remark: "The motion picture industry will have the biggest year in its history during 1918."

Mr. Sheehan does not believe the industry faces a crisis, or is in the slightest danger of having to be saved by mergers or combinations. The war, he thinks, will benefit rather than prove harmful to theatres which are showing pictures.

"I know," he said, "that a few persons are shivering from fright, but the experience of exhibitors in other countries—countries that have seen more of this war than we probably ever will hear about—does not justify such an attitude.

"There always is a pessimist present. Many theatre managers, a few years ago, when motion pictures were just beginning to demonstrate their value, felt certain the spoken drama was doomed. Five and ten-cent amusements, they were predicting, would put $2 amusements out of business. Nothing could live in the face of such competition.

Predictions Are Wild

"Since the war began, we have heard all manner of wild predictions. It would ruin business generally; it would bankrupt the nation. No government could stand the financial drain more than a few months. But the war has been in progress three years, business has gone ahead and none of the governments has yet applied for a receiver."

Mr. Sheehan's contention is that the motion picture business is more favorably placed when surrounded by conditions such as war produces than it is in times of great prosperity. "The time never will come," the Fox general manager said, "when people will not require, and demand, and have, some sort of amusement. And even if they cannot spare $5 or $6 for two seats at a so-called legitimate theatre, they certainly will not be compelled to save for many days to accumulate the price of a motion picture performance.

"As a matter of fact, if there is curtailment of expenditures for amusements, the result is certain to be favorable to motion picture exhibitors. It will open to them a new class of patronage. It will bring them the custom of people who have been extravagant and now are beginning to save.

George Horace Lorimer, Who Wrote "Jack Spurlock, Prodigal," for William Fox

And there will be no corresponding loss of present patronage.

Elaborate Plans Ahead

"The people of this country will have to be pinched a great deal harder than they ever have been before they will unanimously vote the expenditure of from twenty to fifty cents an extravagance."

The Fox Film Corporation, Mr. Sheehan announced, is going ahead with plans of an elaborate nature for next year. "We will spend more money for features in 1918 than we have ever spent before. We will have more stars, more directors and more companies than we have ever had. We will make bigger productions than we have ever made and on a scale more elaborate than anything ever undertaken in the history of the business.

"The 'Jack Spurlock-Prodigal' deal which we have just completed with George Horace Lorimer is an indication of our intention to go the limit in obtaining the right sort of material for our stars. The Saturday Evening Post editor's novel cost us more than any producer ever has paid for similar rights.

Actions—Then Words

"And we have in hand a number of other much bigger projects—one, for instance, already far enough under way to justify the statement that it will surpass anything of the sort we have ever undertaken. But our policy, you know, is to do our talking after we have tangible evidence to offer in support of our statements. You will remember we said very little about Standard Pictures until we had completed five or six productions and had spent over a million dollars on them. When we did talk, we had something very definite to talk about.

"And we are going to have more to talk about in 1918 than we had in 1917. We are demonstrating our faith by carrying our foreign campaign right into the war area and that faith is receiving justification on every delivery of European mail. We are preparing—we are, in fact, prepared—for the biggest year in the history of the motion picture industry."

Paramount Puts Campaign Behind Chapin Features

Back of the forthcoming Benjamin Chapin two-reel features concerning the life of Lincoln, which will be released by Paramount and which will include ten releases in all, Paramount is planning to place a huge advertising campaign supplemented by circularization and special campaigns that should create a great demand for the series, to be known as "The Son of Democracy."

Details of the campaign and the release date are expected to be announced shortly.

Mulhall Joins Triangle Playing Forces

Jack Mulhall, well-known leading man, has been added to the Triangle playing forces at Culver City and is in the cast supporting Margery Wilson in her latest vehicle, "Three Godsons of Jeannette Gontreau," taken from Francis W. Sullivan's story of the same name, which appeared recently in the Ladies' Home Journal.

Richardson Double in "Spirit of '76"

Jack Richardson, the Triangle heavy who has just completed "Man Above the Law," in which he was cast in the title role, has issued a statement denying that the Jack Richardson appearing in the cast of "The Spirit of '76," the picture seized by the U. S. Government, is in any way connected with him. "I never played in the condemned picture and do not know the Jack Richardson appearing on the cast," declared the Triangle player.

You are not going to war. The men who are need all the comforts you can give them. Help them get cigarettes. That is your patriotic duty. If you aren't helping in the "smokes" campaign, get busy—now. Don't be a slacker!

Madge Evans Stars in Feature

"The Volunteer" Also Presents Henry Hull and Shows Intimate Views of World-Brady Studio In Fort Lee, N. J.

THE current World-Picture Brady-Made, in which Madge Evans, "the World's kiddie star," and Henry Hull are featured equally, has the movies as its topic. It starts in the World's studio at Fort Lee, and very largely follows the picture which supposedly is being taken at that particular time with little Madge as its star and Harley Knoles directing.

That individual play shows Madge's father going off to war and Madge's mother departing for France as a member of the Red Cross. This makes it necessary for little Miss Evans—in the story—to abandon her professional career for the time being and go to live with relatives out West, until her parents return. These relatives are Quakers, and the head of the family is so firmly set against war that he and his son, who is filled with patriotic fervor and desires to enlist, keep the household in perpetual riot.

"The Volunteer" is the motion picture play in which all the stars of World-Pictures appear personally, each for a moment, as one by one they bid Madge goodbye when she is leaving the studio for her new home. These include Kitty Gordon, Ethel Clayton, Evelyn Greeley, June Elvidge, Carlyle Blackwell, Montagu Love and director general William A. Brady himself, together with Madge's own director, Harley Knoles.

The first big scene, showing all the

Madge Evans, in World-Brady Pictures

World companies working in the studio, was photographed from a platform built sixty feet high just outside the great structure of glass and steel. At this point a section of the glass was removed, the camera was inserted in the aperture, and the "shooting" began.

This inner life picture differs from others seeking to transfer behind-the-scenes in movie land to the screen, in that it not alone shows how a picture is made but how the picture can influence for good when it is finally projected in the theatre.

Vitagraph Celebrates an Anniversary

FRIDAY, December 7, was an important anniversary in the history of Greater Vitagraph and the industry, marking one of the most memorable undertakings ever credited to Albert E. Smith, the company's president.

Five years ago on the date mentioned President Smith started a motion picture company of eleven persons on a trip around the world and during their six months' tour they visited seven important foreign countries, making pictures in fourteen of the large cities of these countries. Eleven persons, including the cameraman, manager and scenarioist, who wrote plays for production in each of the cities visited, constituted the party.

One of the most valuable phases of the trip was the fact that it demonstrated to the people of the United States and the rest of the world that motion pictures were unlimited in their capacity for bringing the ends of the world together and educating the peoples of all countries to a knowledge of each other. The faithful presentation of India, China, Japan, Egypt and other places in the series of Vitagraph pictures was one of the chief factors in bringing the public to a proper appreciation of the motion picture and winning respect for them. This, in fact, is said to be one of the things on which the present popularity and strength of motion pictures rests.

President Smith started his troupe of globe-trotters away from the Grand Central Terminal, New York, on the morning of December 7, 1912, a day when motion pictures might be said to have just been entering upon their modern phase. In the party were W. S. Smith, brother of the Vitagraph president; Clara Kimball Young and James Young, then active in Vitagraph features; William V. Ranous and his wife; Maurice Costello, his wife and their two daughters, Helen and Dolores; Eugene Mullin, manager of the Vitagraph Scenario Department; Harry Keepers, cameraman.

Lee Children Use Antique Furniture in Scene

Jane and Katherine Lee, William Fox's youthful stars, are now appearing, it was announced last week, in a Standard Picture, one scene of which requires a lot of antique furniture. This, it is said, was secured from shops whose specialty is handling such furniture.

You are not going to war. The men who are need all the comforts you can give them. Help them get cigarettes. That is your patriotic duty. If you aren't helping in the "smokes" campaign, get busy—now. Don't be a slacker!

Censorship Curbs Cameramen in Walsh Feature

Motion picture cameramen are coming to believe that it would be about as easy to get into a United States military camp with a bomb as to carry an unlicensed camera. As a measure of precaution against spies, the Government not only requires that permits must be obtained for doing photographic work in army camps, but that the finished photographs also be submitted to the camp commander for approval.

Photographs taken at Camp Upton, Yaphank, N. Y., on the basis of this authorization, comprise an important part of the George Walsh production, "The Pride of New York." Arrangements for this part of the work, such as the photographing of groups of men, of course, also have to be made with commanders of the units involved. Permits are not difficult to obtain, but sometimes considerable time is required and the filming naturally must be done at the convenience of the officers and men.

Huge Settings Erected for "The Blue Bird"

When Artcraft releases "The Blue Bird," the Maeterlinck spectacle, it will have established, it is said, new records in film production, presenting the largest settings ever staged inside a studio, including the Black Palace of Night, the Palace of Luxuries, the Cave of Miseries, the Azure Palace, Memoryland and the Cathedral of Happiness. In each one of these settings scenes are shown which would ordinarily constitute an elaborate feature photoplay, it is claimed.

Maurice Tourneur, the director, has had the exclusive use of the Famous Players-Lasky studios at Fort Lee, N. J., where the regular force of carpenters, electricians and mechanics has been greatly augmented and has been working day and night building the scenery and effects. The technical department is being assisted by two New York artists. The immense stage, which usually accommodates a number of sets at one time, has been occupied repeatedly by individual sets of colossal dimensions for "The Blue Bird."

Theda Bara Begins New William Fox Production

After one week's vacation, Theda Bara started her twenty-eighth William Fox photodrama this week at the Fort Lee studios of the Fox Film Corporation. She is working under the direction of J. Gordon Edwards. This has been the longest rest that Miss Bara has ever had between pictures, usually three or four days sufficing, it is said.

In the new photoplay, which has not been named, Miss Bara again will be presented in a typical home-wrecking, soul destroying vampire portrayal. The action takes place in East India, later shifting to Paris. There are said to be many novel situations planned for the production.

The scenario was written by Adrian Johnson.

Paramount-Artcraft Welcome 1918

See No Cause for Complaint If Coming Year Brings Progress Equal to Past One—War Had No Ill Effects on Picture Industry

IF the year to come develops as great advancement in the motion picture industry as that which is just passing, no one will have cause to utter a complaint, according to the opinion of the executive heads of Paramount and Artcraft.

Adolph Zukor, president of Famous Players-Lasky; Hiram Abrams, president of Paramount; Jesse L. Lasky, vice-president of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, and Walter E. Greene, president of Artcraft, have all expressed great satisfaction at the treatment meted out to their concerns during 1917, and declare that the business progressed by leaps and bounds in the past twelve months.

Shift Proved Benefit

In speaking of Famous Players-Lasky, Mr. Zukor said: "So far as the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation is concerned, the shift on August 5 last to the Star Series Selective booking system was one of the most important developments. This has become a matter of history, in connection with the absorption of Artcraft and Paramount, the distributing concerns, by the parent organization, while the latest movement of importance is embodied in the million dollar advertising campaign recently launched to create new photoplay patrons and still further popularize Paramount and Artcraft pictures. Add to this the fact that our organization has added many important stars and writers to its roster within the last twelve months and it would appear perfectly just to say that the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation has been instrumental in what may be termed genuinely epoch-making achievements in the film industry.

"What of business of 1918? My answer to this question would be—it depends on the individual or, rather the individual organization. I can see only increased interest in pictures on the part of the public in the next year, as a natural outcome of the increased demand for moderate priced amusement, always a necessity in war-times. I am frank to state, however, that I believe it will be a case of the survival of the fittest. Certainly the public is becoming more discriminating with every passing year and will not be satisfied with mediocre productions or inferior players and stories. Pictures being no longer a novelty, it is certain that only those companies which are capable of producing superior screen entertainment will share in the increased business that I believe is bound to come."

Exhibitors Discriminating

Mr. Abrams said: "I have been pleased to note the immense advance in discrimination and have learned that the vast majority of exhibitors know pretty much what they want and will not be put off with cheap substitutes. In borrowing this phrase from the patent medicine manufacturer I feel that I have cited a genuine analogy. Only, the line of demarcation is even more pronounced. There is a set standard for pictures. And the discriminating exhibitor demands, and is justified in demanding that kind and no other. The poor picturee is doomed to failure from the start. The mediocre picture may die a more gradual death but it is fated to go down in the crush of better films.

William S. Hart, Artcraft Star

"1918 will see a very general increase in admission prices, a thing justified by the advanced cost in every department of production, distribution and exhibition, but this increase will work no material hardship upon the public to whom pictures will continue to be the cheapest form of amusement.

"1918 will see also continued improvement in exhibiting conditions. From being an ephemeral form of entertainment, the films have won their own legitimate place and one that is on a plane of quality with the best in the drama. The days of the film freebooter are past; the times of juggling and uncertainty are at an end. There will be changes, but they will be legitimate, the outcome of new conditions engendered by the war, by the advent of new ideas and new methods in all departments. But my trip has proved to me that eternal vigilance is the price of success in the industry. That the least slackening in effort, the failure at any time to recognize the increased discrimination of the people will result in a sudden slump for the one who thus blinds himself to his own best interests."

Lasky Enthusiastic

Mr. Lasky remarked: "It is little more than a month ago that I came East from a visit to California, filled with enthusiasm over the prospects for our future and present productional activities. I found a similarly gratifying condition in our Eastern studios, when I arrived in New York. Since then, I have seen no reason to change or modify my views. While pure optimism is frequently liable to overreach itself and blind a man to things that should be seen, I am not averse to saying that I am optimistic over the future of the industry. I am naturally interested particularly in production work because it is in this department of the activities of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation that I am deeply concerned at all times. And when I noted the constantly improving facilities, the additions of new materials, new stars, new directors—and realized as well that we already were equipped with a superior force and means of producing the best pictures that money, experience and skill, coupled with artistic perception could evolve—I saw that nothing short of a lessening of our own efforts could result in anything but the most flattering success.

"Production in the year to come offers a vast field for speculation, but I believe that further changes, of a radical nature, at least, will come less frequently than in the past. There will doubtless grow out of the experiences of the past and the efforts toward advancement new ideas and inventions directed toward more perfect productions, but I will frankly admit that it is difficult now to anticipate. What can be done that is not now being done? I believe that the majority of changes will be technical in character."

Stars a Big Factor

Mr. Greene said: "The growth of the business to its present proportions is such recent history that comment upon it is unnecessary. The single reel service was supplanted by two and three reels, and this in turn has been eliminated by the five and six-reel production.

"With the advent of these super-pictures, presenting such stars as Mary Pickford, Douglas Fairbanks, Geraldine Farrar, Elsie Ferguson, William S. Hart and George M. Cohan, produced by the acknowledged masters of the screen like D. W. Griffith, Cecil B. DeMille, Thomas H. Ince, Maurice Tourneur, Marshall Neilan, Allan Dwan and John Emerson, the matter of distribution became pivotal for conditions arose which made the theatre depend for its very existence on service.

"The most modern methods of efficiency are presented to the exhibitor taking Artcraft service, and he has at his command the efforts of the highest salaried and trained men in every branch. This is accomplished in the same manner as the great newspapers of the country, who secure the services of famous writers whose remuneration would be prohibitive, but whose contributions are syndicated in a chain of papers, each one paying a small proportion, and all of them enjoying as much benefit as if they were the sole beneficiaries."

Richardson Gives Publicity Tips

Does Not Hand Any Bouquets to Press Representatives Who "Kid the Newspapers" — "Personal" Exploiters Retard "Regulars"

Leander Richardson, publicity manager of World-Pictures Brady-Made, has prepared for "personal" press agents a little token of Christmas remembrance that, while it may strike home in a number of spots, is not likely to call forth any loud applause for encores.

In speaking of publicity work in general and press agents in particular, Mr. Richardson said:

"The slue of inconsequential guff that finds its way into newspapers in reference to motion pictures would be considerably reduced if editors would or could see the advisability of shutting down on personal press agents for stars or lesser luminaries of the screen.

"This eruption of protest is not upheaved from a state of rage induced by the fact that diverse persons make a living from the exploitation of more or less gifted movie players. It is hung solely upon the proposition that they ball up the regular publicity men and the editors too.

"It may be that not all the known regular publicity men have a proper regard for their obligations to editors. There is, alas, a fellow here and there who thinks it a clever stroke to kid newspapers. A few of these last a good deal longer than there is any sane reason to expect, but they are usually found out finally. Some of them doubtless join the ranks of personal press agents for stars and minor lights who are impressed with their past connections—not performances.

"But as a general thing the publicity men of experience, holding responsible positions, are careful not to send Jim Crow stories to the press. Most of them are constitutionally above that sort of thing; the others realize that the comeback is too strong.

Biograph Studio Used by Many Companies

THE completion of Harry Rapf's production, "The Struggle Everlasting," starring Florence Reed and directed by James Kirkwood, is the sixth production staged at the Bronx Biograph studio by Harry Rapf during the past year. His former productions were "The Argyle Case," "The Silent Master," "The Mad Lover," "The Forced Honeymoon," all featuring Robert Warwick—and "To-Day" with Florence Reed.

Aside from directing some of the Harry Rapf productions, Ralph Ince has produced "The Co-Respondent" and "The Battle Cry" with Elaine Hammerstein, at the studio.

Mme. Petrova is at present busy with her Petrova pictures and has already completed two productions at this studio.

Clara Kimball Young produced "The Easiest Way," "The Price She Paid" and "The Foolish Virgin" during the past year.

Louis J. Selznick produced "Scandal" and "The Honeymooners," with Constance Talmadge, and "Lest We Forget," a massive spectacle, with Rita Jovilet.

"Fatty" Arbuckle produced several comedies before going to California

Harry Weber produced "The Wild Girl," with Eva Tanguay.

Mark M. Dintenfass is now producing Ambassador Gerard's "My Four Years in Germany," under the direction of William Nigh.

"Over There," with Charles Richman; "Runaway Romany," with Marion Davies; "Day Break," with Emily Stevens, were filmed there.

Pathe's "Les Miserables" Well Received

THAT the picture play like the drama, music, art and literature is to have its deathless classics is indicated by the reception being accorded Pathe's "Les Miserables," a reissue.

It is reported by F. C. Quimby, sales manager of Pathe Exchange, Inc., that this masterpiece has played to capacity business in all the theatres where its exhibition has been adequately heralded. And this proves, according to Pathe, that the big picture with the great story for its theme will be played time after time in the same theatres just as the great operas are rendered each season to crowded houses.

"The picture fan is just as enthusiastic and devout a lover of real artistry in picture plays as the lover of music who enthusiastically attends the opera season after season. And the great picture play that reaches the artistic and dramatic heights of a real masterpiece will live as long as the screen itself," said Pathe.

Mr. Quimby states that "Les Miserables" was reissued in answer to a great volume of requests received by the Pathe company direct from the picture fans and that in reissuing the subject the greatest care has been taken to furnish the exchange with prints and advertising matter in keeping with the high artistic quality of the masterpiece.

Jewel Feature Draws Well in Iowa Town

When the Jewel feature, "The Man Without a Country," played at Creston, Iowa, for one night recently, it numbered as its audience one-sixth of the entire population of the town, according to information received from William Weldon, manager of the Willard theatre there, by Jewel offices. Rand-McNally gives the town of Creston 6,000 inhabitants.

Director Crane Holds Record for Making Stars

Probably the most unique distinction which any of the present-day picture directors may lay claim to is that possessed by Frank Crane, now chosen to guide the screen destinies of Madame Olga Petrova in the third vehicle bearing the stamp of her own organization, and who has recently finished the picturization of the Goldwyn production "Thais," and started work this week on "The Life Mask," starring the famous Polish artiste.

To Mr. Crane belongs the distinction of having held the dictatorial reins over the picture premieres of no less than five screen stars, all now high in popularity and fame.

The selection of Crane to handle the production details of the third picture in which Madame Petrova will appear was made by Frederick L. Collins, president of the Petrova Picture Company, and the star herself, after a consideration of the producer's former accomplishments.

Paralta Increases Eastern Scenario Department

The Eastern Scenario Department of Paralta Plays, Inc., under the direction of Harry Chandlee, is gradually expanding. Recently Mr. Chandlee added two assistants. One of them, Miss Elizabeth B. Petersen, has been a scenario writer since her fourteenth year, when she sold her first scenario, "Their Mutual Friend," to Vitagraph. She was then in her first year in the high school. Miss Petersen since then has written a number of original scenarios which have been produced by leading companies.

Mr. Chandlee's other assistant is Miss Helen Christene Hoerle. Like Miss Petersen, Miss Hoerle is known as a writer for the magazines having contributed fiction to most of them. Her first work in the motion picture field was publicity and the editorial examination of scenarios. Miss Hoerle joined the Equitable scenario staff in September, 1915, as assistant editor. Later she went to the Fox scenario staff, where she remained for about a year, leaving that organization to become associated with Metro. Leaving that concern Miss Hoerle went into partnership with J. Allen Boone, conducting a publicity bureau and photoplay agency in the Aeolian Building.

Ricca Allen Is Considered One of the Leading Character Artistes of the Screen

Spoor Art Directors Design Subtitle Scheme

George K. Spoor's artistic directors are engaged in designing the subtitle scheme of Mary MacLane's first and only screen presentation, "Men Who Have Made Love to Me," it is announced.

The celluloid on some of these subtitles went through the camera six times to obtain the complete effect. These particular ones show Miss MacLane as she sits at her library desk, relating the story of her "six piquant love affairs—each damnably real." The smoke of her cigarette curls in and out through the spoken lines at Miss MacLane's elbow and is said to be a deviation and an artistic improvement on the "spoken subtitle" idea.

Other subtitles required days of constant effort, it is said, on the part of the artists in the producing of sculptored effects.

"Men Who Have Made Love to Me" is to be released some time in February as a George K. Spoor Ultra Feature.

Viola Dana Achieves New Triumph in "Blue Jeans"

Metro's young star, Viola Dana, as June of the big picture, "Blue Jeans," is said to reach the height of her screen career, thus far. In summing up the productions in which she has been starred by Metro, the following are noted: "The Girl Without a Soul," "Aladdin's Other Lamp," "Lady Barnacle," "God's Law and Man's," "The Mortal Sin," "Threads of Fate," "The Gates of Eden," "The Light of Happiness," and "The Flower of No Man's Land." Her performance in "Blue Jeans," far surpasses any of her previous triumphs, it is claimed.

Vic Moore Gets Chummy with the Parrot in His Newest Klever Komedy

Pathe Shows Good War Films

Registers Another Scoop With "The German Curse In Russia," Which Was First Shown at the Strand Theatre in New York

ANOTHER apparent scoop for Pathe is revealed in the announcement that this company, which has made such a success with its Official War Films, will be sole distributors of "The German Curse in Russia," which had its first showing in America last week at the Strand theatre, New York.

This motion picture was brouught back to the United States by Donald C. Thompson, the young Kansan, known by Pathe as the world's greatest war photographer, who returned after spending three years on every battle front in Europe and Russia, eleven months being required to obtain the Russian picture alone.

From the beginning of the first reel of this feature to the end there are said to be hundreds of the most unusual battle-front scenes, and the most remarkable "over the top" charges that have ever been photographed. Every foot of the film that is shown helps, it is claimed, to visualize for the American people the means that the Germans utilized in Russia to bring about food riots, street fighting and the final overthrow of the government which had been established for them upon a foundation of freedom and liberty.

Scenes of great interest at this time are those of the Women's Death Battalions, showing Botchkareva and her loyal feminine soldiers from the day that the call to arms was made, going through their training until they are perfect soldiers and then going to the front, where, it is said, they not only took over two lines of German trenches but captured hundreds of Germans and a number of officers.

Russian Youth in the Army, in Donald Thompson's War Film for Pathe

There is said to be more real interest for the woman in these incidents in this production than ever have appeared in a war production before.

Klever Komedies See Prosperity in 1918

ACCORDING to an announcement last week from Famous Players-Lasky, Klever Komedies for the year of 1918 will loom up stronger and bigger than at any time since they have been on the market.

Joseph Plunkett said: "We will offer comedies produced with even stronger casts, headed by Victor Moore, who has made a great personal hit with the 'fans,' adding many to his already large list of admirers. Comedies with a real story are not easily found, but Klever Komedies have always had a high class story and always will have one—it is the thing we find most essential to success with comedies. We aim to give the public comedies and satires on current happenings in daily life. In 'Nutty Knitters,' 'Home Defense' and 'Bungalowing' are found stories that have helped bring many laughs home to the audience, largely because of their timeliness.

"With the new year it is probable that there will be a shortage of short-reel subjects, indicated by the fact that a number of the concerns have already announced the discontinuance of several well-known comedy brands, and we are satisfied that exhibitors will be glad to note the availability of Klever Komedies—short comedy subjects embracing all that the public like best in the line of comedy.

"The Paramount Pictures Corporation, realizing this probable shortage, has organized special short-reel departments in each of its various exchanges for the excellent subjects it is releasing, among which are the Klever Komedies. That they feel the short subject is essential to every program is proven by this move, and it will be the desire of Klever Komedies for the new year to keep up the standard along with the other short subjects, released by Paramount."

Bara Becomes Blonde in New Fox Production

For the first time in her screen career, Theda Bara will shortly become a blonde, the Fox offices announce. In her production of "Du Barry," the star wears an auriferous aura about her face. It is produced by the golden-haired wig which was part and parcel of the original Du Barry. Searching through the memoirs of the French favorite, Miss Bara discovered that she was historically of blonde persuasion. Consequently, in her search for accuracy and realism, the William Fox star decided to follow the footsteps of the woman she was portraying.

Harry Carey, Emory Johnson, Louise Lovely and Molly Malone Are Four Universal Stars Whose Respective Talents Are Shining Very Brightly

Universal Coast Forces Active

Keeping Up Supply of Pictures With Harry Carey, Ella Hall, Louise Lovely and Herbert Rawlinson as the Stars

UNIVERSAL CITY'S staff of producers and directors is providing for the future with regard to the demand from exhibitors for pictures featuring Harry Carey, Ella Hall, Louise Lovely and Herbert Rawlinson, stars established in public favor through past performances. Elsie Jane Wilson, who, with Ida May Park, is competing with the sterner sex in turning out effective screen showings at Universal City, is now directing Ella Hall; Jack Ford is producing Harry Carey features; Elmer Clifton is turning out Herbert Rawlinson releases and a new producer, Edward Jones, has taken the screen management of Louise Lovely.

Harry Carey features will be elaborately promoted, it is said, by Universal during the coming year with Jack Ford carefully selecting the scenarios to give both the star and Molly Malone, his leading woman, roles that will best serve their talents. "Back to the Right Trail," produced from George Hively's scenario of Frederick R. Becholdt's story, has been completed and will soon be scheduled. With Miss Malone heading the support, Vesta Pegg, John Cook, L. M. Wells, Helen Wright and Martha Mattox also have essential roles.

"Lin McClean," adapted for the screen by Geo. Hively from Owen Wister's story, is now in process of production, with Harry Carey and Molly Malone leading a company that also employs Betty Schade, Vesta Pegg, M. K. Wilson, William Carrol and Roy Clark. Both of these Harry Carey features will employ troops of cowboys and range riders to hold the Western atmosphere true to life.

Louise Lovely's first presentation, under her new director, Edward Jones, will be "The Quest of Joan," the story written by James Oliver Curwood. Playing opposite Miss Lovely, will be Phil McCullough, a new leading man, with Charles Hill Mailes, Marc Fenton, William Chester and Gertrude Aster in the supporting forces.

Iowa Manager Leans Toward Mutual

THE advantages of a service which carries a wide variety of pictures is pointed out by F. E. Hughart, owner and manager of the Eagle theatre at Grand Junction, Ia., one of the most progressive of small city exhibitors in Iowa, according to reports from Mutual.

Public taste may run to comedy dramas or to sex pictures or to melodrama, and the fickle public does display amazing changes in its entertainment demands, but it demands diversity before anything else.

According to Mr. Hughart, the most valuable service to the exhibitor is one which furnishes variety enough to keep his audiences entertained, for the patrons of motion picture theatres soon tire of a steady diet of westerns, comedies or any particular variety of productions.

Mr. Hughart has written his opinions to the Mutual Film Corporation in the following letter: "Please accept my thanks for the good judgment shown in sending me pictures that vary—that are different in character and plot. The features last month were everyone fine and some of them exceptional. William Russell goes best with Jackie Saunders a close second. An unsolicited notice in our local paper is ample proof that patrons like the sort of pictures you are furnishing me. I want to express my appreciation, too, for the fine quality of the film."

Accident Delays Work on Selig's "The Rowdy"

Work on Selig's production, "The Rowdy," under the direction of Harry Beaumont, has been delayed because of Hazel Daly's accident in Vicksburg recently, it was announced last week. However, work will commence again shortly, it is said.

"The Rowdy" is said to be a breezy modern story, with plenty of action.

Walsh Believes Spectacle Days Are About Over

Spectacle for spectacle's sake is a dead precept and a deadly precept for the modern picture producer, according to the dictum of R. A. Walsh, the director who is to devote his creative energies to Goldwyn Pictures.

"I know, because I have had a good deal to do with some big pictures myself and I have watched the development of this type of screen play very closely," said Mr. Walsh. "I was fortunate to work with pictures that, while they made a great display of crowds and great buildings, yet were first of all dramas of intimate human emotions. And that is the essential thing.

"I have always felt that 'The Birth of a Nation' did almost as much mischief to the film industry as it did good. That is the way with big, daring, creative things. All nature and all human development testify to that."

Metro Experiments Three Years on New Titles

For more than three years Richard A. Rowland, president of Metro Pictures Corporation, has been experimenting to overcome what he terms the distinct inartistic fault in motion pictures, namely, the title which interrupts dramatic action.

As a result of this experimental work, Mr. Rowland has secured, it is said, a result which is a revolution in motion picture titling. This is the delayed action title within the atmosphere of the situation, and in "Blue Jeans" all the titles of this production are said to be of this sort. The titles of the usual motion picture have the same effect on the audience that would be secured in a theatre where a spoken play is given, if the stage were to be made dark each time a word was spoken. This is considered by Mr. Rowland inartistic and dramatically in error.

Metro does not claim originality in presenting a title printed on the scene of the picture, but does claim that the method employed in the "Blue Jeans" titles is distinctly new and is one which all manufacturers of motion pictures will eventually adopt.

New York State Chooses Vitagraph

Will Produce Patriotic Feature Designed to Show How Empire State Puts Down Enemy Plots—Governor Whitman Will Appear in the Picture

IT was announced last week that the Vitagraph Company has been selected by the State of New York to produce a big patriotic feature designed to show the rest of the states and the world in general how the Empire State of the nation has put down enemy plots and plotters before and since the entrance of the United States in the conflict.

Governor Charles S. Whitman of New York will personally appear in the picture, playing before the camera the role that he has played in real life. Every agency and facility of the State protective machinery will be placed at the disposal of Vitagraph in making the mammoth picture, it is said.

The story was written by Robert W. Chambers and is founded on actual records in the State archives. The title has not been announced.

Smith Supervises It

Albert E. Smith, president of Greater Vitagraph, will personally supervise the making of this big feature, the actual direction being in the hands of John Robertson. Corinne Griffith and Webster Campbell, Vitagraph favorites, will be the featured players, with Governor Whitman as the dominant figure behind the protective machinery of the State.

Final production plans were completed last week after more than a month of conferences participated in by the Adjutant-General of New York State, President Smith of Vitagraph, Walter W. Irwin, general manager of the Vitagraph Distributing Organization, Governor Whitman's chief military advisers, the head of the State Military Police, Robert W. Chambers and leaders in the work of ferreting out alien enemies in this country. The plans as finally determined upon were submitted to Governor Whitman and approved.

At the start of these conferences the general plan of the enterprise was outlined and at each succeeding meeting the story was strengthened and developed from official records, Governor Whitman's advisers, Mr. Smith and Mr. Chambers, working in close harmony on the preparation of the scenario.

The Vitagraph Company was selected, it is said, for this enormous undertaking after the officials of the State of New York had surveyed the entire motion picture industry for the purpose of securing the co-operation of a producing and distributing organization whose equipment, resources and prestige gave assurance of the most complete presentation and widest possible dissemination of the subject to be handled.

Length Not Decided

No announcement has been made as to the number of reels to be used in making the production, but from the mass of official data which was placed at the disposal of Mr. Chambers for the preparation of his drama of patriotic energy, it probably will be as imposing in length as it is powerful in conception.

The chief object of letting the state and nation know through the medium of a motion picture of the methods that have been employed here to stifle treason, sabotage, arson and other crimes inimical to the United States is to let the rest of the country—states, cities and hamlets—profit by the experiences of New York. Long before the United States was drawn into the war, the State of New York, with its organized machinery and its thousands of special agents, was working in co-operation with the Federal Service to protect the metropolis and the nation from their enemies. From the time the first German ship was interned, the State had a problem on its hands that was universal in its relation to the rest of the country. As each month drew this country closer to the malestrom of carnage, this problem grew larger, with thousands of ramifications, and the fact that New York City and State have been so free, relatively, from the explosions and other outrages that have been visited upon other sections of the country by secret enemies of America, is a tribute to the vigilance and efficiency of the defensive machinery.

Tom Terriss, Vitagraph Director

Will Withhold Nothing

In announcing the production of the feature, Vitagraph has announced that nothing will be withheld. Attempts to blow up shipping, to hamper transportation, to stir uprisings, destroy munitions plants, incite strikes and otherwise cripple the United States and New York in their defensive measures will be revealed. The method of patrolling the vital industries and utilities and the guarding of the water front also will be shown.

New York's governor, his war cabinet and various important military officials will be conspicuous all through the action of the production, as necessarily most of the big action of the piece will center around them. Hundreds of scenes of war-time activity in the capitol at Albany, together with those from many other sections of the state, will figure in it. New York harbor, the buildings of the metropolis and every place that in any way has been imperiled or menaced by enemies will be filmed.

Albert E. Smith states that he welcomes the opportunity to make this picture for the State of New York and the nation at large. J. Stuart Blackston's "The Battle Cry of Peace" and "Womanhood, the Glory of the Nation," carried messages of warning to the people of the Unitel States and served to arouse them to preparedness and patriotism, and of these Vitagraph is justly proud, Mr. Smith declared. This new production, he said, will carry facts which every American man, woman and child should know in order that they may aid the government in protecting us from undiscovered spies and enemy vandals who may be lurking in the various states.

Chambers Writes Script

Robert W. Chambers, Mr. Smith declared, has written in this new photodrama the most powerful work of his career. Based on actualities, with a patriotic motive as his inspiration, the author is said to have produced a story which will stand as one of the classic contributions to the literature of the war and the library of motion picture masterpieces. Mr. Chambers will be a member of the official advisory board which will work with Mr. Smith and Director Robertson in the making of the picture. Governor Whitman's military advisers during the entire production will be closely associated with the work.

Corinne Griffith, who has been selected for the leading feminine role, is one of the prominent young Vitagraph stars who has been growing rapidly in public favor during the last year. She was for several months in features with Earle Williams and then was made a star in her own right, her first starring vehicle being "I Will Repay," an adaptation from O. Henry's story, "A Municipal Report."

Webster Campbell is one of the well known young juveniles of the screen, his most recent work being in a role opposite Alice Joyce in "The Fettered Woman," an adaptation from Robert W. Chambers' novel, "Anne's Bridge."

Astra Puts On Full Steam Ahead

Pathe Plays and Gold Rooster Productions Keep Entire Staff Busy —Two Woods Plays are Being Made

THE greatest activity prevails, it is announced, at both Astra studios, where the entire directorial force is at work on forthcoming Pathe features. Two Al H. Woods plays are being made ready for release and three stories, with equally big casts, are well under way, it is made known.

George Fitzmaurice is busily engaged in the direction of the Al Woods stage success, "Innocent," which will have Fannie Ward in the star role, supported by John Miltern, playing the same part he interpreted in the stage production.

Albert Parker is directing the screen version of the Al H. Woods stage hit, "The Other Woman," in which Peggy Hyland, Milton Sills and Anna Lehr will be seen in the leading roles.

Hobart Henley is putting the finishing touches to "Mrs. Slacker," a story of present-day war conditions, by Agnes Johnston, that should arouse the last drop of latent patriotism, even though it is not a war story. It is said to abound in human interest and heart appeal, and is receiving a most elaborate production, according to reports. Gladys Hulette, Creighton Hale, Walter Heirs and Paul Clerget, the French pantomime artist, make up the cast.

"Convict No. 993," adapted from Wallace Clifton's mystery story, "The Frame Up," with a cast including Irene Castle, Harry Benham, Warner Oland, Helene Chadwick, J. H. Gilmour and Paul Everton, has been completed under the direction of William Parke. It is scheduled for release January 6.

Several plays that have been considered hits in the past few seasons have been secured by Pathe and, while it has not been definitely decided which of these will be produced first, one of them will be under way within the next few days, it is said.

General Expects Much of Brown

Nineteen Features by Chicago Judge Released at Regular Intervals— Being Filmed on Coast by the Author

IN acquiring the "Judge Brown Stories" for distribution, General Film has obtained what it considers a rich mine of film stories of boy life which should prove to be one of the most interesting series released in many months. Beginning with "Bud's Recruit" the first release in the series, motion picture fans will be entertained, it is promised, with nineteen high class juvenile stories at regular intervals. Work on the filming of these stories is said to be well under way in Los Angeles under the personal supervision of Judge Brown.

"Bud's Recruit" is described as a highly dramatic two-reel "slacker" patriotic story which should have a tremendous appeal just at this time. It is claimed as one of the best film stories Judge Brown has ever written, and he is well known as the author of a number of screen successes, such as "The Spirit of '17," starring Jack Pickford, "The Saints's Adventure," featuring Henry Walthall, and "The Girl Who Won Out," a story in which Violet MacMillan was starred.

The succeeding stories in this series, the second of which will be "The Chocolate of the Gang," will be based upon incidents collected during Judge Brown's twenty-five years of experience as the children's advocate in the courts of the land. Humorous and tragic episodes in the lives of young people will be woven into stories which should appeal not only to juvenile fans but to older persons as well. A cast including a number of juvenile actors will assist in the production of these features.

General Film is preparing to launch an energetic publicity campaign in connection with the Judge Brown stories among the women's clubs, mothers' organizations and other societies interested in the welfare of young people. This campaign will no doubt be of value to the exhibitor, inasmuch as Judge Brown has enlisted the sympathy and co-operation of almost every organization of this character in his twenty-five year fight to improve the methods of handling juvenile cases in the courts.

"Troublemakers" Gets a Good Start

"Troublemakers," featuring Jane and Katherine Lee, William Fox's stars, released December 9, found immediate favor with the public, or at least this is the substance of announcement by purveyors of Fox publicity and it is further stated that it is based upon reports from Fox exchanges.

Lois Weber New Picture Receives Praise

Lois Weber's latest production, "The Man Who Dared God," with Mildred Harris and William Stowell and a big cast, reached the Eastern offices of Universal on last Saturday and when seen in the projection room was declared to be one of the very finest productions that have ever been turned out by Miss Weber.

This production claims the unique distinction of being the very finest ever begun and wholly completed in Miss Weber's own studio at Hollywood. Details of the plot are not being given out at the present time, but the story is said to form a new ethic in the list of masterpieces of the screen which Miss Weber has completed. Included among these are "Even as You and I," "The Hand that Rocks the Cradle," "Where Are My Children?" "Jewels," "Hypocrites," "Idle Wives" and others.

Terriss Gets Final Papers as American Citizen

Tom Terriss, who is now directing Alice Joyce for Greater Vitagraph and has just completed the Robert W. Chambers feature, "A Woman Between Friends," last week obtained his final papers and now is a naturalized American.

Mr. Terriss, who was born an Englishman, has made three trips around the world and has had one of the most adventurous careers, it is said, of any man in the business, having been successfully a deep sea sailor, sheep raiser, silver-miner, globe-trotter, desert traveler, actor, manager, motion picture executive and director. Commencing life as a sailor, he traveled twice around the world before he was twenty-one years old, and during that time had many thrilling experiences. Once he figured in a mutiny at sea and on another occasion was swept overboard during a storm in the mid-Atlantic.

Vitagraph Prepares for Hedda Nova Special

Preparations for the first Greater Vitagraph special, in which Hedda Nova, the young Russian actress is to be featured, are almost complete, according to an announcement authorized by Albert E. Smith, president of the company. He also declared that he intended to make this one of the most important productions of the new year, and that he is going to surround his new star with one of the most powerful supporting casts obtainable.

President Smith, while he gives no inkling as to the title or theme of the play in which she is to appear, says that it will be one of strength and thoroughly suited to the talents of this emotional young actress. Mr. Smith, it is announced, will personally direct Hedda Nova in her first feature, giving to it all of the skill and artistry that has placed him in the forefront of screen producers.

Paralta Plays Ready for Booking

Hodkinson Establishes Twenty-eight Exchanges in United States in Connection with General—Anderson Surprised at Construction Work on the Coast

PARALTA PLAYS, it was announced last week, following the statement from W. W. Hodkinson that he had completed arrangements with General Film for co-operation in trying out a new plan of releasing features, are now ready for booking in every corner of the globe.

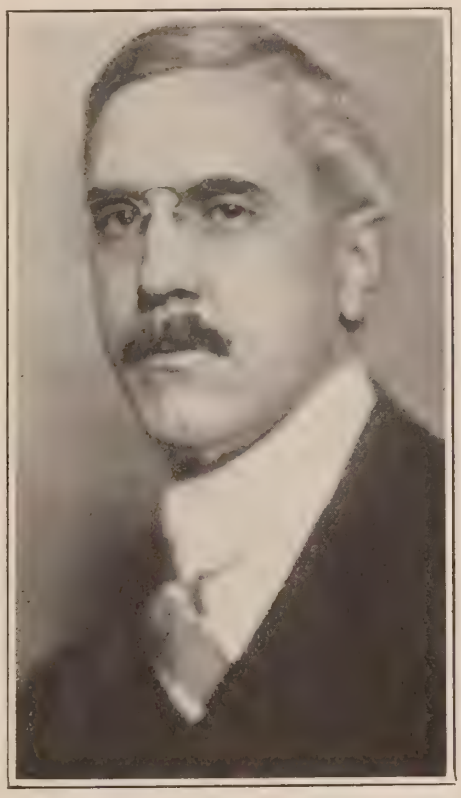
The announcement accompanied news of rapid progress on the new studios at Los Angeles and the remark that President Carl Anderson was very agreeably surprised when he visited the studio site on a tour of inspection.

Paralta appears solidly braced for the launching of the new year.

Twenty-eight Exchanges

For the distribution of Paralta Plays W. W. Hodkinson has established twenty-eight exchanges in the various General Film offices and has begun to receive bookings for the first two productions, "A Man's Man," in which J. Warren Kerrigan is the star, and "Madame Who," with Bessie Barriscale in the stellar role. Both of these productions have been proclaimed by the critics as master works of the cinema art. "A Man's Man" had a pre-release showing at Clune's Auditorium in Los Angeles a short time ago where it played to capacity audiences in that auditorium, seating over 3,000 people, for an entire week, breaking all records of the house which has played many of the greatest attractions of the screen, including "The Birth of a Nation," "Ramona" and "The Eyes of the World."

"Madame Who," which will be the second picture to be released by the Hodkinson Corporation and which marks Bessie Barriscale's debut as a Paralta star, promises to be one of the really big successes of the year. In speaking of this production in his review Alan Dale stated: "'Madame Who' is a particularly excellent picture; it is the best piece of emotional work I have seen in many a day. I should say that it is a distinct advance in the picture art—and I emphasize the word ART."



Walthall Feature Third

Henry B. Walthall's initial Paralta Play "His Robe of Honor" will probably be selected for the third release, but this has not been definitely settled. The picture is finished, however, and it is said by those who have seen it that it is another triumph for Paralta, which presents Mr. Walthall in one of the most forceful characterizations in which he has appeared.

Besides the W. W. Hodkinson plan of distribution in the United States, in conjunction with General Film, whose offices are located in twenty-eight cities, Paralta Plays will be distributed through Canada by the Globe Films, Ltd., the main offices of which are located in Toronto, with exchanges in Montreal, Winnipeg, Calgary, Vancouver and St. John.

Countries in Europe, Asia, Africa, Australia and South America will all receive Paralta Plays through the Inter-Ocean Film Corporation, one of the largest foreign distributing organizations in the world.

There are a number of Paralta Plays with Bessie Barriscale, Henry B. Walthall and J. Warren Kerrigan as the respective stars now completed and ready for distribution and the studios in Hollywood, Cal., are working to their utmost capacity on productions now in the course of construction. Carl Anderson, president of Paralta, is at the coast studios at the present time consulting on the future developments of the Paralta organization. The new studios which are being built in addition to the studios now occupied are rapidly nearing completion and are expected to be finished within a few weeks.

Work Progresses Nicely

Visiting Los Angeles after an absence of four months President Anderson was astonished as well as gratified at the extent and rapidity of construction work done on the new studios during his absence in New York.

"Even Los Angeles," he said, "does not yet realize the extent of this new motion picture plant which is being created within its midst. Starting only last May, practically unheralded, the Paralta producing studios have grown into a veritable principality in themselves. But such is the extensive character of the plans for our new studios that the plant will undoubtedly be the best equipped in the country—without exception. While not the largest perhaps in point of area the Paralta studios are being constructed upon the scientific principle of condensation, of convenient location and of unity which will vastly promote efficiency and thus give us the plant for insuring the greatest production.

"We have gone back to the old Spanish style of architecture to insure such conditions. In creating a city, or even a small town, the Spaniards based their construction on the plaza or public park. It was the center of the life and activity; from it radiated the remainder of the community. Usually on one side would be the cathedral, on the other the government buildings, on a third the barracks and on the fourth the jail. Thus would be gathered in a nucleus the military, the religious and the political functions of ordinary life. Appreciating that everything in the moving picture industry is contributory to what transpires on the stages we have had our stages laid out as the center of the new studio architecture, corresponding to the plaza of Spanish idea. Surrounding the stages on the four sides are the various buildings which supply the life and color to the stages, just as from the four sides of the plazas flock the life and color of the Spanish communities.

Only One Idle Stage

"Construction has progressed so rapidly that although we have six companies engaged in producing pictures we have one stage more than is required for our immediate needs. In consequence we have been able to rent the use of the extra space to an independent company.

"Of course three months—the length of present construction on our new plant—is not sufficient time in which to complete such an extensive and finely built property as Paralta is creating in Los Angeles. The period of construction will extend for nearly a year, but the need for getting something like adequate facilities so that the big plans for Paralta productions could be put into execution was imperative. In consequence extra forces of men were put to work so that Mr. Brunton would be able to work his companies simultaneously and not lose time and money by having some of them wait to secure sets. Happily all such difficulty is ended. So large a project as the creation of the Paralta studios is not the work of a few months. However, at the present rapid rate of construction we will be continually coming into the benefits of the various finished units and the time will soon come around when the completed whole will be working as planned.

"When this comes about the Paralta studios will be more than a separate institution—it will be a sort of state within itself. Even at present we make our own sets, our own furniture—of which over 100 fine hardwood carved pieces have been turned out already by our carpenters and wood carving shops."

Universal Department Gains

Industrial Branch Closes Eight Contracts for Commercial Pictures—Harry Levey Launched the New Departure

THE Industrial Department of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company, under the personal supervision of Harry Levey, has made much progress since its organization in the early autumn, and this week announces the negotiation of eight contracts. They are: The Western Electric Company, The Firestone Tire and Rubber Company, Warner Bros., makers of corsets; The Fleischmann Yeast Company, The National Cash Register Company, E. Z. Van Raalte, veil manufacturers, The Society for Electrical Development and the Disston Saw Company.

Mr. Levey established this department for Universal two months ago, for the purpose of making industrial dramas of manufacturers' nationally advertised brands. Under his supervision, the department has already become "a house unto itself," employing, besides its sales and clerical force, and its own battery of expert cameramen, its traveling representatives and a competent staff of scenario writers. Its equipment for taking and making pictures includes every modern improvement in staging and lighting. Its men are all especially skilled in their respective lines.

Expert cameramen, in the making of a Universal Industrial Picture are said to go through a commercial or manufacturing plant from cellar to garret, "shoot" thousands of scenes in every nook and corner and don't even disturb the alert young office boy on any of his rounds. The various machines of the organization hum away just as busily as ever, the office force is just as attentive to its work. Under the system established by Mr. Levey there is no disturbance, no fuss, and no delay in the making of a Universal Industrial Picture.

"The photographing of a plant, however," says Mr. Levey, "requires more than expert cameramen and efficient lighting equipment. The Industrial picture of this time must tell a story and tell it in an interesting as well as educational manner. It is very necessary, before any work at all is begun, to dispatch a trained scenario writer to the scene of action."

Brenon Completes Feature

Sir Johnston Forbes-Robertson Works on Production About Eight Weeks—Finishing Touches Now Being Put On

SIR JOHNSTON FORBES-ROBERTSON, it was announced last week, has completed for the screen his role of the Stranger in "The Passing of the Third Floor Back." For nearly two months he has been devoting all his time to working for the films. Production has been progressing quietly but diligently at the Brenon studios.

The role of the Stranger in Mr. Jerome's drama is said to be the English actor's most popular and best beloved stage creation. Mr. Brenon, it is generally considered, was singularly fortunate in securing the actor's services for the screen. First, because Sir Johnston is considered by some the greatest living English actor. Secondly, because Mr. Jerome's drama carries a striking message of love and uplift and human kindliness in these troubled times.

The English actor came to this country about two months ago for the purpose of appearing in the screen version of "The Passing of the Third Floor Back." Since arriving in this country, he has not taken part in any theatrical entertainments but has devoted his entire time to his screen work.

The finishing of Sir Johnston's role in the picture by no means completes the production, it is insisted. There is still much work to be done in the studio.

In its screen version form "The Passing of the Third Floor Back" has undergone certain changes necessary to give variety of back-ground and to work out the development of character. Many scenes that were merely suggested have been worked out at some length. These have yet to be taken, as well as scenes of the play in which Sir Johnston does not appear.

Camilla Donworth Forms New Industrial Company

Believing that the time is now ripe for a compact and capable organization to specialize in industrial motion pictures for manufacturers who have a story to tell, the Films of Business Corporation, with Camilla Dunworth as president, has been formed by the latter, with offices at 64 East Thirty-fourth street, New York.

Charles Charlton is vice president of the new organization, and brings several years' experience as a photographer in England to the company in addition to his abilities as cameraman.

The company expected to start last week on a picture for H. J. Heinz Company in Pittsburgh, which, when completed, will be given a private showing.

Essanay Releases Chaplin Film Called "Work"

Essanay announced last week that its current Chaplin release through General Film is the new edition of "Work," one of the earlier successes of the comedian with the funny feet.

This is the fifth in the series of Essanay's Chaplin pictures, and is said to be a riot of fun from start to finish. Exhibitors everywhere are finding the new editions of Chaplin pictures one of their best box-office bets, according to General.

Aviator Studies Paralta Methods of Photography

Paralta methods of photography will be used during the war by Americans in the Aviation Corps, as is made manifest by the assignment of William C. Zabriskie of the Aviation Corps to the Paralta studios in Los Angeles. He is to study the Paralta methods and apply them in France when he is sent there to be one of the eyes of the army. Rex Ingram, who is directing a picture for Paralta in which Henry B. Walthall appears, has been assigned to aid the aviator master the motion picture camera which he will use in France in getting enemy trenches and general views of the hostile armies on the films, which will be shown to the Allied forces in order that their campaigns may be well planned.

Phides Club Entertains the Sidney Drews

Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Drew were entertained on December 16 by the Phides Club at its weekly dinner at the Brevoort Hotel, New York.

In turn the club was entertained by the Drews in a special feature, for which they were well rewarded in appreciation, and a Metro-Drew comedy which was projected by a Power's Cameragraph. The balance of the program consisted of addresses and music.

Toastmaster G. Warren London, of the Nicholas Power Company, is a member of the Phides Club.

Fire Festival Flares Up in Nazimova Picture

A fire festival is said to be among the effective and picturesque gypsy rites reproduced in Metro's forthcoming special production, the gypsy play which will be the second Metro starring vehicle of Nazimova.

The star herself plays the part of a wild gypsy maid, and the outdoor life of a real gypsy tribe is being photographed in Florida, it is said, as a background for Nazimova's acting in the Metro Picture. More than a hundred gypsies have been engaged by Director George D. Baker and his assistant, Charles Hunt, to assist the star in her new production. The fire festival has a direct bearing on the story that is now being prepared for the screen with the Russian actress as star.

Lockwood Tries New Role in "Avenging Trail"

"The Avenging Trail," a forthcoming Metro play, will present Harold Lockwood in a characterization that is said to differ widely from his portrayals in recent Metro releases. Whereas "The Square Deceiver" presented him in a straight comedy lead and "Paradise Garden" offered him in a society drama, "The Avenging Trail" shows him in the character of a woodsman in a vigorous drama, an altogether different type than his two preceding vehicles already mentioned.

Freuler Denies Industry Is Sick

Declares Films as a Whole Are Better Off Than Ever, and That Calamity Howlers Are but a Necessary Evil —Unwise Investors Scored

JOHN R. FREULER, president of Mutual Film Corporation, is not in sympathy with the calamity howlers, who, he asserts, are but necessary evils in the motion picture industry, even as are the unwise investors who come and go with a remarkable regularity.

In an article from Mr. Freuler's offices, called "Today in Pictures," the Mutual executive makes his position concerning pictures and the industry as the new year approaches very clear and states his belief that the star system is here to stay, accompanied by the serial.

Discounts "Eruptions"

Prefacing his remarks, Mr. Freuler said: "If one were to take the recent eruption of interviews, statements, letters and other expressions in the trade press at all seriously it would be necessary to feel highly alarmed about the present and future of the film industry.

"A great many very drastic remedies, a vast number of prescriptions, a lot of 'expert' advice is being offered for conditions in the motion picture industry. The film industry is a lot better off than this sudden uprising of the doctors would imply.

"Every once in a while somebody who has the impression he is in the film business goes and takes a look at his ledgers and finds things in red figures.

"Right away he decides the world is upside down and that the film industry is wrong side out, headed for ruin on high gear. Like as not he rings for a couple of stenographers and frames up a 'piece for the papers.' It relieves his feelings, produces a headline and gives some of his associates who happen to have financial colic a chance to do some more writing and talking.

"All of which is quite as natural to the film trade as spring freshets in the Missouri river.

Some Things Wrong

"There are a number of things the matter just now and there always will be. There always will be a certain percentage of unwise investors who will put their money into the hands of the unfit for film projects. There probably always will be a certain percentage of exhibitors who will encourage anything which is held up with extravagant promises as the newest 'last word in pictures, the super extraordinary.' Promotions based on these factors will always have unhappy periods, but that will not spell ruin for the picture business any more than now.

"What I am impelled to call 'lunatic competition' is bound to arise at times. It is also bound to be periodically downed by its own folly. So they of the film trade may talk of wastes, of mergers, of the star system, of the multiplicity of distributing systems, of the extravagances of advertising campaigns, of this and of that, but all this talk can have extremely little to do with the courses of nature.

"The film business is working out its own salvation and it will continue to do so until the end of time. When the wind blows hold on to your hat. Probably the most popular question about the motion picture business from the trade and the consumers of photoplays alike is: 'What about the star system? Will it keep up?'

Olive Tell as Isis in "Her Sister," the Star's Second Feature for Mutual Release

Public Goes by Stars

"That this question should be so universally raised is the natural outcome of the so-called star system itself. The public thinks of photoplays entirely in terms of stars, and the exhibitors, manufacturers and distributors can only reflect in some manner the attitudes, expressions and opinions of the public.

"And right there, I think you have the answer—to quote myself as my favorite author and authority—'The public thinks of photoplays entirely in terms of stars.' The 'star system' is in my opinion entirely natural, inevitable and desirable. I am sure that it will survive as one of the biggest elements in successful photoplay production and distribution.

"I might go into the question at great length from the point of view of the photoplay alone, but perhaps I can arrive at more convincing evidence by mentioning two other closely allied fields of enterprise, the speaking stage and the publishing business.

"The history of the drama is written in the biography of stars. Not star actors alone, but star producers, star dramatists, star playwrights.

"The publishing business is also a star business. In the publishing field we have star authors, star publishers, star illustrators and even star book binders. And also star fiction characters.

Length Not Affected

"The length of pictures will continue to be established and dictated largely by commercial conditions and the public. No marked deviation from the standard length of the five-reel feature appears probable on the basis of the reception which the exhibitor and the public have given deviations from this standard. The war tax will not, in my opinion, affect the length of pictures. Its effect is much more likely to be evidenced on the quantity of picture production, and by its process of the stiffening the commercial struggle it will tend to hasten the processes of elimination of the unfit and the weak.

"The rental price of film is not, I deem, likely to fall much below present levels. On the other hand it is not likely to be markedly increased unless the processes of elimination to which I have just referred result in curtailment of the decided overproduction, which is responsible in the main for the present rental prices. These rental prices are in my opinion decidedly low in their ratio to theatre earnings. Countless instances can be cited, of course, tending to show that exhibitors have paid more than their business could afford, but the average will show the reverse of these instances. Standardization of prices is still a good way off, I fear. The only standardization which should ultimately apply would be based upon the earning power of the picture in the theatre.

"We are far from that as a general practice."

Mutual-Strand Comedies Please the Public

The Mutual-Strand comedies are said to be much in demand at this moment and increasingly so with each week that passes. These comedies are being booked in Chicago by the Covent Garden, Vitagraph, Biograph and Gold theatres; at the Palace theatre in Brooklyn and the One Hundred and Forty-sixth Street theatre, New York City; the Elysium theatre, New Orleans; the Empire theatre, Montgomery, Ala.; the Nicollet theatre, Minneapolis; the Passtemps theatre, Montreal; the Imperial theatre, Ottawa; the Butterfly theatre, Milwaukee; the Strand theatre, Seattle; the People's Amusement company, Portland, Ore.; the Strand theatre, San Francisco; the Gem theatre, Boston; the Fenway theatre, Boston; the Lancaster theatre, Boston; the Mission Armarillo, Dallas, Tex.; the Crown theatre, Houston, Tex.; and many other first run houses throughout the country.

Vitagraph Gives Future Plans

Scenario Department Grind Out Material for Early Productions in New Year—Smith Intimates What Is Coming

THE scenario department of Greater Vitagraph, like the production branch, is under full headway as the old year closes, preparing scripts for early 1918 productions, it was announced last week.

In an announcement made by Albert E. Smith, president of the company, he gives a glimpse into the future plans of the company and provides exhibitors with a line on what they may look forward to in the way of literary offerings by Vitagraph in the course of the next few months. Like its record for the year just closing, where writers provided the bulk of the material for plays, Vitagraph has already in preparation dramas based on the works of many noted authors.

Among the books now being picturized is "The Desired Woman," a widely read novel by Will Harben, one of the best-known writers of the present day. Mr. Harben, a member of the National Institute of Arts and Letters, has been among the foremost American authors for two decades. Born in the South, he first attracted attention by his short stories and was at one time assistant editor of the Youth's Companion. He also has been a frequent contributor to Harper's and the Century magazines.

O. Henry's classic of classics, "Cabbages and Kings," also has been put into picture form and will be produced as a Blue Ribbon feature in five reels. Most of the O. Henry stories, to which Vitagraph has exclusive production rights, have been in short length form, but in the case of "A Municipal Report" and others, where the stories were long enough to be made into five reels, the Vitagraph Company has decided to make them into Blue Ribbon features.

Vera Thurston, Charming Vitagraph Player

Two more stories by Robert W. Chambers have been put into picture form and the productions therefrom will be released early in the new year, it is announced. One of these is "The Business of Life" and the other is "The Cambric Mask." These are considered among the best known and most melodramatic stories ever turned out by this writer.

"The Pariah," a story which ran in the Saturday Evening Post last August, is another acquisition by Vitagraph for the coming season's program. This story was written by Lowell Otis Reese, a newcomer to the Vitagraph ranks of literateurs, and will, like the others mentioned, be produced as a Blue Ribbon feature.

Fred Stone Signs a Picture Contract

FRED STONE, scarecrow of the "Wizard of Oz," star of a dozen of America's musical comedies, and at present playing at the Globe theatre in "Jack o' Lantern," is to become a comedy star of the moving pictures under the auspices of the Paramount Pictures Corporation and Jesse L. Lasky, it was announced last week.

Following the completion of his present theatrical season, Mr. Stone will leave for California early next summer to begin work on the first of a number of new pictures, the scenarios for which will be provided to exploit his personality and accomplishments.

Concerning his new venture into the motion picture field, Mr. Stone said: "In the past few years I have received many flattering and tempting offers to become a film star, but I have always felt a natural hesitancy about signing up in this new field until I could be assured of entering it under the same high-class management as has made happy my long association with Charles B. Dillingham.

"This new association with Mr. Lasky has solved that problem and I may say in all sincerity, I am glad to be affiliated with a company of such high standards as those attained by Paramount pictures."

"The Seven Pearls" Prove Very Attractive

From coast to coast, according to Pathe, the same reports come in from the exhibitors of the theatres showing "The Seven Pearls," the Pathe serial released in September, featuring Mollie King, Creighton Hale and Leon Bary.

The practically unanimous reports are that this serial has caught on in good style, while the exhibitors are pleased with its drawing power as a box office asset. One comment from an exhibitor is as follows: The Manager of the Beacon theatre, a downtown house in Boston, Mass., reports "Very good, interest well retained."

Helen Moyer Writes Navy Recruiting Speeches

Helen Moyer, formerly of Ziegfeld's "Follies," who astonished the theatrical world several years ago by suddenly marrying a Philadelphia millionaire on the very day she walked out of the "Follies," and who recently returned to Broadway and public life via the movies, is writing recruiting speeches for the United States Navy in her leisure hours.

Miss Moyer never knew she had the gift of writing material of this kind until a short time ago, when she was helping her husband with a Liberty Loan campaign in Philadelphia. One of the speakers said he didn't know exactly how to handle his subject, and Miss Moyer arranged a speech for him.

Hall Takes Pathe Pictures to Europe

Pathe Stars and Pathe Photoplays are expected to play their part in the war with the United States Neurological Unit, being established somewhere in France. Lewis Coleman Hall, who is working with Major Ross Moore, will be in charge of this unit. Mr. Hall, knowing the popularity of Pathe stars and Pathe photoplays, secured photographs of the players and stills from the plays before he departed for France and will use these as part of his paraphernalia in reviving the interests of American soldiers, suffering from shell and battle shock in things of life.

Metro Arranges Special Music for "Blue Jeans"

Appropriate music for Metro's special production de luxe, "Blue Jeans," starring Viola Dana, has been arranged in accordance with the dominant features of the story itself. Richard A. Rowland, Metro's president; B. A. Rolfe, Metro's Western representative, who produced "Blue Jeans," and Maxwell Karger, manager of Metro's New York studio, are all men of musical knowledge, and in preparing the cue-sheets S. M. Berg carried out their ideas.

The result is said to be a beautiful musical setting for "Blue Jeans," which is practically a synchronized score of the emotions the little heroine, whose development from innocent girlhood to the tragic events of maturity is traced during the story's progress.

Sing Sing Inmates Enjoy Jewel's "Pay Me"

A letter received from a man in Sing Sing prison, by the home office of Jewel Productions, Inc., indicates that the inmates of the institution enjoyed "Pay Me" very much. An extract from the missive says: "'Pay Me' was shown a few nights ago and it certainly is a wonderful production, positively the greatest I have ever seen of Western theme, and Miss Phillips certainly is a splendid actress."

Universal Plans to Advance Service

President Carl Laemmle Declares No Stone Will Be Left Unturned to Supply Exhibitors with Best Pictures Possible—Specialize in Serials

IN the 1918 big drive of the motion picture industry, scheduled to begin immediately the revelry of New Year's Eve is echoing itself away down the corridor of time, the Universal Film Manufacturing Company will be in the vanguard, and going strong, according to an announcement from President Carl Laemmle last week, in which he outlined the purposes and aims of Universal for the future.

Probably the most significant thing about Mr. Laemmle's announcement, and the point which stands out as a distinguishing mark for Universal, is the statement that special attention will be given to serial productions.

Service Moves Forward

"Universal will advance and increase its service to exhibitors in many ways during 1918," said Mr. Laemmle, in forecasting Universal activities for the ensuing year. "Our organization has been created on broad lines and we shall still further extend our agencies for supplying exhibitors with the kind of pictures that they need to get the best possible box-office results."

Continuing, Mr. Laemmle says: "We shall specialize in serials, and now have 'The Mystery Ship,' with Ben Wilson and Neva Gerber, running into the early months of the new year. 'The Bull's Eye,' with Eddie Polo and Vivian Reed, is almost completed and ready to be released before 'The Mystery Ship' has run its length. We have organized a special department of scenario writers, directors and producers to operate exclusively on serials for the coming year. Our success with serials has convinced me that the public wants this style of entertainment, with thrills and sensations furnishing the strength of the appeal.

Two Under Way

"We have made sixteen and have two more under way, and our experience, based on the testimony of exhibitors, has convinced us that serials are what the public wants and is eager to patronize. We expect to have serials overlapping each other throughout the coming year.

"We shall specialize in news-weeklies in the belief that here is one of the biggest money-drawing offerings an exhibitor can present. There can be no question of the necessity for satisfying the public demand for pictorial information issued with approval of the Government, reflecting episodes in the world war. Every day citizens of the United States are becoming more vitally involved in the conflict, and the mission of the news-weekly is obviously concerned in reflecting the various phases of the situation at home and abroad."

Mr. Laemmle likewise declares that the Screen Magazine, reflecting educational topics that are always of interest to the general public have a special mission: He said: "We are going to devote special attention to this type of our service to exhibitors, for we have abundant testimony from the 'live wires' that the presentation of these topics draw heavily from all classes of theatregoers. We shall particularly exploit the Finley Nature Study Pictures, a series applying specifically to wild animals and birds in their natural elements.

Carl Laemmle of Universal

Five-Reel Features

"Universal will, of course, continue to make and distribute the best possible examples of five-reel features that money can produce and ingenuity devise," said Mr. Laemmle. "Bluebirds will continue to be the cream of our product, and for the third year of this program we have arranged for better plays, bigger productions and more potent stars than ever. Bluebird's second year ends with Dorothy Phillips, in 'Broadway Love,' as the attraction, and a synopsis of the productions released under the Bluebird brand would reflect a fulfillment of the purpose we had in mind when launching the series—to give, consistently, a program of features that would show an improvement, week by week, in the advancing schedule.

"Apart from Bluebird, and embodying the same purpose to give fine productions of good plays by the best available talent, there will be fifty-two special Universal features distributed during the coming year. We will feature the individual artist in plays especially adapted to the screen attributes of the star. For instance, Jack Ford will present a series of 'Westerns,' in which Harry Carey will be the star, with Molly Malone his featured leading lady.

Better Comedies, Too

"Universal has always made a specialty of comedies and we promise better mirth-provokers than ever during the coming year. Julius Stern has already begun to fulfill his purpose in backing the L-Ko brand with big names, both for advertising purposes and results upon the screen. L-Kos have long been a Universal standby and they will be better in every way than they ever have been. Early in the year, we will introduce a new type of comedy, under a brand we expect will become one of the most valuable assets an exhibitor can have."

In conclusion, Mr. Laemmle said: "Universal will be awake to the needs of the exhibitor during the coming year, supplying a service that will get the money. That is what we are here for and the exhibitor may depend upon Universal to better supply his needs than ever before."

Fitzmaurice Takes Great Interest in Feature

George Fitzmaurice, who directed Pathe's de Luxe production of Rudyard Kipling's story of adventure, "The Naulahka," says it is the most interesting picture he has ever staged. The original scenario called for some 400 scenes, but Director Fitzmaurice increased this to 800 scenes. The additional scenes, doubling the number originally laid out, were added as a result of the inspiration that Mr. Fitzmaurice says came to him as the work progressed.

In discussing the production of "The Naulahka," which has been announced as one of the three great Pathe productions that will be released during the coming year, Mr. Fitzmaurice said: "I think the work of Antonio Moreno in this production outrivals even the great work he has done in his previous pictures and that Doraldina, who is co-starred with Mr. Moreno, will be a revelation to the picture fan. Mr. Moreno is admirable in the part of the wide-awake American and Doraldina is the essence of seductiveness in an oriental atmosphere."

Barbara Castleton Considers New Offers

Barbara Castleton, who a few days ago completed work in Herbert Brenon's production of "Empty Pockets," which is shortly to be distributed through the First National Exhibitors' Circuit, announced last week that recent reports circulated to the effect she was under contract to any person or company were premature, and that she is absolutely free of all and any agreements or contracts.

Coincidental with this announcement, Miss Castleton stated that she is at present considering offers for features, and will likely make an announcement of connections shortly.

Mary Garden's Magnificent "Thais," for Goldwyn, Claims Not Alone the Distinction of the Star and Her Artistry, but Displays Elaborate Settings as Well

Goldwyn Features Grab Record

"Polly of the Circus" Draws Praise Since Day of Its Release In September—"Cinderella Man" Also Wins

"POLLY OF THE CIRCUS," the first picture released by Goldwyn, has come very close to establishing two records for itself, according to a Goldwyn announcement, in the commendations from theatre owners, far and wide, which have come into the Goldwyn offices since its release, September 3. During the first weeks of the picture's showing a large number of responses from exhibitors were printed in the trade journals of the motion picture industry. And since those first few weeks the flow has never ceased, Goldwyn claims. Goldwyn insists that it is doubtful if any picture, released through the regular channels of distribution and not wild-catted over the country after a "papered" run on Broadway, has drawn letters of commendation from exhibitors so long after release.

While such evidence comes to the home office of the appreciation of the first Goldwyn release, other letters bring as warm a word for the newest Goldwyn picture, "The Cinderella Man," from a body of Philadelphia critics. Branch Manager G. T. Ames wrote from Philadelphia: "Possibly words of commendation from your exchange manager have no great value in a business way, but I feel that I must say something about 'The Cinderella Man.' In company with three or four critics, I screened the picture yesterday as soon as it was received here. In the estimation of those who saw it, and my feelings were the same, it is head and shoulders above any Goldwyn production thus far. In fact, A. R. Plough, critic of the Philadelphia Ledger, said to me: 'You saw, Ames, what I had to say about "Nearly Married," but wait till you see what I say about "The Cinderella Man." It is the best picture in six reels I have ever seen.' The photography of this picture excels in my opinion—shared by all present—anything that has yet been done. Miss Marsh has scored a most decided hit; it is the best work I have ever seen her do, and as for direction, George Loane Tucker has established himself among directors."

Metro Acquires Rights to "The Claim"

METRO has acquired the rights to "The Claim," a play written by Charles Kenyon and Frank Dare, as a starring vehicle for Edith Storey. The play had a New York run earlier this season, with Florence Roberts in the leading role.

"The Claim" is a comedy drama with mining camp and dance hall atmosphere and possesses a Western plot. Miss Storey will play the leading role of Belle Jones, a dance hall singer and dancer. This role is of the Western type in which Edith Storey first endeared herself to picture audiences in her first appearances before the camera. In contrast to her previous Western roles, this role requires no riding or athletic stunts but is a straight dramatic part affording the star opportunities for emotional acting.

Sidney Drews Finish Two Comedies in Week

Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Drew have just indulged in a few days of rest after having completed the most strenuous week in their entire career as Metro stars and collaborators. As a general rule they content themselves with producing one comedy a week, but this time they not only produced two Metro-Drew comedies, but wrote them as well, and then for recreation sent off a big box of good things to Aviator S. Rankin Drew, "somewhere in France," and Lieut. Hartley McVey, of the signal corps' aviation section, at the same approximate address.

Heart Interest Stories Sought by Astra

It was announced last week from the Astra studios that that company is in the market for big stories with real heart interest.

As determined by J. A. Berst, vice-president and general manager of Pathe, all productions released by that company must have the "three-point quality"—Star-Story-Direction—and in line with that policy a great number of stories and plays have already been secured for each of the Pathe stars, but to keep well in advance of the producing schedule as many other plays and stories that measure up to the standard will be purchased and prepared for screen presentation.

Lait Writes Comedy Titles for "The Warrior"

J. R. Grainger, general manager of the Allen Film Corporation of Chicago, which company controls an extensive part of the Middle West States for "The Warrior," announced this week that Jack Lait, well known author and playwright, had been engaged to create a series of special comedy subject titles for several scenes in the spectacle. Lait is the author of "Help Wanted" and is especially well known for his stories which are at present appearing in one of the leading Chicago dailies. The titles in question will be written in his familiar breezy style, it is said.

"Tom Sawyer" Speaks Well for Pickford

WHILE there was at no time, according to the Famous Players-Lasky press department, any question in the minds of those responsible for the production of "Tom Sawyer" as to its probable reception by the public, it is said to be doubtful if even the most sanguine had any conception of the interest that has been awakened by Jack Pickford in the title role, as presented by Paramount.

When Julia Crawford Ivers wrote the scenario it was discovered that five reels would be altogether inadequate to tell the story of Tom and his boyhood companions, and so it was decided to make two five-reel films, calling the first one "Tom Sawyer" and the second "Huck and Tom," or "The Further Adventures of Tom Sawyer." William D. Taylor directed both productions.

It is generally conceded that Jack Pickford makes an ideal "Tom," even those lovers of Mark Twain's works who are apt to be rather hypercritical in their consideration of an attempt to transfer the stories to the screen, have been loud in their approbation of his portrayal of "Tom Sawyer," it is claimed.

"Huck and Tom" will be released quite early in the new year, but it is probable that "The Spirit of '17" will come in between, it is announced.

In the first production George Hackathorn appears as Sid, Alice Marvin as Mary, Edyth Chapman as Aunt Polly, Clara Horton as Becky, Helen Gillmore as the Widow Douglas, Robert Gordon as Huck and Antrom Short as Joe Harper. Virtually the same cast appears in "Huck and Tom" or "The Further Adventures of Tom Sawyer," with a few additions.

Carey Wilson Joins the First National

Carey Wilson, Manager of the First National Exchange

CAREY WILSON, one of the best-known figures in the New York film sales field, this week assumed the management of the First National Exchange, the New York distributing offices for the First National Exhibitors' Circuit, it has been announced. Mr. Wilson resigned from the Fox Film Corporation some two weeks ago, after being with this firm a period of three years.

Mr. Wilson's active film experience began as an exhibitor eight years ago, from which field he joined William Sherry when the latter opened the New York Exchange for releasing the first Famous Players film, "The Prisoner of Zenda." His association with Sherry continued until three years ago, when he joined the Fox organization for the purpose of installing the contract system of bookings throughout the United States. In this task he acquired active experience in every exchange city of the United States. Shortly after, he opened the Canadian offices for Fox and left Canada on two days' notice to go to Australia and New Zealand. During 1916 Mr. Wilson covered over fifty thousand miles of territory in the Antipodes, opening the Fox offices in Sydney, Melbourne and Adelaide (Australia), and Wellington, New Zealand.

Mr. Wilson is located at the newly established First National Exchange at 509 Fifth avenue, where has been prepared one of the best equipped exchanges in the city.

Triangle Writers Work on New Scripts

THINGS are humming in the scenario department at the Triangle's Culver City studio, and the brains department is said to be working overtime to keep up with the production department on its schedule of two five-reel dramas a week.

Jack Cunningham, who has just completed the continuity on "The Hopper," is now at work on the screen adaptation of "Little Red Decides," from William M. McCoy's story by the same name, which appeared in the American Magazine.

Three members of the Triangle scenario department are working on original stories. Catherine Carr, author of the seven-reel drama, "I Love You," to be released January 13, is writing an original story, called "A Soul in Trust." Lillian Ducey is turning out a screen play, called "Woman's Love," and Hayden Talbot is putting the finishing touches to an original story, "The Day of Knights." Gardner Bradford, a recent addition to the scenario department, and H. B. Daniel are both working on subtitles for the Triangle forthcoming screen dramas.

With the approaching holidays the activity at the Triangle studio shows no let-up. General Manager H. O. Davis has made it plain, in statements to exhibitors and the trade press, that Triangle will open the new year with a production schedule never before attempted. And the announced policy of furnishing the most enlightening and instructive photoplays, will be carried out to the fullest extent, it is said.

New Jersey Sees "The Fall of the Romanoffs"

WHEN the new Forest Hill theatre in Newark opens on Christmas Day, New Jersey will have its first glimpse of Herbert Brenon's "The Fall of the Romanoffs."

The house is now receiving its finishing touches under the direction of its owner, Arthur W. Moore. The theatre is said to be one of the most magnificent, in points of architecture and modern improvements, in the East.

The first New Jersey showing of the big Brenon historical production will be under notable auspices. Mr. Moore arranged with Mr. Brenon to present "The Fall of the Romanoffs" at a special invitation performance at the new theatre on Friday evening, December 22. This opening will be attended, is it expected, by the foremost city officials of Newark and the leading exhibitors of all Jersey. A number of prominent New York screen men are planning to be present at this opening, it is said.

The new theatre, which is located at Mt. Prospect avenue and Heller Parkway, will be open for inspection from 7:45 to 8 o'clock on the evening of the invitation performance. The showing of "The Fall of the Romanoffs" will be preceded by a musical program on a Bartola De Luxe, which is one of the features of the new house.

Other Newark houses will offer "The Fall of the Romanoffs" immediately following its Forest Hill theatre run.

Triangle Finishes Two Features

Two New Subjects Also Put Under Way, and Studio Continues to Hum—Scenario Department Busiest of All

WITH two pictures completed and two new subjects begun, the Triangle Culver City studio continues to keep pace with the production schedule set by General Manager H. O. Davis, and several dramas said to be of exceptional merit, are now in the preliminary stages of production. The scenario department is busy on the screen adaptations of some well known magazine stories and novels by popular authors, and the staff of authors is also working on several promising original photoplays.

Director Frank Borzage has put the finishing touches on his latest Triangle offering, "The Gun Woman," featuring Texas Guinan. Supporting Miss Guinan are Ed Brady and Francis McDonald. In the closing scenes, Director Borzage worked with a bevy of Triangle beauties as dance hall girls and all of the cowboys from the Hartville ranch as western atmosphere when "The Gun Woman's" saloon and gambling hall was "shot." The picture is now in the hands of the film editors.

Director Cliff Smith has finished the latest offering starring the Triangle cowboy star, Roy Stewart, who scored a hit in his latest western release, "The Learnin' of Jim Benton." Stewart's new vehicle is "The Law's Outlaw," Fritzi Ridgeway again supports him in this drama of Western life.

A new subject, on which Director Smith has started work and in which Stewart will be featured, is the screen adaptation of Randall Parish's well known novel, "Keith of the Border." An exceptionally large cast will support Stewart in this picture. The opening shots are being made with the star in typical Western atmosphere. As yet the complete cast has not been announced.

Following "Keith of the Border," the cowboy will appear in the screen adaptation of Charles Alden Seltzer's novel, "Boss of the Lazy Y," declared by Alvin J. Neitz, continuity expert on Western subjects, to be the greatest two-gun man story he ever handled. Stewart plays the first four reels as an unshaven roughneck, bursting forth as a well-groomed gentleman in the closing canto.

Artcraft Leading Man Returns to Legitimate

Cecil Fletcher, leading man for Elsie Ferguson in "The Song of Songs," now being produced for the Artcraft Pictures Corporation, has been engaged by Charles Dillingham to play the leading juvenile lead in "General Post," a new play which will have its premiere shortly. "In the Song of Songs" he plays the part of Steve Bennett.

Oklahoma Critic Sticks Up for Goldwyn

ON the first anniversary of the founding of the Goldwyn Pictures Corporation, it is no small satisfaction to its executives to receive such public acknowledgement of the part that Goldwyn has played in the bettering of photoplay conditions during the past year as has been drawn from the critic of a Tulsa, Okla., paper. It is said to be still more of a satisfaction that such an acknowledgement should come from one of the smaller cities of the Middle West.

"About the most stupid thing I've heard," writes the editor of "Flashes from Filmland," in the paper, "was a woman's remark the other day that the picture shows are just getting so poor they are hardly worth going to. Now watcha think o' that? Wouldn't it dislocate your equilibrium? It did mine. This very year has seen more big money turned loose by producers for big features than any other in the screen's history. Rex Beach and a long train of eminent authors and playwrights that would stretch a block or two have brought all their popular works to the screen and many of them have been exhibited this year for the first time.

"The Goldwyn company's debut this season is sufficient answer to the criticism. It not only brought a wonderful galaxy of stars from the speaking stage, but it brought along such authors as Rex Beach, Margaret Mayo, Irvin Cobb, Roi Cooper Megrue, and a number of others."

Director Campbell Takes Company to "Location"

Director Colin Campbell, of Selig's, has taken his company to Pleasanton, Cal., where the feature, "Little Orphant Annie," will be completed in the rural atmosphere of this picturesque village. Colleen Moore, Tom Santschi, Lillian Hayward, Eugenie Besserer, Harry Lonsdale, Lafe McKee and a number of other players accompanied Mr. Campbell to the northern California location.

Hart Spends Much Time on His Script

MUCH of William S. Hart's time is spent in reading scripts intended for his production, many of which, although written by some of the best known screen authors, are entirely unavailable for his use. In an interview recently on the requirements of his scripts, the Thomas H. Ince star said: "Working in conjunction with such an authority as Mr. Ince, my judgment rarely is wrong. We always read the initial draft of scenario together. First Mr. Ince will read for a while and then I will peruse the script. We discuss each scene. I must feel the story by the time it is well under way, or I cannot bring myself to like it. If the author hasn't taken my measure pretty definitely by the time I have been in the story for the first five minutes, it is a certainty that his work will be found unsuited for my uses.

"My introduction to the audience is an important part of a scenario and the author who misses the opportunity to give me a novel entree will have a hard time selling his story. I suppose, about one out of every two dozen scripts submitted are found worth considering for production by Mr. Ince and myself. That is to say about one story out of every twenty-four is found to have possibilities. Of course if the story is the work of one of the regular staff writers, our work in connection with the script is nil, but not so when the script is the product of an outside writer who usually thinks more of his abilities as an author than he does of building stories for my individual use."

Fred Wright Rejoins Pathe as Director

Fred E. Wright, Pathe Director

THE directorial forces of Pathe Exchange, Inc., have been augmented by the return to the fold of Director Fred E. Wright after an absence of three years from Pathe activities, it is announced.

Mr. Wright has the distinction of being one of the oldest directors in the industry and one of the first stage directors to devote his services to the production of picture plays.

His theatrical experience commenced at the age of sixteen as an actor in the company with Thomas W. Keane, where he served an apprenticeship of three years. Later he was associated with Oliver Doud Byron, A. M. Palmer, Augustin Daly and Frank Mayo.

Prior to his entering into the world of pictures he acted as stage director for many well known stock companies in New York, Brooklyn, Philadelphia, Cincinnati, Indianapolis, Kansas City, Denver and Seattle.

His first work as a director of picture plays was in the independent field where the quality of the productions made under his direction attracted the attention of the old Pathe Company, then known as Pathe Freres. He remained with Pathe Freres until 1914 and then became a director for Essanay, producing many of the best features released by that company during the three-year period of his contract.

Miss Young Duplicates Own Bedroom in Feature

In "The Marionettes," the third Select Picture produced by Clara Kimball Young with her own company, Miss Young has used an exact replica of her own bedroom, it is claimed.

This is a French room done in pale gray and mellow old rose, its furniture of ivory toned wood and golden brown wicker, and its hangings bordered in old cream lace. It was personally designed by Miss Young and every detail carried out under her supervision. The only thing missing in the duplicate is the view from the star's windows, but the impossibility of carting the Hudson up to New Rochelle necessitated the omission.

Ouida Bergere Forms Independent Company

IT was announced last week that Ouida Bergere has organized and put into operation, at 516 Fifth avenue, a complete and independent organization along lines said to be of the most advanced efficiency, to look after the interests of producers, stars and other players.

A long-time lease has been taken on the New York offices, with affiliated branches in London, care of Hughes Massie, 40 Fleet street, and at Los Angeles, through the activities of the Mabel Condon Exchange.

Responsible executives of long experience are said to be in the departments now established, and additional executives are already being contracted for to head the new departments under consideration. The fact that Miss Bergere will now be operating free from any other affiliations or business complications, will enable her to give first hand attention to all transactions of major importance.

Producers will be automatically supplied with lists of best available directors, stars, and supporting talent, scenario editors, and continuity writers; and a screen test of new talent will be made for their consideration. Miss Bergere will confer in person with directors at the various studios so as to intelligently cast the productions, or furnish the necessary talent. Original manuscripts will be read with the same objects in view. Directors who are free for new affiliations can place their business affairs in Miss Bergere's hands, who will project their past pictures upon the screen in her private projection rooms. Authors will receive personal representation. Books, plays and original stories will be converted into scenario form, for practical selling purposes; desirable material and original ideas will be purchased.

"Lost Express" Mystery Solved at Last

The mystery of "The Lost Express" is solved in the final chapter of this railroad serial, in which Helen Holmes has exhibited feats of daring.

In chapter 15, "The Return of the Lost Express," released by Mutual, Monday, December 24, Director J. P. McGowan has worked up a high spectacular climax it is said, in which an entire town is destroyed by fire, and Helen is seen in a scene of rescue from the flames that borders on the foolhardy.

Picturesque Backgrounds Are a Strong Point in Harold Lockwood's Newest Metro Wonderplay, "The Avenging Trail"

Gives Nazimova Good Cast

Star's Second Production De Luxe Now in Making at Florida Resort—Charles Bryant Plays the Male Lead

METRO PICTURES CORPORATION announced last week that a brilliant cast of players has been engaged to support Mme. Nazimova in her second Metro production de luxe, said to be a powerful drama of gypsy life, now in preparation in St. Augustine, Fla., under the direction of George D. Baker.

Heading the list is Charles Bryant, who will also be seen opposite the star when Metro's "Revelation" is released. Mr. Bryant played in her support in "War Brides," both in vaudeville and in the screen version, and in dramatic productions, such as "Bella Donna."

Irving Cummings is also cast for an important role in the Russian star's support. He has just completed his work in Metro's "An American Widow," playing opposite Ethel Barrymore.

To Dodson Mitchell has been intrusted the important part of Griswold, upon whom a unique revenge is planned by the gypsy maiden (played by Mme. Nazimova) for her mother's fate.

Another in the cast of Nazimova's gypsy play is E. J. Connelly, who was Dr. Zulph in Metro's serial, "The Great Secret," starring Francis X. Bushman and Beverly Bayne. He played the name part in "Rasputin, the Black Monk."

Frank Currier will play the old gypsy, the chief of the tribe. He has accompanied Nazimova and her director to the southern location, where the gypsy play is being produced. Mr. Currier has been associated with every star in the Metro constellation, and has a long list of character delineations to his credit, notably in "Outwitted," "The Greatest Power," "The Wager," "Sowers and Reapers" and "The Duchess of Doubt." He will also be seen in Nazimova's initial Metro offering, "Revelation," soon to be released.

Nila Mac, who was seen with Nazimova in "War Brides," in the part of Joan, will also have a prominent part in this play.

Rolin Installs Novel Editorial Board

HAL Roach, president and director general of Rolin Film Company, on a recent trip to New York, saw the Pathe film committee at work and was so impressed, it is said, with its value that he has incorporated certain features of it into the Rolin Company.

He has inaugurated a board of critical strategy at the plant in Los Angeles. In other words, he has formed a committee of the people to criticize Pathe's Lloyd and Toto comedies before the necessary cuts have been made. This board includes Roachc as director, the director who made the picture, the technical cutter of the company and a board of laymen, including a tired business man, a young woman, and a rather soiled-faced urchin. Roach values their opinions highly, according to reports. By careful observation he has found that about a third of the audiences at moving pictures are made of young men and women, the young women deciding as to what picture theatre shall be attended. Therefore Roach believes the opinion of this representative young woman is invaluable. The business man represents the middle-aged class, and he generally has a suggestion or two that adds to the betterment of the picture. The boy can be relied upon to laugh at every real laugh situation in the play, and in this way Roach knows to a certainty how many laughs the product is good for.

Julius Stern Prolongs Stay on Coast

President Julius Stern, of L-Ko Comedies, remains on the Pacific Coast for another month to observe the outcome of several changes he has made, in consultation with Director General J. G. Blystone, at the Hollywood studios, where L-Kos come from. There has been a general shift of players and directors, brought about by the addition of new stars of the L-Ko list, and the new schedule of operations is depended upon to work a general benefit to the product.

W. S. Frederick came to L-Ko with Mack Swain to direct the "Ambrose" comedian in a series of releases that will bring that character to the screen once a month. Vin Moore, directing Myrtle Sterling, will have Al Forbes as his principal comedian. Gale Henry is being directed by Robert Kerr, with Hughie Mack and Bobby Dunn doing the leading male comedy. Dave Morris, transferred from Nestors, is being supervised in his offerings by Archie Mayo.

Constance Talmadge Returns to West Coast

Constance Talmadge, Select's young comedienne, who left Los Angeles less than a year ago, returned to the Coast this week a star in her own right.

Miss Talmadge will begin work shortly on "The Shuttle," which has been arranged for the screen from Mrs. Hodgson Burnett's widely read novel.

Empire All-Star Arrangement With Frohman Ends

It was announced last week that arrangements with the Empire All-Star Corporation, which was organized last January to exploit Charles Frohman's stage successes in motion pictures, have been terminated. The cause was not made known. As a result of the change, it is announced that Charles Frohman, Inc., is again in the market to dispose of its plays to various motion picture companies.

Indian War Films Reach Cutting Room

WORK was commenced, last week, on cutting, assembling and titling the second series of official Italian war films which have reached the United States and which are being handled by the Fort Pitt Theatre Company of Pittsburgh, of which William Moore Patch is president and managing director. Mr. Patch is personally supervising every phase of this work, which will take about two months. He plans to give the second series of films an even more elaborate exhibition than that lavished upon the first series, known as "The Italian Battlefront."

A title for the second series of official Italian war films has not been definitely decided upon as yet. It is said by those who are close to Mr. Patch, however, that he intends giving the picture some such name as "Italy's Lesson for America."

Many of the scenes, it is claimed, of the second series were filmed during the recent retreat of the Italians from the Gorizia. It is also said that the heroic stand of the Italian army under General Diaz at the Piave River has also been photographed.

Alec B. Francis Ranks High as Goldwyn Player

Alec B. Francis, from appearing signally in the Rex Beach picture, "The Auction Block," was drafted for the Marsh picture, "The Cinderella Man," released December 16. Mr. Francis deserves the strong place that his work has won in the estimation of Goldwyn patrons. He has had a notable career in the films, having gone into the work of screen acting when the cinematograph first became commercially feasible. He appeared even in the days when motion pictures had not generally developed byond the slot-machine stage and when 500 feet of film constituted a feature photoplay.

His first picture was "Twa Hieland Laddies," made for the old Vitagraph, but he has since played in more than two hundred cinematographic productions, including "Silent Jim," "After Dark" and "The Imposter," in each of which he was featured by the Eclair Company; "Alias Jimmy Valentine" and "The Wishing Ring."

In "The Cinderella Man" he has the part of Romney, whom he describes as "a man with a sense of humor besides hair; a man with a serious side to his nature—and a splendid role."

Eltinge Makes Collection of Shoes

One day in Los Angeles, while working on his last picture, "The Widow's Mite," Julian Eltinge confided to several of his friends that his hobby was collecting shoes. Mr. Eltinge has in his possession the last shoes that John L. Sullivan wore in his last fight with Jim Corbett. In turn, Corbett presented to his friend, Eltinge, the shoes he wore in his famous fight with the late Fitzsimmons. He is also the proud possessor of a shoe worn by the famous race horse, Colin, presented to him by August Belmont.

Collins Titles Petrova Picture Uniquely

CO-INCIDENTAL with the recent completion of the second starring vehicle in which Madame Olga Petrova will appear, comes an announcement by Frederick L. Collins, president of the Petrova Picture Company, of the inauguration of a unique method whereby the title for the second Petrova release will be chosen. With a full realization of the important part which an appropriate main title plays in the success of any feature production, Mr. Collins has decided to supplant the usual methods employed in the naming of pictures with the following plan:

"The complete working organization which participated in the making of the second Petrova production will be assembled in the projection room at the studios immediately following the final cutting of the film. Larry Trimble, who is responsible for the directorial end of the picture following "Daughter of Destiny," together with the members of his production staff will be present, in company with the heads of the publicity, scenario and cutting departments. All of the spectators will be furnished with comprehensive working manuscripts of the picture and in order to stimulate the imaginations of the titlers, Mr. Collins has arranged for a substantial money award for the man or woman who selects the best main title to accompany the second Petrova production.

Mme. Olga Petrova's Second Starring Subject Is Being Titled by Means of a Unique Method

The picture, which deals with a present day problem, presents Madame Petrova in the decidedly unique role of a famous young woman surgeon and the somewhat "different" plot which the story unfolds affords opportunity for the selection of a most unusual title, it is said.

Wm. Fox Films "Jack Spurlock—Prodigal"

"JACK SPURLOCK—PRODIGAL," written by George Horace Lorimer, editor of Saturday Evening Post, is to be filmed by William Fox, it was announced last week.

It required some persuasion, it is said, accompanied by what is claimed to be the largest sum of money ever paid for a similar privilege to get Mr. Lorimer's consent to picturization of his tale, but Mr. Fox personally conducted the negotiations which finally made it possible.

Mr. Lorimer's "Jack Spurlock—Prodigal," appeared in Saturday Evening Post in serial form. It's introductory chapter, in which your Spurlock, at Harvard, awakens after a wild night and discovers a bear with boxing gloves on his feet in his bath-room, which he had brought home as a "lark," compels the reader, according to Fox, to settle in his chair anticipating an "out of the ordinary" tale.

General Manager Sheehan of the Fox Film Corporation, discussing the coming production said: "Notwithstanding the extraordinary prestige linked with "Jack Spurlock-Prodigal," and its author, the picture will be released as one of the regular Fox weekly special features—not as an "extra" even though it undoubtedly carries the punch entitling it to be classed in the so-called de luxe category.

"This announcement ought certainly be appreciated by regular patrons of Fox service and should appeal, from a business viewpoint to all exhibitors. The decision to list this particular film as a Fox special feature assures Fox patrons of an opportunity to "clean up" handsomely, but Mr. Fox goes further and announces that an extraordinary publicity and advertising campaign will be conducted in its behalf. This is practically a guarantee of theatre capacity business for every exhibitor on the Fox yearly contract list."

Essanay Comedy Director Adds to Playing Staff

Arthur D. Hotaling, Essanay comedy director, is adding to his staff of comedians for his one-a-week General Film releases. Arthur Bates, who supported Charlie Chaplin in several of his Essanay productions, is to be featured as a character comedian in forthcoming pictures, as are Amedee Rastrelli, the French comedian, and Howard Higson, an English contortionist.

Bessie Love Appears at Hero Land Bazaar

Bessie Love, the Pathe screen star, appeared last week at the "Hero Land" Bazaar in New York.

Miss Love appeared in soldier's uniform with her director, Frederick Thompson, her leading man, Chester Barnett, and her cameraman, in a brief sketch taking her spectators back of the scenes in a "movie" studio and ending with an unexpected punch—an effective and yet unaffected appeal for the sufferers at Halifax.

Advance Offerings of the Programs

Vitagraph Plans Big 1918 Start

Four Strong Productions Listed for January, with at Least Eight Favorites in Casts — Stories Considered Excellent

GREATER Vitagraph will start the new year with an even stronger offering of Blue Ribbon features than it closes 1917 with, according to an announcement by Albert E. Smith, president of the company. Four strong plays have been listed for the month of January and these bring to the exhibitors many of the Vitagraph favorites, among them Earle Williams, Corinne Griffith, Nell Shipman, Evart Overton, Alfred Whitman, Edward Earle, Miriam Miles and Betty Howe.

President Smith declares that the outstanding feature of the January program is the excellence of story presented in each picture.

"Without real stories," said Mr. Smith, "the best stars and the best productions that a company can put out fail in their primary object—entertainment—and unless the public is entertained the motion picture industry is bound to come to a standstill. Thus, it is up to the producers to provide their stars with the best stories available. With Vitagraph this has long been a fixed policy and I feel safe in the statement that no company has on its list of contributors a better or more extensive company of fine writers than has this."

The list of productions as announced by President Smith follows: January 7, "The Blind Adventure," featuring Edward Earle and Betty Howe; January 14, "The Wild Strain," featuring Nell Shipman with Alfred Whitman; January 21, "The Menace," featuring Corinne Griffith with Evart Overton; January 27, "A Mother's Sin," featuring Earle Williams.

"The Blind Adventure" is an adaptation from the Saturday Evening Post story of Earl Derr Biggers, "The Agony Column," and was produced under the direction of Wesley H. Ruggles.

"The Wild Strain" brings another of the works of George Randolph Chester and Lillian Chester to the Vitagraph program. It also marks the return to the Vitagraph list of stars of Nell Shipman.

"The Menace" is said to be another strikingly original story, written by Rex Taylor, and presents Miss Griffith and Mr. Overton in the most attractive roles they have been seen in in months. It was produced by John Robertson.

"A Mother's Sin," which was picturized from a novel by Hilda Sharp, is declared to be one of the best vehicles Earle Williams has had in many months. The picture was produced under the direction of Tom Mills. In the supporting cast are Miriam Miles, Betty Blythe, Denton Vane, Louise Dupre and Ernest Maupain.

Essanay Books "The Dream Doll" Heavily

ESSANAY, it is supposed, timed the release of its novelty perfection picture, "The Dream Doll," so as to give it to the public during the holiday season. And that it sensed the appropriate time for its release is evidenced in the heavy holiday week bookings, already reported by the George Kleine offices, according to announcement.

Though not a Christmas picture, "The Dream Doll" is said to be particularly appropriate for holiday programs, as it shows, according to Essanay, that some remarkable acting is done on the part of some fourteen-inch dolls.

The picture comes from the ingenuity of Howard S. Moss, an Essanay director and a student of novelties in motion pictures. That Mr. Moss has truly struck a novelty whose further possibilities are endless, will be realized, it is predicted, when the picture is shown.

The picture runs for an hour and it is acted for the most part by the little dolls. They interpret, it is said, a pretty legend in which the love element is strong and appealing to moviegoers of all ages. Marguerite Clayton, Rod LaRocque and other Essanay players appear in the picture.

Mary McAlister, the six-year-old Essanay actress, has completed her latest picture, "Sadie Goes to Heaven," adapted from the story published in Good Housekeeping. This production includes some acting by a small dog, "rented out" by a Michigan farmer.

Jack Livingston Warns Against His "Double"

Jack Livingston, Triangle leading man who supported Belle Bennett in her last picture, "Be cause of a Woman," has issued a warning that a man who closely resembles him has been securing funds under false pretences, by representing himself to be "Jack Livingston." According to Jack, he has a double in New York who is touring the studios, declaring himself to be the Triangle actor, and is getting a few days work on the strength of it.

Christmas Week Introduces Marion Davies

A new motion picture star is revealed in the announcement that Pathe will soon present Marion Davies in a five-reel photoplay written by Miss Davies herself, entitled "Runaway Romany," and released Christmas week.

Miss Davies is very well known to New York playgoers as she was featured in the Ziegfeld Follies and also with Gaby Deslys in Charles Dillingham's "Stop! Look! Listen!" She then played in "Oh, Boy!" the musical comedy. The star is supported by a cast including Joseph Kilgour, who has been starred in many pictures and also has appeared opposite Emily Stevens in several of her most successful films; Pedro de Cordoba, leading man for Geraldine Farrar and Elsie Ferguson, appearing in "Carmen," "Maria Rosa," "Barbary Sheep" and others; Matt Moore, one of the Moore family; Gladden James, Ormi Hawley and Boyce Combe.

Fazenda Film Has Place in January Schedule

Louise Fazenda, termed by some the empress of mirth, again comes into prominence with "The Kitchen Lady," to be released by Paramount January 13. This is described as a Paramount-Mack Sennett comedy of the screaming variety. It parodies social customs and paints the woes of the downtrodden servant girl in ludicrous hues. Miss Fazenda is thoroughly at home in this character, for she possesses the burlesque ability to a marked degree, so necessary for the rendition of this sort of type.

Beside Louise Fazenda, Slim Summerville, Glen Cavender, Alice Maisen and Eva Thatcher appear in the cast. Edward Cline is director and the production was made under Mr. Sennett's supervision.

Preceding this, comes "Taming Target Center," December 30, with Polly Moran and a cast of star laugh-makers. Another new comedy is under way, entitled "His Hidden Purpose," full details of which will soon be forthcoming, it is said.

Doraldina Returns to Vaudeville from Pathe

Doraldina, who will be presented with Antonio Moreno in the Pathe De Luxe production, "The Naulahka," is creating much attention on the vaudeville stage.

Doraldina is credited with being one of the most accomplished Oriental dancers who has ever appeared on the boards in New York City, and in "The Naulahka," the screen will be given a special dance evolved from a number of native East Indian dances.

"Manx-Man" Proves Broad Vision of Americans

In an announcement last week, Goldwyn Pictures Corporation stated that it considers it a tribute to the American nation that at a time when the element of patriotism is being emphasized to a point where it might easily be felt that nothing is good unless it is evolved in the United States, its theatregoers are quick to recognize good plays and acting no matter where they come from. A convenient illustration of this is cited in Hall Caine's "The Manx-Man," made by George Loane Tucker from the novel of the same name.

"The Manx-Man" is a story of the Isle of Man, in the Irish Sea, and its players are English, from the war baby who plays "Little Pete," to Fred Groves, who portrays the title role. Even the hundreds of men and women seen in the "mob" are natives of the Isle of Man, where the production was actually made under Mr. Tucker's direction.

Thurston Hall Appears in Dorothy Dalton Feature

Thurston Hall, who appeared opposite Dorothy Dalton in "The Price Mark," her first Paramount picture produced by Thomas H. Ince, will again be presented in the leading male role of "Love Letters," which will be released by Paramount, December 24, according to the schedule announced.

Having completed "Love Letters," Miss Dalton is working on her next Paramount picture under Mr. Ince's supervision, a production having its scenes somewhere in the rugged western country, according to report. Further announcement of this new picture is expected shortly.

Fox Predicts Mix Will Spring a Surprise

Tom Mix, according to predictions issued last week from the offices of William Fox, will surprise his many admirers in the new productions in which he will appear. Mix's work in comedy productions is well known but in the new productions in which he will appear he shows dramatic ability, it is said, that is sure to make him one of the favorites of the screen. In his new plays he is expected to perform many daring Western stunts. There will be a heart interest throughout and Tom Mix will be the ideal, death defying lover, it is predicted.

"Troublemakers" Reaches Screen December 9

"Troublemakers," a comedy drama on the Fox Standard schedule, in which Mr. Fox presents his youthful stars, Jane and Katherine Lee, made its bow to the public December 9. At pre-release date exhibitions and private showings for exhibitors "Troublemakers" not only made good but was awarded the distinction of being probably the best comedy-drama, featuring juveniles, produced by Mr. Fox during the year 1917.

Critics Like Fox New Feature

"Les Miserables" Causes Scribes to Scramble for New Adjectives or Ones That Have Long Been Reposing on Shelf

METROPOLITAN critics lavished praise on the screen version of "Les Miserables," which had its premiere at the Lyric theatre in New York. That William Fox has produced one of the wonder pictures of the cinema world was the unanimous verdict of those who saw the first production. William Farnum as Jean Valjean scored the triumph of his screen career, it was admitted.

Following are excerpts from the metropolitan papers: New York Herald: "'Les Miserables,' a motion picture drama adapted from the epic novel of Victor Hugo was presented at the Lyric theatre after several months of preparation. The photoplay probably is as close an approach to literature as has been accomplished on the screen."

New York World: "An excellent example of what the movies can do for the classics of literature. Moving picture producers deserve credit for doing this sort of thing if only for extending the sphere of worth while ideas and increasing the public interest in good books."

New York American: "Mr. Farnum appeared brilliantly in the strong role of Jean Valjean and was supported by a fine cast. The plot was converted into an absorbing scenario and the production made with great care."

New York Evening World: "Jean Valjean, the hero of the greatest story ever told, was reproduced in all the vicissitudes of his wonderful and sorrowful career. The gamut of the emotions of the persecuted outcast of Victor Hugo's masterpiece was run with a fidelity to the human acceptance of how the sorrows and griefs of man should be depicted."

William Farnum Does His Best Screen Work in "Les Miserables," Produced by William Fox

New York Evening Telegram: "Lovers of Victor Hugo's masterpiece 'Les Miserables' rejoiced to find that this great work had been transferred to the screen by William Fox with all the power and vividness of the original story faithfully retained and adequately expressed."

Pathe Puts Out Many War Films in 1917

"DURING 1917 Pathe has enjoyed almost a monopoly of war films of the first class," said an official of that company the other day. "Beginning with the Official British Government pictures of the war—'The Battle of the Somme,' 'The Tanks at the Battle of the Ancre' and 'The Retreat of the Germans at the Battle of Arras' through the Official French Pictures—'In the Wake of the Huns,' 'Under the Stars and Stripes in France' and the latest, 'France in Arms,' the list has been a most notable one. No other organization has had anywhere near the quantity or the quality of these pictures which have come to us with the stamp of authenticity upon them, placed there by State authority.

"We believe, and our faith is based upon the success Pathe is having with all these war pictures, that first class war pictures, authentic, thrilling, and instructional, are real super-attractions with any house that puts them on and doesn't put them on 'cold.' In other words, the pictures should receive the advertising they deserve. If that is done the exhibitor can expect real business. Furthermore he can fill his house with persons who are not ordinarily patrons. The main business of the country at the present time is war. Everything that pertains to war is of interest to every man, woman and child. We therefore consider our war pictures are attractions which are unequalled by any pictures now on the market."

Jewel Feature Draws Without Any Advertising

National publicity, conducted along rational lines, is said to be bringing good bookings to the Jewel exchanges throughout the country.

So well known have Jewel features become in Portland, Oregon, that a theatre manager was enabled, it is claimed, to break all house records without anything but poster advertising to back "Sirens of the Sea."

Being in an appreciative mood after counting up his boxoffice receipts, Sam A. Sax, manager of the Princess theatre, in Portland, wrote a very complimentary letter to G. A. Metzger, Jewel representative in that city.

Douglas Fairbanks and Director Dwan Desert the Ford to Shoot "Modern Musketeer" Scenes in the Grand Canyon of the Arizona

Artcraft Winds Up Year with Fairbanks

ARTCRAFT PICTURES CORPORATION plans to wind up its release schedule for 1917 with the new Douglas Fairbanks production, "A Modern Musketeer," now being finished at the Lasky studio in Hollywood, Cal.

Written and directed by Allan Dwan, whose past association with Douglas Fairbanks has played an important part in the success of various popular photoplays, the newest vehicle for the athletic star is said to offer a unique theme. The story deals with the chivalry of days gone by brought up to date by the reincarnated D'Artagnan, Ned Thacker, a youth from Kansas, whose chivalrous deeds get him into many difficulties.

In the production of this film the Douglas Fairbanks players experienced, it is said, one of the most strenuous expeditions ever made by a motion picture company in staging a photoplay. The entire Fairbanks producing organization made the trip from the rim of the Grand Canyon of Arizona, down to the Colorado River, a descent of over seven thousand feet, and a distance of over thirty-five miles, along narrow winding trails that were barely wide enough to allow the mules carrying the players and supplies, to travel. The party required forty mules, who made the trip in twenty-two hours, stopping at Bright Angels Camp on the skirt of the Colorado River, where the company camped out during the time these scenes were being made.

After spending two weeks at the Grand Canyon, the entire company of fifty people departed for the Canyon Du Chelley, ninety miles by pack mule from Gallup, N. M. Here a number of other scenes were obtained as backgrounds for the new production. At this canyon the troupe again lived in tents and were found up and at work at sik o'clock every morning. The interiors are now being staged back at the Lasky studio in California, where the players recently returned from their many exciting experiences in the wild country of the real West.

O. Henry's Daughter Praises the Screen

THE fidelity with which the O. Henry stories, released through General Film Company have been produced, has made many friends, it is said, for the Broadway Star Feature series, but none of them more appreciative than Mrs. Margaret Porter Cesare, the daughter of O. Henry. In a letter to General Film, after she had witnessed a special showing of O. Henry pictures to friends and acquaintances of the short story writer, Mrs. Cesare warmly declared her satisfaction with the productions in the following words:

"I want you to know with what pleasure I have seen my father's stories presented in picture form," said Mrs. Cesare. "I use the term, 'picture form,' as applied in general to screen productions, for you have made the O. Henry stories more than pictures; you have brought to life the people I know so well. I did not realize that it would be possible to preserve, on the screen, characterization, atmosphere and spirit of the original story. But this has been accomplished and without impairing the unity of action.

"I have seen most of the pictures now released and have been impressed with the selection of players who, as a whole, become not players of parts but O. Henry's own people. Naturally I would be quick to detect any incongruity, but I can say that I have not observed one flaw or false note worthy of mention. The length to which the producer has gone to preserve the original story should make this a genuine living library of my father's works."

"Les Miserables" Turns 'Em Away at the Lyric

The William Fox production of "Les Miserables," starring William Farnum, at the Lyric Theatre, is a photodrama of a very decidedly different nature from "Cleopatra," but the patronage it is receiving, according to the Fox reports, is in every respect the equivalent of that which was accorded its successful predecessor. From the very first performance, it is announced, it has been necessary to turn people away, this applying to matinees as well as night showings.

"This success," says William Fox, "has been wholly a matter of giving the public big productions of the right sort. We are not confining ourselves to any one class of photoplays, but we are taking big themes and doing them in a manner befitting their greatness. Some exhibitors doubted our ability to put over 'Cleopatra' under existing conditions, but I disagreed with them. Now, I predict for 'Les Miserables' and for 'Queen of the Sea,' our new Kellermann wonder picture, successes even surpassing that of 'Cleopatra.'"

Edison Gets "Unbeliever" Scenes in Virginia

The spectacular battle front scenes for the forthcoming Edison perfection feature, "The Unbeliever," were made at the Quantico (Va.) cantonment with the cooperation of the United States Marine Corps, it is said.

Alan Crosland, director, and his company, including Ray McKee and Darwin Karr, are shown in two informal photographs taken at the camp.

"The Unbeliever" is a seven-reel production, based upon Mary Raymond Shipman Andrews' novelette, "The Three Things." The picture will be released during January through the George Kleine system.

Wallace Reid New Feature Released December 17

Wallace Reid, leading man in numerous Paramount and Artcraft pictures, is to be "in our midst" this week—taking New York as the terminus of his transcontinental journey. He left Los Angeles in company of Kenneth McGaffey, west coast publicity director, on the fifth of the month and, after stopping for personal appearances in a number of the principal cities en route, according to the schedule, reached the big city December 17.

While in the East he will be filmed in "The Source," and probably "Believe Me, Xantippe," from the Harvard Prize play, will also be produced on the Atlantic side of the continent. Then it will be "Westward Ho!" once more for Wallace Reid. He has completed two western productions—the first, "Nan of Music Mountain," released by Paramount December 17, the day of the player's arrival in New York. It is from Frank H. Spearman's story. The direction was accomplished by George H. Melford.

Fight Scenes Stand Out in Lockwood Feature

Two outstanding features of Harold Lockwood's forthcoming Metroplay, "The Avenging Trail," which Metro will release on December 31, are said to be the fight scenes in which the star, as Gaston Olaf, engages with Louis Wolheim and Walter P. Lewis, respectively playing Lefty Red and Devil Dave Taggart, the two heavy characters.

The fight of Gaston with Lefty Red is described as a vigorous affair, but the battle between Gaston and Taggart is said to be even more strenuous. Being stabbed, Gaston is compelled to face his adversary, a powerful man of the woods, with one arm rendered useless.

Essanay Releases McAlister Feature December 24

Mary McAlister, the six-year-old Essanay player, has completed her latest picture, "Sadie Goes to Heaven," it was announced last week, and the picture will be released on December 24, through George Kleine as an Essanay Perfection Picture.

"Sadie Goes to Heaven" is said to cite the adventure of a little ghetto waif in the home of the rich. A small dog takes one of the main roles in the production, it is said.

"Cloven Tongue" Released on January 13

"The Cloven Tongue" is the title of the latest of Pathe's Russian Art Films, which is scheduled for January 13. These pictures are scoring on their appeal to high class audiences. The Eighty-first Street theatre is presenting "The Painted Doll," December 17, 18 and 19, and the showing is being made by Manager Shackman with a big advertising campaign, the house attendants in Russian costume, Russian music, etc.

Mary Pickford's Best Picture Is Said to Be "Stella Maris," for Artcraft

Toto Comedies Begin Shortly

Hippodrome Clown Will Be Presented by Pathe in Two-Reel Series—Produced by Rolin, Under Roach

PATHE announced this week that the much heralded two-reelers starring Toto will begin on January 13 with the release of "The One Night Stand," and the comedies will continue every second Sunday of each month thereafter.

The Toto comedies produced by the Rolin Film Company under the personal direction of Hal Roach, the man who discovered Harold Lloyd, star of the very popular "Lonesome Luke" and "Rolin" comedies, are announced as the second most expensive on the market with a single exception. Yet, according to Pathe's policy, the Toto comedies will be within reach of all good houses.

Toto is said by Pathe to be entirely different from any comedian ever seen on the screen. His methods are said to be new to pictures though they have proven successful on the stage in New York.

The Toto comedies are characterized, it is said, by the direction that has marked everything ever done by Hal Roach. The leading woman is Clarine Seymour; a cast including Bud Jamison, who had such important parts in the "Luke" pictures; girls, girls and more girls, and one laugh after another are expected. Among those completed in addition to "The One Night Stand" are "The 'Movie' Dummy," "The Junk Man" and "Fare, Please."

"The One Night Stand" with Toto as Props is claimed by Pathe to be the funniest burlesque of the "behind-the-scenes" at a theatre ever filmed. In "The 'Movie' Dummy" he plays the dummy used in making the thrill scenes, in "The Junk Man" he again has a title role and in "Fare, Please" he is the conductor with Bud Jamison as the motorman on the "Not-at-all Express."

Toto, the Clown, in Pathe Comedies

"I Love You" Comes to Screen January 13

FOLLOWING the releasing of the first Triangle seven-reel production, "Because of a Woman," with Belle Bennett on December 16, the next seven-part feature will be "I Love You," starring Alma Rubens, scheduled for release January 13. The seven-reel pictures are a part of the new Triangle service recently announced, that of supplying a seven-reel feature on each month's program without extra cost to the exhibitor.

In producing "I Love You," Director Walter Edwards has spared no expense, it is said, in order to produce one of the most elaborate pictures yet featured on the Triangle program. The scenes throughout are said to be distinctly striking and, as many of them are laid in France and Italy, the ingenuity of the Triangle scenic artists at the Triangle studio was taxed to the utmost.

The cast selected for "I Love You," includes besides Alma Rubens, Wheeler Oakman, one of the best-known leading men in the country, and Francis McDonald, also a well-known heavy. Both Mr. McDonald and Mr. Oakman are new to Triangle pictures. Others in the cast are Frederick Vroom, Lillian Langdon and John Lince.

The story deals with a French artist, who paints a beautiful Italian girl. She learns to love him, but the artist leaves her broken-hearted. A wealthy Frenchman, after seeing the painting, falls in love with the model and goes in search of her, and they are married. Later the artist tries to win back the girl's love and finally does take her from her husband, but in the end he is brought to justice for his action.

"I Love You" was written by Catherine Carr.

Mersereau Story Comes Out in Novel Form

The publishers of Varick Vanardy's novel, "The Girl by the Roadside," to be released as a Bluebird feature December 31, with Violet Mersereau star of of the screen-version, will soon issue a special edition of the novel to conform identically with the moving picture. Stills from the Bluebird production will be used as illustrations and the book-trade will be supplied at about the time the photoplay is released throughout the country. "The Girl by the Roadside" had an extensive sale in its original form, and the publishers are depending upon the moving picture to create a renewed demand, these sales, at the same time, having a probable tendency to advertise the photoplay.

Bluebird Program Runs Well in February

With the Bluebird program arranged well into February, stars and directors are busy on locations with future subjects for release in the early months of the New Year. With the exception of Violet Mersereau, who operates at Bluebird's Leonia (N. J.) studio, all of Bluebird's stars are working on the West Coast with Universal City as their base of activities.

Mae Murray, under direction of Robert Leonard, has completed "The Eternal Columbine," written for her by H. Sheridan Bickers, especially created to introduce Miss Murray's dancing. Carmel Myers will be the star of "The Green Seal," to be released late in February, with Ashton Dearholdt, her new leading man. A. G. Kenyon prepared the scenario from a book written by Charles Edmund Walk and Stuart Paton, who has lately been directing Universal serials, supervised the production.

"The Girl Who Dared" will present Dorothy Phillips as a February star among Bluebirds, with William Stowell and Lon Chaney featured in her support. Allen J. Holubar is finishing the production from a magazine story written by James Oliver Curwood. Priscilla Dean will, in this feature, appear for the first time in Miss Phillips' support, the company also including William Burress, Harry De More, Joseph Girard, J. Gordon Russell and Frank Brownlee.

Sonia Markova Scenes in Massachusetts

Many scenes of the new Sonia Markova picture, which is now being made for William Fox, were photographed at Buzzards Bay, Massachusetts, on a ship specially employed for the purpose. Some of these scenes were snapped from exceedingly difficult camera angles, it is said, and the life of the cinematographer was in danger more than once.

On one occasion the machine was lashed to a spar which was attached to the stern of the craft, even with the deck and about twenty feet above the water. On the end of this a small platform was constructed, and there the camera man stood while he snapped the action going on above deck.

Borzage Gets Compliments on Triangle Play

Frank Borzage, Triangle director, is receiving congratulations from all sides on the success of his latest picture, "Until They Get Me," which scored a hit at the opening in New York.

Borzage received the following wire from Frank McDonald, well-known actor, who attended the New York premiere at the Rialto: "'Until They Get Me' played to standing room at the Rialto theatre and scored a knockout. It is a clean, snappy picture, filled with straightaway action and just the kind the fans want."

The principals in this picture are Pauline Starke, Jack Curtis and Joe King.

Exchanges Boom Petrova Week

"Daughter of Destiny," Released Christmas Week, to Get Benefit of Unique Campaign—Newspapers Will Help Work

CONFORMING in general aspect to the original plan conceived by a Chicago newspaper last year, the officials of the Petrova Picture Company and the executives of the First National Exhibitors' Circuit are now working out a scheme whereby the release of "Daughter of Destiny," the initial Petrova starring vehicle, will mark what is to be known throughout the United States as "Petrova Week."

After a series of consultations between Frederick L. Collins, president of the Petrova Picture Company, and the members of the First National Exhibitors' Circuit, it was decided to ascertain the sentiment of the exhibitors throughout the country relative to inaugurating "Petrova Week." Actuated by the replies which poured in from thousands of exhibitors, all said to be heartily indorsing the scheme, the plan will now be carried out in full detail.

In order to co-operate with the Petrova exhibitors to the fullest extent possible, the week of December 23, which embraces the Christmas holidays, has been chosen in which to release "Daughter of Destiny." The co-operation of many newspapers throughout the country which devote large space to motion pictures has been enlisted and the exhibitors and dailies in each town will work together, it is said, to attract the attention of the screen patrons to "Petrova Week."

In order to further the plan, arrangements have been made whereby those picture patrons who witness "Daughter of Destiny" during Christmas Week, also "Petrova Week," will be presented by the local exhibitors with an autographed new portrait pose of the star and wide-spread advance publicity will be given this innovation by the use of the theatre men's screens and the columns of the newspapers which are interested in the project.

Frank Crane Will Direct Petrova's Third Starring Subject

"Daughter of Destiny" will mark the initial appearance of Madame Petrova in photoplay productions bearing the stamp of her own individual organization.

"Les Miserables" Prospers Despite Lull

THE difficulties encountered by the spoken drama in New York this season have been taken by the William Fox publicity department as a basis for citing the wide contrast between the legitimate stage and motion pictures in so far as popularity, and resultant attendance, is concerned.

William Fox is probably the only photoplay producer who has undertaken an invasion of Broadway this fall, and he has offered several productions. He has plans moreover, it is understood, for continuing until spring, having already announced the opening, at a date not yet set, of another big photoplay.

The theatre Mr. Fox now is using is the Lyric, in Forty-second street, at the very center of New York theatrical activities. Long previous to the time last summer, when Charles Dillingham wanted his theatre, the Globe, for the opening of his season of spoken drama, Mr. Fox leased the Dillingham house and there, in spite of the fact that the weather was hot, began showing Standard pictures. "The Spy," "Jack and the Beanstalk," "The Conqueror" and "Aladdin and the Wonderful Lamp" all had long runs, every one of which was reported to be highly successful. Then followed Fox's removal to the Lyric theatre and the opening there of "Cleopatra," now declared by Fox to have been the most successful photoplay run ever made in the Broadway district.

"Cleopatra" was taken off after an eleven-week showing, during which the box-office receipts were said to be $77,000, only because of the necessity for giving early bookings to "Les Miserables" and "Queen of the Sea."

You are not going to war. The men who are need all the comforts you can give them. Help them get cigarettes. That is your patriotic duty. If you aren't helping in the "smokes" campaign, get busy—now. Don't be a slacker!

Margery Wilson Tries Camouflage in Feature

Margery Wilson, titian-haired Triangle star, resorts to "camouflage," it is said, in her latest picture, "Three Godsons of Jeanette Gontreau," in order to portray the leading feminine role in this screen adaptation of Francis W. Sullivan's story of the same name, which appeared recently in the Ladies Home Journal. In this picture Miss Wilson appears as a patriotic young New York stenographer desirous of "doing her bit" to aid the boys at the front. This she does by writing and sending goodies to three boys of the Allied forced held prisoners in Germany. All goes well until she learns that one of her godsons has been released and is about to pay her a visit in New York. Because of the intimacy of her letters it becomes necessary for Miss Wilson to camouflage herself as a white-haired old woman. The transformation brought about by the white wig and old fashioned clothes forms such a disguise that Miss Wilson's most ardent admirers will scarcely be able to recognize her, it is asserted by Triangle.

Pathe Lives Up to Its Serial Standard

Pathe is apparently living up to its reputation of "The House of Successful Serials" in its latest chapter photoplay, released November 25. This serial, starring Doris Kenyon and featuring Sheldon Lewis, Arline Pretty and Mahlon Hamilton, means "standing room only" in his theatre, according to James M. Thom, the manager of the Grand Opera House, Twenty-third street and Eighth avenue.

He writes: "With regard to your new serial, 'The Hidden Hand,' I want to give my fellow exhibitors a little dope on this serial. This is the first Pathe serial I have used in the Grand Opera House in three years. After being enthused by the salesman to screen this serial I gave him a three day booking on it. The result was so surprising that I well hereafter use every Pathe serial which looks anything like a drawing card, such as 'The Hidden Hand.'"

Central America Contributes to O. Henry Story

A stay of several months in Central America enabled O. Henry to gather material for one of his most humorous stories, "The Fourth in Salvador," the current release in General Film Company's Broadway Star Feature series. This is said to be a rollicking story of a tea-cup revolution and what happened to it when it collided full-force with a small but exuberant party of Americans bent upon celebrating the Fourth in the good old-fashioned way.

This is one of the group of "O. Henry" stories produced in the western studios, and features Chet Ryan, W. L. Rodgers, Jack Wetherby, Charles Wheelock and others. The action starts with the difficulties in which Billy Casparis (Chet Ryan) finds himself with regard to his ice making concession.

"The Clarion Call," another two-reel picture, will be the next "O. Henry" story to be released, it is announced.

Artcraft Sets January Releases

Mary Pickford, William S. Hart and Elsie Ferguson Stars in These— "Rose of the World" Is the First

A PRETENTIOUS array of super-attractions for the first month of the new year was announced last week by Walter E. Greene, President of the Artcraft Pictures Corporation, presenting the latest screen achievements of Mary Pickford, William S. Hart and Elsie Ferguson. In these productions, Mr. Greene announces, Artcraft has three of the most notable releases ever presented by this company disclosing the most modern accomplishments in the cinema art.

As the initial release of the year, Artcraft plans to offer Elsie Ferguson in "Rose of the World," an emotional drama. The story has a military atmosphere and in the role of the young captain's wife, the star is said to be at her best. Supporting Miss Ferguson is a cast including Wyndham Standing in the leading male part, Percy Marmont, Ethel Martin, June Sloane, Clarence Handysides, Marie Bendetta, Gertrude Le Brant and Sloane De Masber. The artistic work of Director Tourneur in the cinema presentation of this book it is expected, will create much favorable comment.

William S. Hart in the Thomas H. Ince production, "Wolves of the Rail," is Artcraft's second offering in January. In this production "Big Bill" appears in the part of an upholder of the law and order rather than an outlaw, as has been the rule in the past. Supporting Hart in this picture is a cast of well known film players headed by Vola Vale.

Mary Pickford in what is heralded as her greatest photoplay accomplishment will be Artcraft's third release during the first month of the new year. Miss Pickford's new screen play, "Stella Maris," adapted from the novel by William J. Locke, is expected to prove her crowning achievement as a result of her wonderful work in the dual role.

Elsie Ferguson's Newest Artcraft Feature is Called "Rose of the World"

All three of Artcraft's January releases are now receiving final treatment in the laboratories of the company in California and New York, their actual production having been finished during the past two weeks. Elaborate advertising and exploitation plans are now being completed for the presentation of these productions at the New York headquarters of Artcraft, and these accessories, as well as the prints themselves, will be ready for distribution in the very near future.

Pathe Announces Christmas Bill

Marion Davies Makes Screen Debut In Heavily Advertised Feature— Doris Kenyon and Mollie King Also Included

AN unusually large number of Pathe stars and well-known players appear on Pathe's program for the week of December 23, according to an announcement last week. They include Marion Davies, Doris Kenyon, Mollie King, Harold Lloyd, Joseph Kilgour, Pedro de Cordoba, Matt Moore, Ormi Hawley, Gladden James, Boyce Combe, Sheldon Lewis, Arline Pretty, Mahlon Hamilton, Creighton Hale, Leon Bary, Bebe Daniels and Harry Pollard.

Marion Davies is starred in "Runaway Romany," an extensively advertised five-reel feature. It is released as a Pathe Special and is said to be a fine attraction for the holidays. The cast includes Joseph Kilgour, Pedrode Cordoba, Matt Moore, Ormi Hawley, Boyce Combe and William Bitner.

Doris Kenyon is starred in "The Hidden Hand," episode five, entitled "The Air Lock," with Sheldon Lewis, Arline Pretty and Mahlon Hamilton, released in two reels and produced by Pathe. Thrills are said to abound in this chapter.

Mollie King's vehicle is the fifteenth episode of "The Seven Pearls," entitled "The Seventh Pearl," with Creighton Hale and Leon Bary, produced in two reels by Astra.

Harold Lloyd apears in a one-reel comedy, entitled "Bashful," produced by Rolin, in which he is supported by Bebe Daniels and Harry Pollard. The boy is so bashful he would shy at a ladyfinger. His Uncle Bill is so tough he can't stretch his arms. Harold is heir to $2,000,000 if he has a wife and baby. Bebe plays wife and through a sad error all the kids in the neighborhood play Baby.

"The Pearl of the Atlantic," "Belle Isle" ("Picturesque Brittany") and "Strange Fresh Water Insects" for a split-reel Pathe colored scenic and educational.

An International cartoon and educational split reel and Hearst-Pathe News Nos. 104 and 105 complete this highly interesting program.

Violet Mersereau, the Bluebird Star, Is the Center of Attraction This Week at the Broadway Theatre, New York, in "The Girl by the Roadside"

"Morgan's Raiders" Comes Soon

Bluebird Feature Stars Violet Mersereau on February 4—"The Catamount" Also Slated for An Early Release Date

VIOLET MERSEREAU, star of Bluebird's, will appear February 4 next, in a picture that reflects war—but not the present strife. "Morgan's Raiders" is the new title, illuminating and self-explanatory, of Bess Meredyth's story and scenario from which Wilfred Lucas worked in directing Miss Mersereau's latest Bluebird. The initial title was "The Wild Cat," and the picture has been thus referred to in previous mention, but "Morgan's Raiders" has been decided upon as its permanent caption for distribution.

Previous to her appearance in "Morgan's Raiders," Miss Mersereau will appear as the star of Bluebird's December 31 attraction (New Year's week), playing "The Girl by the Roadside," screen version of Varick Vanardy's novel of the same title, scenarioized by John C. Brownell and directed by Theodore Marston with Allen Edwards leading man for Miss Mersereau. "The Girl by the Roadside" is being pre-released this week at the Broadway theatre, New York.

Another feature that has been fixed for the Bluebird program is as present titled, "The Catamount," in which Franklyn Farnum will appear week starting January 28, next. The story was written by R. N. Bradbury and F. H. Clark, the scenario having been prepared by Charles Kenyon. Joseph De Grasse, who has produced all of Franklyn Farnum's Bluebirds, directed the feature. Before the picture is marketed a new title will be selected. Edith Johnson, who became Mr. Farnum's leading lady with the production of "The Scarlet Car," to be distributed December 24, will be featured in the new attraction as the star's chief support.

"My Unmarried Wife," shown at the Broadway, during the past week, will be Carmel Myers' second Bluebird, and will be released on the regular program, January 7. Mae Murray will furnish the January 14 fixture, appearing in "Face Value" as her second Bluebird. For January 21, the attraction will be Dorothy Phillips, in "Broadway Love," rounding out a list that is set nearly two months ahead.

Fox Stars Jewel Carmen Christmas Week

Jewel Carmen in her first production as a star will be William Fox's Christmas week offering to exhibitors. The first photoplay which Miss Carmen may call her own will be released December 23 as a Fox Special Feature. The production, is titled "The Kingdom of Love."

"The Kingdom of Love" was made in the West under the direction of Frank Lloyd, who has thus occupied himself while William Farnum was taking a rest. The cast includes Nancy Taswell, Genevieve Blinn, L. C. Shumway, Fred Milton, Ernest Wade, Joseph Manning, G. Raymond Nye and Murdock MacQuarrie. The story was written by Doty Hobart.

Doraldina, the Dancer, in Pathe's "The Naulahka"

Earle and Ayres Complete New Comedies

EDWARD EARLE and Agnes Ayres, who are featured in the Vitagraph comedies, have completed the fifth in the series under the direction of Graham Baker, and the releases for the remainder of the present year are announced by President Albert E. Smith, as follows:

December 17—"He Had to Camouflage"; December 24—"His Wife Got All the Credit"; December 31—"His Wife's Hero."

The Vitagraph company reports that these one-reel subjects havemet with instant favor among exhibitors and cites as a sample of their popularity the following letter, which was addressed by Walter W. Irwin, general manager of the Vitagraph distributing organization:

"We have just finished screening your one-reel Vitagraph comedy, 'A Family Flivver' and found it to be a very 'Pleasing One-Reeler.' To call them comedies, after the way this term has been abused, is very unfair. They are, as the advertisement stated, what the public now is insistently demanding—the kind of fun that can and does happen in real life. You are to be congratulated for presenting this type of filler. Hope to see more."

The letter was signed by W. A. Calihan, of the Regorson Corporation, Rochester, New York.

Other letters of similar portent have been received, all of which bear testimony to the manner in which these comedies are being received.

Holmes Company Goes Home for Christmas Rest

Taylor Holmes and his supporting players, producing George K. Spoor's special, "Ruggles of Red Gap," are expected to return from Phoenix, Ariz., to Chicago for a part of the Christmas holidays. During this sojourn, the company will resume interiors of this production, afterward returning to the West for the balance of the exteriors.

Phoenix was chosen for the exteriors for its natural environment suitable to the picture. The company arrived there from the Chicago studios on December 11.

It is believed that "Ruggles of Red Gap" will be heralded as Mr. Holmes's greatest screen vehicle. As the work is progressing, the former stage comedy star expresses renewed enthusiasm with his role and with the suitability of his entire supporting cast.

Public and exhibitors' interest in "Uneasy Money," to be released in January, is expected to be greatly aggravated by the wholesale advertising of the picture. The release is to be heralded and accompanied by a gigantic bill board campaign.

Boardwalk Figures in "Daybreak" for Metro

A niece of Charles Murphy, Tammany boss, and Atlantic City's boardwalk are announced by Metro as two of the outstanding features in the closing scenes of "Daybreak," picturized by June Mathis and Albert Capellani from the play of Jane Cowl and Jane Murfis. Emily Stevens is the star of this production, and Mr. Capellani directed it, assisted by George De Carleton.

"Daybreak" is claimed to be a noteworthy production, which Metro will release on the 7th of January. It will be Metro's first 1918 release.

Vitagraph Releases Another Work of Fiction

Another work of fiction is brought to the screen by Greater Vitagraph in the blue-ribbon feature, "When Men Are Tempted," which is announced by President Albert E. Smith for the week of December 24. This play, which is an adaptation from the novel "John Burt," by Frederick Upham Adams, has Mary Anderson and Alfred Whitman as its featured players. It was produced under the direction of William Wolbert, who also directed "Aladdin from Broadway," "The Flaming Omen" and other film Vitagraph features.

The cast is said to be of unusual merit, headed by Mary Anderson and Alfred Whitman, and including R. Bradbury, Otto Lederer and S. E. Jennings.

Vitagraph Announces List of Comedies

Albert E. Smith, president of Greater Vitagraph, announces the following list of "Big V" comedy releases: December 24, "Dummies and Deceptions"; December 31, "Stowaways and Strategy"; January 7, "Sleuths and Surprises."

Triangle Names Coming Films

Pauline Starke and Margery Wilson Have Leads in Features December 23—One Picture Already Shown at Rialto

TRIANGLE, it was announced last week, offers two features for the week of December 23 that bear out the policy of the company, which some time ago announced its intention of making efforts to furnish the most enlightening and interesting photodramas of the day.

"Without Honor," scheduled as the first release of the week, is a drama dealing with what is said to be a true situation in life, and is one of a series that promises realistic portraits of American life. Principal roles are assigned to Walt Whitman, Darrell Foss and Margery Wilson, who are supported, among others, by Arthur Moon, Laura Sears and Anna Dodge, who are recent additions to the Triangle force.

"Until They Get Me," the second release of the week, is a dramatic story of the Northern country, showing the work of the Northwest Mounted Police, in an interesting manner, and emphasizing most strongly the characteristics of that organization. Pauline Starke, the sixteen-year-old star, has the leading role in this feature and her unaffected acting is said to be one of the best parts of the picture. "Until They Get Me" has already been shown on the screen at the Rialto theatre, where it had a week's run, and was generally praised by critics.

In the Keystone comedy, "Afraid to be False," also scheduled for release December 23, Milton Sims plans to elope with Dorothy Hagar, in spite of the fact he already possesses one wife, in the person of Maude Wayne. But when the appointed day for the elopement arrives, Milt quits cold on the proposition and goes home to his wife, and a mighty big surprise. Lloyd Bacon has designs on Milt's wife and when Sims arrives home a lively scene follows.

"A Counterfeit Scent" and "A Birthday Blunder," one-reel Triangle Komedies, are also included in the week's releases.

Irwin Boosts Vitagraph Serial

Sends Message to Exhibitors That "Vengeance and the Woman" Is Record Breaker—Predicts It Will Beat Last One

IN connection with the forthcoming release of the new Greater Vitagraph serial, "Vengeance—and the Woman," Walter W. Irwin, general manager of the company's distributing organization, has addressed a message to the exhibitors of the country in which he predicts new box-office records for those who play the big feature.

Mr. Irwin's message, promulgated through the Exhibitors' Plan Book, which goes, it is said, to every exhibitor in the United States and Canada, contains a summary of the success which exhibitors have achieved with "The Fighting Trail," and expresses confidence that the new serial will exceed even this record.

"Vengeance—and the Woman" is the work of Albert E. Smith, president of Greater Vitagraph, and Cyrus Townsend Brady. It was directed by William Duncan, who is also the male star with Carol Holloway as the feminine star. In referring to the featured players, Mr. Irwin's message says "they are probably the most famous couple in serial pictures today, this being due both to their personal triumphs in 'The Fighting Trail' and to the mammoth advertising campaign that has put their names on billboards all over the United States and Canada, as well as in magazines and representative newspapers."

Mr. Irwin states that "Vengeance—and the Woman" will have behind it an advertising campaign unprecedented in serial promotion. His message to exhibitors in part is as follows:—

"For the past several months, the Greater Vitagraph offices have been the objective points for a continuous fire of exhibitors' letters commending 'The Fighting Trail' and requesting contracts for its successor, 'Vengeance—and the Woman.' Never has a photoplay product elicited such a unanimous tribute to its money-earning powers. The history of 'The Fighting Trail' is a record of increased box-office receipts."

Beautiful Scenes Promised in Metro Feature

Beautiful snow scenes are said to abound in Harold Lockwood's next-to-be-released Metro play, "The Avenging Trail," a five-act drama of the lumber camps in the North Woods based on Henry Oyen's novel, "Gaston Olaf," adapted for the screen by Fred J. Balshofer and Mary Murillo and directed by Francis Ford.

The scenes were obtained in the White Mountains of New Hampshire where Mr. Lockwood, Mr. Ford, and over twenty members of the Yorke-Metro Company spent three weeks putting on the exteriors.

Herman Lieb Appears in Metro Late Production

Herman Lieb, of the legitimate and vaudeville stage, appears in the prominent role of Herbert Rankin, the attorney, in support of Emily Stevens in the Metro picturization of "Daybreak," the play by Jane Cowl and Jane Murfin. June Mathis and the director, Albert Capellani, made the adaptation.

Lieb was the featured player in the vaudeville sketch, "Dope." He began his motion picture career in 1909 with the Essanay Company in Chicago. With this organization, he wrote and directed one-reel pictures.

Olive Tell and David Powell Look Into the "Crystal" in the Empire All-Star Production for Mutual, "Her Sister"

Mutual Releases "Her Sister"

Is Said to Be Admirable Subject for Olive Tell, With David Powell Opposite — Others on Program

MUTUAL'S Christmas offering will be "Her Sister," a Charles Frohman play in pictures, starring Olive Tell, whose work in "The Unforeseen" established the quality of her screen work and her value at the box-office.

"Her Sister" is released December 24, it is announced, and is a picture adaptation of the Broadway play in which Ethel Barrymore appeared. Miss Tell is said to be admirably suited to the part of Eleanor Alderson. She is supported by David Powell and a cast of Frohman players.

This picture was made at the Empire Long Island studios under the direction of John B. O'Brien, and affords Miss Tell an opportunity, it is claimed, of displaying her diversified talents.

Director John B. O'Brien has provided a throne-room scene for her as "Isis," the fortune-teller, which is considered a masterpiece of stage setting. In the supporting cast besides David Powell, are Eileen Dennes, Anita Rothe, Mrs. Clarat-Bracy, Harriett Thompson and Martha Dean.

In the concluding chapter of "The Lost Express," the "Return of the Lost Express," released December 24 is cleared up the mystery of the missing train.

"Oneta," an "educated" horse is a co-star with George Ovey in the Cub comedy, "Jerry's Best Friend." This equine rescues Jerry from a band of cattle-thieves and outlaws.

Mutual Weekly is said to be full of topics of timely interest, covering a diversity of subjects that are pertinent. It is released Monday, December 24.

Billie Rhodes in the Strand comedy, "Mary's Boomerang," takes the part of a girl who attempts to prove that her chum's husband is a flirt, gets them all mixed up in family mess, which almost leads to a divorce, but finally emerges from the affair a sadder but wiser girl.

Keystoners Prepare to Migrate at Last

AT last the long promised move of the Triangle-Keystone contingent to their new quarters at the Triangle Film Corporation's recently enlarged studio at Culver City is to be a reality. Preliminary arrangements were completed last week and it is expected that the entire comedy staff will soon be at work at the Culver City studio.

Everyone on the Triangle-Keystone "lot" is talking about the contemplated move to Culver City, and most of the Keystoners are anxious to start work in the new location.

Triangle-Keystone Director Reggie Morris is filming the roller skating scenes this week for "Wronged by Mistake," which will feature Harry Gribbon. A new hardwood floor was laid for the rink "set" and several professional skaters have been engaged for this part of the story. At the suggestion of Robert Gribbon, Dora Rodgers, who admits being a better vampire than a roller-skater, wore knee pads for the rink scene, but thus far she hasn't succeeded in alighting upon the protected part of her anatomy.

"The Seven Swans" Claims Strong Cast

WHEN Marguerite Clark steps forth upon the screen in the Paramount Christmas play, "The Seven Swans," she will be surrounded, Paramount announces, by a particularly powerful cast of players, each of whom has been chosen because of some special fitness for the role. Miss Clark, herself, will be seen as the Princess Tweedledee, and according to all those who have seen the picture in the making, she should prove one of the daintiest princesses that ever walked out of the pages of a fairy book.

William Danforth, who has probably created more comedy king roles than any other man in the profession, enacts the part of the doughty monarch in this picture. Mr. Danforth was the king in "Happy Land," DeWolf Hopper's musical comedy, when Miss Clark appeared in the same production on the legitimate stage.

The beautiful, but wicked queen, is played by Augusta Anderson, and Edwin Dennison will make, it is predicted, a most impressive Lord High Chancellor. Daisy Belmore is the witch and Richard Barthelmess is Prince Charming. The seven brothers of the princess are Richard Allen, Jere Austin, Joseph Sterling, Frederick Merrick, Leo F. Daly, Stanley King and Gordon Dana.

"The Seven Swans" was adapted by J. Searle Dawley, who also is directing the production.

Broadway Plays Double Bill of Universal Films

Managing Director Carl Laemmle has put in a double bill again at the Broadway theatre this week. "The Girl by the Roadside," from the Varick Vanardy novel of the same name, gives scope to the talents of the Bluebird star, Violet Mersereau. The scenario is by George C. Brownell. Theodore Marston is the director. The cast includes Cecil Owen, Ann Andrews, Allen Edwards, Robert F. Hill, Royal Byron, Kenneth Hall and Sam B. Minter.

Herbert Rawlinson is star in a five-part production, "The High Sign," with "Brownie" Vernon, Hayward Mack and a big cast. J. Grubb Alexander and Waldemar Young are responsible for the story, produced by Elmer Clifton.

In addition a comedy, Current Events and Universal Screen Magazine make colorful the program which is now a continuous one at popular prices. The new Broadway orchestra gives a special musical program starting Sunday afternoon.

"Her Sister" Promises Lavish Settings

Lavish stage settings and a cast have been combined with the personality and talent of Miss Olive Tell in the production of "Her Sister," Mutual's feature release of December 24, it is announced.

"Her Sister" comes from the studio of the Empire All-Star Corporation, and was directed by John B. O'Brien.

Triangle Reissues Prove Very Popular

TRIANGLE announced recently that the Hart and Fairbanks' reissues were daily proving more popular, and through comment received from exhibitors it is apparent that the box office value of these pictures has been much greater than anticipated.

The statement follows: "The Triangle reissues of Hart and Fairbanks' features have brought forth considerable unsolicited comment of a most favorable nature, from exhibitors throughout the country. Concerning 'Double Trouble,' featuring Douglas Fairbanks, reissued under date of September 2, an exhibitor of Spokane, Wash., said: 'A fine comedy, especially for those who read the book, and an excellent reissue.' The manager of the Empress Theater at Owensboro, Ky., in referring to the Hart reissue, 'The Aryan,' stated: 'This reissue attracted well and many came to see it again. An excellent box office attraction.' These comments are two selected from a large number of letters received and are typical of the general trend of exhibitor opinion. The shrewd exhibitor shows no hesitancy in booking reissues and the results secured build up his confidence in these pictures. From the West and South, particularly, the exhibitors report enthusiastically as to the receptions accorded the reissues."

Proctor's Theater in Mount Vernon, N. Y., always a Triangle booster, found "Manhattan Madness," a feature that brought down the house when it was recently thrown on the screen. Hart's pictures, produced under the Triangle banner, also bring tremendous applause when shown, it is claimed.

For the new year, the first Hart reissue will be "Between Men" on January 6, and the first Fairbanks', "Reggie Mixes In," on January 20. This comedy was considered one of Fairbanks' best works and a box office attraction; in fact it has been said to eclipse any of Fairbanks' earlier endeavors.

Ends Year With Lockwood

"The Avenging Trail" Said To Be Forceful Drama of North Woods —Sally Crute Appears In Support

METRO plans to close its release chart for the year on December 31, when it will release Harold Lockwood's latest production, "The Avenging Trail," a Metro wonderplay adapted by Fred J. Balshofer and Mary Murillo from Henry Oyen's novel, "Gaston Olaf," and staged under the the direction of Francis Ford.

"The Avenging Trail" is described as a drama of forceful situations and is set in the North Woods in the pioneer days of that country. The central figure in the story is Gaston Olaf, an American in spite of the foreign suggestions of his name, whose courage is unquestioned and whose mental capabilities stamp him as a leader of men. With his partner, Tom Pine, Gaston visits Havens Falls, a lawless village in the lumber country, after working six months in the brush on a timber claim in search of adventure and excitement. He finds excitement awaiting him when, as he enters the village, he rescues Rose Havens from the embrace of Lefty Red, a notorious character, and vanquishes him after a bitter fight.

Red later confesses his part in various criminal operations conducted by Taggart, including the killing of Gaston's father while he was in the act of robbing him at Taggart's orders. Gaston avenges himself upon Taggart for the death of his father and for Taggart's treatment of Rose, clears Havens Falls of its lawless element and wins the girl and the office of marshal as his reward.

"The Avenging Trail" is considered one of the biggest of Mr. Lockwood's vehicles and his part of Gaston Olaf, one of the most powerful characters he has played in his long career before the screen camera. Lockwood is supported by a cast that includes a number of names familiar to screen followers, among them Sally Crute, who plays Rose Havens; Walter P. Lewis as Taggart, Joseph Dailey as Tom Pine, Warren Cook as Dr. Saunders, William Clifford as Hale and Louis Wolheim as Lefty Red.

Pictographs Round Out Their Second Year

THE close of the year marks the second anniversary of the Paramount-Bray-Pictograph, "the-magazine-on-the-screen."

"When," said R. J. Bray, president of the Bray Studios, Inc., producers of Paramount-Bray-Pictograph, the "magazine-on-the-screen," "I first produced animated cartoons, I was encouraged to make them a full thousand feet in length, but I soon found that to do do so involved not only a terrific amount of work and time, but, since a cartoon must be full of laughs for every foot of its length, it was next to impossible to be sure of such a result in so great a length.

"Realizing this, I cut my cartoons down, and in order to make the full thousand feet, used split-reels of interesting educational material. This, I found to be just the thing and the combination met with instantaneous favor.

"To me, the educational films were most interesting. I wanted to do more of them. Especially did the screen magazine appeal to me and it became my ambition to produce such a reel. In spite of the fact that the name Bray was invariably linked with that of 'Col. Heeza Liar,' my animated cartoon character; and consequently meant 'humorist' to theatre-goers, I still maintain that I have my serious moments and when, at the end of 1916, I proposed to Mr. Hiram Abrams, president of Paramount Pictures Corporation, that the production of Pictographs be turned over to me and that in each release an animated cartoon be a part, the idea won the instant approval of all concerned."

Bruce Seeks the Unusual for His Scenics

Robert C. Bruce, of Educational Films Corporation

WANTED, by Robert C. Bruce of the Educational Films Corporation, a new land of surprises, a place where water runs up hill or the inhabitants have devised novel and entertaining methods of transportation.

That is because Mr. Bruce is ever mindful of the remark of a certain one of his companions on a mountain trail. Asked if his cabin would furnish a suitable subject for the motion picture camera, the man of the hills replied, "Well, I don't know; the d——d door don't wiggle much." That untutored genius had the right idea. A motion picture should be a picture not merely a film, in motion. It should not be a series of slides, however beautiful. It should always and essentially be a record of action.

That Mr. Bruce has been so signally successful in achieving this result in his own pictures is partly because he is so very active a person himself. Some inches over six feet, and lithe as an Indian, with a sparkle of fun ever ready to flash to the surface, Mr. Bruce always carries the suggestion of mountain trails and torrents, and happy adventure in the great outdoors. For the rest, a quick intelligence aided by the training of no less than three colleges, for Mr. Bruce's wandering spirit manifested itself even in his academic years, enables him to treat his material in the spirit of the artist and to bring out the essentially dramatic elements that underlie all vigorous and happy living.

Two pictures by Mr. Bruce to be released in the immediate future are "The Hound of the Hills," in which the famous Great Dane figures as the only actor, and "A World o' Dreams." Mr. Bruce has always been a dreamer and an explorer, the person for whom the next place is the wonderland. "A World o' Dreams," which will have its initial showing at the opening of the new Rivoli theatre, embodies this idea in scenes wherein the beautiful and spectacular are set forth with all of Mr. Bruce's delightful characterization.

Ogden Patrons Favor Weekly News Service

Whether it is due to the intense patriotic spirit of the times or to some other cause, theater managers of Ogden, Utah, report an unusual demand from patrons for the weekly news service films. The opening of such films has ever produced an expression of approval by some audiences that might do credit to a starred five-reel feature. By one local manager the demand for news service films is credited to the growing American tendency of getting your motion pictures like you get your news—in the headlines.

Pictographs Show Novel Balloon Railway

For the ninety-eighth release of Paramount-Bray Pictograph, J. R. Leventhal, of the Bray Studios, Inc., has discovered, it is said, among the many patents filed in the United States Patent Office, material for a very interesting subject. This is the "Balloon Railway," and consists of an overhead cable fastened high above the ground and, at intervals to balloons. These in turn are attached to cables wound about large drums. The ear runs along the cable on wheels and is operated by gravity. The subject is treated humorously, but there is also a serious side and it is decidedly unique in character, it is announced.

Mutual Weekly Shows Recent Halifax Disaster

The Gaumont Company announced last week that motion pictures of the recent disaster in Halifax, N. S., caused by the explosion of a munition ship are included in No. 155 of the Gaumont-Mutual Weekly.

Other subjects that promise great interest are also announced for this reel.

"Argus Pictorial" Claims Unusual Progress

Argus Pictorial No. 4, released by Pathe the week of December 30, is said to be probably the best issue yet of this animated magazine in one reel, produced by Argus Laboratories, Inc., of which Horace D. Ashton is president.

The Piedmont Valley of Virginia, which boasts the finest pack of American fox hounds, is shown in the article on "Fox Hunting with the Piedmont Hounds," showing picturesque scenes in the wild country of Virginia.

Another article is "Garden Monsters," showing the giant garden fighter, the Cicada (who is happy because his wife has no voice), the male harvest fly, the field cricket, the June bug, the robber fly, and other queer insects with which we come in contact in every day life but which we rarely recognize.

Other subjects are included, it is announced, by Pathe.

Burton Holmes Begins Travelogues Shortly

Beginning with New Year's Day, Burton Holmes will start his Travelogues in the circuit of cities which includes New York, Brooklyn, Boston, Worcester and Orange, N. J.—his subjects this season being the results of his journeyings this past summer around what he calls "The Militant Pacific." For years, Mr. Holmes has sought an opportunity to visit the Antipodes—to see Australia, New Zealand, Tasmania and the islands of the Pacific.

Paramount Sets Travel Films for New Year

With the beginning of the new year, the new series of Paramount-Burton Holmes Travel Pictures, the fruits of the traveler's peregrinations through the Antipodes, the Pacific Isldands and Alaska, will be presented to the public, it is announced. These pictures are now being assembled and will be in readiness for release at regular intervals beginning in January, according to plans.

Mr. Holmes, during last summer's itinerary, covered a great amount of territory, largely under exceptional difficulties, owing to the war conditions. Much of the traveling in Pacific waters was accomplished without lights and with watchdogs of the sea on every hand. The pictures are said to be extremely effective, giving an intimate idea of the commerce, the customs and the scenery of the various countries visited.

Essanay Shows Canada in New General Release

Essaney's one-reel scenic General Film release for December 29 is "Through Canada From Coast to Coast," showing the country to the north from Nova Scotia "where the east begins" to the coast of British Columbia, "the valedictory of the west." The picture includes the showing of wooden ship building and scenes of the great "Soo locks."

Short Subjects in Review

By Clara DeLissa Berg

SHALL THE HUNS DESTROY THIS?

Venice, more than any European city at the moment, is a centre of the world's anxious interest. In its romantic and peculiar loveliness it stands alone.

What the world would lose of treasure, in art and architecture is depicted in "Venice the Beautiful," issued by the Beacon Films Corporation of New York. The camera work is particularly fine, the panoramas being clear and steady and the close-ups of architectural detail and noted statuary interesting and effective. Moreover, the film contains an element often sadly lacking in pictures of cities—that of natural movement, supplied not only by passer-bys in the charming streets and squares, but by the gliding gondolas on the canals and the famous flock of pigeons before St. Mark's. The film lends itself unusually well to appropriate musical accompaniment.

WHERE EAST MEETS WEST

The second reel of the Educational Films Corporation's "Trip Through Japan" is unusually lively, interesting, and beautiful. Though the greater part of the reel is given over to a modern and very active Nippon, the spirit of "the patient East" is illustrated in the magnificent temples whose gorgeous decorations surpass anything of the kind in the world. They are fittingly set in gardens of great loveliness and reached through an avenue of magnificent trees planted three centuries ago.

A faith as ancient and as solidly established as that of Japan makes for defiance of death, and this spirit of absolute recklessness has been shown time and time again by the Japanese. In this picture they carry it into everyday life, for the men who steer canoes and guide a mass of logs down a stream set with whirlpools and rapids seem to hold their lives at scant price.

In humorous contrast to this speedy method of transportation is a ride to Fuji in a one-power horse car. "Way for the freight" is a signal for driver and passenger to hop out, unhitch the horse, and lift the car bodily off the tracks till the more important traffic has passed. The way once more clear, it is "on again, gone again."

LAKES ABOVE THE CLOUDS

For its second scenic in the new series, Wonders of Nature and Science, Essanay has chosen "Lake Louise" (General Film Company) and the wonderful mountain and lake country in that part of Canada. In company with other tourists we visit Victoria Glacier and ride along the rapid Bowe River till we reach Chateau Hotel, whose architecture and setting on the shore of the mountain-rimmed lake strongly recall Italy.

Then follow amazing views of lakes rising one above the other till they seem to rest on the clouds themselves, and of the towering peaks and deep ravines of Paradise Valley.

So fine is the material of this picture that we cannot but regret the total effect is not what it might be. Judicious cutting and condensation would add to the interest of a reel that becomes diffuse before the end is reached.

BRIDGE BUILDING IN SILK

Spiders at picnics are unwelcome and unpleasant visitors. But spiders thrown on the screen through the medium of Mr. Ditmars' magnifying lens and introduced as "Nature's Weavers" (Educational Films Corporation), are viewed with genuine interest. This tiny "girder man" (who, by the way, is always of the other sex) is seen setting the radiating girders of her web and, when this is completed, travelling rapidly from one to the other, fastening her thread to each as she reaches it.

Weaving of a different type is shown when an unfortunate grasshopper becomes tangled in the strands. Then the spider, darting from her retreat, pins her victim down and proceeds to wrap him round and round with smothering strands of silk.

Other interesting scenes show the weaving of an egg case by the mother spider, and a group of the youngsters soon after they have emerged.

PIGS FOR PATRIOTISM AND PROFIT

Anyone who doesn't thoroughly enjoy Universal Screen Magazine No. 51 doesn't deserve to enter a picture theatre again. There is the humorous story, told in his own words, by the boy who joined one of Uncle Sam's Pig Clubs and raised "General Joffre" to be a credit to his country and a source of wealth to his young owner. With the money realized by the sale of the handsome pig, our hero bought "Queen Elizabeth and the finest litter you ever saw," and so lays the foundation of a capitalism designed on strictly patriotic lines.

A subject full of action is the training of the traffic policeman's horse. The spirited young animals are first examined for possible defects; then, if chosen, they are trained by gradual steps to the saddle and cured of a tendency to buck. The proficient graduate can trot a figure eight, and respond instantly to a touch that may mean "Pick up that handkerchief," or "Stop that runaway."

The making of trench candles from newspaper and paraffine is pleasantly pictured, and, like the story of the pig raiser, is described in the words of the youthful actors. The skating of Miss Emmy Bergfeldt and Miss Frieda Whittaker adds a charming note of beauty and grace to an unusually spirited and attractive reel.

A HUNTING MORNING

The fine old sport of fox hunting, if it be a sport to turn a pack of dogs on one lone beast, however much of a nuisance he is, is finely illustrated in the Argus Pictorial No. 4 (Pathe Exchange). The scene of the hunt is Piedmont, Virginia, whose handsome clubhouse is the meeting place of fashionable sport lovers of the South. The camera offers some fine views of hunters and dogs coming down a wooded road and taking a wall with a rush, a snapshot of the keen-eyed fox, quivering with excitement in his hiding place, and a panorama of the field as the kill is consummated.

Our old friends the locust, cricket, click beetle, and June bug are seen for the monsters they really are when viewed under the microscope.

The swinging pendulum with a rotating top is something quite beyond our understanding, but not our admiration when it traces intricate yet absolutely symmetrical patterns in sand. The editor remarks upon the relation of pattern to rotation ratio, but our advice is, keep your eye on the pattern and forget the rest.

An artist clever with the scissors shows us what lifelike and amusing animals may be fashioned "at a clip" from black paper. The stop-camera supplies the life.

SMILES FROM WEST AND EAST

The titleman (Universal Animated Weekly No. 1) calls it the "world's most famous smile," and we looked to see the only Douglas Fairbanks appear on the screen. But it proved to be the original strenuous one, "Teddy," appealing to the citizens of Toronto to buy the Canadian Victory Loan bonds.

A gentler expression of joy is seen on the faces of a group of Chinese just arrived in Oregon from the Far East. The babies, in their queer native headgear and little jackets, are delightful and are sure of a warm greeting wherever seen.

Into every corner of our land goes the call for soldiers of industry, and the lumbermen of Louisiana are seen responding vigorously. There is a fine "shot" of a falling tree, and impressive day and night views of the largest sawmill in the world.

Scenics Score Success on the Pacific Coast

Essanay's Scenic Series has scored a distinct hit on the Pacific Coast, according to word said to have been received by General Film Company, the distributors. Clune's Auditorium Theatre in Los Angeles has booked the entire series and will feature them, as many other exhibitors are doing, it is said.

The same good reception has been given these subjects in New York. The "Salmon Fishing in New Brunswick" release played a week at the Strand. Now the "Banff National Park" reel has been booked for a week at the Rialto.

Pathe Presents Thrills in Round-Up Film

The very qualities that make serials so popular, action, thrills and suspense are said to be present to a surprising degree in the Pathe three-reel special, "The Eighth Annual Round Up, Pendleton, Oregon." Every exhibitor knows from experience how the public likes pictures in which those qualities are conspicuous. Word is passed around that a certain picture showing at such and such a theatre is "exciting." And soon that theatre has a largely increased attendance.

Pathe has announced the picture for release December 30.

Universal Also Shows Halifax Disaster

The week's number of Universal's Current Events also presents a series of pictures taken in bomb-stricken Halifax a few days ago following the explosion that wrecked the city and killed thousands..

Poem Used in the Exploitation of "Mother"

Arthur H. Sawyer and Herbert Lubin of General Enterprises, Inc., are using a poem for the exploitation of "Mother." It is planned to issue reproductions of the poem in herald form and also on slides in order that the various exhibitors who will run the George Loane Tucker picture may use it to advertise the coming of the McClure production.

The poem was written by Baroness von Hutton. It reads:

It is a wonderful thing,
A mother.
Other folks can love you,
But only your mother
Understands.

She works for you,
Looks after you,
Loves you, forgives you
Anything you may do;
And then the only
Bad thing she ever does to you
Is to die and leave you.

Murphy to Operate Under Name, Liberty Film

Frank J. Seng desires to inform the exhibitors in the New England States that Fred B. Murphy, announced as the distributor of "Parentage" in that territory, will use the name of the United Film Service, Inc., for his two exchanges—one in Boston and one in Springfield, Mass.—instead of the name of the Liberty Film Co.

Mr. Murphy discovered that another organization had prior rights to the Liberty Film Co. name.

A trade showing of "Parentage" given in the Fenway theatre, Boston, on the 6th of December, brought out the largest attendance of exhibitors who have seen a special feature in that territory since "The Birth of a Nation," it is reported.

In the Independent Field

Beck Heads Sterling Pictures

Arthur Beck, Prominent Figure in Industry, President and General Manager — Ebenstein, Sales Manager

STERLING PICTURES CORPORATION, a newly formed organization, announces that Arthur Beck, has been elected president and general manager and will assume full control of the new firm. Mr. Beck will confine his activities to the duties which his position as head of this organization create.

The plans of the organization and the reason for its organization are set forth in the following statement made by Mr. Beck:

"The Sterling Pictures Corporation was organized by men who are prominently connected with the theatrical and motion picture industry. Two are affiliated with the Shubert Enterprises and Klaw and Erlanger and one with a big motion picture manufacturing concern. We are organized and financed to purchase and handle independent feature productions for all or any portion of the U. S. and Canada. We will purchase full negative rights or the rights to one territory depending upon the nature and quality of the production.

"We will maintain a selling organization out in the field at all times—within the next ten days two of our men will leave for an extended trip to see the independent exchangeman to obtain the correct viewpoint. My own experience of eleven years in the exchange business enables me to feel and see the present crisis in independent exchange operations and the plan we have worked out in my judgment cuts the Gordian knot of operations between the producer and the exhibitor."

Mr. Beck is well known throughout the entire industry as a conservative and capable film executive. From coast to coast he is well known and liked by exhibitor, exchangeman and motion picture employees who have worked under his direction.

The announcement is made, also, that H. R. Ebenstein has been appointed sales manager of the organization.

Mr. Ebenstein has been associated with several leading organizations and will be remembered as a pioneer in the establishment of a periodic release on the states right basis. His experience as an exhibitor, exchange manager and general manager of a states-right distributing organization has given him an accurate knowledge of this factor of the business, and his resignation from the U. S. Amusement Corporation, a long established producing organization operating the Solax Studios at Fort Lee, N. J., terminates the experience which has added to this knowledge, a perfect understanding of the production value of motion pictures.

He said: "I believe Sterling Pictures Corporation will assist materially in alleviating existing conditions, and will do so in a manner heretofore neglected. It will institute new methods of financing state-right distribution."

Keeney Forms Producing Co.

Frank A. Keeney, Theatre Owner, Organizes the Frank A. Keeney Pictures Corporation—Catherine Calvert Engaged as Star

FRANK A. KEENEY, theatre owner in Brooklyn and Newark, N. J., announces the organization of the Frank A. Keeney Pictures Corporation. Mr. Keeney is president of the corporation and Ray C. Owens, general manager of the Keeney Theatrical Enterprises, is secretary and treasurer. Offices have been opened in the Putnam Building, Broadway and Forty-third street.

Catherine Calvert has been engaged as a star, under a long-term contract, to appear in a series of original feature photoplays and in screen versions of popular novels and dramatic successes. Other stars are to be engaged in the near future.

A studio with all modern equipment is to be erected within five minutes' walk of the executive headquarters. It is to be equipped with special facilities for work on a big scale.

Mr. Keeney will retain all of his present theatrical holdings and is planning the erection of theatres in different cities throughout the country, at which his productions will be shown.

Miss Calvert has had an extended experience on the dramatic stage. She has been in pictures only since last March. She made her debut as a star at the age of seventeen in "Brown of Harvard." She also starred in some of the most successful plays by her husband, the late Paul Armstrong, including "The Deep Purple" and "A Romance of the Underworld."

Dooley Speaks Highly of "Fringe of Society"

Charles H. Dooley, president of the Motion Pictures Association of Paterson, New Jersey, in making the announcement that he has booked the George Backer Film Corporation's feature, "The Fringe of Society," for the Regent and Garden theatres, of which he is managing director, said in commenting upon price of production and its relation to the profits it earns the exhibitor of the United States says: "No star is big enough to earn a profit for the exhibitor if the picture is too costly. My opinion is that entirely too much attention is being paid to the star, and entirely too little attention to the story.

"The present salvation of the exhibitors of the country is in booking pictures at prices that will give us a fair return on our investment. I believe that there are thousands of exhibitors in the country in the same position. 'The Fringe of Society,' produced by the George Backer Film Corporation and distributed by Foursquare Pictures is against exorbitantly paid stars and the needlessly high-priced picture. I booked it because I feel that it will give me a fair return on my investment."

Wolfberg Advises Exhibitors to Advertise

Harris P. Wolfberg, head of the Harris P. Wolfberg Attractions, who has finished a tour this week of the principal cities of the Middle West after a careful study of trade conditions, said:

"If you fall down on your advertising when business is not coming as fast as you like it, you overlook the most logical step for stimulating it.

"In the field of merchandising you will find that the shrewd advertisers keep up the advertising appropriation throughout the year because they know the effect it has on future business. They consider it as so much good will that turns into dollars. In the moving picture field the advertiser does not have to wait on the future for his advertising to pay. Intelligently applied, it can be made to produce immediate returns.

"The exhibitor who decides to lower the quality of his show during a time when there is a bit of slowing up makes the grave mistake of driving trade away at a time when he needs it most.

"Its the house that holds up the standard of its shows that is going after success in accordance with business-building principles. The same thing holds true with the motion picture exhibitor. He can not afford to be shifting his standard at any time. Once he adopts a policy he ought to stick to it, through thick and thin.

Seng Intends to Keep "Parentage"

Explains That Selling a State Rights Picture and Distributing One Are Widely Different—Does Not Approve of the Former Method

FRANK J. SENG has given, in an interesting resume of conditions in the trade as applied to programs and state right features, what is probably the first detailed dissection of the independent subject ever offered for the benefit of the motion picture industry.

That a man with a state rights feature on his hand does not wish to sell it, but prefers to keep it and distribute it through a system wholly his own, is in fact a rare condition in the industry, but one which is applicable to Mr. Seng. After looking over everything available, and then deciding upon a certain picture as the best of the lot, Mr. Seng looks upon it as sheer folly to pass it along by the sales route.

Never Intended to Sell

"I have never had any intention of selling state rights on 'Parentage,'" said Mr. Seng last week. "When most people in the film business think of state rights they naturally think of sales, and when I advertised that I intended to distribute 'Parentage' by the state rights method scores of exchangemen came to me immediately and wanted to buy. They seemed unable to believe me when I said that I did not care to 'sell' but intended to distribute this unusual production on a percentage plan of contract.

"It seems that conditions have made it necessary for every producer who has offered a film on the State Rights market to sell immediately, if possible, in order to get back the money invested in the proposition and use it to make another.

"I believe that this is a very faulty condition. As a rule, this producer makes several pictures in the course of a year and has a small percentage of real success, with the net result at the end of the year that he has made very little profit for himself, for the exchange or for the exhibitors.

Looked Things Over

"When I decided to enter the film industry I looked over things carefully enough to realize that it was much better business for every one concerned to concentrate upon one quality piece of merchandise and market it intelligently, so that it might be developed to the fullest extent by co-operation and distribution methods which would give everyone a fair opportunity to secure their portion of fair profit.

"I had carefully considered the faults of the 'program system,' and decided that it would be equally as faulty for me to consider the marketing of a number of pictures unless I could find a number of exceptional productions.

"I believe Parentage to be one of the most unusual films that has ever been produced. Its story value and the human elements make it pleasing to every class of patronage, and the advertising possibilities assure box-office results. It has been a success in the biggest cities, in the best theatres, and in the smallest towns. Every film man who has seen it has been decidedly enthusiastic and it has never to my knowledge disappointed an audience. I believe such a production can be played for years with great success. If plays like 'Way Down East' and 'Uncle Tom's Cabin' can be sent through this country year after year with second, third, fourth, and eighth-run road companies presenting them, certainly such a production as 'Parentage' can be played for years with even greater success.

Surprised Exchangemen

"It was rather amusing to me to see the look of surprise which came into the eyes of every exchangeman, who came in to discuss negotiations on this film, when told that I did not want to 'sell' it. They had never heard of such a thing. I waited until they were definitely assured that I had no intentions of 'selling' and had no intentions of placing it for distribution until I secured an equitable contract, and I am glad to say that this policy, which is only sane business, has eventually resulted in having every one of these exchangemen come back to negotiate time after time until they finally came to an understanding that at last they have discovered one man in the film business who wasn't trying to dicker and did not have a 'big stick' up his sleeve.

"I have arranged a contract which is entirely different from anything ever used in the state rights field. It is simple, and much more equitable than anything used in the past, because it gives a larger percentage of profit to the distributor if he makes good. Some exhibitors shied somewhat at this form of contract when first presented to them, because it was new; and somehow they seemed to think there must be a joker. Later they discovered that there was no joker and commenced to figure.

Ability Guarantee

"The only requirement which I have made at any time has been that the distributor be able to give me a guarantee of his ability to do a certain amount of business. His guarantee has been prepared in such form that it required very little cash to swing the deal, and I have always placed my guarantee figures on a basis so low that the contract simply meant that the producer really intended to give 'Parentage' the proper sort of distribution.

"Every one knows that many a good film has been ruined because the average exchange allows it to die after the 'first run' money has been accumulated. When a film is six weeks to two months old and begins to rent at moderate prices it is sidetracked for the 'new things' or is booked in conjunction with two or three other films. The independent producer who has distributed on a percentage plan has found that this fault in distribution methods has cost him many thousands of dollars.

"The exchangeman after getting the first money, which was easy, had no incentive to continue to push the worthwhile picture from which he was only getting 35 or 40 per cent. instead of pushing some small picture of questionable merit of which he happened to own 100 per cent. The natural tendency has always been to begin to book the two pictures together, with the one owned by the exchangeman getting decidedly the better of the booking arrangement when the figures were put down."

Extra Prints for "Warrior" in Several Territories

Arthur H. Sawyer and Herbert Lubin, General Enterprises, Inc., are receiving congratulatory reports from all sections of the country from buyers who are now releasing "The Warrior" to various exhibitors in their territories. J. R. Grainger, general manager Allen Film Corporation, Chicago, has closed an additional contract with Messrs. Sawyer and Lubin for the States of Kansas, Missouri, Texas, Oklahoma and Arkansas.

Every purchaser of state right privileges for "The Warrior" has been compelled through the demand for the picture to order additional copies, it is said. The American photoplay Company of Philadelphia has requested two extra prints for Maryland, Delaware, Virginia and Pennsylvania and J. S. Skirboll, general manager Rowland & Clark theatres of Pittsburgh, reports that the rental prices received for the first run bookings of the successor to "Cabiria" have broken all records for his territory.

Sawyer and Lubin expect to announce within the next week the consummation of a contract for the rights to New York State.

The High Cost of Productions

By Jesse J. Goldburg

THE hue and cry against excessive production costs of photoplays and unconscionable expenditures in releasing, is merely evidence of an awakening which has been delayed only too long.

While the conclusion is admitted and remedies briefly suggested, the root and branch of the evil is not even disturbed. Amalgamation and concentration is hardly the antidode. It is only too true that the object nearest is oft times the furthest from one's vision. It appears to me that the remedy is the simplest one can conceive, and that is, the refusal on the part of manufacturers to pay on the basis of worth rather than income which at all times fluctuates.

This high cost of production is tolerated and even encouraged because of the large return which the average production brings to the producer, but "a la Frankenstein," the manufacturer's creation has proved his Nemesis. While the returns are large, the cost of productions have been growing larger and out of proportion.

It is true that if productions were regulated, the present cost would be reduced at least 50 per cent, with the result that exchanges and theatres would be required to pay less and the prices of admissions could be proportionately reduced and yet allow the same percentage of income upon the investment.

The extravagance in production starts with the exorbitant salaries paid executives and ends with the utter lack of studio management, even to the smallest items. Five years ago, if a production cost more than $10,000, producing executives would have immediately assumed that robbery had been committed somewhere, and producing exchanges and theatres were never in a more prosperous condition. In fact, whatever foundation of merit the industry possesses to-day was built then, and the shifting sands were added later.

At that time, stars, directors, cameramen and others actively employed in the making of pictures received salaries anywhere from 50 to 75 per cent less than what they are being paid to-day; performed just as much work and were just as content, and finally they were being paid no less than what they were entitled to.

The Meaning of Independence

By M. H. Hoffman

IN these troublous times the word "independence" means more than ever before in the history of the land. In 1776 it stood for freedom in all those things which mankind loves. To-day it represents the right to independence in the fullest sense—to the continuance of everything that constitutes proper liberty in thought in action.

Most people who will take the trouble to give the matter careful thought must appreciate that independent attitude, both mentally and physically, has been the propelling element of progress. Stifle independence and you automatically hobble constructive development.

It is because these facts are basic that Foursquare Pictures, Inc., began as an independent distributing organization and will so continue. Standing upon such a foundation there naturally ensues, in the evolution of things, the greatest good to the greatest number. And if I were asked to voice Foursquare's creed, I would aver that it's unswerving purpose is to that end.

Considering the independent distributor in those specific matters which sum up its superiority, there is at the outset the dominating advantage of economy. When I joined forces with George Backer it was because I recognized in him a man of broadest business gauge; one whose outstanding commercial success has been won through independence, no less than because of far-seeing vision and the application of those salient principles which govern successful business undertakings in any staple line.

The independent motion picture distributing organization is instantly possessed of an advantage in not having a mass of watered stock to consider, its capital represents cash in an adequate amount. Its executives receive salaries commensurate with their abilities—not exorbitant sums which too frequently are paid to numerous men of "titles," whose usefulness to colossal merged institutions is nil.

The independent motion picture distributor, thereby, starts upon the strongest foundation of efficiency; for efficiency and economy are as indissolubly linked as must be bricks and mortar in the construction of a building. Speaking specifically for Foursquare Pictures, I am able to say that our twenty-one exchanges in the United States and Canada are climbing steadily to rock-ribbed permanency because, while there is a full corps of the most competent men and women obtainable in every office, not one employe is carried as excess baggage.

Industry Needs Sound Business Principles

"BUSINESS fundamentals are just as vital and as applicable to the film industry as they are to other industries of the United States," said Robert W. Priest of the firm of Shallenberger & Priest. "Any individual or firm that attempts to get along without recognizing this condition is doomed to failure."

Continuing, he remarked: "When I entered the selling end of the film business several years ago I did not appreciate my opportunity as I should have done. Like many other newcomers who listened to ignorant, loose-tongued adventurers, taking 200 per cent. sixty days, I sacrificed the opportunity to make thousands of dollars. But this money was well "invested" because it taught me to rely upon my own judgment, and to realize that the same fundamental rules govern the film business that are essential in every other line of industrial pursuit.

"In these latter days, my consideration for the buyer and the exhibitor has ripened into a policy of co-operation based upon equity.

"Today when I become interested in a new feature for the open market, my first task is to see that it is scheduled at a fair valuation, regardless of negative cost. I then supply the essentials for a successful marketing campaign—not only from the distributor's point of view, but from the box-office angle of the exhibitor, who, after all, is the one to be most considered if the public is to approve and pay the bills.

"I know from experience that fortunes have been made by legitimate means through small profits constantly accruing. I propose to operate on the same basis. If national banks can find a profit in transactions whereby they receive as little as one sixty-fourth of one per cent. surely we in the fifth industry should be satisfied with something short of two or three hundred per cent., especially now that the country is crying out against the high cost of living."

Concentration Essential to Proper Productions

By William L. Sherrill

MY entry into the motion picture world was occasioned largely because of the extreme rapid growth and what then appeared to me, an outsider, to be the utter lack of business acumen employed, not alone in the manufacturing, but as well in the distribution of photoplay attractions. The four years of my connection with the Frohman Amusement Corporation as its president, I have largely devoted to a systematic endeavor to reduce production to a business-like basis and the distribution of my productions to a profitable, and at the same time, an equitable foundation.

It is my opinion that photoplays can be successfully and profitably produced with a fair share of the profits according to the exchange and the exhibitor if the following things were thoroughly adhered to. FIRST: The entire energy and ability of an organization must be devoted to the things at hand; by this I mean, and as an example I desire to state that the Frohman Amusement Corporation devotes its entire time to the making of but one production at a time, whether that be in five, six, seven or more reels; the exploitation is individual and there is not a scattering of energy. By this concentration elimination of waste and extravagance is sure. The trouble with some producing concerns is that one-half dozen men each have their hand in the regulation of disbursement, on a single production, so that everyone is working at cross purposes. The object has been to turn out a picture as quickly as possible in the hope that it will get by.

I believe that the State Right method of distribution is the logical source of release. This, because productions are made and distributed upon their individual merit. I also believe the year 1918 will develop a state of facts that will for once and all discourage all talk of monopoly or combination, whether they be combination of producers or distributing agencies. With motion pictures we are dealing with a tangible commodity that has its value based upon what the eye can see and the permanency of any institution will be reckoned with according to the character of the commodity produced.

The policy of the Frohman Amusement Corporation will be to make productions consistent with the demands of the public as far as human agency can gauge such demands. Stars will be employed only insofar as they fit themselves to the productions, and they will be released upon a basis which will permit the middle man—in this instance a state right exchange—to rent them at a figure bringing profit to the exhibitor and themselves.

I feel also the time has arrived for a change of faces on the screen. The public can be overburdened even with the most popular of stars and as with any other commodity or form of amusement, so with motion pictures variety is the spice, as well as the sauce of life.

The Frohman Amusement Corporation will do big things, but no bigger than the public wants.

"Passing the Buck"

By H. J. Shepard, of W. H. Productions

THE poor old exhibitor is being let in for another load. It is not as though he hasn't enough burdens to bear already, but somebody must get the dirty end of the stick so he is elected. He has not been —and doesn't seem to have to be— consulted in the matter.

The latest responsibiltiy that has been foisted upon him is the tax which was levied by the Government upon the producer and distributor, and they simply shifted the responsibility or "passed the buck" as it were, to the exhibitor. The exhibitor has enough to carry already. He is taxed in a half dozen different ways. The present is one of the hardest times in the history of the show business, and every exhibitor has to struggle to make both ends meet, and then on top of all this, comes this new policy of the producer-distributor. Fortunately, some of them are not following the lead set in this, but are content to let the responsibility rest where it was meant to stand. They are bearing the tax themselves and are not trying to "poke it off" on the exhibitor. It is to be hoped that their example will have some effect upon these others who do not look upon this matter in so fair a light.

There is not a producer in the picture business who cannot afford, without loss, to pay the tax imposed by the Government. Even if this were not so, on the face of it, a bit more care exercised in the studios, as to wastage of raw stock in the matter of "re-takes" and closer attention to "grind-outs," would cover this expense twice over.

In the matter of "grind-outs," which are caused by inattention of the cameraman to the "footage indicator" on his camera, is a clear loss to the producer of thousands of dollars a month. It has been estimated by authorities that this waste of film costs the industry over two million dollars per year.

Another enormous waste, which is being lost sight of by a number of producers, is in the construction of scenarios. In many cases unnecessary sets are shoved into the scenario because the continuity writer lacks the ability and imagination to substitute these unnecessary sets with strong situations and action. If the permanent (?) producers would develop a few capable men as architects on scenario construction, this would help to convert what is now a tremendous waste to a similar profit.

These changes of condition must come and the sooner they occur the better it will be for all concerned in any part of the industry.

Hall Predicts Popularity for Special Productions

Frank Hall, president of U. S. Exhibitors' Booking Corporation says:

"One of the most important developments in the moving picture industry during the next year will be the increasing popularity of the special production. As an exhibitor of long experience and as a distributor of motion pictures, I have found that the special production, by which I mean a subject above the accepted program standard of merit, has become a vital necessity especially in the larger picture theatres.

"The special production is the picture of the future. In order to vary the monotony of program pictures in my theatres I have found it imperative to book special productions such as "The Zeppelin's Last Raid," "Those Who Pay," "The Belgian" and "Today" and others that not only embrace extra footage but exceptional exploitation qualities.

"Because of the shortage of such productions many of the larger picture theatres in all sections of the country have been compelled to show two five-reel features, and educational and comedy films and in some cases vaudeville on a single bill to stimulate business.

"The novelty of the five-reeler has long since vanished. In the case of the Rialto and Strand in New York and other theatres of similar size the exhibitor is able to augment his program with vocal and instrumental music and one five-reeler may be sufficient. But many of the smaller exhibitors who depend entirely upon pictures to fill his house will tell you that now his patrons demand two five-reelers for the same admission fee they paid for one a year ago.

"The theatre-going public is ever seeking something newer and bigger. There has developed a tremendous demand for special productions of from six to eight reels in length. Hundreds of exhibitors are booking special attractions every two or three weeks to inject new life into box offices that have been dying from the dry rot of mediocre program material.

"The crying needs of the hour are better productions and lower rental prices and the U. S. Exhibitors' Booking Corporation has pledged itself to those purposes. We do not want program pictures. We have set a high standard in our first three releases and intend to maintain it. Some of the exhibitors who have felt the pre-holiday depression have informed us that they have made money with our productions. One of them was Nathan Gordon of New England. He has booked them for all of his chain of theatres in that territory.

"Despite the pessimism of certain individuals who have given way to violent calamity howling I do not fear for the future of the industry. The producer who makes good pictures and markets his product at prices that enable the exhibitor to realize a fair profit will have no cause for complaint.

"The next year will see the exhibitor come into his own. He will become the BIG FACTOR in the industry and deservedly so. The day of seeing exhibitors in a locality bidding against each other to obtain a certain attraction is over. The exhibitors understand one another now and are co-operating for their mutual welfare.

"The slump in business is but temporary. After the holidays there will come a reaction that will carry business back to flood tide.

You are not going to war. The men who are need all the comforts you can give them. Help them get cigarettes. That is your patriotic duty. If you aren't helping in the "smokes" campaign, get busy—now. Don't be a slacker!

"Go-to-the-Movie-Week" Urged On All Exhibitors as Business Stimulant

SPREADING an idea originating with "Rob Reel," motion picture editor of the Chicago American, exhibitors throughout the country will be urged by General Manager Joseph Brandt, of Universal, to promote a "Go-To-The-Movie-Week" during the holidays.

"We intend to get behind the 'Rob Reel' idea with enthusiasm," says Mr. Brandt in his statement. "There is every reason in the world why the moving picture interests should have a special 'drive' once a year to center public attention on the screen. Many lines of commercial industry make special efforts at certain seasons of the year through 'fashion shows,' 'grand openings' and 'dollar days' to enliven the routine of business—and why not the movies?

"The 'Rob Reel' scheme was put through with great success in Chicago last year, and the exhibitors who co-operated with the purpose of awakening special interest in moving pictures during the holidays profited accordingly. The uplift was felt by the most obscure picture show as well as by the big houses and an increased effort will be made this year to stir the public to box office action, during 'Go-To-The-Movie-Week.'

"Universal will circulate publicity to every exhibitor in the country, explaining the purpose of the movement and 'the way to do it.' The 'Rob Reel' idea will be passed along to other communities where the scheme is unknown and untried, with the object of making the movement a national purpose once a year. Holiday week has been well selected as the time to concentrate on the general public.

"The distributors usually concentrate their efforts on timely and particularly attractive subjects for Christmas and the New Year and the motto, 'Let's Be Cheerful,' fits to a nicety into the 'Rob Reel' idea. If exhibitors in every community will unite for once, in a campaign of advertising, newspaper publicity and a co-operative purpose to bring moving pictures into prominence as part of the family entertainment during the holidays, there is every reason to believe that the individual managers will reap a great benefit."

The following quotation from "Rob Reel" gives a few "stunts" from the viewpoint of the originator of the 'Go-To-The-Movie-Week" idea:

"Remember, cheerfulness is catching," says "Bob Reel." "Let's be cheerful. Motion pictures deliver more laughs and thrills and new ideas to the average person, young and old, than any other institution in Chicago. For the holiday season, the film maker arranges his centre fire of bigger and better entertainment. Every exhibitor strains to book the best of the best as his Christmas donation.

"It remains for you and every one else 'over here' to help themselves and spread broadcast all the cheerfulness available. It is building the morale of the nation.

"Perhaps you can have more fun by picking out some youngster to share your fun with you. If you have one or two of your own, tell them to find another one or two who haven't anyone to take them. Why not try the half orphan asylums? You who have automobiles, why not look up a neighborhood settlement and arrange an auto ride as well as a trip to film wonderland for a youngster who never gets there?"

Sterling Gets Jean Sothern Feature—First Release

Sterling Pictures Corporation, recently organized, announce that it has closed for the negative rights to "Peg o' the Sea," a five-reel production featuring Jean Sothern. The feature is now in the hands of the cutter, it is announced, and will be ready for release within the next two weeks. This is the first production, announced for release by this company. The date for the trade showing will be announced later.

"The Whip" Has Proven Big Success Says Agents

Hiller and Wilk, who have been the selling agents for "The Whip," announce that the reception "The Whip" has been given has vindicated their faith in this production of Maurice Tourneur.

The Super Films, Ltd., of Canada were the first purchasers of territorial rights. They secured the rights to the Dominion of Canada. Other holders of rights to "The Whip" are the American Feature Film Company of Boston, Mass., for New England; Marcus Loew for New York; J. Frank Hatch of Newark, N. J., for Ohio, Pennsylvania and West Virginia; Sidney B. Lust of Washington, D. C., for Delaware, Maryland, Virginia, District of Columbia and North Carolina; the Civilization Company of Newark, N. J., for New Jersey; H. Liebler Company of Indianapolis, Ind., for Indiana; the Big Feature Rights Corporation of Louisville, Ky., for Kentucky and Tennessee; the Special Features Company of Knoxville, Tenn., for Georgia and Florida; the Yale Photoplays of Kansas City, Mo., for Missouri, Kansas, Iowa and Nebraska; Messrs. Jones, Linick and Shaefer for Illinois; the Friedman Film Corporation of Minneapolis, Minn., for Minnesota, North and South Dakota and Wisconsin; the De Luxe Features of Seattle, Wash., for Washington, Oregon, Idaho and Montana; the All Star Features Distributors for California, Nevada and Arizona; the Supreme Photoplays Corporation of Denver, Colo., for Colorado, Wyoming, Utah and New Mexico.

Nathan Closes for Animated Press Syndicate Weekly

The Animated Press Syndicate, at 71 West Twenty-third street, which is to release the Independent-American Weekly, announces that it has closed with Nathan Gordon, of the Globe Feature Film Company, Boston, for the New England territory. Mr. Gordon said that a good weekly put out by an independent producer, and especially by people who were devoting their entire attention and facilities to the covering of news and other photographic events of interest, would be something that his houses and his customers would be proud to show.

F. W. Brooker, proprietor of the Animated Press Syndicate, has had a great deal of experience in the making of this type of a reel, and was one of the owners of Captain Rennel's Cinema News Weekly, put out early in the year. Independent exhibitors can book the Weekly through Mr. Brooker, at his office, at 71 West Twenty-third street.

Billy West Comedies Booked for Week

The Criterion theatre in Atlanta, Ga., has booked all the Billy West comedies for a seven days' run, and state they are the biggest drawing cards of any comedies ever presented in Atlanta. These are the first comedies to be booked for a solid week at the Criterion.

Frank Keenan, Alma Hanlon and Robert Edeson Are Starred in "The Public Defender," Presented by Harry Raver

Raver Sells "Public Defender"

Renowned Buys United States and Canadian Rights to Renowned Pictures Corporation—Two Shipping Points Established

RENOWNED PICTURES CORPORATION announces that it has purchased the United States and Canadian rights to Harry Raver's production, "The Public Defender." The zone plan of distribution will be practiced in the distribution of this feature by Renowned.

Frank Keenan, Robert Edeson and Alma Hanlon are the principal players in the cast of "The Public Defender." The story was written by Mayer C. Goldman and produced under the direction of Burton King.

Harry Raver, in commenting upon the transaction, said:

"For weeks past, negotiations have been pending with at least a half dozen program and buying organizations for the purchase of 'The Public Defender.' I have never seen a keener interest displayed in any picture I have handled since 'Cabiria.' However, Messrs. Weinberg and Fleckles of the Renown organization were first to negotiate for the production, some time before it was completed, and, as they have persistently outbid all others, I decided they should be given preference, particularly as they possess all the qualities essential to the exploitation of a picture of the importance conceded to "The Public Defender." Daily showings of "The Public Defender" will be given in the private show rooms of the Renowned organization and a campaign of publicity will be used to assist buyers in creating a demand for theatre bookings."

Renowned announces that Herbert Landsdowne, the English artist, has completed, recently, a complete line of poster sketches, to be used in the exploitation of this production. Seven colors are used by the artist in each sketch. A twenty-four sheet carrying three panel portraits of the three stars, three one-sheets, two combination three-sheets and one six-sheet are the styles to be used, making in all a most elaborate and comprehensive line of posters. Renowned has commissioned Fred L. Clarke, president of the Riverside Lithographing Company to execute the poster printing.

Two shipping points have been established by Renowned for the distribution of advertising matter. Points in the extreme West and eastward to Pittsburgh will be covered by shipments from Milwaukee. Eastern points will be served from New York. This method of supplying advertising matter will minimize delays and also reduce express rates. Posters for "The Public Defender" will be furnished franchise holders at cost.

Recent Additions to Sales Forces Announced

Recent additions to the sales staff of the U. S. Exhibitors' Booking Corporation are R. S. Clarke, formerly of the Vitagraph and other well known film concerns. Mr. Clarke will supervise the marketing of U. S. subjects in the New Jersey district. He will make his headquarters in the Frank Gersten Exchange, Forty-second street, New York, from which U. S. Pictures will be distributed in the New Jersey territory.

Harvey E. Gausman, a prominent Western film man, has been appointed by Frank G. Hall, president and general manager of the booking corporation, to take charge of the Los Angeles district. He will establish headquarters this week in the Foursquare exchange in that city.

Walter Hopkins has resigned from the Mutual Film Corporation, New York office, to join the home office staff of the U. S.

Perfection in Costuming and Other Details Is Only One of the Attributes of "The Birth of Democracy," Handled by the Export and Import Film Corp.

Simmons, General Manager, State Rights

C. M. Simmons

Sol L. Lesser announces that C. M. Simmons has been appointed general manager of the State Rights Distributors, Inc., with offices in the Longacre Building, New York. Mr. Lesser is the executive head of this organization, which entered the field early last Fall.

In commenting upon the appointment of Mr. Simmons, Mr. Lesser said:

"In appointing Mr. Simmons general manager, the organization feels that its interests will be safeguarded, due to his knowledge of conditions generally and his familiarity with the wants of the public and the needs of the different members of the association.

"Since 1907, Mell Simmons, as he is generally known to thousands of exhibitors throughout the country, has managed theatres and film exchanges from coast to coast. He has had valuable experiences as sales manager for the General Film Company and the Mutual Film Corporation, and has opened film exchanges for the Eclectic, Triangle, Artcraft and Goldwyn Film Corporations.

"The members of the organizations for whom Mr. Simmons will act are: Nathan Hirsh, Pioneer Film Corporation, New York; Herman Jans, N. J. Metro Film Service; Sydney B. Lust, of Washington, D. C.; Harry Grelle, of the Supreme Photoplays Productions, Pittsburgh, Pa.; Leon D. Netter, of the Masterpiece Film Attractions, Cleveland, O.; Henry Dollman and D. M. Vandewalker, Jr., of the Doll-Van Film Corporation, Indianapolis and Chicago; M. R. Rosenberg of the De Luxe Feature Film Company, Seattle, Wash.; Sol L. Lesser, of the All Star Features Distributors, Inc., San Francisco and Los Angeles, Cal., and J. J. Allen, of the Famous Players Film Service, Ltd., of Toronto, Canada.

"The Prospector," Dec. 15 Release of Billy West Comedies

"The Prospector" is the Billy West comedy release, announced by the King Bee Film Corporation, for the week of December 15. The comedian is supported in this production by Beatrice Joy, Budd Ross, Oliver Hardy and Leo White.

Billy has the title role. The story tells of his adventures in the mountains and on the desert. He reaches Red Dog Gulch and meets Susie, daughter of the town drunkard. His only other companion is his little burro. Oliver, who is in love with Susie, makes trouble for Billy and engages bad men to kidnap the girl. Billy rescues her from their hands and receives a big reward.

Garfield Reports Good Business with "Submarine Eye"

Herman J. Garfield, representing the Submarine Film Corporation, Cleveland, Ohio, who is exploiting the "Submarine Eye" in the States of Ohio, Indiana and Kentucky, reports that he is meeting with great success with this feature in this territory. Mr. Garfield said:

"I opened at the Walnut theatre, Louisville, Ky., and the Colonial theatre, Indianapolis, Ind., the week of December 9 for a two weeks' run. I opened these two engagements in the face of the worst blizzard this section has ever known, and with that handicap I did a business that was beyond all expectation."

Merit Film Buys "The Birth of Democracy"

The Merit Film Corporation, 130 West 46th street, announce that they have purchased from the Export & Import Film Company, Inc., the exclusive rights for New York and northern New Jersey of the Franko-American Company's release, "The Birth of Democracy."

This picture ought to prove a very big success, having been prepared with exceeding great care and being released at this opportune moment, when democracy is the great issue the world over.

Over 5000 people were employed in the making of the picture. While it is true that a great many of this number have been used in the mob scenes and meeting places, several artists well known to the screen, have important parts.

A pretentious form of advertising and publicity will be connected with the release it is announced.

"The picture from its dramatic value," says an official of the Merit Film Corporation, "would in itself make a wonderful success. Lydia Borelli has the leading part.

"The objection that several would raise of its being a foreign picture, will be entirely discarded, because the picture of necessity must have been made in foreign countries, for the settings, the streets, the buildings and all connected with it are Parisian.

"Considering the masterfully interwoven dramatic story of powerful love interest, yet true to history, the enthusiastic collaboration of foremost producers, the spirit of the performers, the timely and pretentious subject treated, this picture is in the class of the spectacular successes of film releases."

You are not going to war. The men who are need all the comforts you can give them. Help them get cigarettes. That is your patriotic duty. If you aren't helping in the "smokes" campaign, get busy—now. Don't be a slacker!

Big Sales in Orient Reported by U. S. Corporation

Miss Edna Williams, special representative of the Robertson-Cole Company of New York and London, which has acquired the foreign distributing rights to the productions released by the U. S. Exhibitors' Booking Corporation, has encountered no difficulty in disposing of the subjects thus far put on the market by the booking concern. By the arrangement between the U. S. Corporation and the Robertson-Cole Company the booking concern has been brought into direct touch with exhibitors and distributors in all parts of the world, and during the past week a number of important sales were negotiated.

Rights to the new Thomas H. Ince spectacle, "The Zeppelin's Last Raid," have been sold for Japan, China, India, Burma, Ceylon, Dutch East Indies, Philippines and Hawaiian Island. Rights to "The Zeppelin's Last Raid," "Those Who Pay" and "The Belgian," the three first releases of the U. S. Corporation, have been disposed of for Chile, Peru, Bolivia and Ecuador, and arrangements have also been made with the purchasers to take the entire output of the concern.

Miss Williams said:

"Although conditions in the foreign field have not been of the best, we have been quick in disposing of the U. S. productions. I have found that foreign purchasers are willing to pay big prices for the right kind of subjects even in view of slack conditions and take a chance on deriving a profit on the investment. It is the play in which they are most interested. Foreign picture devotees have become quite as discriminating as the film fans of America."

The Robertson-Cole Company is one of the largest exporting concerns in the world and has put the full strength of its tremendous organization behind the U. S. productions, and a business drive throughout the foreign markets is in full swing. Robertson-Cole maintains executive offices in New York, London, Calcutta and Singapore.

"The Warrior" for Patriotic Purposes in Canada

"The Warrior," starring the great Italian, Maciste, has met such success in the Dominion of Canada that the Globe Films, Ltd., Toronto, has ordered several extra prints. Phil Kauffman, general manager of Globe Films, reported this week that arrangements were completed recently whereby a great patriotic demonstration, in which "The Warrior" will play a prominent part, will be held at Massey Hall, the biggest place of exhibition in Canada.

The rally is being held under the direction of the Italian Consul and has the support and endorsement of many of the leading Italians in Toronto. It has been deemed advisable to bring home to the resident Italians in the Dominion of Canada the wonderful exploits of the Italian army, as set forth in many of the scenes in "The Warrior." Maciste, the leading figure in the successor to "Cabiria," is at present fighting with his countrymen against the Austrians.

Bucking the Game Down South

Nat L. Royster Writes of Conditions Existing in the South—Exhibitors Have Lost 2 Per Cent. of Patronage

NAT L. ROYSTER, Special Features Company, Knoxville, Tenn., writes on conditions through the South. Mr. Royster has been on an extended trip through the Southern States and has taken especial pains to get first-hand information. He writes:

"After an extended trip through Georgia and Florida the past few weeks, I have seen with my own eyes conditions now, as compared with a year ago when I was handling other features that used to get the money with exhibitors.

"I find that exhibitors have lost at least 2 per cent. of their regular patrons through the National Guards leaving, and the draft. Take Lakeland and Orlando, Fla., for an illustration. I will quote Mr. Beacham of the Grand theatre, Orlando, Fla. He tells me that from his town, 275 men have left for their respective camps, and for every man gone it means that their former sweethearts, sisters and mothers that used to attend the show with them, has been lost to his theatre, thereby cutting down his show going percentage to from 4 to 5 per cent.

"I find that exchanges have for the most part been expecting a bunch of quantity contracts from their salesmen, and not quality lasting contracts. This has brought about conditions that have tended to make the salesman ramble through his territory.

"When a town with 8,000 population runs a feature, with no competition, and cannot make money on same, then the exhibitor is either paying too much for his features or he should use cheaper features, and I know from box-office statements that I have seen with my own eyes in the South, that there are many houses in the South, that are daily putting good money out daily to pay expenses, when the house is not taking it in. In talking to a manager lately regarding my article in your paper about Southern exhibitors needing more "pep," he stated that that article sounded good, but how in thunder was a man to take an interest in his business when, every time he opened his box-office, he lost ten dollars a day.

"I have just made a trip through Florida and believe that I have secured as much business as any salesman ever secured on the five pictures that we own. I am a firm believer in getting all a feature is worth, and an honest exhibitor should and most of them are willing to pay all they are worth.

"In the last issue of the NEWS, I read Stanley V. Mastbaum's article on amalgamation. In my estimation we need no amalgamation at present but a regular love feast of all branches of the film industry. I realize this would be hard to do, but the quicker we come to realize this, the better it will be for the exhibitor, exchanges and producers, and at the present time, I think that amalgamation will be well nigh impossible under existing circumstances. In this crisis, our motto should be 'Live and Let Live.'

Nat L. Royster, of Special Features Company, in Knoxville, Knows How to Land the Fish

"Regarding the war tax in the South, I will say that it has positively cut off daily receipts fully one-fourth in the majority of houses, and in some of them one-third, but most exhibitors believe that it will eventually settle down to normal conditions in this part of the country. Through the South wages have not increased very much, only in the camp towns, and the cost of living has increased very much, and there is no family going to hand over to the 'movie' show, the money that he thinks he will need for his daily existence. Conditions have caused a partial panic so to speak, which we all hope will right themselves in the near future.

"In closing, I would say to every salesman, don't over-sell or under-sell your features or program. To exchange managers I would say, don't expect two big contracts daily from your salesmen, and to exhibitors I would say, buy your programs and features at a price that is fair to you and the office selling them, and then put your head in your work, and push them with all the power you have left."

You are not going to war. The men who are need all the comforts you can give them. Help them get cigarettes. That is your patriotic duty. If you aren't helping in the "smokes" campaign, get busy—now. Don't be a slacker!

The Mabel Normand Feature, "Mickey," Directed by Mack Sennett, Shown in the Insert, is to Be Released by the Western Import Company, Which Controls the World Rights

Western Import Gets "Mickey"

"Mickey," with Mabel Normand, in Featured Role Purchased by Western—Mack Sennett Production—Ready for Distribution

WESTERN IMPORT COMPANY, Brokaw Building, New York, announces that it has purchased the world rights to the production "Mickey," featuring Mabel Normand, and produced under the direction of Mack Sennett. It is said that the picture was made at the cost of more than $200.000.

Mr. Sennett has always been conceded to be the foremost producer of comedy in the country. He has developed most of the leading screen comedians in the business and his name in connection with a picture has come to mean the best.

The officials of the Western Import Company are considered good judges of picture values and they feel that their judgment in this particular case has not gone wrong.

"Mickey" is a mixture of comedy, pathos, sensationalism and mystery. It is said that Miss Normand gives the best performance in comedy-drama. The picture has taken more than two years to complete. Everyone, old and young, it is said, will appreciate its message.

An official of the Western Import Company said: "It covers everything that has ever been done in the field of picture production and contains new twists and tricks of camera work and direction which will be a revelation to every one interested in the screen drama. Mr. Sennett has made a great picture; one which will set a standard for a long time to come and which will not be surpassed until, perhaps, he himself sets the pace for a new advance in this particular field.

"If you have never known what it is to laugh and cry at the same time, 'Mickey' will put you in that predicament. Miss Normand takes her audience back to the delightful days of childhood, for both troubles and joys are doubly magnified. She combines an impish deviltry with a tender pathos which goes straight to the hearts of every one. The picture has the human touch. It is real. The coincidents bearing on every one of the human emotions are so artfully interwoven in this picture that the audience is alternately thrilled and amused—but always held to a keen pitch of interest. One feature of 'Mickey' will come as a relief to feature film patrons. There is no padding. When the story comes to its natural end the curtain goes down, bringing to a conclusion a picture that long will linger in the memories of the patrons of the theatre."

Hoffman Invited to Speak on Motion Picture Art

M. H. Hoffman, general manager of M. H. Hoffman, Inc., has been asked by Mrs. Marcus M. Marks, president of the Women's Forum; Mrs. Alice Palmer, president of the Rainy Day Club, and Miss Edith Totten, president of the Comedy Drama Club, to address the members of these clubs at meetings to be held in January. The Art of the Motion Pictures will be the subject. Mr. Hoffman has accepted the invitation, but so far has not announced his subject, but the natural assumption is that it will be on the motion picture as an educator.

Goldwyn Finds Films Flourish in Australia

Film conditions in Australia, like all belligerent countries, suffered at one period a setback due to the war, but are now flourishing, according to advices from Harold Bolster, a Goldwyn executive, touring the Orient in the interests of that corporation.

"Both from personal investigation and from conversations with the leading film men of Australia and New Zealand, I have received a most optimistic impression of the state of the market for American films here, and the prosperity of theatres and exhibitors. Australia has suffered in the past from the war, both materially and spiritually. Depression, I hear, was particularly acute following the costly failure of the British at Gallipoli where Australian troops lost heavily. But since the British fortunes on the battle field have improved, and war conditions at home have grown normal, the attendance at motion picture houses has steadily improved. For a time this year labor unrest also played a part in creating an unsatisfactory state; but the Government speedily solved the difficulty, and now the islands of Australia and New Zealand are in a satisfactory condition."

"The Two Gun Man," in "The Bargain," a Big Success

Two-thirds of the territory within the United States has been sold for "The Two-Gun Man" in "The Bargain," the W. S. Hart feature released by the W. H. Productions Company, it is announced.

The following territories have already been sold: California, Nevada and Arizona to Sol Lesser; Washington, Oregon, Idaho and Montana to Mike Rosenberg; Colorado, Utah, New Mexico and Arizona to Four Square Pictures Corporation of Colorado; the Standard Film Corporation, Minneapolis, North and South Dakota, Illinois, Indiana, Iowa, Nebraska, Missouri and Kansas. The Standard Film Corporation's offices are located in Omaha, Minnesota, Chicago and Kansas City. Wisconsin to the Wisconsin Film Corporation, 1409 Majestic Building, Milwaukee, Wis., and eleven Southern States to Jake Wells, Colonial theatre, Richmond, Va.

An official of the W. H. Productions Company stated that they attributed the reason for these quick sales to the fact that William S. Hart as "The Two-Gun Man" in "The Bargain" is the greatest of the Hart productions and through the medium of the advertising an exceedingly large demand was created.

Bee-Hive to Open Buffalo Branch Exchange

The Bee-Hive Exchange, handling Billy West Comedies for New York, announces that Julius Singer, of that company, will open a branch exchange in Buffalo next week. More than three hundred exhibitors are running Billy West Comedies in New York State and it was thought advisable to open this exchange to handle the business in the western part of the State.

Xmas Cheer for Flynn Serial

M. H. Hoffman, Inc., Reports Big Demand from Middle West—Other Exchanges Report Favorably

HOFFMAN-FOURSQUARE exchanges report that numerous applications are being received relative to bookings for the Wharton serial, "The Eagle's Eye," written by William J. Flynn, Chief of the United States Secret Service. These reports, it is announced from the New York office, are coming from branch exchanges in all parts of the country.

M. H. Hoffman, general manager of M. H. Hoffman, Inc., through which company the serial is being distributed, is now in the Middle West on a visit to the various exchanges. He reports favorably from Detroit, Cincinnati and Cleveland, in which cities he had been for the past week.

Manager Samuel Rubenstein, of the Boston Foursquare exchange, writes that numerous New England exhibitors are awaiting the announcement of the release dates, and that the volume of business indicates that all serial booking records will be surpassed. Frank J. Flaherty, of Chicago, and Sidney J. Baker, of St. Louis, are two Foursquare managers who find exhibitors in their territories appreciative of the qualities of this serial which is to expose the machinations of the Imperial German Government against the United States.

In the New York Foursquare office, Manager Hy Gainsborg is receiving many applications for "The Eagle's Eye." All other Foursquare offices throughout the country are experiencing similar inquiries from exhibitors, and many contracts are being signed in advance of a trade showing, it is stated.

Paramount and Artcraft Films Go South

THE completion of a new deal involving the distribution of Paramount and Artcraft pictures in the West Indies and Central America has been announced. A new organization has been formed, it is said, headed by five business men of Havana, Cuba, which will control the distribution of every Paramount and Artcraft picture produced, excepting the Bray Pictographs, Burton Holmes Travel Pictures and the Klever Komedies.

In this territory there are over 1,000 theatres, and Porto Rico has 65 motion picture theatres controlled by the new company. There are 300 in Cuba, 20 in San Domingo and the others scattered throughout the rest of the territory. This will bring the Paramount and Artcraft productions before a new audience of over 15,000,000 people in this territory.

It is announced that the pictures concerned include the serial "Who Is Number One?" This will also bring to Central America and the West Indies all the productions of such stars as Mary Pickford, Douglas Fairbanks, William S. Hart, Marguerite Clark, Pauline Frederick, Elsie Ferguson, Billie Burke, Geraldine Farrar, Julian Eltinge, Lina Cavalieri, Ann Pennington, Vivian Martin, George Beban, Jack Pickford, Wallace Reid and others. just as well known to filmdom.

"The Triumph of Venus," Capt. Edwin Hesser's Production, Shows Promise of Being an Artistically Beautiful Motion Picture Feature, with Betty Lee Starred

Hesser Praises Grecian Art

Producer of "The Triumph of Venus," Featuring Betty Lee, Says That It Is Work of Classic Art

CAPTAIN EDWIN BOWER HESSER, who produced the feature, "Triumph of Venus," with Betty Lee in the featured role, says that the modern idea of beauty, places the Venus de Milo, type of womanhood, in the secondary class. "Skinniness," he says, seems to be the favored type. He says:

"The trouble with the public today is that it sees too little of the true beauty of womanhood. In the days when art was seriously thought of—and that means ancient Greece—every girl desired to be beautiful in form as well as in face. While face is usually more a matter of birth than anything else, perfect care by a woman of her figure will certainly aid her in attaining classic beauty, and the quicker American girls discover that the Grecian formula is not only that of true beauty but of perfect health, the better off they will be."

Captain Hesser has made a special study of Grecian beauty, and in the selection of his types for the production of "The Triumph of Venus," Captain Hesser says that he chose the true, Grecian type. Betty Lee was chosen as the most perfect of the Venus type to play the featured role. "The Triumph of Venus" is a classical drama, its theme dealing with the social life of ancient Greece.

Betty Lee was born in Thomasville, Georgia. Her voice has earned for her a place of esteem by music critics throughout the country, and now it is predicted that her work on the screen will make her more popular than ever.

For several seasons she was engaged by the Boston Opera Company, and has traveled over the country several times. As a girl, she made a specialty of folk songs and was a soloist at the age of thirteen. She was educated at a private school in Georgia, from which she graduated with honors, and then finished her course of learning abroad.

During the filming of "The Triumph of Venus" Miss Lee risked her life and limb in diving from high cliffs into on-rushing currents of treacherous waterfalls, and climbing high mountains the tops of which were lost in the clouds. Almost without food or nourishment of any kind for several days, Miss Lee and her company worked laboriously on the top of Mt. Lafayette, in the White Mountains, and braved cold and storm, clambered over jagged rocks and walked along ledges where a misstep would have meant instant death, for the sake of having photographed scenic beauty in a beautiful manner with beautiful girls for "The Triumph of Venus."

"The Belgian" Reported Successful in New England

New England exhibitors, according to reports received by Frank G. Hall from Nathan Gordon, Globe Features Film Corporation, Boston, have put their stamp of approval upon "Those Who Pay," the seven-part drama recently released by the U. S. Exhibitors' Booking Corporation as its second feature attraction.

"Those Who Pay" was presented for the first time in New England at a trade showing last week and exhibitors from this district were present many coming from Maine, Vermont and New Hampshire. The showing was under the joint direction of Mr. Gordon, who has the New England rights, and A. L. Erghott, the U. S. representative in the New England territory.

Arrangements also are under way for another trade showing for "The Belgian," the third U. S. release.

Ince Assembling Second Advanced Picture

HILLER AND WILK announces that they will represent the Advanced Motion Picture Corporation, in the distribution of its second big feature for the independent market, "The Woman Eternal," in seven reels, with Elaine Hammerstein in the featured role. "The Woman Eternal" was adopted from Augustus Thomas' stage play, and produced under the direction of Ralph Ince.

The Advanced Motion Picture Corporation is a newly organized company, producing for the open market. The stage play enjoyed an extended run at the Lyric theatre, New York, some years ago, under the title, "The Battle Cry." The stage version was written by Mr. Thomas from the novel by Charles Neville Buck. The first production of this company was "The Co-Respondent," featuring the same star. "The Woman Eternal" presents a theme, the trend of which is to advance the theory of a woman's selection of her mate. The stronger character of the male is contrasted with the weaker character of the female and the influence which is supposed to guide the woman unerringly to her destiny, is explained.

In the supporting cast are: Lawson Butts, George Anderson, Carlton Macy, Violet Palmer and Cecil Chichester.

The officers of the Advanced Corporation are: Lee Shubert, president; Arthur Hammerstein, vice-president, and Ralph Ince, managing director. Hiller and Wilk represented the producers and are handling the sales. "The Woman Eternal" is now being assembled and it is announced that it will be ready for the market within the next week.

Hirsch Buys Territory for Noble's "Shame"

Jules Burnstein, representing John W. Noble, in the exploitation of his feature production, "Shame," on the independent market, announces that the rights to this production have been purchased by Nathan Hirsch, of the Pioneer Film Corporation, for New York and northern New Jersey.

The Pioneer Film Corporation, through the activities of Mr. Hirsch, is one of the most active buyers in the open market. This company is now distributing "Civilization," "Today," "Redemption," "The Submarine Eye," "The Cold Deck" and more recently Mr. Noble's production, "Shame." Mr. Hirsch said of the purchase:

"I am always on the lookout for the big picture. By big I mean a real production. The word production has been used so much in connection with all sorts of pictures that it has lost much of its real meaning; an important offering, exceptionally well cast and staged, with elaborate settings, and intended to stand out as a screen presentation of more than ordinary worth. Such pictures allow for extensive advertising and wide exploitation. 'Shame' is a case in point."

Mr. Hirsch said that he wanted nothing but really big pictures.

Billy West, the King Bee Comedy Star, Is Monarch of All He Surveys in "The Slave"

Spitzer Prescribes Co-operation

Vice-President and General Manager of King-Bee Film Corporation, Handling Billy West Comedies, Takes Optimistic View

NAT. H. SPITZER, vice president and sales manager of the King Bee Films Corp., handling Billy West comedies sends the following message to the exhibitors and manufacturers of the film industry.

"The big trouble with our industry now is and always has been the lack of co-operation between the exhibitors and the producers. If these great bodies of men will get together and lend the helping hand instead of the kicking foot, the film business will again resume its place in the commercial world as one of the greatest of industries.

"There is a great cry of overproduction in our business. The only overproduction I can think of now, is the waste of film stock.

"When you get harmony out of your organization you are getting one hundred per cent. efficiency. Without harmony there can be no success, that is lasting success.

"Competition is another bugaboo that has the producer and the exhibitor licked and without reason. Competition is the tonic for good business. The man who says he cannot stand competition doesn't deserve a place in the business world.

"Another vital condition that exists in our profession today is the extremely poor quality of plays that producers allow to be screened. Why have they not learned by this time that it is the play that counts first and last. All the fabulously paid stars in the world and the greatest of directors can't make a poor story or an uninteresting subject a success. The public wants amusement. I would rather have a fifty dollar a week artist in a good play than a ten thousand dollar one in a poor one. And this fact is being brought home very forceably to some of our greatest producers today.

"Instead of all this cry about hard times, taxes, overproduction and competition, let's all get together and work as brothers. There is room for us all, providing we work harmoniously, and optimistically and do things on the 'Live and Let Live' plan."

Bookings for King Bee are reported to be more than satisfactory.

The Love Theme in Paramount's "The Seven Swans," with Marguerite Clark, Is Said to Be Very Appealing

W. H. Offers 28 Comedies

Twenty-eight Sennett Produced Comedies Featuring, Chaplin, Normand, Arbuckle, Normand and Others Offered on Independent Market

W. H. PRODUCTIONS COMPANY announces that it will release on the independent market twenty-eight Sennett produced comedies. Among the comedians who will be seen in these Keystone Comedies are: Charlie Chaplin, Mack Sennett, Sydney Chaplin, Fatty Arbuckle, Mabel Normand, Mack Swain, Chester Conklin, Ford Sterling and Charles Murray.

Commenting upon these comedy releases, an official of the W. H. Productions said:

"We are launching this campaign at this time for the purpose of helping the exchange man that has been up against it and the exhibitor who has been forced to pay exorbitant rental prices for his program. It will be noted that we are the first distributor to come out boldly and state the price we intend charging for these subjects to the exchange—$80 per reel. This price assures to the exchange man the greatest galaxy of comedies and stars on the screen today at a price that will bring to them bigger profits than they have ever made before and it will also assure a reasonable rental price for the exhibitor. In addition to this, we pay the war tax on these subjects, so that every exhibitor booking them can refuse to pay any tax if the exchange demands same. We are getting up exceptional one and three sheets and careful attention is being given to the titling on each of these productions.

"There has been recently a great deal of talk of amalgamation, procrastination, and a lot of other things, on paper, supposedly to help the independent exchange man and the exhibitor, but the only way that they can be helped is through their pocketbooks, viz., by giving them the best pictures possible at a price to assure profits and increased business, and every exchange man and exhibitor will agree that W. H. Productions Company is certainly endeavoring to do 'their bit' towards helping to solve the problem they are contending with to-day." Further announcements are expected.

Raver Announces Year's Work

Harry Raver to Release Twenty-five Feature Productions During the Coming Year—"Foolshead" Type of Comedy Added

TWENTY-FIVE productions are scheduled for release by Harry Raver during the coming year, it is announced.

Among the list are "Enigma," a crook play, which will introduce Edmund Breese in a similar role to those which made him famous as a delineator of crook characters. Alma Hanlon plays the leading female part in "Enigma." An original drama of timely appeal by Augustus Thomas is now under way and will be ready in February or March. An all-star cast will be used for the Thomas production.

Seven comedies will be issued by Mr. Raver, in which the international character, "Foolshead," will appear. These productions will be made on an elaborate scale. The "Foolshead" type of comedy, so popular a few years ago and now in vogue, accomplishes its purpose by the reckless destruction of buildings and other expensive equipment. The modern "Foolshead," however, is improved by real stories and timely situations. The new comedy series will range from one to five reels each.

Mr. Raver announces also the acquisition of a new star of the vampire type. Her name will be announced later. The new star is an Italian girl. She will appear in "The Soul of a Vampire," from the book by Carlotta Murillo, and three other productions during the first six months of 1918.

"Motherland," a patriotic drama, from the pen of Francis Allison West, will also reach the screen through Mr. Raver's production forces. "The Fires of Inspiration" and "Father and Son" are included in the list of Raver productions announced for the coming year.

Shipman Pleased with Success of Organization

Ernest Shipman reports that his organization is growing rapidly, and that he is pleased with the progress he has made within the two months that he has been organized. He says that through his agency nine productions for the independent market have been contracted for and will be produced during the coming year.

"Some of the most prominent producers in the industry," said Mr. Shipman, in speaking of his plans, "have these productions in hand. Contracts have been executed for the exploitation of Shorty Hamilton five-reel comedies, and during the coming year one of these comedies will be released on the open market every month. I have, also, a line of patriotic comedies in one and two reels, the titles to be announced later. The Art Studios and Laboratories, situated at 316 East 38th street, have been working night shifts in order to care for new business, which includes some of the European war negatives of D. W. Griffith. Some prominent stars of the screen have been enrolled under my management, and a special service department has been opened to attend to their needs. Among others, King Baggott has been placed with the Whartons, Inc., to star in the Flynn serial, "The Eagle's Eye."

Bert Ennis Handles Tobacco Publicity

It was announced last week by the Our Boys In France Tobacco Fund that Bert Ennis, the publicity man, has agreed to take care of the newspaper publicity for the fund.

This is in addition to his work of handling Petrova publicity.

Ravier Finishes Assembling of "Grain of Dust"

Crest Pictures Corporation announces that Harry Ravier has finished cutting and assembling "The Grain of Dust," written by David Graham Phillips, adapted by Bess Merideth and produced under the direction of Harry Ravier. Lillian Walker is in the featured role. The Ogden Pictures Corporation made the production. Carl Carlton, president of Crest Pictures Corporation, bought recently the negative and positive prints of the first Lillian Walker production, "The Lust of the Ages," and the world rights to "The Grain of Dust." Roy Sommerville, who was scenario writer and sub-titler under David Griffith when he was with Triangle, wrote the sub-titles for "The Grain of Dust." The feature will be ready for release within the next week.

Pyramid Comedies Are Ready

Four Comedies Completed — Ray Hughes Featured—Twenty-four to Be Produced During Year —Foreign Rights Sold

PYRAMID COMEDIES, INC., announce that within the next few weeks it will begin a nation-wide campaign in the distribution of the recently completed comedy features, starring Ray Hughes, the eccentric comedian who, before entering pictures, was a featured attraction on the vaudeville stage. Arthur Werner and Charles Abrams saw Hughes while appearing on the stage in Boston and engaged him to star in Pyramid Comedies. Four comedies have been completed under the direction of William A. Seiter, a former Keystone director. .

Twenty-four comedy productions will be completed within the year. Four are now ready for the market. They are, "In and Out," "Beach Birds," "Love and Lunch," and "Beauties and Bombs." It is announced that the foreign rights to these comedies for England, Ireland, Wales, Scotland, France, Italy and the Scandinavian countries have been sold. These Pyramid Comedies will be the first to reach the Italian market since the beginning of the war, it is stated.

A year's output of twenty-four comedies has been sold for the above countries. Preparations are now under way for the exploitation of the comedy features on the American market. The comedies are offered on the independent market.

Director Seiter obtained permission to make one of the forthcoming Pyramid Comedies at Yaphank, the sight of Camp Upton. The comedy will be titled "Drafted." The production will be commenced this week. It will be the fifth release of the Pyramid Company.

Eastern Market Depressed, Says Howells

David P. Howells, Howell Films, Candler Building, New York, distributor of features in the foreign market, has returned, recently, from a six months' trip through the Orient, visiting Japan, China, Malay States, Philippine Islands and India. He closed contracts for Selznick productions, Metro, Cub Comedies, King-Bee Billy West Comedies and Christie Comedies, in these countries. Mr. Howells made a preliminary tour of the Orient, last January, to study conditions. He said:

"I found the markets of the East more depressed than they were on my first trip. Owing to the reverses suffered in Russia and the war, business men generally are little inclined to carry on their trade as usual. Picture people are not quite sure what is going to happen and in the meantime refuse to take more than they can easily handle. The picture business in all these countries is growing, but like all growth in the Orient it is slow when compared to the mad rush of Occidental countries. The picture game there is a matter of pioneering, such as was done here ten or fifteen years ago. There are undoubtedly great possibilities, especially in the line of educational work. If missionary societies operating in the Orient would turn their attention to educating the natives by means of pictures they would accomplish ten times the amount of good in half the time. There is some talk of erecting cheap houses of bamboo or native grasses in the various countries in which to show all sorts of educational pictures of an interesting nature, mixed in with enough "thrillers" to sugar-coat the educational pill.

"Motion pictures recently figured in a sensational case of opium smuggling in the East. A gang of smugglers posed as moving picture actors and operators, and with their film cases filled with opium and their cameras packed they carried the drug from port to port. In the meantime with the money they gained from the sales they traveled in great style. It was their extravagant living which brought them under suspicion and the Secret Service made an unexpected search of their baggage and found the opium in their possession. Since this case more pains have been taken in searching baggage, the customs officials at Manila using powerful X-Rays to bring hidden goods to light."

Mr. and Mrs. Howells and Party in Tokyo, Japan

Mr. Howells will remain in this country for several months after which he will visit European countries and South America in the interest of the foreign trade.

National Board Praises "Those Who Pay"

The National Board of Review passed upon the Thomas H. Ince production, "Those Who Pay," featuring Bessie Barriscale, recently purchased and shown for review by the U. S. Exhibitors Booking Corporation, of which Frank Hall is president, in the following language:

"An unusual story of domestic trouble with the maximum of emphasis on character portrayal and none on the sensual. The play is a valuable contribution to the intimate drama of married life, valuable because restrained and convincing."

In and Out of West Coast Studios

By J. G. Jessen

WITH President Harry Aitken, and Vice-President and General Manager H. O. Davis, both at the Triangle studios on the coast, giving their personal attention to matters pertaining to production, it is a certainty production will be materially bettered. Mr. Aitken came to the coast more than two weeks ago, a few days following the arrival of Mr. Davis.

For three months the Triangle Keystone organization has been moving from the Hollywood studio to the Culver City plant, but the actual moving did not occur until between December 8 and December 10. On the latter day the several comedy producing units began work at the Culver City plant.

Texas Guinan Stars

"The Gun Woman," which will be the first Triangle subject to offer Texas Guinan as star, has been completed, and is now in the hands of the film cutters. The closing scenes needed required a great number of extra people including all the cowboys from the Hartville Ranch. The scenes were made on interior settings erected on the stages at Culver City, and represented interiors of early day community centers which included under one roof, saloon, dance hall, gambling place and hotel.

Another picture completed is that starring Roy Stewart, directed by Cliff Smith. It is titled "The Law's Outlaw," and has Fritzi Ridgeway in the principal feminine role. The Randall Parish story "Keith of the Border," is to be the next Stewart picture, and this is already in the making. Following this, it is announced Charles Alden Seltzer's novel "Boss of the Lazy Y" will be filmed. Alvin J. Neitz is preparing the continuity for this film play. Stewart will play the role of an unshaven Western roughneck in the first four reels, and later step fourth as a regular Westerner.

William V. Mong is to play the featured name role in the film version of the Meredith Nicholson crook comedy drama "The Hopper." His part will be that of a reformed safe blower, who is made the victim of a kidnapping plot. Irene Hunt and Peaches Jackson, a four-year-old child, have important parts, and others in the cast are George Hernandez, Louis Durham and others.

A story centering about a fashionable modiste shop, "Limousine Life," has been completed by Director Jack Dillon, and the company has taken up the filming of "Heiress for a Day." Olive Thomas is the star of both subjects.

New Subjects Completed

Paralta and Selexart producing units practically all completed their subjects during the past week or ten days. Elliot Howe, who has directed "Aristocracy," which has a cast including Howard Hickman, Mary Mersch, George Fisher, Nona Thomas, Fannie Midgley and Ida Lewis, has completed that film and will next direct "With Hoops of Steel," a Western subject which will have an altogether different cast. "Aristocracy" is from an original scenario by J. Grubb Alexander and Fred Myton. The theme of the story is based on heredity.

Rex Ingram, who has just filmed "Hum Drum Brown," adapted from the M. H. and H. G. Daniel novel of the same name by Julian Lamothe, is now at work with the scenario department on a new story which will have a new Paralta star.

Completion of the Alaskan subject starring Clara Williams, "Carmen of the Klondike," filmed by Reginald Barker, has also been finished, and executives of the studio are very enthusiastic in their praise of the photoplay. This is an original scenario by Monte M. Katterjohn, author of "The Flame of the Yukon" and other successes, and those who have seen the film claim it is better than his previously released Alaskan subject.

Raymond B. West by the end of the coming week will have the underworld story "Blindfolded" by E. Richard Schayer completed. Already a new scenario is in preparation for Mr. West, and production will be started at once.

Wallace Worsley spent the past week in making a number of retake scenes for "On the Level," the underworld story which features Rhea Mitchell supported by Edward Coxen. Scenario for this was written by Eugene Lewis and E. Richard Schayer.

Lovely Cast Chosen

The entire cast for the support of Louise Lovely, who is being starred in "The Quest of Joan," has been selected for this Bluebird photoplay. Philo McCollough, late of Metro, will play opposite. The direction is in charge of Edgar Jones, formerly identified with the Balboa where he made the serial "Who Is Number One." This story is an adaptation from one of the same title by James Oliver Curwood, the screen version having been prepared by Doris Schroeder.

"Breeze Bolton Blows In" is the title given the production featuring Franklyn Farnum now being made by Joseph de Grasse. Juanita Hansen has been engaged to play the leading part opposite the star, and the scenario was written by Charles Kenyon from the comedy by Joseph F. Poland.

Claire DuBrey will appear as leading woman in the subject now being made by Director Elmer Clifton titled "More Power to Him" in which Herbert Rawlinson is featured in the title role. This is from an original scenario by Waldemar Young and the supporting cast besides Miss DuBrey includes Neal Hart and Sam de Grasse.

"The Green Seal," which has recently been filmed by Stuart Paton of U City, will introduce a new leading man for the Bluebird or Butterfly Pictures in the person of Ashton Dearholt, who has been with the American for the past two years. He plays opposite Carmel Meyers in this subject.

Ella Hall and Emory Johnson are now working in "Dona Perfecta," being directed by Elsie Jane Wilson from a scenario adapted by Elliot J. Clawson from the story by C. Perz Galdos. In the supporting cast are Maxfield Stanley and Harry Holden.

Russell's Future Undecided

Whether or not William Russell continues with the American following the fulfillment of his present contract, which provides for the making of one more five-reel subject, is a matter of speculation. President S. S. Hutchinson recently made a special trip to the coast to confer with Mr. Russell, but it is now understood that no contract was renewed. One of the features of the coming Russell production, "Detective Dan Cupid," under the direction of Edward Slowman, will be an auto race in which the cars which won the Liberty sweep stakes at Ascot Speedway, Thanksgiving Day, will be used.

"High Heels" is the title selected for the next Margarita Fischer subject now being filmed, and Manager J. R. Crone of the American studio, has selected Jack Mower to play the opposite lead with David Howard, Golda Madden and Perry Banks playing the important parts. This will be the third of the Fischer series, all of which have been produced under the direction of Lloyd Ingraham. Scenario for this subject was written by James E. Hungerford.

The Mary Minter Company was given a vacation this week when they should have been working on scenes for "Mlle. Tiptoe." The delay was caused by a pimple putting in an appearance on Mary's pretty face. Make-up caused a slight infection, and the star was rushed to a beauty specialist in Los Angeles. Spottiswoode Aitken is playing the principal character role in this production.

Smith Directs O. Henry

The O. Henry Story, "The Moment of Victory," having an incident of the Spanish-American war for its plot, is being filmed by Director Dave Smith. Chet Ryan and Walter Rogers are the principals of the Vitagraph cast, and the larger scenes will be made in the vicinity of Playa Del Rey, California, where a number of chartered ships will be used in sea and land fighting. More than 200 Mexicans will be used as Spanish warriors.

Larry Seaman, who was at the coast last winter producing Big V Comedies, has returned to Hollywood, and is now at work on his first subject titled "Gus and Greasers" Gordon Lewis and Peter Armonda are his principals.

The other Big V Comedy organization, headed by Rock and Montgomery, and directed by Kitty Howe, are filming

"Jumbel and Jealousy." Lucille Hutton has been engaged as leading woman for this company. One of the features of this film will be a jump of sixteen feet from the roof of one building to another and through a breakaway wall.

Actor-Director William Duncan and Carol Halloway, together with the company have been working in the vicinity of Newhall where a big tunnel has been built. The company is now making the second Vitagraph serial, "Vengeance and the Woman," and have completed eight episodes, they now being engaged on the ninth.

Melford Reaches Home

Director George Melford, Sessue Hayakawa and Company have arrived home from Honolulu after spending three weeks at the Hawaiian Islands. A great many of the scenes necessary for this photoplay were taken on the island of Hilo, located quite a distance from Honolulu, and required a thirty-six hour boat ride. Interiors for the early day Hawaiian picture are now being filmed at the studio.

J. Stuart Blackton and producing organization are expected shortly at the Lasky Studio, and buildings are now being erected which will serve as headquarters for the Paramount producer.

Norman Kerry and Eugene Pallette have been engaged for the principal supporting players for the next Mary Pickford Artcraft subject, as yet unnamed, which is being filmed by Marshall Neilan. The company spent a portion of this week at San Francisco.

Alfredo Hoffman, in charge of the wardrobe department of the Lasky Studio, is spending a few weeks in New York making a survey of fashions to insure that Lasky productions are up to the minute in style.

Franklin Directs Carmen

Jewel Carmen, who has played in one starring vehicle for Fox under the direction of Frank Lloyd, was transferred last week to the direction of C. M. Franklin, who up to this time has been serving as director of the Fox kiddie pictures. The new photoplay for Miss Carmen will have a locale of the far north, many scenes being taken in the Truckee country in the deep snow of the last few weeks. L. C. Shumway has been engaged to play the lead opposite Miss Carmen.

A new story is being written for Gladys Brockwell by Charles Kenyon, which is to be directed by Bertram Bracken. Filming will be commenced during the coming week.

The Fox Company producing "Cupid's Round-Up" is still at work on that production, and plans are now being made for Frank Lloyd to produce a William Farnum subject. Farnum is expected on the coast within a short time.

Two companies are now at work on the Sunshine Comedies lot under the direction of Henry Lehrman. One is headed by Billy Ritchie, Hugh Fay and Lloyd Hamilton, and the second by Ford Sterling. Sterling, it is said, will appear in an altogether new make-up.

Morris Skates Along

Keystone Director Reggie Morris is still at work on the skating rink story featuring Harry Gribbon, using a large portion of the mammoth comedy stage built at the Culver City plant for interiors of the rink.

The Herman Raymaker unit is filming "A Sea Serpent's Desire." This company is working at Los Angeles harbor, and most of the players continue the wearing of life preservers. Billy Franey, Maude Wayne, Milton Sims, Lloyd Bacon and others are daily cavorting in the chilly Pacific waters.

The artist's story filmed by Director Harry Edwards has been titled "Ruined by a Dumb Waiter," and the remaining few scenes will be completed within a day or two. The principals are Alatia Marton and Rose Carter, who appear as models; Milburn Moranti, George French, Martin Kinney, Dorothy Hagar and others.

"Courts and Cabarets" is said to be an entirely different Keystone comedy, inasmuch as the pies used in the restaurant scenes are actually eaten and not thrown. Peggy Pearce, Max Asher, Mal St. Clair and Myrtle Reeves play the leads in this comedy, which is nearing completion.

When Mr. Hart is ready for work he reports to Mr. Allen, and it is then that the business manager gives the star inspiration for the day's work by playing "Traviata."

Screen Examinations

"The Cinderella Man"

(Goldwyn—Six Reels)

Reviewed by Peter Milne

IF the name of Goldwyn had not been popularized long before this "The Cinderella Man," Mae Marsh's latest picture, adapted from Edward Childs Carpenter's charming sentimental comedy, would turn the trick with ease, for it is the most delightful comedy drama the writer has had the good fortune to see in many a long month. In point of drama it is simplicity itself, but the romance of Marjorie Caner and her Cinderella Man is so prettily set forth and benefits so largely by the performance of Miss Marsh that each scene is a single joy in itself—the whole a bubbling container of comedy, sentiment and heart interest.

Miss Marsh's quaintly appealing delineation of the star part is certainly the best thing she has yet done for Goldwyn. She brings to the role that almost eloquent personality which with her inborn ability turns the most commonplace of things into colorful incidents that charm. George Fawcett, as the thick skinned old Caner whose attention is at first divided only between his stomach and his business, contributes one of the most effective comedy characters the screen has ever seen. Tom Moore in the title part and Alec B. Francis as Romney Evans, the legal adviser of the Caners, give superlative accounts of themselves, while the support is from first to last of an unusually high order.

George Loane Tucker, who made the adaptation from Mr. Carpenter's play and who directed the action, has caught the spirit of the original work and brought out its high lights on the film with fine effect. That Mr. Tucker would make a good picture given sure-fire material was a foregone conclusion. That he should make an excellent picture from a play, so much of the charm of which rested in the spoken lines, is still a greater manifestation of his directorial abilities. In "The Cinderella Man" he has contributed to the screen a piece of work full worthy to rank with his "Manxman," yet so entirely different that it is difficult to believe he was actively connected with each.

Hugo Bailin, as art director, has given the picture a setting of the greatest realism. Particularly does that shot of the snow covered roofs over which Marjorie makes visits to the Cinderella Man in his dingy little attic, impress one with its realism. And George Hill has contributed to the perfection of the technical detail with a fine brand of photography.

"The Cinderella Man" cannot be too well spoken of. Story, star and support, production and direction are of the best obtainable and the result is naturally the perfect total of the parts.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Marjorie (Mae Marsh), daughter of Morris Caner (George Fawcett), wealthy broker, is sought after by a fortune hunter (Boyce Coombe) and Caner is inclined to encourage the match because he believes Marjorie a bother. Marjorie is indifferent toward her suitor until she chances to learn of Anthony Quintard (Tom Moore), a poor poet of good family who exists in an attic just a few doors away from the Caner home. Romney Evans (Alec B. Francis), Caner's friend, who is a great deal more human, suggests that they make Anthony's Christmas a merry one. Crossing the snowy roofs they install various necessities of comfortable living in his attic while he is away. Later a friendship springs up between Anthony and Marjorie, who poses as "companion" to Miss Caner. And of course this soon turns to love. Caner finally takes an interest and when at last Marjorie has to decide between the fortune hunter and the poet he makes short work of the former by telling him his fortune has flown. But then Anthony learns that Marjorie is rich, is even inclined to feel bad about it until she promises that after their marriage she will have none of her father's wealth, and so the story ends.

Louis R. Grisel, George Farren, Elizabeth Ariaans, Mrs. J. Cogan, Dean Raymond and Harry Scarborough complete the cast.

"Uneasy Money"

(Essanay-Perfection Pictures—Six Reels)

Reviewed by Peter Milne

AS each Taylor Holmes picture comes along a delighted audience is very much inclined to term it his best, despite the obvious danger of having to create a super-superlative for his next appearance. Certainly "Uneasy Money," an adaptation of a story by P. G. Wodehouse seems to eclipse in its brilliant comedy, its romantic qualities everyone of his former contributions to the light library of the screen. Mr. Holmes's ingratiating personality, the ease with which he adapts himself to the role of Lord Dawlish, result in the creation of a thoroughly enjoyable character. His eccentric mannerisms are unusually comical and yet at the same time he has never interpreted the role as a fop, a merit of omission for which he should be heartily congratulated.

Mr. Holmes and Mr. Wodehouse, the author, alternate in smoothly extracting the laughs from the observer. His experiences on Elizabeth's chicken farm are wholesomely funny and here the romantic thread is introduced as subtly as could be desired. The other line of action concerning Lord and Lady Wetherby, parts realistically played by Fred Tiden and Virginia Bowker offers a large share of humor. Lord Wetherby's continual encounters with his wife's pet monkey are uproarious. Indeed Mr. Wodehouse has filled his story with comical incident which besides serving its obvious purpose creates an undercurrent of suspense that leaves not a dull moment in all the picture's six reels.

Too much praise cannot be given Virginia Valli for her distinctly human characterization of the business-like Elizabeth. While interpreting the character in its true colors she never by any act loses sympathy. The entire cast plays with a sincerity and appreciation that is seldomed equaled on either stage or screen. Raymond E. Dakin made an excellent adaptation from Mr. Wodehouse's story and it has been presented in that unassuming though distinctly realistic manner common in all the Taylor Holmes successes.

If a picture theatre were our possession we would move heaven and earth to have the privilege of showing "Uneasy Money." They say that a serious subject is much more welcome but this picture ought to explode that theory.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Because Lord Dawlish (Taylor Holmes) instructed Ira Nutcombe (Charles Gardner), American millionaire, in the rudiments of golf he receives his immense fortune at his death. Learning that there is an American cousin, Elizabeth (Virginia Valli), who has been cut off without a share of the money, Dawlish journeys across the sea to offer her half of his legacy. Through a series of coincidences, he lands at Elizabeth's chicken farm under an asumed name, and though she believes him a good-for-nothing friend of her brother's she soon grows to admire and love him because of his considerate attitude. When, however, her brother (Arthur Bates), believing she will marry him and so gain the fortune, reveals his identity she orders their visitor from the house. He leaves a deed behind him transferring the fortune to her. On reading this she dashes out after Dawlish, overtakes him and promises to accept the money on condition that he will marry her, a condition which Dawlish takes great delight in agreeing to.

Rodney La Rocque, Lillian Drew and James F. Fulton complete the cast.

"The Learnin' of Jim Benton"

(Triangle—Five Reels)

Reviewed by Joseph L. Kelley

"THE LEARNIN' OF JIM BENTON" was written by Al. Neitz and produced by Triangle under the direction of Cliff Smith, with Roy Stewart in the featured role. Fritzi Ridgeway plays opposite in the leading feminine role. The story presents the typical western melodramatic type. Roy Stewart is given a sympathetic part and enacts same with his usual appreciation for the characteristic traits of the Western cowboy.

Following the idea as presented in some earlier Western features, the author has based much of the action that takes place, in scenes showing the arrival of the Eastern school teacher into the wilds of the West and her engagement by the cowboys to teach them the rudiments of the English language.

There is plenty of action in the latter reels, and those who like the melodramatic will be more than pleased with the climax which shows the hero standing on the scaffold, prepared to meet his death by hanging, and the timely arrival of the heroine with the Governor's pardon.

There is not much to distinguish this Triangle production from other Western pictures. Little originality is noted in the manner in which the author has woven his plot or the material he has employed to supply the action. The above criticism is not adverse to the real merits of the picture as one of the Western type. The story runs smoothly, it has been reproduced on the screen with good, snappy action, and Director Smith has seen to it that the proper atmosphere is obtained.

Roy Stewart is an ideal character for Western parts and his strong, convincing acting does much to place the stamp of newness on this production. Fritzi Ridgeway handles the leading feminine part with grace and appreciation for its dramatic possibilities. The camera work is that of standard perfection. The exteriors present true Western scenery. Walter Perry, Ed. Brady, William Billingford, Thorton Edwards, John P. Wild, and Harry Rattenbury present supporting roles convincingly.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Jim Benton (Roy Stewart), an illiterate ranchman, meets Evelyn Hastings (Fritzi Ridgeway), and persuades her to establish a school for the cowboys on his ranch. She does so, and Jim proves to be the star pupil. Shortly after the arrival of Evelyn trouble comes from the sheep ranchers, who threaten and do shut off the water which supplies Jim's cattle. Jim calls out his cowboys, and together they go to the water-dam and give battle. Jim is accused of killing one of the sheepmen, and is tried for murder. At the trial self-defense is offered, but to no effect. Evelyn, believing in Jim's innocence, sees the Governor of the State, who has come to the county seat to investigate the trouble, and pleads for a pardon. At the last minute when Jim is about to be hanged, Evelyn comes with the Governor's pardon, and Jim is saved.

"The Marriage Speculation"

(Vitagraph—Five Reels)

Reviewed by Joseph L. Kelley

"THE MARRIAGE SPECULATION," written by Cyrus Townsend Brady and produced by Vitagraph, under the direction of Ashley Miller, stands out in the minds of an audience because it tells an unusual story with plenty of plot material to place it convincingly in the mind. There has been a bit too much material added to the plot. The author could have brought out the main idea without resorting to as much counterplotting as he has.

It is an unusual story and this fact alone entitles it to a word of praise. Charles Kent comes back to the screen in this production after a long absence. Mr. Kent gives a fine performance and is an excellent type for the role he interprets. Mildred Manning has the principal feminine role and presents her part convincingly. Wallace MacDonald in the juvenile role gives one of his best performances.

The opening scenes of this Vitagraph production show incidents of every-day life in the small town that will prove of interest to any audience. The human side of life is brought out in a most human manner and presents characters in a homely, true-to-life way. Considering the wealth of material and the number of counterplots which the scenarioist had to deal with, the continuity has been done well. The author has injected a bit of the melodramatic when this phase of the drama was not necessary.

The idea Cliday conceives of speculating in marriage, is original and it is brought by the author and presented by Director Miller and a good cast, in a manner that leaves no room for suggestiveness to enter the minds of an audience. Considered as screen entertainment through the medium of a novel idea in plot construction, "The Marriage Speculation" should be given a good reception at any theatre. It is not the best feature Vitagraph has done but it is a little better than the average.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Cliday (Charles Kent) is an old employee in a factory. He has saved a few thousand dollars and wishes to invest it. He hits upon the idea of speculating in marriages. He has made the acquaintance of Clara Wilton (Mildred Manning), the pretty clerk in the town's only candy store. Clara is in love with Billie Perkins (Wallace MacDonald), the clerk in the country grocery store. Billie is not overambitious and neglects his work. Clara pleads with him to work hard and make money so that they can be married. But he is unconcerned and lazy and is fired by his employer.

Cliday resigns his position which he has held for twenty years, and suggests to Clara that she place herself under his care. He will send her to a fashionable boarding school and buy her pretty clothes, but she must consent to marry a rich man and one who will provide for Cliday the rest of his life. She consents and leaves for school. After graduation, she and Cliday leave for a fashionable summer resort where she meets several men of nobility. She does not love any of them, but she consents to marry one to carry out her end of the bargain. As she is preparing for the ceremony, a stranger arrives who says that he is a Count. He tells her not to marry the one whom Cliday has selected to be her husband, explaining that he is an impostor. The stranger proves to be Billie in disguise. He has been made partner in the store at home and has saved some money. He is also notified that he is heir to the fortune of a wealthy English nobleman. Clara and he are married.

"Shirley Kaye"

(Clara Kimball Young-Select—Five Reels)

Reviewed by Peter Milne

A BUSINESS conflict is the basis of "Shirley Kaye," an adaptation made by Margaret Turnbull from Hulbert Footner's play. It sets forth the manner in which Shirley Kaye by the use of quick wit defeated the plans of a powerful business man who contemplated ousting her father from the presidency of the railroad. The greater part of the film is taken up with the exposition of the manner in which Shirley Kaye proposes doing this, and the finale finds her quite successful, as was to be expected. The love interest is comparatively insignificant and is given small space beside the main plot.

In this unequal division of the limelight seems to lie the picture's main shortcoming. There is so much business that one is able to work up little sympathy for the titular character, and again her plans are so carefully and obviously set that there is slight doubt in the spectator's mind that they will miscarry. So it becomes just a case of a clever woman fighting to success against "big business" that doesn't half try, and as a result "Shirley Kaye" is rather a cold proposition. Its chief redeeming feature is the delightful brand of comedy supplied by George Fawcett in the part of the uncouth railroad man from the West who doesn't at all enjoy the society that his daughter's ambitions lead him into.

Clara Kimball Young interprets the title part well enough but is hardly able to make a figure of more than passing interest of the business-like Miss Kaye. Joseph Kaufman has given the picture a lavish production and the camera work of William Marshall is commendable.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Shirley Kaye (Clara Kimball Young), daughter of Egerton Kaye (George Buckus), a railroad president who is fast losing his grip on his business due to the inroads made by Magen (George Fawcett) and his right hand man, Rowson (Corliss Giles), learns of her father's predicament and takes matters into her own hands. Daisy Magen (Claire Whitney) looks with envy on the position of social prominence held by Shirley and so the latter "takes her up" and introduces her into the more select circles. At a coming board meeting Magen plans to deprive Egerton Kaye of the presidency by securing a majority of the proxies of the stockholders. But Shirley defeats him here by again "taking up" the wives of the stockholders and making their husbands promise to give her their proxies. So Shirley's social position wins for her. Her biggest triumph comes when Magen also capitulates to his daughter's demands and decides to withdraw from the fight. This utterly disgusts Rowson, who has prided himself on his disinterested attitude toward all women and who had promised himself the presidency of the railroad when Kaye was defeated. He leaves for his lodge in a rage and there Shirley finds him and finally persuades him to accept the general managership—and herself.

Nellie Lindrich, John Sunderland, Mrs. F. O. Winthrop and Frank Otto are others in the cast.

"The Volunteer"

(World Film—Five Reels)

Reviewed by Peter Milne

"THE VOLUNTEER" combines novelty and patriotic appeal in large quantities. For the first practically every star of consequence in the World Film constellation appears in support of Little Madge Evans, who is featured. The opening scenes are laid in the World studio and one after another Madge bids good-bye to Carlyle Blackwell, Kitty Gordon, Ethel Clayton, Evelyn Greeley, June Elvidge, Montagu Love, her director Harley Knowles, and lastly none other than William A. Brady himself. Such an array of talent appearing as incidental support certainly sheds an unconventional light over "The Volunteer" and opens up illimitable advertising avenues. It may be remarked in passing that it is Mr. Brady's debut before the camera. He gets a laugh too.

For the second angle, the picture's patriotic appeal, there are several stirring recruiting speeches, including one by Madge herself. And there is a young Quaker, exceptionally well played by Henry Hull, who puts aside his faith to join the colors. Added to those two ingredients there is a goodly amount of human interest furnished by Madge in the stiff surroundings of the Quaker home of her grandparents.

Then there is yet another side to "The Volunteer" which may not have been intentional at all, but which is rather jarring. The product of the World Film Corporation is well advertised a number of times throughout the picture. Madge goes to see herself on the screen after reading an ad about herself in the paper. And in the beginning when she says good-bye to the stars, a line is worked in about their latest pictures. These gentle reminders, however, may serve to the benefit of the exhibitor who shows World pictures, providing an audience refuses to be bothered about them.

Both Madge and Mr. Hull play naturally in the two stellar roles and the work of the supporting cast is effective. To sum up, "The Volunteer," with its unusual advertising possibilities, its novelty, and its timeliness should prove a certain and quite invaluable asset to the exhibitor.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Her father (Victor Kennard) and mother (Muriel Ostriche) off to the war, Madge (Madge Evans) is forced to give up her work in the World Film Studio and go to live with her grandparents (Jack Drumier and Kate Lester), stern old Quakes. Their son, Jonathan (Henry Hull), moved by the spirit of the times, desires to enlist in the army, but his father, claiming that such an act would be contrary to the tenets of their faith, forbids him. When he becomes of age, however, he joins the forces anyway. His father refuses to speak to him until Madge pleads in her uncle's behalf, and finally melts the heart of the old fellow. He gives his son his blessing when he departs for the front, and looks forward to the happier day of his return.

Charles Charles, in the part of a Civil War veteran, creates a pleasing character.

"The Land of Promise"

(Paramount—Five Reels)

Reviewed by R. E. Pritchard

SYMPATHY with the star, especially with one of the Billie Burke type, is essential to the success of any photoplay, unless it be one where the opposite effect is desired. Manifestly the playwright and the director of "The Land of Promise," her latest Paramount production, expected the audiences to be won over by Miss Burke, but that result is far from achieved, the sympathy of the audience, it would seem to us, being won over to the wife. The scenario is from the stage play of the same name and the story has been more or less closely followed.

The entire picture in unconvincing and leaves no impression on the spectator. One regrets that such a splendid cast and such beautiful settings and such unusual photography has been spent on the story. Mary Alden, who has the role of the wife, does some splendid work and it stands out as one of the best of recent characterizations. J. W. Johnson is the husband, but this usually good actor is handicapped by his part, and the same is true of Mr. Meigham, whose part in the production does not become important until almost the last reel.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Nora Marsh (Billie Burke), for ten years has been the companion of Miss Wickham (Helen Tracy), an aged and wealthy English woman. Although Nora is wearing her life away she endures the torture because she has been told that she is to inherit the aged lady's wealth. Considerable time in taken in introducing the nephew and his wife. But the old lady dies suddenly and the girl, who has been expecting to "see the world," is left nothing. For some reason she takes it on herself to give a letter of introduction to her brother to a poor relation of the dead woman and then determines herself to go to live with her brother, who has become a successful farmer in Manitoba. There the brother (J. W. Johnson) has acquired a large farm, due partly to the hard work of his wife, a former waitress (Mary Alden), who has even returned to her restaurant in time of financial distress to help her husband out. The husband pays far more attention to the sister than to the wife and the latter rebels. One of the titles tells us that the girl has drifted from one form of slavery to another, because she has to help in the housework and she has aroused the ire of the wife. And just then, after a row, one of the men who has been working as a farmhand (Thomas Meigham) announces that he is leaving to work his own farm and casually drops the statement that he is going by one of "them there" employment agencies and get a wife to cook and sew for him. Nora in her desperation offers to fill the role and she is accepted with the understanding that she is to merely do the work of the household. They are married and Nora brings the home from a rough shack to a charming little place. Suddenly one day at the noon hour her husband announces that "We've been married six months and you haven't kissed me yet" and then seizes her in his arms. And that evening after the wife has retired he breaks into her room. The next day a farm inspector condemns the crop to be destroyed on account of weed pests. At the same moment Nora's brother shows up, bringing with him a check for 500 pounds sent Nora by the heirs of Miss Wickham. The girl learns that her husband's crop is to be destroyed and although she had agreed to return home with her brother she learns that she loves her husband after he has declared that if he had been successful he would never let her go.

"My Unmarried Wife"

(Bluebird—Five Reels)

Reviewed by Joseph L. Kelley

CARMEL MYERS presents the feature role of "My Unmarried Wife," produced for Bluebird program under the direction of George Siegmann. It is an adaptation from Frank R. Adams's novel, "Molly and I," by Doris Schroeder. The screen version presents a good comedy-drama with little of the serious vein excepting in the initial reel. In the latter reels, Miss Myers is called upon to interpret a character role, and this she does with sure-fire results. It is only recently that she has been seen in featured roles. She is not as well known to the public as some others, but her work in the few pictures in which she has presented the featured role gives promise of early acquaintance with all who see her performances. Miss Myers has a striking personality, can appreciate and register depths of dramatic emotion and presents a picture that is not soon forgotten.

"My Unmarried Wife," without a recognized star to add to its box-office value, has sufficient strength of plot, comedy situations and dramatic qualities to place it in rank with a good program feature. The title is appropriate and arouses a certain curiosity that will be satisfied. The sub-titling is the weakest feature in the production. Director Siegmann has not lavished money on his production, and in some of the scenes a noticeable attempt to economize is apparent. He has succeeded in shooting some beautiful exteriors.

Kenneth Harlan, playing opposite Miss Myers, is a good type, and gives a good account of Smith. Beatrice Van presents a pretty picture, appreciates the lighter comedy situations, and on one or two occasions looks serious, in a meaning fashion. Pat Calhoun, Mark Fenton and Jack Hutchinson all justify minor roles.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Phillip Smith (Kenneth Harlan) is disowned by his father because he cannot follow his chosen profession. His father insists upon his taking up a business career. Philip takes up writing. He leaves his father's house. Later he saves a child from serious injury, from an explosion, but is himself blinded. Molly Cunningham (Carmel Myers), an assistant to a famous specialist, sees the accident and has Philip taken to her employer's office for treatment. Dr. Allen (Mark Fenton) advises him to go to Switzerland where, he says, is the only specialist who can restore his eyesight. Smith is taken to his room, and Molly follows. She learns where he lives and saves him from suicide.

Molly explains that she has come to ask him to marry her. She explains that she must be married by the next day. She promises to send Smith to Switzerland to be treated. Smith accepts and they are married. He leaves for Switzerland. Smith gives Molly a ring. Molly goes back to Dr. Allen's office. Smith returns, his eyesight restored. On his homeward trip he makes the acquaintance of Mrs. Sutherland (Beatrice Van), a woman of the world. Jack Herrick (Pat Calhoun) is her friend. Mrs. Sutherland rents an apartment within a short distance from Smith's room, and is a frequent visitor. Molly comes to Smith's room disguised as an Italian girl, and insists upon remaining and keeping house for him. Mrs. Sutherland makes love to Smith. She invites Smith for a ride in her new motor car. There is an accident, and Smith is taken to the hospital. He sends for Molly, but Mrs. Sutherland refuses to convey the message to Molly. Molly leaves a bag for Smith and leaves. She returns to Dr. Allen's office. Mrs. Sutherland gives the bag to Smith and he recognizes the ring he had given his wife. He goes to Dr. Allen's office, finds her there, and they are united.

"Eighth Annual Round Up—Pendleton, Oregon"

(Pathe Special—Three Reels)

Reviewed by Peter Milne

THREE reels of Western thrills are offered in this picture of the annual round up at Pendleton, Oregon. Yearly cowpunchers and cow-girls gather at this Mecca of dangerous sport and vie with one another for highest honors in the saddle and, indeed, without it. Their feats of daring will keep the patron of the picture house in one continual state of amazement. There are stunts performed that belie all description. Particularly does the broncho-busting contest offer one sensation after another. Then there is the fine art of bull-dogging steers set forth in all its dangerous detail, the weird races where the rider changes horse and saddle in less time than it takes to tell, and the "stand-up" races in which the participants perform the difficult task of balancing on two horses.

These and kindred exhibitions of the rodeo are all set forth in the picture. It goes without saying that they will provide thrilling entertainment for all classes of audience. The important point to consider in such a picture is the camera-work, which, in this case, is as good, and perhaps even better, than could be expected. The photographer has caught many a dangerous fall, has shot from advantageous points for all the events, while the clarity of his work is at all times sufficient to allow the easy following of the action.

"Beloved Jim"

(Universal—Five Reels)

Reviewed by Joseph L. Kelley

"BELOVED JIM," produced by Universal under the direction of Stuart Payton, is an appropriate offering for this season of the year. Joseph Gerard wrote the story, and Director Payton did the continuity. Priscillia Dean presents the featured feminine, with Harry Carey playing opposite in the leading straight role. Mr. Gerard presents the character role. The thought which

Mr. Gerard has emanating from every scene of this picture, touches a note that will find response in the heart of every man, woman and child who sees this picturized drama. There is one fault that will be noted by all, and that is the lack of sufficient plot material to keep the action of the story forging ahead with dramatic purpose. This is particularly noticeable in the latter reels when Director Payton has been obliged to run some of the scenes to too great lengths. With the action quickened in these last reels, "Beloved Jim" would present a picture that would be accepted by all as sixty-odd minutes of good entertainment at the theatre.

The sub-titler appreciated the lack of action in the final reels, and made a good attempt to supply same or explain it away by means of explanatory titles. Titles are inserted to supplant action which should have been made possible by the author.

Director Payton has been careful and painstaking as to detail in production. This is noticeable in many of the interior scenes, where every detail concerning the ideal Christmas setting, has been carried out. The same is true of the exterior settings. Mr. Payton has succeeded in bringing out the realism with snow effects. The lighting has been done well. The photography is of the best.

Pricillia Dean should be seen more often in feature pictures. Miss Dean presents a pretty picture, is graceful in her movements before the camera, appreciates the finer shades of dramatic art and, what is greatly in her favor, she can brave the close-up. Harry Carey works to advantage in the straight roles, and does credit to the title-role in this picture. Joseph Gerard is a good character type, and presents the heavy role with fine appreciation. J. Morris Foster is at times a bit too affective. In the scenes which called for little emotional acting, he registers a good percentage. Charles Hills Mailes, Frank Deshon, Sydney Deane, Ed. Brown and Mrs. A. E. Whiting are seen in minor roles.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Jim Brockton (Harry Carter) is known as "Beloved" Jim because of his kind heartedness. He favors his nephew, Donald (J. Morris Foster), whom he has reared from a baby. Another faithful companion is his dog. Donald is a wild youth. On Christmas Eve, he with his companions, have imbibed freely and play a practical joke on an unfortunate derelict (Joseph Gerard), who happens in the cafe where they are drinking. "Beloved" Jim enters and takes the unfortunate to his home. Doland is reprimanded. Hahn (Frank Deshon), Darcy (Sydney Deane) and McGregor (Charles Hills Mailes) are known as the "Trinity." They arrange to have Jim meet Mary (Priscilla Dean), an orphan. The next Christmas finds Jim and Mary man and wife. Donald visits them for the first time, and is surprised to find Mary, Jim's wife. Jim is called to Boston on business, and Donald arranges to have Mary accompany him to the theatre. Jim is detained unexpectedly, and finds Donald and Mary in a compromising situation. He turns Donald from his home, the derelict has remained with Jim and acts as his secretary. He informs Jim that his wife is not at fault, and forces Donald to tell the truth, after which confession he and Mary are united in happiness.

"Runaway Romany"

(Ardsley Art Film-Pathe—Five Reels)

Reviewed by Peter Milne

LONG-HERALDED and largely advertised "Runaway Romany" has finally come to the exhibitor offering a new star, Marion Davies, of musical comedy and roof-garden fame. She is pretty to look upon, has a certain amount of appeal in her personality and is sincere, at least, in her effort to bring to life the character which she created with her own pen. Her abilities in the dramatic line are not to be compared with those which have gained her popularity on New York's Broadway, but as an author she has conceived a plot which contains its share of incident that makes for popular approval.

It is the story of a girl, reared among gypsies, who is in reality the long-lost daughter of a millionaire miner. She is adopted by her own father, unaware of her identity. There is the by-plot of the imposter daughter and her ultimate exposure followed by Romany's instatement into the rights that are hers. Miss Davies, who is credited with the scenario as well as the story, has not succeeded as well in knitting her story together as she has in sketching the skeleton of it. Her own part turns out to be more incidental than stellar. The line of action concerning the imposter is but slimly attached to Romany's career while the climax does not possess the punch usually associated with such momentous points. Probably this latter lacking is partially due to the fact that the essentials of "Runaway Romany" are more or less familiar, but skilful treatment has oftentimes made much of mere conventionality.

George W. Lederer stands sponsor for the production furnished "Runaway Romany." An excellent cast has been gathered for the star's support. Joseph Kilgour, Pedro de Cordoba, Matt Moore, Ormi Hawley, and Gladden James are players well known by past performances and in general they acquit themselves creditably under Mr. Lederer's direction. His work in the mechanical details, such as settings, locations, etc., is good, but the episode in the last reel, in which some of the action transpires on a river boat and which is intended as a thrill, is handled in rather poor style.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

"Inky" Ames (Gladden James), theatrical press agent, at a loss for a story, suddenly conceives the idea of passing off Anitra St. Clair (Ormi Hawley), a show girl, as the long-lost daughter of Theodore True (Joseph Kilgour), a wealthy mining man. The necessary birthmark is painted on her arm, and True is well taken in with the result that "Inky" gains a big story. In the West with a band of gypsies is Romany (Marion Davies), who has made the acquaintance of Bud Haskel (Matt Moore), True's manager. On learning that she is to be forced to marry Zinga (Pedro de Cordoba), Roman becomes a runaway. She seeks Bud's protection. He gives her in charge of True, who takes her to the city. She is sent to boarding school, and returns a fine young lady. Hobart (Boyce Combe), True's nephew, a waster, steals from his uncle's safe. Suspicion falls on Romany, but instead of telling the truth she knows she leaves True's home. "Inky" suffers a change of heart, and informs True of his trick, and so exit Anitra. Zinga having trailed Romany from the West, lures her into a trap on board ship. She is rescued by Bud. Zinga, also relenting, gives the information that proves Romany True's daughter.

"The Film Fan"

Reviewed by Peter Milne

"THE FILM FAN," the first of "The Girls We Know" series, concerning the production of which James Montgomery Flagg, the artist is interested in, is a very good comedy, novel, and a welcome change from the general run of such pictures.

The opening scene shows Mr. Flagg at work drawing the "movie fan," the girl who always knows she'd be a much better actress than the highest priced star in the business. Following this the dream of the girl is pictured. She conjures up the life of the star as one of the greatest ease. The director is kind, even subordinate, her working hours are from two until two-thirty if she feels so inclined. Then she wakes up to get a taste of the real article and soon after runs to home and mother. The last scene shows Mr. Flagg completing his picture.

The reel might be described as burlesque, and it is burlesque the humor of which every fan will appreciate. Some of the subtitles are ridiculously funny. Jack Eaton, who directed, has turned out a product that bears marks of evidence that he was having just as good a time at his work as he expects an audience to have while watching it. It is done solely in a spirit of fun and it is our opinion that his work will be rewarded by the appreciation of all who witness it.

"Her Second Husband"

(Mutual—Five Reels)

THERE is something extremely satisfying about this story. When one gets up to leave there is no mystification, no uneasy wonder as to what it was all about, no feeling that the producers had said, "Go to, we've got to have something ready for our program this week," and had thrown sets around and made actors prance about until they had the cameraman shoot five thousand feet of film. Though the plot is very simple in its structure there is never a moment when the interest lags, for the story of Helen and John Kirby, their tribulations and their love for each other is a theme as big as life and one that finds its potentialities in every home.

Edna Goodrich as Helen Kirby and William B. Davidson as her spouse, with a dash of sporting blood in his veins, play the leading roles with fine interpretation. Miss Goodrich does some of the best work she has done on the screen and incidentally displays a number of gowns that ought to interest the women. Richard R. Neill as Richard Stone and Miriam Folger as Celeste Valdane, the pair that wreck the Kirby home, are well cast and do commendable work.

In short, "Her Second Husband" is an all-round good picture that ought to turn out pleased audiences wherever it is shown.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Helen and John Kirby think the world of each other, but their taste as to friends varies, and when John finally invites Richard Stone and a chicken friend of the latter to dinner Helen takes exception. She doesn't like them and tells her husband so. John is incensed when she leaves the table, and refuses to play the hostess. The two quarrel, and think that relief lies in divorce. After the tangle is started each is too proud to give in to the other. Helen seeks employment, and, finally driven to desperation, accepts a position with Richard Stone, a man of questionable reputation, who was her husband's former friend. John learns of his wife's whereabouts, and tries to get her to come back to him, but fails. He then warns Stone to always treat her like a lady or be careful. Later, however, Stone tries to take advantage of her, and, after escaping from his clutches, she secures a position as a model in a millinery establishment. Kirby accidentally discovers where she is working, and kidnaps her. He marches her in before a justice of the peace, and after the proceedings is her second husband.

FROM the narrow minded prejudices of a small town "pillar" and the selfishness of his son which predominates, when he is free from the stilted environment of his home, C. Gardner Sullivan has evolved a melodrama that possesses the elements of popular appeal in average proportions. The scenario done by George Elwood Jenks is not exactly what Mr. Sullivan would have provided himself, yet it serves to bring out the lights of the story, its elements of prejudice, selfishness, love and hate, that combined go to make a picture of interest and appeal.

Margery Wilson gives an appealing characterization of the little mother, so wickedly deceived by the man, Roy Hanford. This part is well carried by Darrel Foss. Walt Whitman is a convincing old hypocrite and Arthur Moon a good type for the traveling salesman aptly named "Breeze" Ballard.

E. Mason Hopper's direction is consistently good throughout the entire five reels. Charles Stumar photographed.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Driven from his country home by the narrow minded prejudices of his father (Walt Whitman) and wife (Laura Sears) Roy Hanford (Darrel Foss) seeks solace in the saloons of a big city. He is found by "Breeze" Ballard (Arthur Moon), leading salesman of a hardware company, who, out of the goodness of his heart finds him a position as bookkeeper with the concern. Jeannie McGregor (Margery Wilson), a clerk in the office takes an interest in Roy and is largely responsible for his regeneration. When he proposes Roy's weakness shows itself when he swears to his father that he was never married to Jeannie. He returns to his home but is still unhappy. He takes to drink again and eventually sustains a fall which kills him. In the meantime Jeannie has found refuge with a kindly old lady, Mrs. Dawson (Anna Dodge), near the Hanford home. When the elder Ballard discovers her presence he determines to drive her away, but the arrival of Breeze, who makes known the true facts of the cast and scores Ballard and his ilk for their impossible prejudices, brings about a happier ending.

"Salt of the Earth"

(Edison-Pefection Pictures—Five Reels)

Reviewed by Peter Milne

"THE SALT OF THE EARTH" is a moderate comedy drama which Peter B. Kyne originally prepared in short story form for the Saturday Evening Post. It belongs to his series dealing with the adventures of Sinful John and Snowshoe Sam and these two old characters brought to life by Russell Simpson and William Wadsworth respectively are responsible for a good deal of quiet humor. Their activities in "Salt of the Earth" are confined to meting out justice to a crooked promoter who has swindled one of their friends. They return the compliment in a similar manner—by salting a mine and convincing him that it is the easiest proposition in the world.

There is also the love interest provided for by Marjorie, daughter of the swindled pal, and Wallace, son of the swindler, who, however, has nothing to do with his father's underhanded methods. So "The Salt of the Earth" provides a variety of entertainment and it is well welded together. The staging given it by the Edison company is simple yet adequate.

Peggy Adams, a vivacious little lead, and Chester Barnett handle the roles of the two lovers to good advantage.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Kincaid (Ivan Christie), mining prospecter is swindled in a deal with Hyde (William Chatterton), a promotor, and shortly afterward dies. His daughter, Marjorie (Peggy Adams), her faith in Wallace Hyde (Chester Barnett) shattered because of his father's duplicity, refuses to renew his acquaintance when he arrives at the mining town as doctor of the small hospital there. Sinful John (Russell Simpson) and Snowshoe Sam (William Wadsworth), old men who worship Marjorie, decide that Hyde must be paid back in kind. So they succeed in selling him a "salted" mine. The money they turn over to Marjorie, saying that they long owed it to her father, and assuring the girl that Wallace is entirely innocent of any misdeed, depart for another quarter of the West, leaving the young people alone.

THE caprices of romance, the suspense of the eternal triangle, the thrills of battle of hate and a sensational finale, a finale that in another day might have been here glaringly heralded as the "great saw mill scene" are present in "Blue Jeans," Metro's special production of the old melodrama by Joseph Arthur featuring Viola Dana. It is a picture that is always entertaining, that contains moments of power and a last minute adjustment of happiness that is executed with the greatest skill. This saw mill scene is one of the best climaxes that melodrama ever possessed. It is so realistic that the blood curdles. It is the type of scene that will make women want to cover their eyes and breathe a deep sigh of relief when hero and heroine are at last united. It shows the hero lying unconscious on the truck of a circular saw, momentarily nearing the keen edge of the revolving blade; the heroine locked outside vainly trying to batter down the door—it is a wonderful bit of sensationalism, well timed and so realistic that one can almost hear the screech of the saw.

"Blue Jeans" offers Viola Dana the part of June, one which gives full play to her varied capabilities. She has never been quite so appealing, so childish and unaffected, so mature and sympathetic as in this role. Robert Walker is a most satisfactory hero and Clifford Bruce and Sally Crute as deep dyed plotters as ever trod the studio boards.

John Collins directed the picture from a scenario prepared by June Mathis and Charles A. Taylor. His work included presenting the picture in an atmosphere suggestive of the latter part of the past century and he has created and preserved this atmosphere admirably well. An old-fashioned bicycle serves to throw the spectator back a few decades at the very opening of the picture and old costumes and settings serve to carry the impression through to a successful finish. Mr. Collins' work in other departments is always adequate.

The subtitles of "Blue Jeans" are unusual. A frame from the action has been thrown up as a background for the printed words. Thus has the artist endeavored to keep the spectator ever in the atmosphere of the picture but the method is not successful. Along comes a subtitle with its background of still picture. The action has stopped. A character speaks in the subtitle and then it is back to the moving action. Of course persons do not come to a standstill when they speak and so the method is not realistic. Perhaps a more definite description of these subtitles may be gotten by comparing them with a picture that suddenly gets stuck in the machine.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Perry Bascom (Robert Walker) arrives in the town of Rising Sun to take charge of the Bascom saw mills, but owing to the disrepute brought on the name by a distant relative poses as Jim Nelson. He first makes the acquaintance of June (Viola Dana), a homeless little waif who has been turned away from the state orphan asylum. He places her in charge of the Tutwilers (Russell Simpson and Margaret McWade), kindly old people of the town. June is the immediate cause of antagonism between Perry and Ben Boone (Clifford Bruce), political leader and bully of the town. Sue Eudaly (Sally Crute), who, it develops, had married Perry though already in possession of a husband, comes to Rising Sun. As Perry is running for congressman against Boone she blackmails him, threatening to reveal his true identity. On the eve of election she does so and also blackens his character by telling of their marriage. Perry, who has married June in secret, finds all turned against him save his trusting little wife. Even the Tutwilers, who realize that June is none other than their own granddaughter, child of the disreputable relative of Perry's, doubt him. The old man drives June from his home. Perry departs to obtain proof of Sue's earlier marriage and June suffers the hardships of poverty until his return. A year later he arrives with the proof. Learning how Boone has mistreated June in his absence, he rushes to the saw mill to punish him. A fight ensues and Boone knocks Perry unconscious. Placing him on the lumber truck, he starts the saw going and escapes. June arrives in the nick of time to save him from a horrible death.

Henry Hallam in the part of the staunch friend of Perry's, Colonel Henry Clay Risener, completes the cast with a fine performance.

"IN THE BALANCE" is an adaptation from E. Phillips Oppenheim's novel, "The Hillman." It is presented by Vitagraph and was produced under the direction of Paul Scardon. Earle Williams and Grace Darmond have the principal roles. In this feature, Vitagraph has an above-the average production. All classes will receive this screen version of Oppenheim's work, with a welcome. It is particularly suited to the theatre patronized by the more discriminating classes. There are sufficient melodramatic situations to insure this production a good reception by the class who desire action rather than well defined dramatic technique. The author has created sufficient plot material and dramatic situations for a feature of six or seven reels. By cutting it to five, as Vitagraph has done, the continuity has been affected and a noticeable break between several scenes is noted in the picture as it was shown for review.

With this one exception, "In the Balance," will stand as one of the best features Vitagraph has done and it reflects credit on the ability of Director Scardon. The detailed work in production is an outstanding feature. Not one detail has been overlooked. The disrupted continuity is the result of forced cutting, not the fault of direction. The drama presents a powerful theme and certain bits of originality in plot construction that distingnishes it as better-than-the-average pictorial.

The character of the "woman hater" has been given prominence by the author and the contrast it strikes with the character susceptible to the charms of women, is striking and gives rise to strong, convincing dramatic moments. A touch of the suggestive is intimated by a subtitle, and Director Scardon has given the slightest hint of it in a scene that in itself, might convey little if any thought of wrong.

The sub-titles have been done with appreciation for the more subtle, underlying motives which the author has suggested. The photography is clear and the exterior scenes disclose shots that would give due credit to the landscape artist.

Earle Williams, in the featured role, takes advantage of the many opportunities given him to portray dramatic action. He meets every situation with dramatic skill. Grace Darmond, opposite Mr. Williams in the leading feminine role, presents a striking picture and is seen in one of her best portrayals before the camera. Miss Darmond acts with an easy grace of movement and expression that registers. Never affective and never "acting," she makes Mr. Oppenheim's character of Louise Maurel a

Dear Sir:—

The Chamber of Commerce has indeed made a splendid move in securing a location man to look after the visiting Moving Picture Companies, and I personally want to express my appreciation for the assistance it has rendered me.

It has been my pleasure to work in Jacksonville perhaps longer than any other director up to date, having spent six winters and one summer here. When I arrived on this trip, I wasn't sure I could get exactly what I wanted, in which case it would have necessitated my going elsewhere. I menioned this to your representative who called to see me, and he immediately took me to an ideal location—exactly suited to my story—that I never thought existed here, thereby saving the Company considerable time, which means money.

Personally I want to thank the Chamber of Commerce for this consideration, and I know that other visiting Companies will appreciate having some one look after them in a like manner. To have a welcome and helping hand greet you on your arrival, one that will manage to get you what you want, is surely a strong incentive to bring other companies to Jacksonville. This should appeal especially to those directors who might otherwise hesitate in coming because they do not know the city.

Sincerely yours,

Louise Maurel (Grace Darmond) is on her way to meet Prince of Seyre (Denton Vane) at his country estate. Her motor car meets with an accident near the home of John Strangeway (Earle Williams) and his brother, Stephen (Robert Gaillard). Stephen is a woman-hater. John offers to assist Louise and invites her to his home. She accepts his invitation. Stephen is annoyed for he has lived up to a tradition of his family that a woman should never enter his door. Louise returns to the city after being advised by John to shun the Prince. John soon follows. Louise is rehearsing for the leading part in a musical comedy show. John finds her at rehearsal. Her friend, Sophy Gerard (Miriam Miles) likes John. The Prince arranges a party and has John meet a notorious dancer, thinking to take his attention from Louise.

John proposes to Louise. The Prince makes a remark in public that compromises Louise. John asks her if what was said, was true. She does not deny it. He returns to the hills. REX BEACH'S "The Auction Block," produced by the Rex Beach company and released through Goldwyn, is a type of picture that none can avoid and all will enjoy. The title is a power in itself, it is one of the best works of Mr. Beach. Nor does it have to rely upon its popularity as a work of fiction for its praises, as it adapts itself to the screen. There is the appealing note, ever present, its dominance standing ready to demand reserved attention. Through it all runs the vein of suggestiveness, but handled with such a degree of subtleness by author, director and cast, that there is no loop-hole left for the finer sensibilities of any one to accept this mute appeal, as in any way, offensive. In "The Auction Block," the screen has been given a production that will hold from the flash of the title to the final dissolve. Not because it is a perfect production—it isn't—but it has the touch of the human which even though it may be the touch that some hold, should be reserved for fireside discussion, nevertheless is human, and what is human and natural whether it displays the shortcomings of the human race or its goodness, is, when dramatically portrayed, a subject to inspire interest and afford entertainment.

The cast which Director Larry Trimble has assembled is, with possibly the exception of one of its constituents, one of the strongest, most capable collection of players ever seen before the camera. And this is conceded with the fact in mind, that not one face seen in this production reflects the countenance of a star. Excellent types, strong convincing action, dramatic ability, natural movement and grace—all are seen here in true form. Ruby DeRemer is the featured player. Only flashes of the picture call for strong dramatic action from Miss DeRemer. She is not an emotional actress but one who reflects the person of Rex Beach's Lorelei Knight, with a true-to-life semblance. Miss DeRemer is an excellent type for the part and gives a performance that assures an audience that she appreciates every moment in the life of Lorelei Knight. Florence Deshon is rightly entitled to second honors, and if we sit in judgment with the purely dramatic as the decisive quality, Miss Deshon is entitled to first honors. She reaches the high spots in dramatic action, is emotional not to excess, and idealizes the author's creation of Lilas Lynn. Miss Deshon acts under the handicap of being always in the disfavor of her audience because she portrays the villainess. Lilas Lynn has reason to seek revenge and this fact should excuse her action. In the heavy character role Miss Deshon gives an excellent performance and one that will stand as par excellence. Dorothy Wheeler is the one member of the cast who overacts. Florence Johns in a minor role, does well. Tom Powers is seen in his usual good form. In the juvenile role Mr. Powers gives a performance that will defy adverse criticism. Walter Hitchcock registers in every flash. Alec Francis is a fine type, acts with appreciation and scores in every scene. George Cooper, seen in his usual portrayal of the "tough-guy," gives a fine performance. Mr. Cooper has few equals in the portrayal of the rough stuff. Bernard Randall is another excellent type and does not have to rest for his laurels on this point alone. He convinces in every scene and registers with every movement. Charles Graham and Peter Lang are in minor roles. It is a noticeable fact that the types have been selected with certain known characters in mind.

"The Auction Block" will register a good percentage wherever shown. Seven reels of drama that will find response in the most varied audience is shown. If cut to six, Mr. Trimble would have given to the screen a better production. Nothing has been spared in staging the production. Some of the sets used are wonders for detail and justified extravagance. David Calcagni appreciates position of camera and has operated the camera with the eye of an artist. The lighting effects were in evidence. The technical man was on the job.

"The Fair Barbarian"

(Lasky-Paramount—Five Reels)

Reviewed by Peter Milne

AS picture comedy goes, "The Fair Barbarian," featuring Vivian Martin, is excellent. It is full of spontaneous humor, breezy subtitles and good quick-action, and because of these merits so far surpasses the average five-reel light number of the day that a comparison is quite impossible. Miss Martin's Octavia Bassett is a most fascinating character and she plays the part with that fine degree of appreciation that stamps her an actress of wide versatility. Here she is the fashionable, tomboyish, slangy American cousin who drops like a bomb in the midst of the impossible quiet of an old English village and startles the various town characters out of their very skins. Her career is one shock after another to the natives and each shock is a laugh for the audience.

The story is from the pen of Frances Hodgson Burnett, who has given many gems to the screen, most of them of a more serious nature. "The Fair Barbarian," aside from its comedy and the lavish opportunities it gives to Miss Martin, contains an interesting thread of plot that knits the various incidents together into a firm whole. It was prepared for the screen by Edith M. Kennedy and directed by Robert Thornby, each of whom have done their share of the work after a fashion that leaves little or no room for improvement.

The support includes an array of character comedy types. Jane Wolff as an English aunt, William Hutchison as the minister and Josephine Crowell as the conventional Lady Theobold contribute effectively to the comedy of the picture. The many remaining roles are filled by players of true ability.

So if it is comedy that patrons crave, just permit "The Fair Barbarian" to lighten the screen before their eyes. It is high in its class and it is wholesome, and with Miss Martin in the title role should meet with great success.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Octavia Bassett (Vivian Martin) takes leave of her father (G. H. Geldert) and her fiance, Jack Belasys (Douglas MacLean), to visit her aunt (Jane Wolff), in a backward English town. This she succeeds in throwing generally out of order. All the old ladies take a dislike to her, but all the men capitulate, even the minister (William Hutchison). She succeeds in engineering the romance of Lucia (Mae Busch), granddaughter of a severe old lady, and Burmistone (Al Paget), a manufacturer, to a successful conclusion despite the interference offered by divers persons. Up to this time Captain Barold (Charlie Gerrard) believes himself in the good graces of Octavia, but the sudden arrival of her American fiance serves to definitely alter his opinion, and Octavia departs, leaving the good English people wondering whether they have been hit by a cyclone or an earthquake.

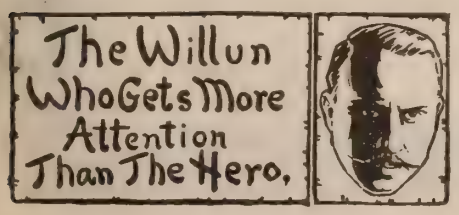
Gordon Laurence Goes to Learn Flying Game

Gordon Laurence, sales promotion manager for the Greater Vitagraph distributing organization, of which Walter W. Irwin is general manager, has received orders to proceed to the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, where he will receive preliminary instruction in the theory of flying, the mechanics of airplane engines and other branches of aviation, after which he will begin practical training for his work in the service of Uncle Sam. He has been slated for provisional commission in the Naval Reserve Flying Corps.

Mr. Laurence is one of the best known of the younger men in the film business, having been with the Vitagraph distributing organization almost from the day of its organization more than two years ago.

Select Makes Office Changes in Denver



It was announced last week from Denver, Colo., that Hugh Rennie has resigned as manager of the Select Pictures Corporation in that city, and has been succeeded by H. L. Knappen, well known in that territory, in the South and on the Pacific Coast.

Mr. Knappen was formerly manager for Pathe in Denver, and later served in the same capacity for General Film in Atlanta and the International in San Francisco.

It is announced that Mr. Rennie has begun his new duties with a trip covering Utah as the manager of U. S. pictures in the territory coverel by the Foursquare Corporation of Colorado.

Moore Manages First National in Washington

The exchange office of the First National Exhibitors' Circuit in Washington, with Tom Moore as its manager, is located over the foyer of the Strand Theatre. A commodious suite of rooms has been constructed where the forces are already doing excellent business. Mr. Moore reports that the Mme. Petrova feature has a large advance booking, and that other stars on the First National's program are being sought as eagerly.

Here and There

Exhibitors of Omaha, Neb., heard last week that Frank B. Rodgers, national organizer for the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America, has been named manager of the Standard exchanges in Chicago.

In Minneapolis recently, E. H. Golstein, general manager of Universal exchanges, was the guest of Ben Judell, Laemmle Film Service manager there. In Detroit Mr. Goldstein appointed C. G. Kingsley manager of the Bluebird office to succeed W. W. Drumm.

F. W. Thiele has been appointed manager of the Triangle Exchange in Omaha, Neb., to succeed George F. Bromley, who has come East.

Barney Rosenthal, of the St. Louis Universal office, was called to Chicago recently to confer with E. H. Goldstein, general manager of Universal exchanges.

Foursquare Pictures Corporationin Denver has its offices there in full operation. The Princess theatre there is taking its first two releases.

D. T. McElhinny, of the Fox road forces out of Denver, has returned to the mile-high town from a trip in Black Hills territory, and has departed for a New Mexico journey.

W. S. Rand, Denver manager for Goldwyn, was last week in Idaho and Utah on business.

Clifford Announces New "Shorty" Film

In accordance with a statement made relative to the "Shorty Hamilton Comedies," consisting of twelve five-reel comedy-dramas per year, the W. H. Clifford Photoplay Company now announces another release entitled "The Snail," a Chinese-American story. From its very beginning and continuing through the entire unfolding of the tale, there is promised a rapid-fire of action and mirth-provoking incidents with the star in the lead. There is said to be an absence of the slap-stick methods or the over-acting in order to get a laugh.

The W. H. Clifford Photoplay Company operates in its own studios and laboratory and with every modern facility.

The marketing of the "Shorty Hamilton" series is being negotiated in the Ernest Shipman offices, 17 West 44th Street, both for the domestic and foreign rights.

Lewis Finishes Work on "Hidden Hand"

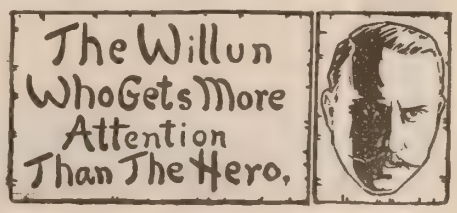
Sheldon Lewis, probably the best known villain on the screen, who is at present playing such a part in the Pathe serial "The Hidden Hand," finishes work on this picture the first of the year. He plans taking a short rest before looking into the various offers he has received. Mr. Lewis has taken the heavy part in previous Pathe serials. In the title role of "The Iron Claw" he created a lasting impression, while in one of the very first serials, "The Perils of Pauline," he laid the foundation for his present success.

Laemmle Service Joins Universal in Chicago

E. H. Goldstein, general manager of Universal Exchanges, returned recently from a two weeks' trip to Minneapolis, Detroit, Indianapolis and Chicago. In the latter place Mr. Goldstein achieved the consolidation of the Laemmle Film Service and the Universal Film Exchange, and saw the two factors housed under one roof at 220 South State street, before returning East. I. L. Lesserman will be in charge of the Universal office. C. R. Plough will father Bluebird affairs and I. Van Ronkel will handle Jewel products, and Alice Howell comedies.

"Exhibitors in Chicago, through the consolidation of the Laemmle Film Service and the Universal Film Exchange, will be insured the very finest degree of service," declared Mr. Goldstein, commenting on this change.

Edison Releases Flagg Social Satires



As announced in a previous issue of Motion Picture News, the Edison studios expect to release shortly a series of one-reel "social satires" to be known as "Girls You Know," written and produced under the direction of James Montgomery Flagg, the artist.

The series will consist of twelve life character sketches, each featuring a different type of attractive American girl personally selected for the part by Mr. Flagg.

The first of the satires will be released on January 2, and will be called "The Screen Fan." The balance of the series are to be released at two-week intervals, the titles of some of which are "The Bride," "The Superstitious Girl," "The Man Eater," "The Art Bug" and "The Blasé Miss."

TAKE IT FROM ME

TITAN COMEDIES are the one best bet of the exhibitor

("Unquestionably the best line of one-reel comedies ever filmed."—Halperin, Variety).

In addition to the patriotic phase of these pictures (a fund realized goes to the American Military Relief Association) there are several straight-from-the-shoulder, practical reasons why they stand AT THE TOP. It's in the MATERIAL.

("Funnier and more artistic than any comedies I have ever seen."—Jack Lait, Chicago Tribune).

Here is the material: The principals are the best talent available—such names as Raymond Hitchcock, Ernest Truex, Josephine Harriman, Charles Grapewin. A high-priced, trained writer, Jo. Swerling, has written all the scripts. A high-priced, trained director, Rex Weber, has supervised all the productions. A high-priced, trained camera-man has turned out all the photography.

("Will make history for one-reelers."— L. Albright, Motion Picture News).

We haven't sloughed anything because these are one-reelers. There is as much care—as much thought in these comedies as in the most pretentious of spectacle pictures.

("Photography, direction, theme and execution in every one of the TITAN comedies are superb."—Einar Graf, Chicago Herald).

We're preparing to release. If you want to hear more, just drop a line to

"The Hand of the Hun"

(Harry Raver—Four Reels)

Reviewed by Joseph L. Kelley

"THE HAND OF THE HUN" was produced in Italy under the direction of Giovanni Pastrone, who was responsible for "Cabiria." The North American rights are controlled by Harry Raver. It is in four reels.

The opening reel is devoted to straight dramatic work, showing the interior of a household in Italy and its occupants waiting patiently for news from their loved-ones at the front. An old man, his daughter-in-law and a youngster are shown. The long expected letter comes and while the old man reads it, the description which his son, at the front, gives of the happenings, is portrayed in pictures. He tells of the heroism of a little Italian boy in defending his mother against the attacks of the Germans. The youngster at home gets an inspiration from the recital of the deeds of the little boy at the front and goes to the nursery and arrays his toy soldiers in battle array.

Tired from play the youngster falls asleep and dreams of the battles between his toy soldiers.

Here, the producer has made the youngster's dream serve as the basis of the action of the remaining three reels of the picture. The toy soldiers are endowed with life, the Germans on the one side and the Allies on the other. They prepare for war. Trenches are dug, guns are set, the air squadron is shown, the use of poisonous gases, and the dropping of bombs from the aeroplanes—all enacted in miniature with hundreds of toy soldiers, come to life, and engaging in all of the hazardous pursuits of war. The youngster dreams and his dreams become a reality.

As a novelty, this production should interest any and all audiences. A process similar to the ones employed in animating cartoons, has been used, but the animation and the drama have been combined in this production and herein lies the novelty. The action is life-like, the miniature settings are marvelous for their true proportions and perspective and the effects obtained in reproducing the action on a battle field, are due praise.

The cast is composed of foreign artists. Allesandro Bernard, Ernesto Gemelli and Teresa Margoni, three members of the cast which enacted "Cabiria," are seen in this production. Gabriele Caruso, a youngster of about twelve years, is an artist before the camera and is due high praise for his work in the straight dramatic scenes of this production.

Some beautiful exterior scenes, taken in the mountainous region of Italy, are shown. The photography is clear. The production is recommended for the program of small-town and big-town exhibitors. It is a corking good feature for the children and will be enjoyed by the grown-ups.

AN UNHONORED CRAFTSMAN

THERE'S a man we never see
Given no publicity
Working on so you may view
All the movies that are new
Without flickering or break
Though his tired arms may ache
Ever watching through his "peep"
Into darkness broad and deep
Save where penetrating ray
Lights the screen as bright as day
Toiling ever on his feet
In the blinding glare and heat
Threading film in a machine
That projects it on the screen
Keeping carbon lights aglow
Cleaning after every show
Looking out for censor's seals
Or rewinding all the reels
Mending breaks by clever patches
Blamed for laboratory scratches
Unseen is the part that's his
This unhonored craftsman is

CHOOSE YOUR PROJECTOR AS YOU CHOOSE YOUR HELP

YOU buy labor on one standard only—ABILITY—to deliver the service you want.

Then we say: "Choose your Projector as you choose your help." Mere possession brings neither profit nor satisfaction. You want projection Service—A Machine that will do the greatest amount of work for the least expenditure of money, energy and time.

If this is the basis of your choice, MOTIOGRAPH must command consideration.

Perfect projection with small upkeep cost has always been the principle behind MOTIOGRAPH CONSTRUCTION.

Its SERVICE is spoken of by every user.

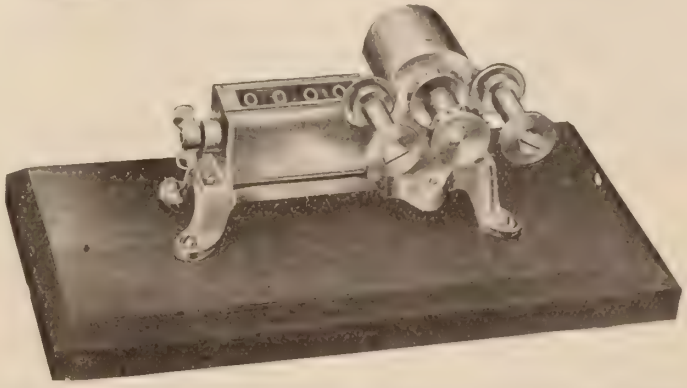
ACCESSORY SUGGESTIONS



See Note Below

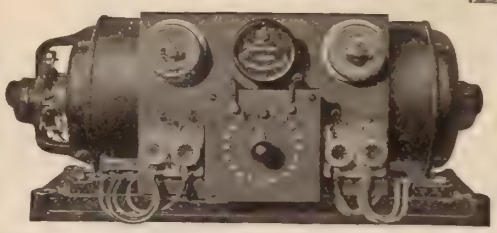
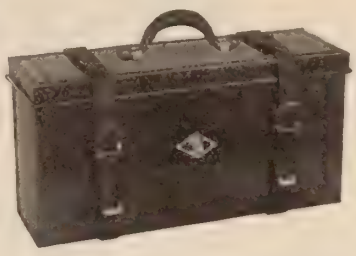
THE illustration on the right shows a double dissolve stereopticon, a necessity in the up-to-date operating room.

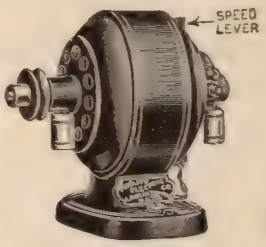
FILM measuring machine. Capacity is 10,000 feet; can be reset to zero at will; sprocket stops immediately after film passes through, eliminating any error of footage.



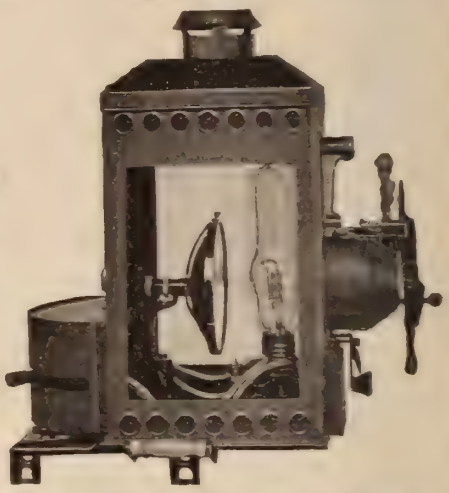
AN attractive set of brass frames will brighten your lobby and attract the passer-by.



THIS Pop Corn Machine is practically automatic; requires little attention and is a money maker for many theatres where it is now installed.

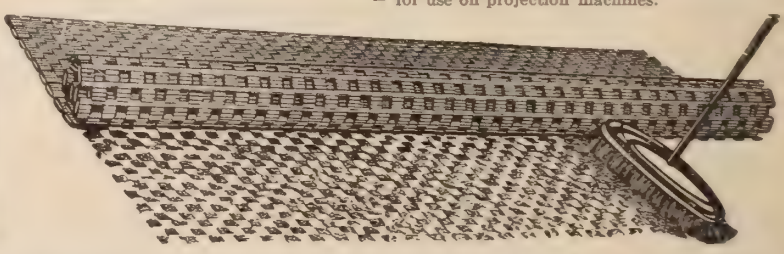


THE above shows a program printed in three colors; ample room on the inside for your entire week's bill. Also enough room for local advertising.



THIS device produces a D. C. arc with all its advantages from A. C. current.

FIBRE lined metal carrying case, made in sizes to accommodate any number of reels.



PROJECTOR A. C. Motor. The lever as shown in the illustration provides a wide speed range.

INCANDESCENT lamp house with lamps for use on projection machines.

AN enclosed film rewinder, approved by the National Board of Fire Underwriters.

FLOOR Mats and Runners made of remnants of selected sole leather. Can be used on both sides and give long wear. Made in all sizes and shapes.

NOTE—You will no doubt want some of these useful accessories in your business. We shall be glad to send you the price and the names and addresses of firms selling these articles. Address your letter to Service Dept., Motion Picture News, Inc., 729 Seventh Avenue, New York.

N. A.-M. F. L. and Exchanges

LAST week letters were sent out to the exchange managers of the various large exchange systems calling attention to the National Anti-Misframe League and the strength which it is assuming in the industry.

Three replies from these letters have come in. They show that the endeavors of our organization are appreciated and that the co-operation which we are lending to improve the physical condition of film has a definite value, which was inevitable.

The first two of these letters to be received are printed below:

December 10, 1917.

Mr. E. K. Gillett,
MOTION PICTURE NEWS, Inc.,
729 Seventh avenue,
New York City.

Dear Mr. Gillett: I have for acknowledgment your esteemed favor of the 6th instant in reference to the National Anti-Misframe League.

The improvement of service to exhibitors, and through them to the public, is indeed a step in the right direction. To have a paper of the importance of MOTION PICTURE NEWS take this up, and obtain the co-operation of operators of America in the movement, assures its success. There is no doubt that it will eradicate some of the difficulties which have been experienced in the past and which still exist today in the exhibition of motion pictures.

In speaking for the exchange managers of the Paramount and Artcraft Pictures Corporation, I want to say that we appreciate the co-operation of the operators as well as that of the MOTION PICTURE NEWS, and we stand ready at all times when called upon to do our share of anything necessary and consistent to the attaining of the object of the National Anti-Misframe League.

It is the earnest desire of our company to perfect to the highest degree the caliber of the service rendered to the exhibitor in every particular.

One of the most important things that we can accomplish is to give the exhibitor, regardless of the size of his community and theatre, films in good condition.

Although we have tried to establish an efficient Film Inspection Department in every exchange and our exchange managers receive daily reports as to the condition of all films at each exchange, most of this work is of little value unless we receive the full co-operation of every operator who exhibits our pictures.

We believe that all exhibitors should encourage their operators.

We wish to extend our gratitude to the operators comprising the National Anti-Misframe League as well as the MOTION PICTURE NEWS in this enterprise, and we pledge them our hearty support.

Very truly yours,
(Signed) A. LICHTMAN,
General Sales Manager,
Paramount Pictures Corporation.

December 10, 1917.

Mr. E. Kendall Gillett,
MOTION PICTURE NEWS, Inc.,
729 Seventh avenue.

My Dear Mr. Gillett: The writer was very happy to receive your letter of December 6, and learn of the good work being done by the National Anti-Misframe League.

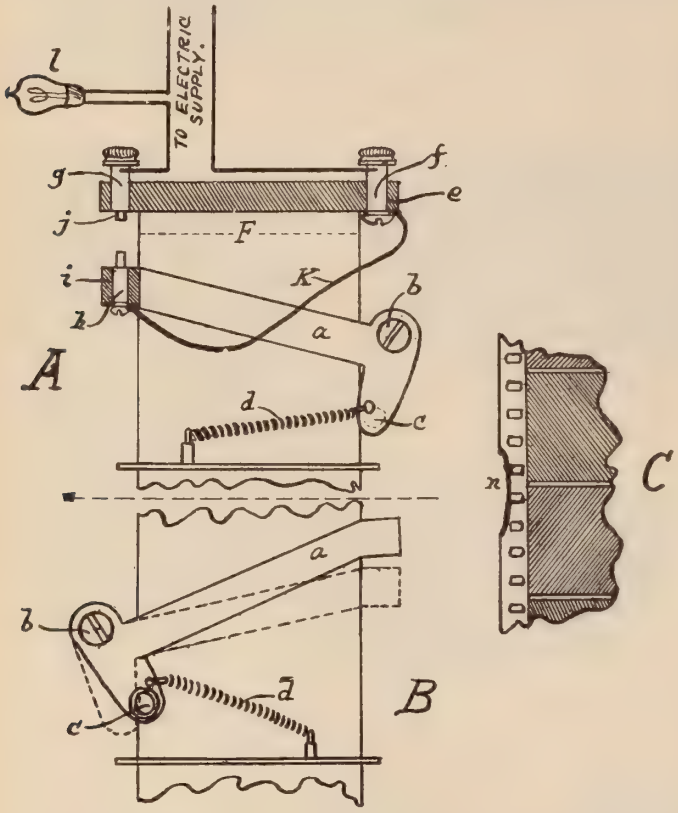
We wish to state that the New York Exchange of the General Film Company will gladly co-operate with the operators so that their film will be in as perfect condition as possible.

Since the 1st of November we have added four inspectors to our crew, and will at all times adopt any method which will tend to improve conditions.

Very truly yours,
(Signed) P. A. BLOCH,
Resident Manager,
General Film Company.

There is no need of comment. The letters speak for themselves. The men who sign the letters would be glad to receive complaints direct if there are any to be made against their exchanges, or they can be made through the National Anti-Misframe League as in the past.

There is real progress and we feel sure that exchange managers of all the various systems will co-operate just as enthusiastically as have those from whom letters have already been received.



E. K. GILLETT.

Equipment Operating — Projection — Questions Answered

An Automatic Change-Over Signal

THROUGH the efforts of the National Anti-Misframe League, and by the co-operation of its members, marked improvement in the condition of films has become manifest in recent months, but the removal of misframes and the elimination of bad spots are not the only self-imposed tasks which confront the careful operator who desires to produce a flawless performance on the screen. A source of great annoyance to the operator who takes pride in his work is the punched and mutilated condition in which the ends of the films of multiple-reel subjects are frequently found.

This practice of punching holes, or making scratch marks, near the end of the film is, as is generally known, indulged in by careless operators who desire some readily visible signal which will apprise them that the reel being projected is nearly run through the machine—this being the cue to "change over" from one machine to the next. The punch mark evil has assumed such extensive proportions within the last year that numerous methods have been proposed for notifying the operator when a reel is about concluded, and very numerous indeed have been the requests from managers and operators for the publication of some method of accomplishing this end without sensible damage to the film.

The Society of Motion Picture Engineers, at their New York meeting in October, adopted what is probably the best change-over signal that can be devised, i. e., concluding each reel with a sub-title and commencing the succeeding reel with the same sub-title. From his cue sheet and a strict observance of the screen, the operator then knows when the end of a reel is imminent, and by starting the other machine the identical sub-titles are momentarily superimposed on the screen while the first projector is unobtrusively stopped. The practical value of this suggestion of the Engineers is self-evident, but as it will probably be some time before the suggestion is adopted by all laboratories and producers of multiple-reel pictures, we are prompted to submit to operators and other readers a description of an automatic mechanical (or electrical) device whereby the operator may be notified, at any desired distance from the end of a reel, that the reel is nearing its conclusion.

The device consists, roughly speaking, of a small electric light globe mounted on the projector mechanism or near the lookout port of the projection-room. The globe is controlled by the film in its passage throught the projector, and may be caused to light up momentarily at any desired instant during the running of a film, through the medium of a shallow notch cut out along the extreme edge of the film. No originality is claimed for the device to be described, as it has been long employed on the Duplex positive printer, and is reproduced herewith through the courtesy of the Duplex Machine Company. The device can be constructed by an operator or mechanic of average ability, and may be installed on several standard makes of projection machines. It is shown diagrammatically in the annexed figure, in which A represents the device as attached to the mechanism at the back of the aperture plate (between the aperture plate and projection lens); B is a view of the device as it would appear from the film side of the aperture if the aperture plate were removed; C is a section of film showing the manner in which the edge is to be notched in order that it may operate the device (and light the globe momentarily) as the film traverses the aperture plate. In Figures A and B like reference letters designate like parts of the attachment.

Referring, therefore, to Fig. A, an L-shaped metal arm a is pivoted to the mechanism at one side of the aperture plate by the screw b. At the lowest extremity of the arm a is a hardened steel boss c which bears against the edge of the film strip in its passage across the aperture plate. The arm a is normally (when no film is in the machine) forced up by the spring d to the position shown in Fig. B, but when the edge of the film strip is in contact with the boss c the arm is maintained in the position shown by Fig. A. In the figures, the distance F represents the full width of a standard cine film, although it is drawn slightly oversize to facilitate the description.

At the top of the mechanism, or in any convenient location, is mounted a plate e, of rubber, fiber, or other insulating material, and attached to the insulating plate are the binding-posts f and g. From the binding posts f and g, wires are run to any convenient source of electric current, and to one of these wires a small incandescent lamp l is connected as shown.

Returning, now, to the arm a, it will be noted that it is provided at the uppermost extremity with a metal contact point h mounted in a piece of insulating material i. By further reference to Fig. A, it will also be seen that the binding post g is provided at its lower end with a metal contact j. To complete the mechanical arrangements, the contact point h (on the arm a) is connected to the lower end of the binding post f by the wire k.

If, now, we take the film to be projected, and cut a shallow, curved notch along the edge as shown by Fig. C (where n is the notch), it is apparent that when the notch n comes into contact with the boss c (which bears against the edge of the film) the arm a will be momentarily released and will be forced upwards by the spring d, so that a contact will be made between the metal contact points h and j. The lamp l will therefore be lighted for an instant, giving the operator his change-over signal, and the length of time which the lamp remains lighted will be governed by the length of the notch n, in the edge of the film.

The device will also be put into operation if the boss c comes into contact with other notches, or places where the edge of the film is torn away, but can do no harm to the torn edge of the film as it is round and very smooth. It is also assumed that a competent operator will watch the performance with sufficient attention that he will know when the reel is nearing its close, and will, therefore, not be misled by other accidental flashings of the signal light.

It might further be objected that notching the edge of the film is bad practice, and we go on record as certainly opposed to any mutilation or injury of films; but if shallow-curved notches (as shown in the drawing) are used, it will be found that the film does not suffer any subsequent deterioration at these points. We have examined valuable negatives, notched in this manner, which have been run through printing machines some hundreds of times with no breaking down of the film around the notches.

Suggestions for the Operation of Mazda C Motion Picture Lamps

BY L. C. PORTER

Edison Lamp Works of Gen'l. Elec. Co.

THE introduction of the Mazda lamp as a light source for moving picture machines means steadier pictures of better color value, lower operation cost, less wear and tear on machines and films, a cooler operating booth and much simpler control. To obtain these advantages, however, it is highly important that the new equipment be correctly set up. Once the Mazda lamp and its accompanying optical train are properly set in relation to each other, no further adjustments are necessary throughout the life of the lamp.

The optical train consists of the objective lens, the aperture plate, the corrugated condenser, the Mazda lamp and the spherical mirror. The centers of all of these devices should be on a straight line starting at the center of the spherical mirror and terminating at the center of the motion picture screen.

When the machines are shipped from the factory the condenser, aperture plate and objective lens should be in proper alignment. There are adjustments in three directions on the lamp holder and mirror holder, allowing these elements to be also brought into line. If, however, for any reason, the various elements are not properly lined up they may be put in place as follows:

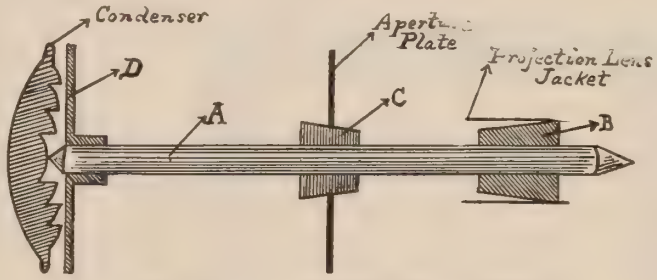
Install the Mazda lamp and place its filament opposite the center of the convex face of the corrugated condenser and 2½" back from the edge thereof. The corrugated face of the condenser should be about 7" in back of the aperture plate. Light the lamp by means of the switch on the control device supplied for the lamp. Do not use the switch on the lamp housing to light or extinguish the lamp. There is a special protectve device in the control equipment operated by the switch thereon. If this is not used short lamp life may result. Turn the rotating shutter so that one of the wings is nearly half way across the face of the objective lens. A very faint image of the corrugations on the condenser will now appear on the motion picture screen. It is fairly easy to tell if the center of this image is in the center of the lighted screen. If it is not, move the condenser until it becomes so.

If difficulty is experienced in observing the image the result may be accomplished as follows:

Let one man, provided with a piece of dark glass, place his head in the light beam about 10 feet in front of the projector and look through the dark glass directly into the objective lens. The observer's head should be in such a position that its shadow falls on the center of the lighted part of the motion picture screen. Looking into the objective lens through the dark glass, the corrugations on the condenser become clearly visible. An assistant should then move the condenser until these rings are concentric with and centered in the objective lens. With the condenser properly lined up by either of the above methods, the next thing to do is to focus the lamp.

This is accomplished as follows:

Set the lamp with its filament approximately 2½ inches back of the edge of the condenser and opposite the center thereof. A circular spot of light will be thrown onto the aperture plate. The lamp should be moved up and down by the adjustments provided for this purpose until the width of the spot of light above the top of the center of the aperture is exactly the same as that at the bottom. The lamp should then be similarly adjusted sidewise. In making either of these adjustments care should be used to see that the plane of lamp filament or broad face is parallel with the face of the condenser. Turn the mirror to one side or place an opaque screen between it and the lamp. Next, place one wing of the rotating shutter in front of the objective lens. An image of the lamp filament will appear on this wing. Move the lamp forward and backward until this image becomes sharpest, i. e., where the individual turns of the filament coils show up most clearly.



This will be the correct operating position for the lamp. The next move is to adjust the mirror.

Proper adjustment of the mirror is very important. With correct setting it will add to the screen illumination between 40 and 60 per cent. To set the mirror proceed as follows:

Turn the mirror so that the plane of its face is parallel with that of the condenser and adjust the height until the center of the mirror is opposite the center of the condenser and the center of the lamp filament. Move the mirror forward and back until the spot of light projected on the aperture plate by the mirror becomes the same size and coincides exactly with the spot projected by the condenser. Next move the mirror sideways or rotate it slightly according to the type of adjustment provided until the dark spaces between the filament images on the rotating shutter are filled with light. This setting is very important because should the filament images reflected by the mirror fall on the filament coils themselves instead of between them, not only is much of this light lost but also the life of the lamp may be shortened due to overheating. The use of an opaque screen quickly inserted and quickly removed between the lamp and mirror, will make its effect as observed on the shutter, more evident.

If the lamp housing contains two or more lamps and a single mirror, all of the lamps should be focused first without the mirror and then the mirror set to the last lamp. After this setting the first lamp should be swung back in place. If for any reason the mirror images do not exactly fill the spaces between the condenscer images of the lamp filament coils do not change the mirror setting, but move the lamp slightly sideways until the desired result is obtained.

If preferred, focusing of the lamp and mirror may be done by removing the objective lens and with the rotating shutter open. The images of the filament coils will then appear on the motion picture screen. This method of focusing probably results in a slightly more uniform screen illumination of not quite so high an intensity as if focusing were done on the shutter.

Section of Assembling Device in place in a Projecting Machine.

If one is to line up quite a number of machines time may be saved by having a simple mechanical device made for this purpose. The device consists of a straight rod (A) pointed at each end. A section of a cone (B) of such a diameter that its center will fit snugly into the objective lens jacket after the lens tube has been removed. This cone-shaped piece also has a hole through it fitting snugly to the rod (A). A tapered rectangular piece (C) is also provided to fit snugly into the aperture plate. This piece also has a hole in it fitting rod (A) snugly. A cylindrical plate (D) is provided with a good substantial shoulder bored to fit rod (A). These parts may be made of steel or wood, preferably steel. In using them remove the lens tube from the objective lens and insert cone (B) in the jacket. Insert rectangular block (C) in the aperture plate and pass rod (A) through them. It then becomes a simple matter to place the center of the condenser against the pointed end of the rod and thus centering it perfectly with the aperture plate and projection lens.

The plane of the condenser is made parallel to the plane of the aperture by placing disc (D) on the end of the rod and having the face of the condenser touch the disc on its entire circumference. If desired, the mirror may be similarly centered before the condenser is put in place.

Watch the Crowd

if you have any doubts as to the value of the best obtainable projection equipment.

While some persons like one kind of pictures, and some prefer another, the theatres where the crowd continues to go regularly are the ones where the pictures are always evenly illuminated with the details sharply defined.

Marlux

lenses give that uniformity of illumination and clean-cut definition.

Although a lens may seem a small thing in size and cost, it is a big thing in its relation to your box office receipts.

The Marlux costs no more than any good lens, and gives better results.

Mazda Lamp Projection Demonstrated at Edison Studio

THURSDAY evening, December 13, was the occasion of a special meeting of the Illuminating Engineering Society, at the Edison Studio, Bedford Park, N. Y., the object of the meeting being the presentation of a paper on "Motion Picture Projection with Tungsten-Filament Lamps," with a subsequent demonstration of these new light sources for motion picture projection.

The papers which formed the feature of the evening were prepared by Mr. J. T. Caldwell of the National Lamp Works, Cleveland, O.; Mr. A. R. Dennington of the Westinghouse Lamp Works, Bloomfield, N. J.; Mr. J. A. Orange of the General Electric Research Laboratory, Schenectady, N. Y., and Mr. L. C. Porter of the Edison Lamp Works, Harrison, N. J.

An informal dinner was served in the studio; during which the guests were surreptitiously photographed by a battery of movie cameras stationed in the flies. Afterwards a member of the Edison producing staff regaled the audience with a series of anecdotes illustrative of the film directors' joys and sorrows.

The feature of the evening, the paper on the Mazda projection lamps, was next in order, and as printed copies of the complete article had been furnished to all present, Mr. J. A. Orange merely recounted and emphasized the principle items which it dealt with. It is hardly necessary for us to reprint the paper, as a great deal of its contents has already appeared in the Projection Department in the recent articles by Messrs. Burrows and Caldwell, of Cleveland. Following Mr. Orange's remarks came the demonstration of Mazda projection, which was studied with interest by the many motion picture technicians present.

A picture said to be 15 feet wide was projected upon an aluminized screen from a distance of 90 feet. The light source used was an Edison 750 watt lamp operating on A. C.; the machine a Power 6B, and the lens a ½ size objective of presumably 4 inch E. F. The screen results showed very satisfactory brilliancy and opinion was about equally divided as to whether or not the Mazda lamp was a satisfactory substitute for the arc lamp in motion picture projection. While we considered the demonstration very satisfactory as regards screen brightness, we consider that the Mazda equipment is not in the first rank of projection light sources until it can achieve satisfactory screen brightness with projection lenses of smaller and more rational effective apertures than those at present advocated. By this we mean that there are sound and readily demonstrable grounds for prejudice against extra-aperture lenses when the E. F. is less than 6 inches.

A most deliciously mirthful and exciting feature of the demonstrational projecting was the exhibition of an utterly ludicrous film taken at less than half normal speed of the guests while they were innocently eating dinner. This comic masterpiece of cinematography put all of the spectators in the necessary good humor to proceed with the discussion of Messrs. Caldwell, Dennington, Porter and Orange's paper, which came next in the order of the evening's business. The remarks made upon the paper were of a slender nature, and the various comments were replied to by Mr. J. A. Orange. Many of those present would have discussed the paper and demonstration but for the lateness of the hour, and some interesting written discussions will doubtless accompany the paper upon its publication in the I. E. S. Transactions.

In spite of the inclement weather the trip to the Edison Studio and the Mazda lamp demonstration proved interesting to all who were fortunate in being present.

New Westinghouse Catalogue of Industrial Motors

THE second of a series of catalogues of industrial motors has just been distributed by the Westinghouse Electric and Manufacturing Company of East Pittsburgh, Pa. This is known as Catalogue 30 and covers the company's complete line of direct current motors and generators. for industrial service.

It contains complete description, rating and dimensions for type SK commutating-pole motors, various modifications of type SK elevator motors, reversing planer motor equipment, type CD motors, headstock equipment for woodworking plants, types SK and CD motor generators and arc welding equipment. Much new information is given, especially on such subjects as arc welding, headstock equipment, motion picture service and battery charging service.

National Anti-Misframe League

Pledge

AS a motion picture operator who has the interest of his profession at heart and is willing to assist in eliminating some of the evils practised in the operating-room, I promise that I will to the best of my ability return films to the exchange in first-class condition. Furthermore, I will when it becomes necessary remedy all misframes, bad patches, etc., that may be in the film which I receive and in this way co-operate with my brother operators and give greater pleasure to those who make up the motion picture audience by showing films that are free from such defects. I also promise that I will not make punch marks in film, and when film is received by me, with punch holes, I will notify the exchange to that effect so that they may use their efforts to correct this evil.

A Lamp that means better Pictures and Decreased Operating Costs

IT'S not often that you can improve the quality of your pictures and at the same time lower your operating costs. But that's just what this new Edison MAZDA C Lamp does.

The focus is permanent. The light is of an even intensity—no flicker.

There is less heat; the absence of all carbon ash means less wear and tear on machines and film (carbon and carbon troubles are eliminated).

The results are better pictures, a better show. And don't forget that operating costs are greatly reduced by a marked reduction in current consumption. Get in touch with our nearest distributor. Send for Bulletin containing full information.

THE exact decrease in illumination at increasing distances away from the axis has been calculated by Dr. H. Harting[1] for various degrees of obliquity, and as these data are of interest to students of photographic optics, and are also applicable to certain phases of optical projection, we reproduce Dr. Harting's table

Dr. H. Harting's Evaluation of $I \cos^4 \alpha$.

α	$I\cos^4\alpha$ per cent.	α	$I\cos^4\alpha$ per cent.	α	$I\cos^4\alpha$ per cent.
0°	100.0	30°	56.2	60°	6.2
5°	98.5	35°	45.0	65°	3.2
10°	94.1	40°	34.4	70°	1.4
15°	87.1	45°	25.0	75°	0.4
20°	78.0	50°	17.1
25°	67.5	55°	10.8

herewith. The various angles a represent only one-half of the actual angle of view, and this table emphasizes the reason why the edges of negatives photographed with wide-angle lenses are frequently much underexposed—if the central portion of the image has received just the right exposure. With a Busch "Pantoskop" (angle of view 110°), for instance, the edges of the image receive only about one-tenth the exposure of the center, while with a Goerz "Hypergon" (angle of view 140°) the edges of the image receive only about 1 per cent of the axial illumination. It is therefore readily apparent why some sort of an equalizing device, such as the rotating star stop of the Hypergon, is required when working with extreme wide-angle objectives.

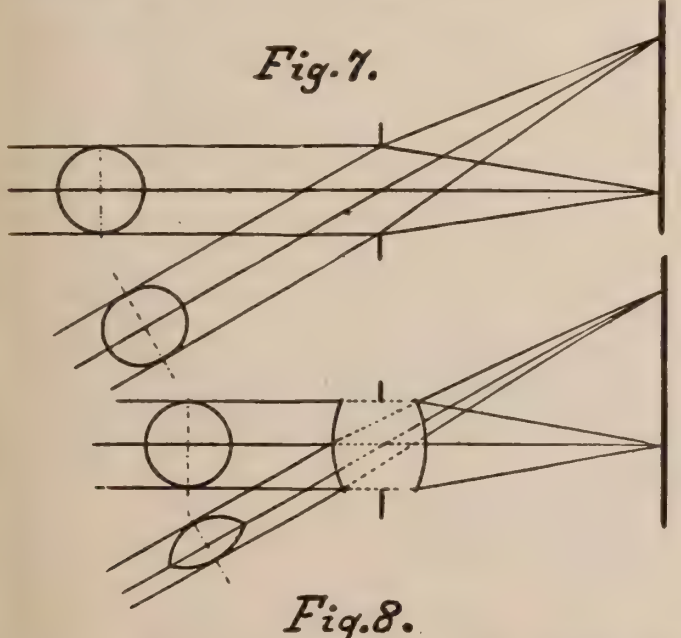

Fig. 7.

Continuing our study of the intensity of the illumination at the focal-plane, we find that it is diminished in still other ways besides those which we have previously considered, and we now return to the instructive paper of Dr. Zschokke, as the details of his investigation of the factors influencing the rapidity of lenses are most interesting to study.

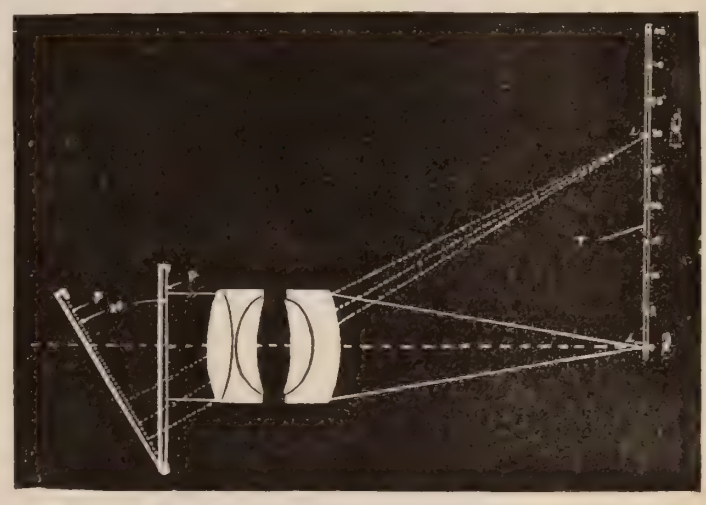

FIG. 9

Dr. Zschokke says:

"Another factor comes into play in the case of actual lenses, and this is the partial cutting off of the rays of oblique pencils by the lens mount. This is shown by Figures 7 and 8. In Figure 7 are shown the cross-sections of two pencils of rays traversing an ideal lens. The cross-section of the axial pencil is, of course, a circle, while the cross-section of the oblique pencil is an ellipse. Fig. 8 shows, however, the case of an actual lens, and the drawing was made from actual observation. In this case (Fig. 8) the cross-section of the pencil of rays parallel to the axis is still a circle; but it is no longer the diaphragm which limits the cross-sectional area of the oblique pencil. As Fig. 8 shows, the lens mounting does this, with the result that the cross-section of the oblique pencil has the shape of a cross-section of a bi-convex lens."

Dr. Zschokke has devised an apparatus which enables him to record upon a photographic plate the exact shape and relative size of the cross-sections of pencils at various degrees of obliquity (from the axis), and this apparatus is shown diagrammatically in Fig. 9.

Fig. 11.

"The objective to be examined is first focused for infinity, and a metal screen T (Fig 9), pierced with a row of small holes, is placed at the customary position of the ground-glass, or focusing screen. Through the medium of a special centering device (a rack and a pinion presumably.—Ed.) it is possible to bring the first of these small holes right in line with the axis of the lens, and the other holes are so spaced that they correspond to half-angles of field increasing by 5 degree intervals. Behind the hole L_m, which is on the axis of the lens, is placed a source of light. The rays which traverse the small aperture L_m, fall upon the lens as a parallel pencil of rays. Continuing through the lens they reach the photographic plate P and the exposure thus made gives (upon development) the size of the cross-section of the axial pencil, i.e., the working aperture of the lens. The cross-sectional shapes and sizes of oblique pencils are recorded in a similar manner; the light source, in this case, being placed behind one of the small holes away from the axis (L_{30} in the drawing) and the photographic plate tilted to the corresponding degree of obliquity (30° in this instance), so that it receives the rays at normal incidence. The cross-sections of pencils traversing a lens at various degrees of obliquity from 0° (for the axial pencil) to 40°, as recorded by Dr. Zschokke's apparatus, are shown in Figs. 10 and 11; the photographs representing the forms of the luminous pencils passing through the "Dagor" lens at full aperture f 6.8 and at f 15.5 respectively."

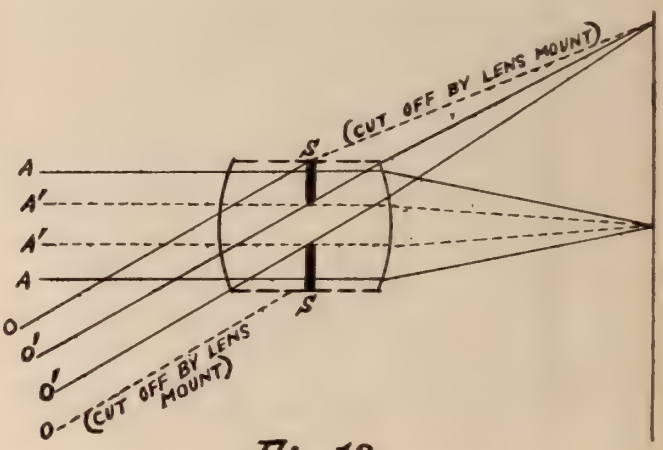
The experimental results of Dr. Zschokke, as represented in Figs. 10 and 11, will serve to prove that the illumination of the photographic plate is considerably equalized by the use of a small stop in the lens. It is stated in all treatises on photographic optics, and also in many lens makers' catalogs, that even illumination over the entire plate may be secured by stopping down the lens, but as no explanation is given of how this is brought about, we may be permitted to digress for a moment to demonstrate the action of small stops in equalizing the intensity at various parts of the image.



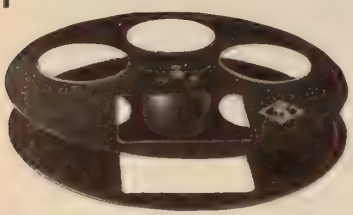


Fig. 12.

In Fig. 12 we see two pencils of rays of equal cross-section incident upon a lens. Assuming, for the moment, that the diaphragm is wide open, we note that the axial pencil A—A is transmitted at full intensity, while the oblique pencil O—O can not traverse the lens at full intensity because part of its rays are intercepted by the outside of the lens mount on one side (shown by dotted lines), while an additional part of the rays of the same oblique pencil are intercepted by the inside of the lens mount at the other side (also shown by dotted lines). The largest part of the oblique pencil which can pass through the lens, even when no stop is inserted, is, therefore, the section bounded by O'—O'. Now, we see that we can insert a very small stop S—S and still not intercept any further portion of the oblique pencil O'—O', although the insertion of this small stop has cut down the axial pencil to the size A'—A', which, it will be noted, is identical in cross section (or intensity) with the oblique pencil O'—O'. This is, therefore, the explanation of why the illumination of the image-field is rendered more even by the use of small stops, but the intensity is, of course, not perfectly equalized from center to edge. This is shown by Dr. Zschokke's photographs, Figs. 10 and 11, and it will also be appreciated that we cannot expect absolutely equal intensity from center to edge of a wide-angled (photographic) image, since the illumination decreases with increasing obliquity of the image-forming rays in proportion to the fourth power of cosine a.

A Cine Camera of 800 Feet Capacity

The cameraman engaged in regular production work often wishes for a camera of greater film capacity than the customary 400 foot professional instrument, and while cameras of large capacity are perhaps not needed for the majority of scenes, there are times when one could certainly keep right on photographing with advantage to the length of 800 or 1,000 feet.

Appreciating this fact Mr. Jackson J. Rose, cameraman for the Commonwealth Pictures Corporation of Chicago, has had his Bell-Howell camera equipped with 800-foot film magazines, and as Mr. Rose's camera has numerous other special attachments we requested him to prepare a description of the outfit for Camera Department readers.

This, Mr. Rose has kindly supplied, and we will therefore let his letter tell the story, reference being had to the accompanying illustration:

"To begin with I will give you a little biography of myself. Until recently I was with the Essanay Company for the past seven years as their feature camera man and have worked with over twenty-five different directors. I have photographed over 225 productions. I am now with the Commonwealth Pictures Corporation, Chicago, and have just completed the 'Frozen Warning,' featuring Charlotte (the great woman ice skater) which will be on the market very shortly. I mention the above biography merely to substantiate the statements that follow regarding the improvements on my camera.

"I use a Bell and Howell camera, and the photo shows a few of my improvements, although I have had more put on since the picture was taken. My camera is now equipped as follows: 800 ft. magazines with two of the ordinary spring belts put together and crossed, so as to make take-up easy. They are crossed in that manner, because in using an 800 ft. magazine, the take-up is very hard toward the last 200 feet, but by arranging them in this manner, one belt loosens the film, while the other takes it up.

"My 6-in. and 3-in. lenses are equipped with sun shields that have a thread on the inside, so additional sections may be put on or taken off as the diaphragm stop demands.

"I have the ordinary Bausch and Lomb Diaphragm attached to my 2-in. lens, to cut round corners, and also a full equipment of the Goerz Vignetting outfit. The arm which is attached to the tripod is longer than the average, thereby enabling me to 'spot in' from a needle point; also by using the sliding eccentric attachment 'spotting in' may be done from the sides instead of the center.

"My 32 mm. as well as all other lenses are accurately scaled off by single feet from 4 to infinity, which does away with the necessity of focusing. I always measure the distance with a steel tape, thereby eliminating any chance of out of focus pictures.

"I also had all of my lenses scaled off by single feet from 4 feet to infinity, on the back of the lens collar, which corresponds with side markings, and a sight mark on the camera enables me to change focus with my left hand while grinding with my right, and also to note the change from the rear, without changing hands as is now done when changing focus while grinding.

"The magnifying barrel is threaded so it can be unscrewed from the camera, when absolute marking is necessary on the ground glass, in making dissolves.

"I also had a large gear with a handle put on the shutter control button, by which I can make any length dissolve.

I use a Bell and Howell Studio tripod which ensures rigidity at all times. It is equipped with end stops and two levels.

I trust that I have not bored you with this lengthy letter, and assure you that I will be only too glad to be of service to you at any time, as I am a subscriber to the NEWS and enjoy reading it."

Cooper Hewitt Lights in Great Demand

DURING the past two weeks the Cooper Hewitt Electric Company have closed contracts with four producers for full studio lighting equipment as follows: one in New York City; one in Fort Lee and two on the West Coast. Notwithstanding the factory's working overtime deliveries are rather slow.

One producer ordered part of his Cooper Hewitts shipped by express and the bill was $1,250—but he saved two weeks.

Over a hundred studios now depend upon Cooper Hewitts—the perfect photographic light.

WHITE A. C. SPECIAL CARBONS

Require No Change in Lamp Fixtures
Give Pure White, Noiseless Light

To get the benefit of the pure white, noiseless light given by the new White A. C. Special Carbons, no expensive change in lamp fixtures is necessary. All you need to do is to install these new carbons in the place of the old ones and you have that pure white light which gives perfect screen definition.

The operation with these carbons is so quiet that operators have frequently been convinced that direct current must have been used. In the trade they are known as "the carbons which change alternating current to direct current."

Let us send you a booklet describing the advantages of this new carbon in detail. It will highly repay you to read it carefully.

FOR D. C. OPERATION

For long throw, direct current operation, which is so common today, there is no carbon that gives the results which are obtained with Silvertips. This carbon used as a negative, insures a steady, non-flickering light which gives perfect pictures.

Music and the Picture

Christmas Is Not Every Day

IT is with particular pleasure that we note an ever increasing tendency on the part of Orchestra Leaders throughout the country to use a better and higher grade of music wherever opportunity presents itself.

Judging from innumerable programs which reach our office constantly, the days of the common "clap trap" musicians, which have ruined public taste for years, are rapidly becoming a thing of the past.

"Christmas is coming"—every Motion Picture Theatre in the world will present, if not several, at least one "Christmas production," every exhibitor is trying to make a "Specialty" (in trying to offer his patrons something exceptional) for the Christmas Holidays.

We all know that the exhibitor is making special efforts for this occasion—"How about us Musicians?" Are we also trying to give the public something that does not cling to every-day "clap trap"?

What Christmas Compositions have you got in your library? Have you any at all? Have you realized the fact that your boss is advertising a "Christmas Production," and that the public expects that your musical accompaniment take the place of the spoken word?

Do you know that music in the motion show provides atmosphere and establishes mood, and that your music program infuses the mute action of the motion drama with the life of tone and harmony?

We of the MOTION PICTURE NEWS have realized this fact that Christmas is not every day. Our Music Department in this issue contains everything for this occasion.

Read the Music Review and provide for this special occasion by obtaining the right music if you do not possess same.

With a Merry Christmas to all my friend Musicians, I am,

Yours truly,
THE MUSIC EDITOR.

Musical Review of Latest Compositions Suitable for "Christmas Productions"

1 —"Snowflakes Song" and "Christmas Chimes." Two exceptional songs of rare tonal beauty. Two songs which in years to come will attain the same popularity as "Adeste Fidelis" or other famous Christmas songs. (Published by Vandersloot Music Co., Williamsport, Pa.)

2 —"Just a Little Empty Stocking," Christmas song, by Charles Bishop. A pretty little Christmas song, easy and very effective—it is an entertaining novelty and never fails to make a very successful performance for the public. (Published by the McKinley Music Co., Chicago, Ill.)

3 —Four pieces from the suite, "The Christmas Tree" (arranged by Gaston Borch), by W. Releikoff. 1. "March of the Gnomes." 2. "Silent Night." 3. "Dance of the Chinese Dolls." 4. "Dance of the Clowns." (Published by G. Schirmer.)

4 —"Christmas Dreams" (Waltz), by Bach. A novelty, in which favorite Christmas songs are introduced with surprising effectiveness. (Published by Carl Fischer, New York City.)

5 —"Sunday Morning Chimes" (Reverie), by Klickman. A novelty, with wonderful chime effects in the piano part—most appropriate for scenes of pathetic character. (Published by Frank K. Root & Co., Chicago, Ill.)

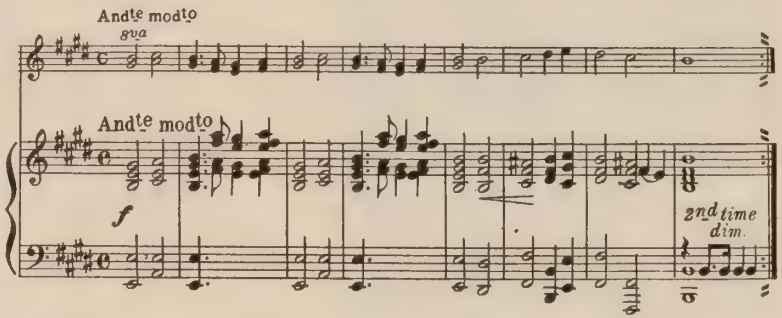
7 —Andante Appassionato, by Soro Enrique. A broad cantilena piano melody, sonorous, intense and richly colored harmonically, with a fine development and climax. It is a number the full-toned beauty of which makes it most grateful to play and one which listeners will enjoy. (G. Schirmer Edition.)

8 —"Dream Chimes" (Intermezzo), by E. Wyatt. A melodious composition opening with a 4/4 Andante Moderato, followed by a Valse Lente movement of exceptional tonal beauty; the next movement is a 6/8 Allegretto Giocoso. The entire number is cleverly arranged, with bell and chimes effects, and is most appropriate as an opening number for Christmas pictures. (Published by Ed. Schubert, N. Y. C.)



9 —The McKinley Music Co. is also publishing a series of Christmas songs under the title of "Cathedral Gems."

10—"Vesper Chimes" (Reverie), by Lincoln. This number is unquestionably one of the greatest emanations of the pen of this gifted composer. It is most appropriate for Christmas productions and we believe it indispensable to the musician who is striving to play the proper music for the ,film. (Published by Vandersloot Music Co.)

11—"Willow Blossoms" (a legend), by Sousa. We do not think it is necessary to write any comments on this number. Sousa composed it and that's enough. (Published by T. Harms & Francis Day & Hunter, N. Y. C.)

12—"A Sleigh Ride Party," by Michaelis. A jolly, lively number, which is specially suited for performances during Christmas. (Carl Fischer Edition.)

13—"The Pleiades," Concert Study in C, by Homer Bartlett. A finely sonorous piece of piano work, sufficiently difficult to justify its sub-title, yet, because of its andante movement, within the reach of most players. There is a broad melody and rich harmonization with majestic breadth of movement. (G. Schirmer Edition.)

14—The Vandersloot Music Co., Williamsport, Pa., is also publishing the following numbers, suitable for Christmas productions: 1. "Garden of Dreams" (Reverie Serenade), by Lincoln; 2. "Harbor of Dreams" (Reverie), by Shannon; 3. "Cradle Time" (Reverie), by Shannon; 4. "Garden of Memories" (Reverie, Serenade), by F. W. Vandersloot; 5, "Garden of Flowers" (Reverie, Serenade), by F. W. Vandersloot; 6. "Love's Melody" (Reverie), by Shannon.

15—The McKinley Music Co., Chicago, is also publishing the following numbers: 1, "Jingle Bells" or "Children's Sleighride," by Fearns; 2, "Jolly Jingles" or "Song of the Sleighbells," by Sawyer; 3, "Hurrah for Good Old Santa Claus" (song), by Sawyer; 4, "The Story Santa Claus Told" (song), by Sawyer; 5, "Hurrah, Hurrah, for the Christmas Ship" (song), by Sawyer.

16 "Fifteen Minutes in the Land of Romance." A suite of four standard concert numbers. Illustrating romance from its lighter to most serious conception in consecutive musical form. (Obtainable from J. W. Stern, 102 W. 38th St., N. Y. C.

17—"Fifteen Serious Minutes." A suite of three numbers. Illustrating the most serious screen requirements in music. Two of the numbers have effective harp accompaniment which can be played on organ in absence of harp. (Obtainable from J. W. Stern.)

18—"Supplication," by McKee. An unusually interesting orchestra number, in a splendidly effective arrangement. It opens with a melodious 4 4 "andante cantabile introduction," followed by a cello movement of exceptional musical treatment, and ends as a violin solo most appropriate for dramatic situations. (Published by M. Witmark.)

19—"Melody," by Charles Huerter. A number which will fit in well with any program. A sweet melody, a fine arrangement and a favorite which always takes; most appropriate for pathetic and dramatic situations. (Published by the Boston Music Co.)

20—"Fifteen Minutes of Regal Splendor." A suite of four numbers, each number expressing a different musical temperament befitting the requirements of a photoplay costumed in regal fashion. All four numbers are melodious, while maintaining the majestic in music. (Obtainable from J. W. Stern, 102 W. 38th St., N. Y. C.)

21—"Pathetic Andante," by Paul Vely. A rich, deep, melodious composition that can be effectively worked out; most appropriate for situations of a pathetic character. (Cinema Music Co., Columbia Theatre Bldg., N. Y. C.)

22—"Impressions of the Orient," by Otto Langey. Three captivating numbers which will appeal to every orchestra leader: No. 1, "Among the Arabs"; No. 2, "A Chinese Tea Room"; No. 3, "Persian March." (G. Schirmer Edition.)

23—"When Shadows Fall." A beautiful and melodious Reverie, adapted from the concert ballad by Rrost and Keithley. (McKinley Edition.)

24—"Adagio Cantabile," from "Sonata Pathetique," by Beethoven, arranged by Irene Berge. A wonderful orchestra arrangement of this fine work. It will add class to your program. (S. M. Berg's Edition.)

25—"A Russian Pansy" (Flower Song), by Otto Langey. Once in a decade some composer is really inspired to write a wondrously beautiful melody, but only once in years is such a beautiful theme born.. "This is the once." "A Russian Pansy" is a most valuable addition to any musician's library and is most appropriate for picture playing. (G. Schirmer Edition.)

26—"With all My Heart and Soul," by Ernest Ball. A wonderful expressive moderato movement, by a composer of international reputation; it is a dramatic narrative most appropriate for scenes of reminiscence. (Leo Feist Edition.)

27—"The Rainbow March," by Louis Maurice. A striking and effective military march most appropriate for military scenes, and opening for News Weeklies. (Leo Feist Edition).

28—"Twilight Songs," by Allen Gregg. An expressive melody in a class by itself; most appropriate for love themes and scenes. (Stark Music Co., St. Louis.)

29—"Polly with a Past" (Valse de Salon), by Louis Maurice. One of the finest musical accompaniments for reception and banquet scenes of the modern society drama. (Leo Feist Edition.)

30—"Reflections" (Waltz), by G. Foster. For garden scenes, reception scenes, and scenes of happy outdoor life; this composition can not be surpassed. (Published by W. O. Quincke & Co., Los Angeles, Cal.)

31—"Liberty Lads" (March), by Lee Orean Smith. The title of this composition signifies the purpose; it is a national flavored number which will assure applause, no matter how often you play it. (Leo Feist Edition).

32—"Over There." At Leo Feist's you will also find the following hits recently published: 1, "My Red Cross Girlie," by Morse. 2, "It's a Long Way to Berlin," by Flatow. 3, "Homeward Bound," by Meyer. 4, "I Don't Want to Get Well," by Jentes. 5, "We'll Knock Heligo-out of Helgoland," by Morse. 6, "When We Wind Up the Watch on the Rhine," by Thompson. 7, "When There is Peace on Earth Again," by Lewis, Crawford and Santly.

What and When to Play

THE wise musician is like a live retailer in any commercial line of business—both make a specialty of handling the commodities that are properly exploited and advertised by the producers. Sometimes it costs a little more to get hold of these goods, but the results approximately always justify the additional expenditure. The sagacious popular publisher figures on spending a certain amount of money on every song. He knows that he has to create a demand for his wares before he can look for profit, and he usually begins by exploiting his publications through the theatrical world. If a song does not show up well after being tried out by vaudeville performers, the song is shelved, with the publisher and staff concentrating their attention on something else. Before a song has any value to the average picture pianist its success is practically assured; the publisher has already spent many dollars advertising it in trade journals and in the incidentals entailed by keeping the singers properly supplied.

It is almost an impossibility for a publisher to force a poor song on the public. He might sell fifty thousand copies of a poor song by spending large sums in advertising, but the returns would not justify it, and no wise publisher would attempt it more than once. One of the biggest popular publishers in the business tried it a year ago. He spent $10,000 advertising a song, which sold just one thousand copies. It cost him just $10 to sell a copy for which he received seven cents. To continue with this method would soon put a publisher out of business. So when you see a publisher keeping after his song you can rest assured it has hit the public's fancy, and is the kind that your patrons will like—the song has appealed to the average lover of light music. And if it appeals to the average person in New York or Chicago, it will have the same effect on the average person in any part of the country. Live musicians and dealers have reasoned this out for themselves, just as the cigar dealer has done concerning certain brands that are well advertised, and as a result the live musicians keep adding to their stock the numbers, vocal and instrumental, they see properly advertised. "Missouri Waltz," now being featured all over the world, became a hit because it had merit, which many could not see in the beginning, and also because the publisher had sufficient faith in his judgment to keep after it through all channels of publicity.

Too many small publishers start on a shoe string and expect others to roll up a fortune for them. Most of them complain about the phonograph companies sidestepping their numbers. The phonograph companies are in business to make money, and they have no desire to stock themselves with records of songs that will never sell. The record makers expect the publishers to do their share in creating a demand. Of course, there are times when a song is so good, one put out by a small publisher, that the phonograph companies make records, knowing that it will sell on its merits, but such songs are far and few between, like springs on a desert. When a publisher has a good number he should get behind it, and when he does he won't have much to camplain about. Fortunes are made from songs, but it takes a great deal of work and some money to gather the fortune. Whether it be songs or shoes, it takes money to make money. And when real money it put behind a real song the musicians throughout the country get the benefit of it. They do not have to experiment like the publishers, but they are handed something for which a demand has already been created.

At the present time some small publishers are making the mistake of trying to capitalize on the Red Cross Society by issuing songs having to do with the Red Cross. There is a law on the statute books that prohibits the use of the name Red Cross or the cross itself for advertising purposes in any form, and all publishers, large or small, will do well to consult the Red Cross before investing money in Red Cross numbers.

Jack Silverman Joins "Reeland"

ANNOUNCEMENT was made this week that Jack Silverman, pioneer salesman of Magazine Program of this city had completed arrangements for future connections with Reeland Publishing Company, Inc., of 150 Lafayette street. Mr. Silverman has severed all relations with Magazine Program and he believes that he will have a much wider field. He has a wide acquaintance among the exhibitors of the country and he is expected to bring a large number of new clients to the already important list of Reeland, a clever program that is supplied to dozens of houses.

Mr. Silverman is a real live wire with a big command of ideas. In order to be in the heart of the motion picture district he will shortly open an office uptown.

General Comments

FREDERICK KNIGHT LOGAN, composer of "Missouri Waltz," and "Blue Rose Waltz," is coming from his home in Oskaloosa, Iowa, to play Santa Claus to about thirty poor kiddies in New York City. The Christmas party will be held at the Hotel Majestic on Christmas day.

Gilbert & Friedland are receiving many complimentary letters from picture musicians concerning their new ballad, "Are You from Heaven?" It is an ideal number for quiet and romantic situations in photoplays.

Jos. W. Stern & Co. report that their war songs, "When the Moon Is Shining," "I'm in the Army Now" and "Send Back Dear Daddy to Me" are becoming real favorites with military musicians.

In "They Go Wild Over Me" Fisher & McCarthy have a fine number for comedies and comedy-dramas. They have just issued an "Alsace-Loraine" number that looks like a winner.

The orders coming in for "We'll Knock the Heligo Out of Heligo Into Heligoland" convinces Feist that he has another big hit.

Fred Vandersloot's "Christmas Chimes" is now being featured by thousands of picture musicians.

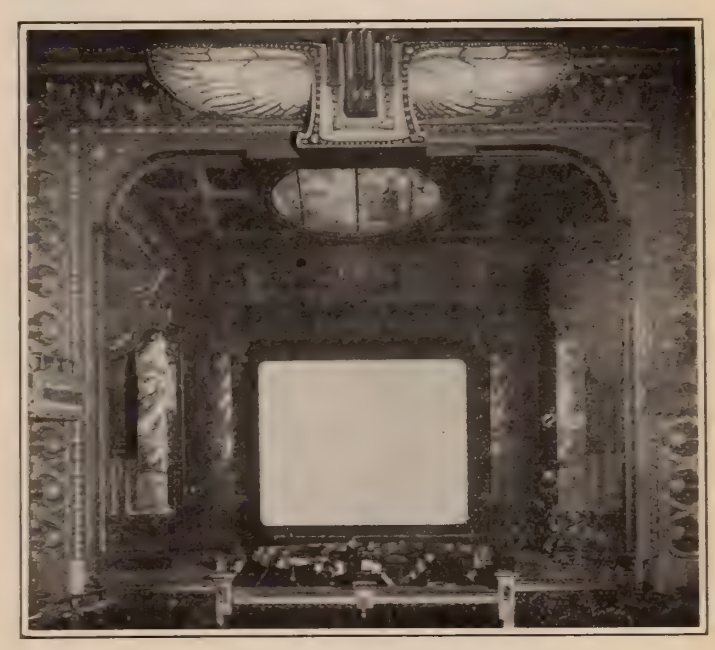
Theatres Worth While

Front and Interior View of the Alhambra Theatre, Ogden, Utah

Scowcroft Becomes Virtual Owner of Alhambra

ANNOUNCEMENT has just been made of a transaction by which Albert Scowcroft, Ogden capitalist and president of the Ogden Pictures Corporation, becomes virtually sole owner of the Alhambra theatre, the largest motion picture house in Ogden, Utah, and also one of the finest show houses in the West. The principal owners of stock in the Alhambra Theatrical Company who have released their stock to Mr. Scowcroft are Charles Zeimer and Harry A. Sims, two of the original organizers of the company.

Mr. Scowcroft declined to discuss the details of the transaction involving new ownership of the Alhambra except to say that the matter was largely one of an exchange of stocks. He added that he had planned to bring other interests into the business and would reorganize the Alhambra Company at an early date. In addition to the theatre, the company's interests include a motion picture supply concern which serves the entire inter-mountain region.



The Alhambra theatre was erected less than two years ago at a cost of approximately $200,000. With a seating capacity of 2,100 persons it is the second largest motion picture theatre in Utah, the American theatre in Salt Lake City having a slightly larger seating capacity. The Alhambra is so admirably situated as to site that the architects found it possible to provide twenty exits, with which the house has been emptied in three minutes with every seat occupied.

In addition to every modern feature as to equipment, the house is provided with a full section Kimball organ costing $20,000 and a complete stage equipment that permits of staging the largest road productions. H. E. Skinner, manager, is now furnishing the complete Paramount-Artcraft program.

Imperial Makes a Fine Record

FIVE years of the greatest success is just being closed by the Imperial theatre, San Francisco. The house, which is owned by the Chicago and San Francisco Amusement Company, is under the able management of J. A. Partington.

The house is in the heart of the business district, on Market street, between Fifth and Sixth. It occupies a plot 75 by 167 feet and was constructed of concrete and steel, making it thoroughly fireproof. Over five thousand lights are used on the front of the house, making it stand out as one of the best illuminated theatres in the country.

Interior Imperial Theatre, San Francisco

There are 1,600 seats, the orchestra chairs having been supplied by Weber & Co. and the loge chairs by Peck & Hill. The interior of the theatre is finished in blue, gold and old rose, producing a most charming effect.

Latest model cream enamel Simplex machines are used for the throw 120 feet to a Diamond Crystal screen. Three operators are employed. The lighting system is indirect, the building heated with steam and the mushroom ventilating system employed.

The lobby is a particularly attractive part of the theatre, being 25 by 40 feet and equipped with twenty frames for holding cards and photos. No posters are used in the lobby under any circumstances, the effect being simplicity and dignity.

One of the big features of the Imperial is the twelve-piece orchestra and big Kimball organ.

The Imperial used Paramount and Artcraft Pictures for week runs. There are seven shows a day of seven reels each. Ten, fifteen and twenty-five cents is charged in the afternoon and fifteen, twenty-five and thirty-five in the evening. The theatre used newspapers and billboards for advertising.

Columbia Fine Phoenix House

COLUMBIA THEATRE is the largest and finest in Phoenix, Ariz., costing in the neighborhood of $50,000. A three story reinforced concrete building patterned from the famous Corinthinian architecture. The front entrance is solid marble with real mahogany frames for displaying photos, one sheets, etc. The upper part of the lobby is art glass beautifully arranged with lights behind it. In the evening when the lights are lit to the patrons it makes a rich effect as the lights are all hidden and there is none to blind the eyes.

The inner lobby is a large picturesque place in which we display large paintings and potted plants, and the floor is covered with a fine green Brussels rug. This answers the purpose of a rest room. The stairway leads on each side of the room to the balcony and one each side are two large mirrors six feet high, which make a big hit with the ladies. Settees and chairs are provided for the company.

On the second floor which is the first landing is another rest room; it is always cool and nice for those who are fatigued to stop and rest and talk while waiting. There are three rooms in front on this same floor that comprises the office of the Phoenix Amusement Company.

Another flight of stairs and one is in the balcony which has 300 seats and nicely arranged so every seat is valuable.

The booth is situated in the center of the house at the top of the balcony and is twelve feet wide and about thirty feet long. This booth is large enough for four machines, a dissolver, spot light and rectifier. At present we are using one Power's 6B machine and a late Simplex, one dissolver and a spot light, which is controlled by one rectifier. The distance to the screen is 80 feet; our picture is 14 feet 6 inches by 19 feet 9 inches projected on a screen that is leased from a firm in Los Angeles.

The lower floor has a capacity of 700 seats and the chairs are equipped with spring seats upholstered in Spanish leather and finished in Circassian walnut; they are large and comfortable with plenty of space between seats.

One big feature of this theatre is the ventilating system. When the thermometer registers 120 degrees on the outside with this cooling system in operation the mercury never gets above 82 or 83 degrees inside. This system is installed in the basement about 50 feet from the front, 4 feet wide and full width of the building. This tapers off and when it gets to the top it is about 2 feet high and 12 feet long on each side; this is the air chamber. In the center of this hallway is an opening which lets the air through and under the floor. The opening is 9 feet high and 12 feet wide leading under the false floor where the seats are. Coke about three inches thick covers the entire opening, and at the top a water pipe is laid with holes to let the water drip equally down over this coke so when the air is sucked through this opening it is not only purified but cooled at the same time. Directly under each seat is a three inch hole and this air is constantly forced by a pressure under every seat on the lower floor and the foul air is forced out through domes built in the ceiling of the auditorium by a 7 foot fan run by electricity.

The music is furnished by a three-piece orchestra.

This theatre is now under the management of Edward J. Cooper, a theater man of wide experience, who at one time operated a string of houses in Colorado and who most recently came from southern California where he managed several of the large houses in that territory.

Dailey Out for Business

Jas. F. Dailey

JAMES F. DAILEY, otherwise known as "Typhoon Dailey," of the Typhoon Fan Company, is off on another of his flying trips, this time covering Philadelphia, Washington, Baltimore and Allentown, Pa.

From present indications it looks as though all the theatres which the Government is erecting at the several army cantonments will be cooled and ventilated by the Typhoon Cooling System.

"Typhoon Dailey" is right on the job. If he keeps up the pace at which he has been going of late he will have Charley Schwab looking after his laurels as the country's "Star Salesman," which is going some.

New House to Replace Marietta Theatre

AS the result of the destruction by fire of the Hippodrome theatre, Marietta, O., is to have a handsome new vaudeville and motion picture house. Work will be started just as soon as the ruins of the burned building can be removed. The Hippodrome, which was owned by the C. & M. Amusement Company, which controls four houses in Marietta and Cambridge, was burned early Saturday morning, November 24. The building and its contents were almost an entire loss, the only things saved being fifteen reels of pictures and a few costumes belonging to a vaudeville company then playing at the theatre.

Manager O. J. Seybert, who was at the scene of the fire shortly after the alarm was spread, was responsible for the rescue of the only effects saved by the company. Seybert succeeded in breaking in the front door of the theatre and then crawled into the second lobby, where the picture reels were stored. By reaching through a broken glass in the second lobby door he drew forth the reels, which included one Triangle feature, one Paramount feature, and one Burton-Holmes travellogue.

The total loss was about $25,000.

One of Orleans Better Neighborhood Houses

HERE is an example of the better class of neighborhood houses in New Orleans, a city famous for the number and the character of its community theatres. The Ideal, under the management of M. Marx, has built up a high-class trade that yields a fixed income because of the regularity of the patronage.

The Ideal is located at the corner of Dryades and Cadiz streets, and is an attractive frame structure. It seats 450 people in comfortable opera chairs. It is splendidly ventilated during the long New Orleans summers and steam heated in winter.

As a general proposition each picture is shown but a single day and the performances are given only in the evening, except on special occasions when there is an additional matinee. The theatre is equipped with two Simplex machines, and has modern appointments throughout.

Triangle, Metro, Vitagraph and most of the super pictures are shown at the Ideal, such productions as "Civilization" and "The Battle Cry of Peace" having been seen there. In fact, on some occasions Mr. Marx has been able to get the first run showing in New Orleans of a number of big pictures, and the fact that he uses the daily and Sunday papers to advertise his house keeps him well in the limelight.

Handsome New Theatre for Racine

ANNOUNCEMENT is made that the Arthur Friedman Company, which has so successfully conducted the Palace theatre, Racine, Wis., has leased a new 2,000 seat house now in course of construction on Lake avenue, between Fifth and Sixth streets. This is in the same block with the Palace. The latter theatre will be continued under the same policies as at present.

Tell The Truth

Trying to "put one over" on your patrons in your advertising doesn't pay in the long run. But what is an Exhibitor to do? He has no information on his pictures—he simply must get up his advertising the best way he can, and fill it full of "hot air" to attract the multitude. There is only one way out—If you want to advertise your pictures and your theatre intelligently, subscribe for

Directory of New Theatres

BRITISH COLUMBIA

By the organization of the People's Theatre Company, with a capital stock of $10,000 and head office at Vancouver, the proprietorship of two Victoria theatrical businesses has been changed. The new company has been organized to acquire and take over the Variety Motion Picture theatre now operated by W. P. Nicholas, and the Royal Victoria theatre, now being operated by the Dominion Theatre Company, Ltd., and all assets and liabilities of W. P. Nicholas and the Dominion Theatre Company.,

CALIFORNIA

A large theatre building, modern in every way, will be erected immediately at Los Angeles Harbor by N. O. Anderson, owner of the Anderson building. Property owned by O. B. Sadler, which lies adjacent to the Anderson building, was purchased yesterday for this purpose. The purchase price was $22,500. Anderson will use this property, together with a lot located in the rear to erect his new theatre which will have a seating capacity of 1,000. Sadler acquired this property four years ago for $17,500.

Work on the new Hamblen motion picture theatre on Park street, near Encinal avenue, Alameda, is progressing satisfactorily and will in all probability be ready for occupancy early in the Spring. The building represents an outlay of $50,000.

The new Liberty theatre, Fresno, was opened last week under most auspicious circumstances. Messrs. Keech and Beatty, directors of the Liberty Company, sent out invitations broadcast, the result being an overcrowded house. Mayor Toomey delivered a speech, welcoming out of town representatives of the motion picture industry of whom there were a score or more.

ILLINOIS

Herrin's new motion picture theatre, The Hippodrome, was opened recently and nearly a third of the city's population attended during the opening day. Manager John Marlow reports 2,740 paid admissions for the evening.

A Chicago concern is planning the construction of a motion picture theatre at Belleville, and while a site has not yet been definitely decided upon, the eastern end of town near Main street is the locality generally favored.

INDIANA

The new Princess theatre at Rensselaer was opened a week ago under the management and proprietorship of Robertson and Viant. The seating capacity of the improved house has been increased to 350, and at both afternoon and evening shows on the opening day every seat was occupied and scores of patrons could not be accommodated.

MAINE

The Strand theatre building at 565 Congress street, Portland, is being enlarged by a two-story brick and steel addition and being remodeled for a motion picture theatre at a cost of $100,000. W. E. Reeves will be the manager of the new house.

MASSACHUSETTS

Architects Funk and Wilcox, 120 Boylston street, Boston, are preparing plans for a theatre and office building to be erected at 1410 Massachusetts avenue for the Harvard Square theatre and Realty Trust.

MICHIGAN

A. H. Proksch of Iron River has been awarded the contract to remodel the Odd Fellows building on West Iron street, Negaunee, for motion picture theatres.

MISSOURI

Construction work on the new theatre to be erected in St. Louis on the site belonging to the Yore estate will be commenced early in the new year. The structure will be grouped with the Orpheum theatre and the Statler Hotel at Ninth and St. Charles streets and Washington avenue, and the new Mercantile Trust Building at Eighth, Locust and St. Charles streets. The Yore plot adjoins that of the Orpheum theatre and is directly across the street from the Mercantile Trust Building. The leases for this site were arranged by Gibson & Ketchum and R. King Kaufmann, real estate officer and vice-president of the Mercantile Trust Company, in conjunction with Williams & Bland, representing the Federal Hotel and Real Estate Company. The proposed theatre will have a frontage on Eighth street of 132 feet and on St. Charles street of 127 feet. The site includes 60 x 127 feet belonging to the Yore estate and 70 x127 feet on Eighth street, adjoining on the north the Victoria Building at the northwest corner of Eighth and Locust streets, held by George T. Riddle, president of the Franklin Bank, both of which are to be acquired by the Federal Hotel and Real Estate Company under 99-year leases. The lease of the St. Charles street corner, which is held in eskrow by the Mercantile Trust Company, executor of the Yore estate, specifies an annual net rental of $10,000.

MONTANA

If no unforeseen obstacles occur, the Marlow theatre will be completed and ready for occupancy about the first of February, according to A. B. DeKay, superintendent of construction. The exterior of the structure has been completed and good progress is being made on the interior. A force of lathers have started putting on the lath, and electricians are wiring the building, which is being done in accordance with the latest approved plans as recommended by the board of fire insurance underwriters. Material for the heating plant has arrived and is being installed. The millwork for the interior finish is being prepared at the mills and will be shipped shortly. Until it is definitely known when the Marlow will be ready for occupancy, plans for the formal opening will not be made.

NEBRASKA

Gothenburg's new Sun theatre was opened to the public a week ago, when between 1,500 and 2,000 people witnessed the two performances. Nate Desky of Burush, Colo., is owner, and Harold N. Desky is manager. This theatre has a seating capacity of 800, and is equipped with one of the latest designed pipe organs.

NEW JERSEY

The Mutual Picture Theatres Company of New York has taken a long lease on the Majestic theatre on Monmouth street, Red Bank, near the railroad station. The theatre is owned by William K. Kelly of Newark, formerly of Red Bank, and the lease of the theatre permits the remodeling of the building to suit the ideas of the lessees. The lease also contains an option of purchase.

NEW MEXICO

A contract was let this week to an Amarillo firm for the new theatre which is to be erected by Messrs. Hurley and Hawkins on the lots purchased by them, fronting Main street, Tucumcari, to cost more than $30,000, and will be modern throughout.

Work will commence as soon as possible, and it is expected to have the new theatre finished within a few months. This will be another big boost toward putting Tucumcari in the city class.

NEW YORK

Buffalo architects are preparing plans for the proposed two-story theatre building, to be erected at Main and Elm streets, Lockport. It is planned to construct a building worth $60,000. High class road attractions will be played in addition to motion pictures and vaudeville. The architects at work on plans are Lewis & Hill and Esenwein & Johnson.

Several lots have been leased on the Ehler's farm front, Middle Island, to be occupied by the Harvard theatre and six stores, the erection of which will be commenced as soon as weather conditions permit.

The Sheers Amusement Enterprises have bought the plot, 60 x 119, on the north side of Corona avenue, 95 feet east of Hampton street, Elmhurst, for an airdrome.

PENNSYLVANIA

William I. Snyder, of Pennsburg, had a successful opening of the new Liberty Motion Picture theatre, in East Greenville, on Thanksgiving. Matinee and evening performance were given.

WASHINGTON

Dr. H. M. Johnson is breaking ground for a new building on South Toppenish avenue for a film house. He intends transforming his present show building into a theatre for road shows. He has also bought the Miller building, on South Toppenish avenue, from W. M. Miller of Prosser.

WISCONSIN

The new theatre building now being erected on the Baker Block property, Racine, has been taken over by the Friedman Company, on a long-term lease.

The theatre will be one of the most modern and up-to-date in this section of the country, and will be thoroughly equipped for the presentation of theatrical performances of every nature. It will have a seating capacity of between 1,500 and 2,000.

According to the plans, the amusement-loving people of Racine and vicinity have something good in store for them. It is expected that the new theatre will be completed early next Spring.

Plans for the material improvement and enlarging of the Palace theatre, Kewanee, are now completed and involve the removal of the stage and the setting back of the curtain to provide accommodations for seventy-five additional seats.

Dr. W. C. Beecroft has awarded contracts for the erection of a new motion picture theatre on East Mifflin street, Madison, near the post office. The building will cost about $100,000.

Simplex

Just for once: Remember yourself

Yes, it's all right

At this season of the year, when the spirit of giving permeates the very air you breathe, it is all right to be liberal, to give out of the bigness of your heart, and to the extent that the bigness of your bank account will permit.

But

There's such a thing as overdoing it—forgetting that you have duties toward yourself as well as to others, and thereby reducing the prospects of your being able to give liberally next year.

A new name on your list

To guard against that, suppose you add your own name to your list of beneficiaries, and consider just what you ought to give yourself.

Give judiciously

Of course you will exercise the same care as in making selections for others, and will give yourself something useful, something that endures, something you will always be glad to have received.

A suggestion

If it isn't too late, if you are not already enjoying its benefit and profit, suppose you give yourself Simplex Projection?

Answers the Specifications

Nothing could be more useful; its perfection endures; you will always be glad to have acquired it; and it will help make you more capable of giving next year.

Others liked it

The shining lights of the Industry would agree with our suggestion. They gave themselves Simplex Projection, and it proved a large factor in the winning of fame and fortune. You will like it for the same reasons.
